

LEON TROTSKY

Open Letter to Vandervelde

Citizen Vandervelde,
A few years ago you addressed yourself to me with an open letter concerning, if I am not mistaken, the repression against the Mensheviks and the Social Revolutionists. Generally and invariably, you stood up against the Bolsheviks in the name of the principles of democracy. It is your right. If your criticism did not obtain the intended result, it is because we Bolsheviks proceed from the principles of the revolutionary dictatorship.

The Russian Social Revolutionists, your co-religionists in democracy, opened up, in their time, the terrorist struggle against us. They wounded Lenin and sought to blow up my military train. Turned over to the Soviet Tribunal, they found in you one of their most rabid defenders. The government to which I belonged authorized you not only to come to Soviet Russia, but to come before the Tribunal as the attorney for those who tried to kill the head of the first workers' state. In your plea, which was reproduced in our press, you invariably appealed to the principles of democracy. It was your right.

On December 4, 1932, I stopped in transit with my traveling companions in the port of Antwerp. I had no intention either of propagandizing for the dictatorship of the proletariat or of coming forward as the defender of the Communists and strikers arrested by the Belgian government who, so far as I know, committed no assaults upon the members of the Brussels government. A few of my companions, and my wife with them, wished to visit Antwerp. One of them, for the purposes of his voyage, needed to get in touch with a consulate in the town. All of them were categorically prohibited from touching the soil of Belgium, even under escort. That part of the port where our boat was located, was carefully encircled. On both sides of the boat stood police sentries. From the deck we were able to pass under review the policemen of democracy, military as well as civil. It was an imposing spectacle.

The number of dicks and cops—you will permit me this familiar designation for the sake of conciseness—exceeded the number of sailors and dockers. The boat looked like a temporary prison; the adjacent section of the port, like a prison courtyard. The police chief took a copy of our papers—even though we were not entering Belgium and had not been authorized to disembark at Antwerp. He asked to receive my explanations for the fact that my passport is made out to the name of Sedoff. I declined to engage in any discussion with the Belgian police, with whom I had nothing to do.

The police officer tried to act with threats: he declared that he had the right to arrest anybody whom the boat's sailing route chances to conduct into Belgian waters. I must, however, acknowledge that there were no arrests.

I request you not to find in my words any complaint. It would be ridiculous to complain about such a trifle in the face of what the toiling masses and especially the Communists are made to undergo throughout the world at the present time. But the Antwerp episode seems to me to be enough of a pretext for returning to your old "Open Letter," to which I did not reply at that time.

I hope I am not mistaken in counting Belgium among the democracies. The war which you carried on was—in that so?—the war for democracy. After the war, you were at the head of Belgium as minister and even as Prime Minister. What more is necessary to bring democracy to its complete unfoldment? On that score, I think, there can be no discussion between us. Why then does this democracy nevertheless reek so much of the police spirit of old Prussia? And can one believe that the democracy which experiences such nervous convulsions at the chance approach of a Bolshevik, will prove capable of neutralizing the class struggle and of guaranteeing the peaceful transformation of capitalism into socialism?

In reply you will undoubtedly call to my mind the Ve-Cheka, the GPU, the deportation of Rakovsky and my own expulsion from the Soviet Union. That argument is beyond the point. The Soviet regime does not adorn itself with the bedraggled plumes of democracy. If the passage to socialism were possible within the state forms created by liberalism, the revolutionary dictatorship would not be necessary. For the Soviet regime, the question can and should be put of knowing if it is capable of teaching the workers the struggle against capitalism. But it is absurd to demand that the proletarian dictatorship should observe the forms and the rites of liberal democracy. The dictatorship has its rigorous methods and logic. The blows

(Continued on page 4)

Bridgeman Red Cases Revived

Supreme Court Ruling Opens Attack on American Communist Movement

A concerted attack upon the whole Communist movement is being launched by the decision of the Michigan Supreme Court, just handed down, which rules that all those involved in the famous Michigan Communist cases of 1923, must stand trial on charges of criminal syndicalism.

The scores of those arrested or indicted, date from a convention in Bridgeman of the underground Communist party some ten years ago. The first trial, that of William Z. Foster, resulted in a hung jury. The second trial, that of C. E. Ruthenberg, resulted in a conviction which was upheld by the State Supreme Court. The death of comrade Ruthenberg occurred during his appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The revival of the Bridgeman cases is not merely an attack upon the Communist movement, upon the party and the Left Opposition, several of whose members are also involved, but on the working class as a whole, which the bourgeoisie seeks to weaken by cutting off and imprisoning its most conscious vanguard. When the arrests were first made years ago, it was clear that the cases were directly connected with the numerous labor struggles of that period. The same holds true today. The fear of the growing discontent of the masses is impelling the ruling class to revive an ancient case in the hope of depriving the proletariat of its leadership.

Against this vicious attack, it is necessary to mobilize the maximum strength of the whole labor movement. The Communist party, the leader of the proletariat, must be defended by every worker! A united front of solidarity must be erected around the militants involved, through which the bourgeoisie, its police and its courts, will be unable to break.

WE ARE COUNTING ON YOU FOR AID

The danger that we may be compelled to suspend the publication of the MILITANT as a weekly, must arouse the deepest concern of every friend of the Left Opposition in this country and impel him to prompt action. We have thus far been able to maintain the MILITANT by means of the most strenuous sacrifices. And that was the only way, because while the world crisis has laid bare the bankruptcy of the present social order and given a great impulsion to the revolutionary progress of the working class, it has also deprived it of the financial means with which to sustain it. We are not threatened with this retreat because the Left Opposition is losing ground in the United States. Quite the contrary. Our influence and prestige are greater at the present time than ever before; our views, stubbornly advocated for years in the face of countless obstacles, are verified by the events of every new day. The threat comes from the fact that the ravages of unemployment have so drastically affected our own comrades that those upon whom we could once rely for substantial and systematic contributions are far less, or not at all, able to make them today.

This does not mean for one moment that the situation is hopeless. It only means that the task of preserving the weekly MILITANT must be shouldered by a much greater number of comrades and friends. When we make the appeal for speedy assistance, it should be borne in mind that the MILITANT is our principal mouthpiece on a national scale, and not merely on a local one, for it has been of signal aid to the young and sturdy Bolshevik-Leninist movements in Canada, in England, in South Africa and China. It is our main organ, for where the weakness of our movement prevents us from sending a suitable comrade for work, we know that the MILITANT can be relied upon to present the Opposition standpoint to the most distant localities. It is our main educational center, for its columns teach those great historical principles of revolutionary Marxism which have been so dramatically verified by the history of the last two decades, and it teaches them not only in the light of the past, but in connection with the living unfoldment of events week by week. Moreover, the MILITANT constitutes that hub from which radiate the spokes of our other activities and enterprises: the organ of the Opposition youth, YOUNG SPARTACUS; the organ of the Yiddish-speaking Oppositionists, UNSER KAMF; the organ of our Greek-speaking comrades, KOMMUNISTIS. Should the hub be smashed, the spokes would be left hanging limply in the air just as surely as the hub would fail to turn the wheel without well-connected spokes.

We have not been derelict in our efforts to maintain the weekly at all costs, because we are aware of the heavy blow that our movement would be struck by its collapse. We are confident that the same knowledge and spirit will animate all our friends to exert themselves to the utmost, to contribute generously in our present drive to save the MILITANT. The drive is Point One on the order of the day until the danger to the MILITANT is overcome. An early contribution is a double contribution, and we are anxious not to protract the campaign. The work that demands doing well will not permit it.

Therefore, every shoulder to the wheel, every comrade to his post. We are counting on our friends to carry us over the hump, to save the weekly MILITANT from collapse!

—MAX SHACHTMAN, Editor.

Send funds immediately to the MILITANT, 126 E. 18th St., N. Y. C.

MOSCOW LETTER

Stalin Banishes Zinoviev

The editorial board of the Bulletin of the Russian Opposition reports the following important news from Moscow.
"On November 24 and 25, 1932, the People's Commissar for Food Supplies of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, Elsmont, the director of Soviet transportation, Tolmachev, the former People's Commissar for Agriculture, A. Smirnov, Boser and various others, were arrested. Smirnov, Elsmont and Tolmachev were accused of allegedly having formed a conspiracy with the aim of creating an organization for the overthrow of Stalin. Elsmont is supposed to have refused a confession and to have proved that Rykov and Tomsky knew nothing of the 'conspiracy'."

Another group, Nemtchenko, Gushburg and others, were also arrested on the same accusation.

"Kamenev has been banished to Minsk (Belarus) Zinoviev to Kustanay (in Kazakhstan); Sten to Akmolinsk; Shapkov to Tarn. Rutin has been confined in the Chelabinsk solitary prison. To Smilga, it was proposed that he quit Moscow."

As we learn further, the work of the Russian Left Opposition is increasing and its contacts are growing. The report above characterizes the internal situation in the CPSU as well as the social processes in Soviet Russia. The next stage of the inner-Russian development contains great dangers. It is our task to follow the events with the closest attention and draw upon our resources to the full for the defense of the line of Lenin and Trotsky, as well as for the support of the work of the Russian Left Opposition.

Left Wing Victory In The I.L.G.W.U.

The thorough victory of the Left wing in the elections for officers of Local 9, International Ladies Garment Workers Union (New York), is of tremendous significance for the movement. The victory was gained not only against the slate of the reactionary Right wing, but also against the joint slate of the anarchist clique and the Lovestone group. Local 9 is the second largest local of the union in the country, and the triumph of the Left wing gains additional significance from the fact that two weeks previously, it swept the ruling clique out of office in the largest local, Local 1, and secured the election of its own slate. The impending elections in Dressmakers' Local 22, where the Left wing is also presenting its slate, will most likely show similar, if not such decisive, results.

The gratifying results in these elections reveal a number of important points to consider. But its persistent blunders of the "third period" stripe, the Stalinist leadership of the Left wing gave aid.

(Continued on page 2)

Two Killed in New Illinois Mine War

Lewis and Operators Renew Terror Drive Against Miners

The Illinois mine struggle, which has been in progress since the latter part of last summer, has flared up anew in Taylorville. According to press reports, a bloody gun battle such as has not been seen since the march to Franklin County has taken place in Kincaid six miles from Taylorville. A miner's wife and a scab lost their lives in the course of this conflict. Eleven strikebreakers were wounded as a reward for their endeavor to work the mine under the scab outfit of Lewis and company.

Taylorville, the scene of the affray, has been the center of the most violent struggle of the Progressive Miners Union to organize the coal diggers in a union controlled by the rank and file. Similarly it has been the focal point of resistance by the boss-controlled UMW of A and the vicious labor-hating Peabody Coal Company. The Peabody Coal Company has refused to sign up with the new union even though the wage scale they offer is no different from the UMW of A. They fear the militancy and the relief spirit of the Progressive Miners Union. They have enlisted gunmen, gangsters, and the National Guard to break the backbone of the new union. But all their intimidation, tear gas, bayonets and military terrorism has not budged the Taylorville miners a single inch.

Displaying the most intrepid courage and the most indomitable persistence, the Taylorville miners have remained on strike through these long months when starvation and brutality have become a normal occurrence. They have refused to be driven back to work under a union which has betrayed them every time they have given battle to the starvation program of the operators. By an overwhelming majority, the Illinois miners dispensed with the Judas services of Lewis, Walker and their ilk. But the defunct and decrepit UMW has continued its faithful services to the coal barons. Where their ability to persuade the miners to return to their company union has miserably failed, they have resorted to bullets and blackjacks in earnest cooperation with the National Guard.

This latest occurrence in Taylorville is the result of the scab-herding activities of these discredited hunkies. At the summons of Peabody they have hunted out strikebreakers from the four corners of the United States and thrown them into the Taylorville mines. The scabs have worked under the protection of an army of armed "deputy sheriffs." Picket lines of Progressive miners were dispersed, thousands of miners were arrested, and several shot in cold blood. Due to this overwhelming force the picketers were temporarily forced to retreat. This picket line at which the shooting occurred has been the first effort at renewed activity on the part of the Taylorville strikers. The picketers were met at the mine gates by 150 deputy sheriffs who unquestionably opened fire. It appears that the picketers shot back in self-defense although the local Taylorville tyrant of the coal company says that the miners "were reported to have guns."

In spite of this very reliable testimony, five companies of the National Guard have again been brought on the scene to "enforce peace." "Enforce peace" means to assure the coal company and the Lewis union the right to work the mines with scab labor. But it experience proves anything it demonstrates that these hunkies are going to have a hard time of it so long as the miners preserve their solidarity.

Opposition Youth at Chicago Conference

CHICAGO.—Some five to six hundred delegates, representing colleges and universities from every part of the country, including representatives from the Students League of Canada, Cuba, and South America, responded to the call of the National Committee for the Student Congress against War (initiated through the efforts of the National Students League) held at Maudel Hall, University of Chicago on December 28 and 29, to resolve upon a program of student struggle against the scourge of war and militarism. The Congress was made up of the widest variety of political views ranging from the socialists, pacifists, liberals, to the Communists (including the Left wing of the Communist party, the Left Opposition). Upon such a political background, dominated by an overwhelming number of delegates from the National Students League, and within that representation a majority of Communists, the Congress passed through stormy sessions, bordering at the close, upon split and disruption, and finally arriving at a working basis.

Rival Positions Presented

The first day of the Congress was limited entirely to speeches of a general character. The Congress was led off by Edmund Stevens, a member of the National Students League and Chairman of the National Committee for the Student Congress against War. He was followed by Joseph Cohen, also a member of the NSL and student delegate to Amsterdam Congress, who made the keynote address. The election of the conference committee were then completed. To conclude the morning sessions the symposium on "Imperialism and War" took place. The speakers at this symposium were Upton Close and Earl Browder. The former presented the position of pacifism. Browder followed with an exposition of the Communist position. In the discussion the sharp differences between the Communists and pacifists were signally displayed and gave evidence that the ensuing deliberations would be characterized by a similar sharpness.

The afternoon session was taken up with another symposium: "Anti-war Movements," discussed jointly, although from divergent points of view, by J. B. Matthews, secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, Jane Adams, and Scott Nearing. Quite naturally, the highlight of the discussion was the speech of Jane Adams. In calling attention to a banner stretched across the hall, inscribed: "Fight Against Imperialist War," this grandmother of "pure pacifism" expressed her sorrow in no uncertain terms about rash students who wanted to carry on a fight "that was all wrong." "There are no more imperialist wars" because Great Britain, the last Empire, was already dissolved and is now a "commonwealth of nations." We must struggle against other wars, this sage of pacifism made sure to point out, and then showed that the real danger lay in a future of class wars. Her speech served only to stir the mili-

(Continued on page 2)

"With Both Hands"

The internal position of the Soviet Union is making a new political turn inevitable and increasingly urgent, a turn that must be more radical than all those that preceded it. Everybody feels it. Many see it clearly. The bureaucratic leadership, standing at the focal point of the difficulties and the dissatisfaction, preserves an obdurate silence. Perhaps because it does not yet know what road to tread? Or perhaps because it prefers to keep still about the already trodden road until it has become an irrevocable fact?

To "drive" the duped, lulled and half-stifled party, unnoticed, upon a path it does not want to take—that is the tactical method of Stalin. The transition from the "dry" system to the "wet" in alcoholic beverages, was never decided by the party; on the quiet, the bureaucracy simply continued to raise the alcoholic content of light beverages in the interests of the state revenues, and in this way it brought the country from four to forty percent. The same method is applied by Stalin in every field. All the more necessary is it now to pay sharp attention to the maneuvers of the bureaucracy which is silently preparing a new "surprise" for the working masses. The symptoms of a secondary order must also be checked up attentively and distrustfully: by taking the whole situation into consideration, they might contribute to cornering the bureaucratic leaders long before they have brought the new turn, which it may no longer be possible to make good again, up to forty percent.

The eminent American specialist for the construction of agricultural machines, Thomas Campbell, worked for a period of time as a technical adviser of the Soviet Union. After his return to the United States of America, he published a book: "Russia, Market or Menace?" The high point of this book, at least politically speaking, is the report of an extensive conversation of the author with Stalin. This conversation, the authentic reproduction of which permits no doubts, as we shall see, deserves not only to be reprinted, but must also be submitted to an attentive consideration.

Stalin Bureaucracy and the U. S. A.

STALIN'S DENIAL

Months after the appearance of the book by Thomas D. Campbell which is referred to in the statement on it which we reprint here from an editorial in the latest issue of the Bulletin of the Russian Opposition, Stalin has found it advisable to publish a "denial" of the interview with himself which Campbell prints in "Russia, Market or Menace?" After the Opposition press in this country and in Europe had been filled with comments on this significant conversation between Stalin and the American bourgeois specialist, Stalin finally found it necessary to make some statement on the matter in order to extricate himself from an embarrassing position. "The Stalin 'denial'," which successfully avoids refuting the essential passages of the interview as published by Campbell, was made for the theoretical organ of the Russian party and ended to the Daily Worker several days ago. As will be seen, the comments made upon the whole question in the editorial of the Russian Bulletin still retain their pointedness and effect.

"As soon as we were seated I explained to Mr. Stalin through the interpreter that before we entered into any business negotiations I wanted to speak to him frankly and without offense in regard to my trip to Russia and several other matters which were on my mind. He immediately agreed to this and with one motion of his arm pointed towards the door, upon which his secretary left the room in about three steps. I then said to Mr. Stalin, 'I am very anxious, Mr. Stalin, that you should know that I am here without any intent of giving you any false impressions. I am not a Communist; I am not a disciple of Bill Haywood or Emma Goldman, and I resent many of the things which I hear about your government. Nevertheless, I am much interested in your agricultural development, as I am an agricultural mechanical engineer and have spent most of my life trying to develop mechanized agriculture in the United States. We had a poor crop in Montana this year, and the work which your government has offered me is interesting. I will not, however, make any kind of working agreement with your Government if it cannot be done absolutely independently of my political beliefs and strictly on a business basis.' Whereupon Stalin rose alertly from his chair, crossed to my side of the table, took my hand in both of his, looked me straight in the eye, and said, 'Thank you for that, Mr. Campbell. Now I know that I can believe you. Now I know that we can respect each other and perhaps we can be friends.'"

"He then motioned me to sit down, and asked me to continue. I went on to explain that we in the United States resented many things which we had heard about the Soviet Government, such

Japanese Resume Chinese Offensive

The military clique in control of the political fortunes of Japan has embarked upon the second phase of its military adventure of conquest in Northern China. Under some flimsy pretext the Japanese army, navy, marines and air force has laid waste to the city of Shanhaikwan, after a ferocious assault the Japanese forces with the use of armored cars, bombs thrown from airplanes, cannonades, and all together paraphernalia that goes with a bombardment, the Japanese succeeded in repelling their raid on Shanghai a year ago. The whole Chinese garrison of more than 500 soldiers and about as many civilians, men, women and children were annihilated, and the city reduced to smoldering ruins by this terrific assault. The Japanese entered the city triumphantly. Then with the typical insolence that characterizes the Japanese militarists they demanded an apology from Chang Hsiao Ling the commander of the garrison. (Presumably because there weren't more residents of Shanhaikwan they could slaughter).

The Japanese invasion will not stop with the capture of this northern city. It is but another step in the campaign of Japanese Imperialists to carve a colonial empire out of Northern China. Grave international complications will no doubt ensue from this latest venture, with the ever-present threat of an attack on the Soviet Union looming in the distance. It is the duty of every worker to stand on guard against the outbreak of a new imperialist war and to protest the horrible slaughter of the oppressed Chinese people.

OPEN FORUM

Liebknecht-Luxemburg Memorial

Speakers:
MAX SHACHTMAN—JOSEPH CARTER

Friday, January 13, 1933

126 East 16 Street,
ADMISSION: 15c

Auspices:

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America (Opposition)

SPARTACUS YOUTH CLUB OF N. Y.

Opposition at Chicago

C. L. A. Delegates Defend Lenin View at Anti-War Meet

(Continued from page 1)

tant pacifist minority who were determined from the outset that the congress set forth as its principle line and perspective, the struggle against ALL war and to prevent it from adopting a clear, distinct class position. The bulk of the congress received with smiles and tolerance the remarks of an old woman who neither felt nor understood the historic epoch in which she lives. In the evening the congress split into study groups to discuss the various phases of war and militarism.

Thus ended the first day, without actually having discussed or acted upon the really important questions of how the students shall fight against war and under what kind of a program this struggle should be carried on. This phase of the work remained for the second and final day of the Congress. Particularly here, was expressed a weak point of the Congress. Obviously, the questions of how the struggle should be carried on, under what program, the question of permanent organization, the adoption of resolutions, when crowded into one day would make impossible a thorough and clear discussion. The weakness was even more pronounced since prior to the congress no statements or resolutions were presented by the Committee, upon the basis of which the discussion could proceed. The procedure allowed for the presentation of resolutions by the Resolutions Committee their immediate discussion and adoption.

Left Opposition Issues Statement

On the morning of the first day, the Spartacus Youth Clubs of the Communist League of America distributed a statement to the delegates with an exposition of its views on the Congress and its program (the statement appears in this issue of the Militant). This was the only expression of the Communist position presented to the delegates prior to the Congress. As it turned out, this statement proved to be decisive in the decisions of the Congress. It warned the students of the impermissibility of individual action of the student body and proposed united action with the working youth under the leadership of the working class. The statement continued to point out that war was the product of the social system and that its elimination would come about with the abolition of capitalism. "This congress," the statement read, "must renounce all hopes in the League of Nations, of capitalist disarmament and of all pacifist illusions. It must denounce the humbug of national defense as propounded by pacifists since this serves to oppress and divide the smaller nations. It must announce its support of wars of national liberation of colonial peoples. It must unequivocally declare its support and defense of the Soviet Union and call for economic collaboration with the Worker's Land. This Congress must establish that the only solution to the problem of militarism and war is the revolutionary one."

The statement made a profound impression on the revolutionary elements present. It struck the first militant chord in the initial stage of the congress that was characterized by vagueness and confusion. It was only after the report of Donald Henderson on "How Shall Students Fight War" that the congress began to arrive at a program and resolutions. In the afternoon of the second day the reports of the Resolutions Committee opened up the vital part of the congress. The initial resolution on the endorsement of the pledge of the Amsterdam Congress brought the first real discord in the Congress. The pacifists and the Socialists protested that such a resolution could not be accepted by them if the resolution implied support of all the deliberations of Amsterdam. Upon being assured that this was not implied in the resolution, that to vote for it meant only to endorse the anti-war pledge, the resolution was carried!

The resolution on the fight against the ROTC witnessed a second conflict. An amendment by Henderson called for "coming from within" policy and found the pacifists again in protest on the basis that it was unethical to join an organization in order to destroy it, particularly when it is proposed to fight it openly. Here again Henderson explained that his amendment implied such a tactic only where compulsory military drill in the schools existed. With this explanation, the pacifists finally agreed not to block the progress of the congress, in spite of their disagreement. The resolution on the recognition of the Soviet Union likewise witnessed a sharp discussion because of the clause calling for defense of the USSR, but it was nevertheless carried unanimously.

The significance of these struggles indicated that the congress would face ever greater difficulty with the pacifists and socialists as the reports of the Resolutions Committee progressed. A resolution on students rights was carried unanimously. Shorter resolutions; against the anti-Semitic pogroms in Poland, endorsement of the Anti-War Congress in Montevideo, and protest to the Chicago School Board for the expulsion of Milton Gilinsky on account of his fight against the ROTC were carried unanimously.

Left Wing Pressure Effective

The main resolution then followed. It was around this "Draft Resolution" that the political basis for the later threatened split, was laid. The delegates of the Left Opposition introduced a resolution to the Resolutions Committee for adoption as the main resolution of the congress. This resolution contained the essential political points of the statement issued by the Spartacus Youth Clubs. Attached to the resolution was another one on the "Defense of the Soviet Union", which called for unconditional defense, to campaign for economic collaboration, the extension of long-term credits, and recognition. The resolution signed by sixteen student delegates and four alternate delegates was not accepted by the committee. Instead the congress was presented with a committee resolution. The resolution of the Committee, drawn up hurriedly, contained in essence the main points of the Opposition resolution.

What came as a distinct surprise, was that the resolution adopted a revolutionary approach in contradistinction to the prevailing attitude prior to the congress. Even at the congress it was difficult to ascertain the character of the resolutions. It was clear that the pressure of the Opposition, plus the fact that the Communist representation was overwhelming, forced the adoption of a revolutionary resolution. Had the organizers felt no pressure from the Opposition delegates, and had the strength of the pacifists and socialists been greater, the resolution would have been an extremely watery and opportunist one. As it was, the Opposition delegates found it possible to accept the resolution.

Ryerson, one of the Canadian delegates and a member of the YCL proposed a lengthy amendment to the main resolution on the causes of war, that was unanimously accepted. This amendment was taken from the Opposition resolution. Another amendment calling for unconditional defense of the Soviet Union was introduced by comrade Caplan, also from Canada. This amendment was overwhelmingly defeated by the mass of delegates, through the leadership of the Y. C. L. and N. S. L. delegates, who under pressure of the pacifists and socialists, contended that it was sufficient to call for the defense of the Soviet Union. To introduce the clause calling for unconditional defense would make impossible unity on the resolution, was the argument introduced by the Stalinists.

The points of the resolution of the Committee were accepted one by one without apparent objection from the Right wing in the congress. It was quite clear that the pacifists and socialists, were willing to concede the resolutions because of the overwhelming number of Left wing delegates and were awaiting only the practical program of action. In fact, their leaders stated openly on the floor, that they felt that any objections on their part to the resolutions, would be of no avail and they were willing to let them by with the hopes of working out a common agreement in a fight on the campus against war (each in his own way—A.). But the peace was abruptly ended. An amendment was introduced calling attention to the betrayals of the Socialist International during the last war, and to prevent any future betrayals of a similar nature. Upon the introduction of this amendment the Socialist delegation, under the leadership of Amicus Most,

Leon Trotsky

History of the Russian Revolution

PUBLISHERS PRICE

Vol. One	Vol. Two	Vol. Three
$4.00	$3.50	$3.50

OUR PRICE

$3 per Volume
$9 the Boxed Set

POSTAGE ON ALL ORDERS: Extra

Send All Orders Immediately To

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York

representing the Rand School, warned the congress that if this amendment was carried the Socialist delegation could not continue in the united front. The pacifists joined in the cry. Once more the Communists, through their spokesman, Henderson, had to explain that calling attention to the past betrayal was not an attack on the Socialist party! The amendment was carried with an addition that too in all who betrayed the working class during the war. (The Socialists made a pointed reference to William Z. Foster, for selling Liberty Bonds.)

Split Threatens

In voting upon the section of the resolution containing the tasks of the congress, the socialists raised strenuous objections to point B which read: "To support the American Committee for the Struggle Against War which in response to the Amsterdam Congress is leading an effective movement of workers and intellectuals against war." The Socialists tried to read into this point the thought that it meant acceptance of Amsterdam and its decisions, and warned the conference that it should delete this point or else the socialists could no longer cooperate with the congress and would bolt. For a time it appeared that the Socialists, with the aid of the pacifists would split the conference. The proposal to delete was not accepted.

The elections of the resident executive committee brought out once more the tenaciousness of the situation. The pacifists would not accept on the committee unless the Socialists participated. Their attitude was predicated on the idea that a united front without the socialists would mean Communist domination and they would not participate in such a movement. It was here that the socialists announced their intention to split the conference. The reason given was the adoption of point B in the resolution. Under these conditions it appeared that the conference would break-up.

A motion introduced by a member of the NSL called for rescinding the disputed point B in the draft resolution. This motion was made with the aim of preventing the socialists from splitting the conference and to gain their adherence to it. The motion to withdraw this section witnessed an intense discussion in which the Communists split their vote. Henderson opposed the motion, but to no avail. The pacifists pleaded for the passage of the motion in order to maintain the unity of the congress. The socialists demanded that the motion be passed, holding the threat of split over the congress. Under these conditions point B was withdrawn from the resolution by above majority vote.

The congress closed with the election of the executive committee and a delegate to the Anti-war congress in Montevideo. Among those elected to the executive committee were, Joe Cohen and Edmund Stevens, of the National Students League, Margy Gelman, NSL and Left Oppositionist, Monroe Sweetland of the League for Industrial Democracy and member of the Socialist Party, and Morris Skop, a pacifist. Carl Geiser was elected delegate to the Montevideo congress.

Thus the congress ended. Its future is extremely dubious. What success can an "independent" movement of the student have in the struggle against war? What will be the relation of this movement to the revolutionary struggle of the workers who alone form only class capable of carrying through and directing a correct struggle against war? How will the pacifists reconcile themselves to a congress which adopted the political position of opposition to imperialist war and support of the class war of the proletariat? These questions remain to be answered.

—ADERAHBE.

Wall Street Rulers Force Wage Cut On the Teachers of New York City

The teachers are going to have their pay cut. Wall Street decided that. The City of New York which spends from twenty-five to thirty-three percent of its budget on interest on loans made to it by Wall Street, recently applied again to the bankers for additional financial assistance. The men who overthrew Herriot and the Belgian ministry told our city moguls to economize to the tune of forty million. Twenty million, they said, must come out of the wages of the policemen, the firemen, the city employees and the teachers.

The city employees did nothing about it. The policemen and firemen took it lying down. But the teachers showed active resentment. A number of organizations representing the more advanced minority attempted to fight. They called conferences, sent delegations to Albany to plead their case with the state legislature and the chief executive of the state. Their fight ran a short course and ended in defeat. The poor showing they made was due to the fact that the overwhelming majority of the teachers are full of illusions about society and the state they teach their pupils. The Times quoted one of their spokesmen as saying that the teachers had no faith in the city politicians but trusted the state legislature. Such political naivete made the teachers easy prey for the experienced sharks in Albany. After much fruitless rushing to and fro the teachers' committee (except the small teachers' Committee to protect salaries) decided not to oppose the wage cut but to "compromise" by "protecting" the legislation reserving to the state legislature the right to cut their wages; their pension rights, and other such fool-deal which will go by the board under the next assault by Wall Street. A third item in their "compromise" was the attempt to limit the reduction to two years.

Just before the special session of the legislature got around to this particular item on the agenda of the bankers' instructions a delegation of teachers went up to Albany to see Roosevelt, Lehman et al, about this compromise. When they learned this ultimatum to Roosevelt he told them that he would relay it to New York. Dejectedly but still hopefully the delegation fled into an anteroom. Here they cooled their heels for two hours while the wires hummed between Albany and New York. Finally, Roosevelt told them that the bankers were opposed to the time limit. Meekly they accepted the decision. That was the inevitable conclusion of their fight under the circumstances of their lack of class consciousness, lack of organization and their poor fighting method.

Further attacks on the living conditions of the teachers are foreshadowed. Roosevelt recently announced that the state will be about $100,000,000 short by the middle of 1933. He suggests that a large share of this deficit will be made up by a drastic cut in the appropriations for education.

The attacks on their standards will compel the teachers to resist. To make their resistance effective they must make clear to themselves what they are resisting. The bankers, of course, are the people who initiate these attacks. But they are routed through the state apparatus. In defense of their interests the teachers are brought into conflict with the state bureaucracy.

Against its crushing weight they cannot contend alone. They must seek support among the classes whose economic and social interests impel them to struggle against the capitalist state. They can find allies among the petty bourgeoisie. They can enlist the aid of the taxpayers' associations; social service organizations; women's clubs, etc. Their support, in the long run, will amount to paper resolutions passed at conferences in expensive hotels; futile appeals to the state legislature the Board of Education and every board which will allow steam to be let off in its presence; and "moral support" in the press. But when it comes to a showdown these doughty knights of democracy, good-will and what not will leave them in the lurch. The class which lives in eternal hope of becoming big bourgeois and in everlasting fear of being pushed into the proletariat by the bourgeoisie cannot be counted on to risk its stakes in a fight against the stronghold of world reaction.

The teachers will have to seek and find allies in their own class, the working class. This raises the question of the relation of the teachers to the working class movement. The relation must be the central axis of their program. On this point they must strive to attain the greatest possible clarity. They must formulate their relation to the working class movement on class lines. To do this they must slough off their illusions. They must become clear on their class position in society, the class nature of their conflict with the capitalist state, their need of fighting support against it. In a word they must develop class consciousness.

The problem of which current-reactionary, socialist or Communist—to ally themselves with has already sought the teachers out and is pressing for solution. The Communists have begun to penetrate their ranks. They are not alone in the effort to win influence among the teachers. Others groups and interests are attempting the same thing in the interest of patriotism and payoffs, of reform and milk-and-water protest. If the Communists pursue a correct policy they can win the teachers for Communism.

These are the basic considerations which the teachers must take into account in formulating their program. According to the answer they give to these questions will depend the organizations they build. The question of organization is a very complicated one. At the present time there are about seventy organizations among the approximately 40,000 teachers in New York City. They range all the way from a Teachers' Welfare League through the Teachers' Union of the American Federation of Teachers in the AF of L to the Teachers Committee to Protect Salaries organized by the Educational Workers League of the TUUL. We will return to this aspect of the situation in an early issue.

—T. STAMM

The Left Wing Victory in the I. L. G. W. U.

nal assistance from the Left to the process of restoring the Right wing union to a considerable extent, a process which was furthered from the Right by the combined efforts of the police and the bosses. The Industrial Union, which started out with such great promise, was reduced by the erroneous course of its leadership, to a sect embracing little more than the Communist elements. The advent of this new situation, this new relationship of forces, was first ignored entirely by the official Left wing. Then it was ignored, despite the fact that the Left Opposition did not cease to call attention to the need of orienting the Left wing's policy on the basis of it. When it was finally given a grudging, half-recognition, the Stalinists advocated that infinite "radical" course of boycotting the Right wing union and isolating themselves from the workers by a categorical refusal to participate in what they called the "company union". At one time, this sectarian madness reached the point where the Left wing workers were kept from going out on strike after a call for one had been issued by the Right wing union. This surrender of the workers to the mercies of the Right wing-Forwards skates, afforded the Lovestonites their opportunity to act for a time as a sort of rallying ground for those militants in the Right wing union who would not reconcile themselves to the policies and leadership of their organization.

Defeat For Lovestonites

The Lovestone liquidators, however, in whose direction the Stalinist policy drove scores of workers, did not require very much time in which to discredit themselves. Their panic-mongering, their demands for a disorganized, every-man-for-himself dissolution of the Left wing, alienated from them the more advanced Left wingers. Others who supported them for a longer period of time, dropped away after the collapse of the notorious united front with Levy and Co. whom the Lovestonites lifted into the saddle of Local 1, only to be kicked in the face (as should have been foreseen) the minute these petty bourgeois labor politicians arrived in power. At the first serious test, as the Lovestonites later lamented, Mr. Levy joined hands with the reactionary union priesthood against the progressive and Left wing forces. The discreditment of the Lovestonites, an inevitable product of their whole course, is revealed in their crushing defeat at the recent elections. For the party to reduce them to impotence, it was enough to borrow a little from the Lovestone platform, and more from the Left Opposition, and make a half-turn away from yesterday's sectarianism. The fact that the Lovestonites supported the reactionary Right wing as against the Left in such a key question as the choosing of the Election Objectives committee, did not help raise their prestige in the eyes of the serious progressive and Left wing forces. Unprincipledness and the opportunist game of hide-and-seek between the Right wing and the Left which the Lovestone group has played, has received a well-merited punishment. It should now be clear to all that the Left wing will progress in the needle trades, as in every other field, only in the process of liquidating the liquidators, or relentlessly combating the Lovestone group and nullifying its influence.

The majority of the workers in the light wing union voted for the Left slate in spite of the fact that the Left wing presented no concrete program, unless one can dignify with that designation the general phrases concerning a "fight to improve conditions". This fact speaks eloquently for the tremendous resources available to the Left wing in the reactionary unions, resources which it has only begun to tap. That it is an annihilating refutation of all the marble-headed theories and practices of "social Fascism", goes without saying. The workers in the Right wing union, suffering bitterly in the present crisis without their leaders taking a single step to improve their conditions have turned, and rightly so, to the Left wing movement for guidance and leadership.

But it is precisely on this score that the Left wing is defective. To retire on its laurels, to become intoxicated with its victories, would mean that the Left wing has learned nothing from the instructive experience of the last four years or more. What will the Left wing propose to do in those locals of the ILGWU which have entrusted them with the leadership? It is essential to put the official Left wing either has no clear point squarely, for it is plain that perspective, or else has a false perspective about which it keeps quiet now and which it plans to unfold in a series of accomplished facts.

What Will Left Wing Do Now?

Does it intend to utilize its leading positions in the Right wing union for the purpose of breaking away little splinters to be added to the Left wing Industrial Union? Such a course would not only restore the Left wing to yesterday's isolation and gain for it the resentment and disillusionment of the workers, but would make the future progress of the movement increasingly difficult. The masses will tolerate a blunder here and a blunder there; they will forget or overlook a great deal; but they will not stand for a policy of permanent blundering.

Or will the Left wing utilize its victories for the purpose of carrying on a genuine fight for the unity of the needle trades workers in one union, an aim which corresponds to the needs and aspirations of the harshly exploited, the decimated and split-up workers? If it carries on a petty sectarian game of victories behind the backs of the masses, if it does not carry on the fight for unity as the Left Opposition has outlined it, then the recent triumphs will fade away like a plucked flower at night. The new leaders of Locals 1 and 9 must immediately make use of their advantageous positions to demand the unification of all the organized needle trades workers. That is now the key question, directly connected with the problem of organizing the resistance of the needle trades workers to the violent encroachments that have been made on their standards of living. It is to this question that we shall return in an early issue. —S.

SILENT CAL SILENT

Catvin Coolidge, who came into national notoriety by claiming to have broken the Boston police strike, and then presided for six years over the most mediocre administration in modern times, has just died. He was the author of: "Profits and civilization go hand in hand." He was said to be a very civilized man. With his death, his claim to silence has become irrefutably established.

THE MILITANT

Entered as second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th St., N. Y.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin Abern James P. Cannon

Max Shachtman Maurice Spector

Arne Swabeck

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1933

Vol. 6, No. 1 Whole No. 148

«Unser Kampf» Tour Concludes with the Launching of Worker's Clubs

On our return trip to N. Y. we made short stops in Chicago, Cleveland, Youngstown and New Castle. The Chicago «Unser Kampf» Club had in the meantime, since its organization a few weeks earlier, arranged a lecture for us at which we spoke to about fifty workers on the Program of the Left Opposition. The discussion lasted till the early hours of the morning and four workers joined up with the club at this lecture.

We also had lectures on the same topic in Cleveland and Youngstown. In New Castle we met, informally, with the members of our branch and sympathizers. We discussed many problems facing the revolutionary movement today. We were very much impressed with this type of workers from the mills who are utilizing this plague of unemployment for the broadening of their Marxian arsenal. Our comrades in New Castle are a promise for the development of future struggles among the steel workers.

In Pittsburgh we established connections among the Jewish workers for the first time. The newly formed branch arranged a lecture for us at which we had an attendance of over forty workers who heard for the first time what the program of the Left Opposition was. We succeeded in getting some subs for the «Unser Kampf» and we now have a comrade in charge of the work in this locality.

From Pittsburgh we proceeded to Philadelphia which we made preparations for a lecture to be held at a future date. We also stopped off in Trenton, making arrangements for a lecture on the program of the Left Opposition to be held on the fourth of January.

On the whole we visited over twenty cities on this tour, holding about the same number of public meetings at which we addressed close to a thousand workers—an element who in their bulk had not been reached hitherto by the ideas of the Left Opposition. This was our first tour of the kind where we made an effort to reach the Jewish speaking worker. As a result of this tour, we now have three functioning «Unser Kampf» Clubs outside of New York (Toronto, Chicago, Minneapolis) with one in the process of formation in St. Louis, with small groups or individuals doing the work of «Unser Kampf» in sixteen cities. With this organized base we feel confident that we will now be able to proceed with the regular issuance of «Unser Kampf», building up the existing clubs and preparing the grounds for new ones.

—MORRIS LEWIT.

—SYLVIA BLEEKER.

BOUND VOLUMES of the MILITANT

OLD FORMAT

from Vol. 1, No. 1 to Vol. 4, No. 12
Nov. 15, 1928—June 15, 1931
71 Issues

$10

NEW FORMAT

from Vol. 4, No. 13 to Vol. 5, No. 51
July 4, 1931—Dec. 31, 1932
76 Issues

$5

Order from
THE MILITANT
126 East 16th Street,
New York City

«With Both Hands»

The Stalin Bureaucracy and the United States of America

(Continued from page 1)

as the confiscation of property, elimination of personal rights, nationalization of women and children, repudiation of debts and religion, and above all, what we thought was an attempt to interfere with our own Government. I told him that neither he nor his Government could expect the friendship, cooperation and recognition of our Government if they ever did try to interfere with our affairs.

"Mr. Stalin immediately replied that he realized this and he too wanted to speak with the same frankness and with out offense. He said that he knew there were such unfavorable reports in our country, and took considerable time to explain the true conditions in Russia. He unhesitatingly admitted, with disarming frankness, that under Trotsky there had been an attempt to spread Communism throughout the world. He said that was the primary cause of the break between himself and Trotsky. That Trotsky believed in Universal Communism while he wanted to confine his efforts to his own country. He explained that they had neither the time nor the money to try to Communize the world, even should they wish to do so, and that his own chief interest was to improve the conditions of the people in Russia, without any interference whatsoever in the government of other countries.

"We discussed the Third International and other reports of Soviet propaganda and I must admit that Mr. Stalin convinced me there is no attempt now on his part, or on the part of officials of the Soviet Government, to interfere with the Government of the United States. We discussed politics, economics, banking, business, trade with the United States, transportation, agriculture and education. I was amazed at Mr. Stalin's knowledge of general affairs. He reminded me of many of our big industrial leaders who must have a general knowledge of practically all affairs to hold their positions. His words, as they were transferred to me through the interpreter, were carefully chosen, and I was particularly surprised at his knowledge of the Constitution of the United States. In fact, my own lack of knowledge of this same Constitution caused me considerable embarrassment, and the first thing I did, upon reaching London, was to find a bookstore to buy a copy.

"The conference lasted well after dark, as the sun sets early in the northern country. Upon leaving, he told me that the interpreter would prepare a typewritten copy of our conversation, which I received two weeks later in London, signed 'I. Stalin' and with this note—Keep this record, it may be a very historical document some day."

The correctness of the interview, as is clear from the circumstances described, is beyond any doubt. Campbell is no light minded journalist hunting after sensations, but an energetic Yankee business man, an important American man of wealth and machine builder. He is quite kindly disposed in his relations to Stalin. In reporting the interview, Campbell did not rely merely on his memory, but also upon the official report supplied to him. Finally, Campbell's reports have nowhere and never been denied. These circumstances sufficiently clarify the correctness of the interview from the formal side. But much more important is the inner political power of conviction of the conversation, its concordance with the spirit of their participants and their circumstances. No journalist, moreover, could have thought up that double handshake, that excellent description of the true essence of the differences of opinion between Stalin and Trotsky.

The Yankee remains true to himself to the very end in this conversation. The solid bourgeois, who has had a bad harvest this year and is therefore all the more inclined to do a stroke of business with the godless nationalizers of women, sticks his leg upon the Soviet table, and slaps the leader of the Bolsheviks on the shoulder half patronizingly, half warningly.

Nobody will want to reproach Stalin for endeavoring to utilize the meeting with Campbell for facilitating an agreement with the American government and the American market. Yet, why this "sudden" rise to his feet, this gripping of Campbell's hand with both of his and this proposal not only of "mutual respect" but also of "friendship"? Does that resemble the conduct of a representative of the workers' state, who is carrying on business negotiations with the representative of the capitalist world? And alas and black, no resemblance at all! But it does resemble the crawling conduct of a petty bourgeois before a big bourgeois. This little occurrence which, to put it frankly, nauseates one in the reading, is very characteristic: it affords the possibility to discern the true political consciousness of Stalin, who is so resolute and relentless in the struggle against the Opposition (Communists and the dissatisfied workers).

Fifteen years after the October revolution, Stalin speaks with the American capitalist in virtually the same tone in which Milukov and Kerensky once spoke with Buchanan in the not very glorious days of the impotent coalition. The resemblance lies not only in the tone, but also in the contents. "The necessity is openly preached amongst you in the press and in public for concluding the war," Buchanan cuttingly reproached the February powers—that is, "Not we," Milukov, Terechenko, Kerensky defended themselves, "only the Bolsheviks. But we'll finish them off right enough." "Just look," Kerensky then assured Buchanan, holding his hand with both his own because he did not have a third hand—"just look, Lenin is already driven into illegality again and Trotsky is in the Kresty prison."

Naturally, Stalin's position is essentially different for the October revolution is an historical fact, and the "apparatus" built itself upon its social consequences. But the political task of the bureaucracy does not consist in the spreading of the October revolution throughout the world; it is for this program that Trotsky was expelled from the USSR, Stalin respectfully reports to the American bourgeois. His Stalin's task—consisted in improving the position of the Russian people by means of "friendship" with American capital. Unfortunately, however, it is precisely Stalin's policy on the field of "improving the position of the people" that leads to constantly sadder results.

Perhaps a sage will be found to contend: By his assertions about the international revolution, etc., Stalin simply aimed at deceiving the American as to his real opinions. What is wrong with that? Is it worth while hanging on to such a point? Yet, only a completely hopeless idiot could possibly believe such an explanation.

Before anything else: Is it permitted to seek to deceive an adversary by such declarations which must inevitably confuse and demoralize friends? For what Stalin simply declared before the whole world was that in contradiction from the Left Opposition, his faction has renounced the theory and practice of the international revolution. Should one play with such things in the interests of diplomacy? Even in the limits of diplomacy such a game would be condemned to a miserable fiasco. A private conversation, even when it lasts till sunrise, is not enough to exercise any influence upon the ruling class of the U. S. A. The Yankees—are serious business men; they will not buy a pig in a poke. Assertions must stand on facts and lead to facts. The declaration of Stalin is no maneuver and no trick; taken at bottom it is the consequence of the theory of socialism in a single country. It was prepared for by the whole policy of recent years. In the near future too, it may become the doctrine of the new course, into which the bureaucracy is entering more directly every day, thanks to its blindness and its failures.

Can it really be forgotten that the Soviet government, unexpected by all, supported the Kellogg Pact? The motivation dictated by Stalin and intended only for home consumption, said: Even if the Kellogg Pact does not go far enough, it is nevertheless a step forward. Soviet diplomacy is of course under no obligation to say out loud everything it is thinking. It must not, without undermining the ground beneath its feet, make any steps of declarations which help the enemy to deceive the workers and weaken their vigilance. The Kellogg Pact is no step forward to peace, but the diplomatic cover for the mightiest and most dangerous of all the imperialist bandits. The matter is not merely confined to the Pact. Litvinov recently supported the American proposal for "partial disarmament". In that connection the Soviet press did not expose Hoover's demand, but only those imperialists who did not want to join hands with it. Meanwhile, Hoover's proposal, just like the Kellogg Pact, has as its aim neither disarmament nor the averting of war, but the concentration of the control over war and peace in the hands of the U. S. A. The preparation of favorable moral and material points of departure for the coming war—that is the only task of the American imperialists. If it is assumed that Soviet diplomacy could not express itself openly—that is not our opinion—then the press should have spoken for it. But when the Stalin-inspired diplomacy clings to the proposals of Hoover and Kellogg "with both hands", it is deceiving the world proletariat and weakening the Soviet state, if the Centralists in Amsterdam places themselves entirely upon the basis of petty bourgeois pacifism, which is honestly meant for the most part and is at all events still rooted in the masses, then in Geneva, they join hands at the "Left" with imperialist pseudo-pacifism, whose roots are to be sought in banks and trusts. In the question of war, the epigones break openly and demonstratively with the revolutionary tradition of Leninism. Their immediate objective is to win the trust of American capital. The nocturnal conversation in the Kremlin constitutes irreplaceable commentary to the speeches of the Soviet delegates at Geneva.

Yet, diplomacy does not exhaust the question, and on this field it can lay no claim to first place. Where does the Communist International fit in? For four and a half years now no Congress of the Comintern has been called and nobody knows when it will be called, if ever. Stalin does not so much as find the time to appear at the ECCI Plenum and leaves the leadership to people who for the most part need leading themselves. Is it not a deliberate demonstration of disrespect for the Comintern? Does it not signify and in actuality and not only in conversation with the American bourgeois, Stalin has given up completely the policy of the international revolution? No, he did not deceive Campbell. He only described, with rare frankness, the situation as it actually is. Still another question, and that the most essential of all, was brightly illuminated in the Stalin-Campbell dialogue: the question of socialism in one country. In spite of all the half-baked prophecies, the Five Year Plan did not increase the economic "independence" of the Soviet Union. On the contrary, the advances of the industrialization extended and deepened the relations of Soviet economy to world economy, consequently, also, their mutual dependency.

The double hand-shake of Stalin and his respectful indication of the Left Opposition to American capital is, in the last analysis, nothing but the political expression of the economic dependency of the Soviet Union upon the world market. The humiliating character of this "expression" is determined by the psychology of a very highly situated but, notwithstanding that, a petty bourgeois bureaucrat, whom the great events always find unprepared.

The more the Stalin faction turns its back upon the international revolution, the more it will feel its dependency upon world capital, the more convulsively it will cling to it "with both hands". Stalin's hand-shake is not only a symbolical act—it is almost a program. Whereas he thoughtlessly and flatteringly accuses the Opposition of endeavoring to turn over Soviet industry to foreign capital, Stalin is obviously preparing for a change in the international as well as the internal political course.

Stuck in a vise, the bureaucracy is capable of engaging in any adventure, including treacherous ones. To trust it blindly, means to be an accessory to treason. Today more than ever we are duty-bound to watch over Stalin's conduct in the field of foreign political relations not only with tireless attention but also with sharp distrust.

On guard! Be prepared!

WHERE THE MILITANT IS SOLD

The Militant can be bought at the following news stands:

Minneapolis, Minn.:
Engelson News Co., 234-2nd Ave. S.;
Schindler Book Store, 6th and Hennepin Sts.

Chicago, Ill.:
General Book Store, 2009 W. Division St.; Post Office News Co., 37 Monroe St.; Carillon Book Shop, 7001 Cols Ave.; Horsley's Book Store, 633 W. Madison St.; Chesbink's Book Store, 2720 W. Division St.

Pittsburgh, Pa.:
Ross' Book Shop, 1330-5th Ave. P. and L. News Co., 220 Federal St. N. S.; Hirsch's Book Shop, 1023 Center Ave.
Los Angeles, Calif.:
Belmont News Co., Arcade St.; Smith News Co., 613 S. Hill St.

St. Louis, Mo.:
Foster's Book Store, 410 Washington Ave.

San Francisco, Calif.:
McDonald's Book Store, 65 Sixth St.

Boston, Mass.:
Shapiro's Book Store, 7 Beach St.; Audelman's Book Store, 284 Tremont St.; Cantor's Store, 49 Howard St.; Newsstand at 35 Canseway St.

Roxbury, Mass.:
Stein's Book Store, 536 Warren St.

Announcing Classes for 1933

International Workers School
(Left Opposition)
Registration one dollar per course
J. WEBER, Administrator
128 East 16th Street
New York City

The Crisis in the Food Workers Industrial Union in New York

The Food Workers Industrial Union is in a very bad situation. The enthusiasm and strength of its membership and its strike struggles, which struck terror in the past in the hearts of the bosses' associations and their gangsters, has given place for a long time to pessimism and discontent. This is very often denied and only occasionally admitted by the leadership of the union and the Trade Union Unity Council. But they always cautiously avoid any explanation of the causes that brought about the present situation.

During the party's pre-convention discussion in the summer of 1930, I wrote an article on the union, pointing out that unless the union changes its policy and corrects its errors, the union would continue to head toward destruction. This article never appeared. The excuse was that it was handed in too late, though it was given to them during the first week of the opening of the discussion. Again, a year ago, the convention of the union took place. The discussion for the delegates to the convention was limited by the fraction (headed by Joseph Zack) to ten minutes and later to 5. I strenuously protested against this decision and insisted that the past errors ought to be brought out into the open and a chance to discuss these errors be given to the delegates. In this way, some of the confidence lost by the members in the fraction, might be regained. This proposal was rejected by Zack on the ground that such a discussion would tend to demoralize the convention.

On November 16, 1932, the elections of the officials in the Cafeteria Section took place. General secretary Rubin made a long and "satisfactory" report on the union. He defended the general policy of the F.W.I.U. and said that if some sort of crisis existed in the union, it was because we had failed to carry out correctly the "general line". Then three minutes was set as the limit to the discussion, which was not to last over an hour. Some party members who had chanced to be misunderstood by the party bureaucrats, took advantage of the opportunity, to smooth over their bad standing by defending the "general line". Then the slate of the fraction for the officials was presented and steam-rolled without difficulty—to the glory of the general line.

The Open Letter
Let us take the open letter of the Executive Committee of the F.W.I.U. signed by the General Secretary Joseph Zack, addressed to the organization and published in the September issue of the Food Worker. In it the crisis is analyzed as follows:

"It is necessary to emphasize at this time that the inner situation in the Food Workers Union is such that the union can hardly attract and hold workers ready for organization." The letter attributes the cause of the present conditions in the union to the following reasons: anarcho-syndicalist traditions of the union; constant changes in the leadership; lack of persistent, steady line of policy in the industry; infantile Leftist tendencies when the union is on the up-grade; rank opportunism when faced with severe difficulties; lack of inner democracy; cliquism of Beal and Teitelbaum, etc.; and above all, the failure to carry on the "general line" of the F.W.I.U.

So read the letter. But when we examine closely the actual results of Zack's letter we see that the general line curbed out in full in the union (which entirely reflects the general line which the Stalinist bureaucracy has imposed upon the party) is what brought about the present conditions in the union.

It is discouraging, however, that with the exception of Kleron's mild criticism in the following issue of the Food Worker, the fraction said nothing about the merits or lack of merits of this disgraceful document.

Is it possible for us to believe that the fraction forgot the past so soon and allowed itself to be made the scapegoat—of the "general line"? Has it been forgotten that in every instance, all the policies and tactics in the union were made with the endorsement of Zack and Johnstone, whether they were "ultra-Leftist" or "rank opportunistic"? For instance in May 1930, when the Executive Committee after a three day discussion decided to change the structure of the union, Johnstone over-ruled the proposals of the Executive Committee of the union, stating that it was an A F of L policy. Only a year and a half later, this "A F of L policy" was accepted by them as the "correct F.W.I.U. policy." The above example is an indication of that "lack of persistence" in the union's line. Was I not condemned time and again by Johnstone and other bureaucrats for proposing in the leading fraction the abolition of the general shop delegates council, the establishment of section executives, etc., etc.?

To conceal these facts which are very well known at least to some members of the union can only bring injury to the F.W.I.U. in particular and Communism in general.

In his letter, Zack speaks for democracy against bureaucracy. What a pity! Didn't Zack, over the heads of the union leadership, come down to the Concooper's workers, demanding a ten percent tax on their wages for the F.W.I.U. and stating that those who refuse to pay the tax are enemies of the working class? When the majority of the members refused to submit to this categorical and arbitrary demand, Zack came back a few weeks later with an alleged decision by the National Committee of the Trade Union Unity League and the party, stating that for the benefit of the "concoopers", they were ordered to leave their jobs. When the workers elected a committee to see comrade Foster and find out the reasons for this decision, he (Foster) in the presence of the National Committee, said that the "committee knew nothing of this decision and, turning to Zack, he condemned him for such bureaucratic action.

The Kornelios Case
Another example is the Kornelios case. Because Kornelios dared to criticize the inefficiency of the Concooper's management, he was fired from his job by Zack's assistant, John Steuben. When the membership of the union condemned this action and voted that Kornelios return to work, Zack said, "Nothing doing. The membership is not always right," and rejected its decision.

As to anarcho-syndicalism, the cliquism of Beal, Teitelbaum and the others, we shall deal with these aspects of the question in our next article.

In conclusion, Zack proposed several good points for the union. But these points were proposed dozens of times in the past. They never materialized due to the fact that the party members did not function as a genuine Communist fraction.

Only recently, the party bureaucrats arbitrarily excluded more than thirty comrades from fraction meetings, considering them as "unhealthy and disruptive elements". Only those with special invitations from the fraction secretary are now allowed to attend meetings. This action has nothing in common with Leninism. If comrades are not qualified for the fraction, they must first be called to account before the Control Commission and action taken there. Such procedures indicate that no healthy measures are being taken to remedy the ills within the union.

—SEBASTIAN PAPPAS.

JAPAN

Its Rise from Feudalism to Capitalist Imperialism and the Development of the Proletariat

By Jack Weber

The turn-over of labor in industry is a vital index of workers' living conditions. In Japan this index is artificially lowered by the method of involving workers in debt at the beginning of employment so as to keep them in bondage, and by the virtual imprisonment of labor in dormitories. Factory workers are allowed but two rest days a month by law and those in dormitories can only leave two to four times a month by special permission. Even so the turn-over in "normal" times is extremely high, official figures setting it at from 60 to 100 percent before the present crisis. The costliness of this turn-over may be gauged by the fact that it takes a year in silk mills to bring a recruit's productivity up to average, yet the average term of work is but slightly more than one year. Nor do the girls who represent more than half of all factory workers (and 80 percent of all textile workers) transfer to other factories. They prefer to return home to marry—or they are forced into prostitution.

Trade Union Movement

The first attempts at organizing trade unions were ruthlessly suppressed by the government. The anti-union Act of 1900 remained in force with but minor changes up to 1926 when, following the English models of opportunist "harmony" unions designed with the aid of the ruling class to blunt and render harmless the weapons of working class organization, the Japanese government decided to foster and encourage company unionism by a new act recommending arbitration in labor disputes. This act has remained a dead letter on the statute books although company unions have spread. Trade unions still possess no legal status, the government cautiously tolerating reformist unions but ever ready to suppress "dangerous tendencies" without warning.

The Outburst of 1918 and After

As the cost of living rose to dizzy heights during the War, the workers were driven more and more by need to strike for higher wages. Whereas in 1914 there were only 50 strikes involving 7600 workers, the number of strikes rose to 398 in 1917 and to 417 in 1918 involving, in the latter year 66,000 workers. The existing scarcity of food was aggravated by the Siberian adventure which necessitated the buying-up and diversion from the market of large stocks of rice. The pinch of hunger was felt everywhere by the masses.

Suddenly, without previous warning, the storm broke and there came the thunderclap of the spontaneous uprising of 1918. Starting in the obscure fisherman's village of Toyama where some fishermen's wives stormed the rice shops for food for their starving children, the movement spread like wildfire among workers and peasants. The agrarian movement revealed its elemental power by the burning of the homes of large landowners in forty-two provinces, and the looting of granaries. In the space of a few days the workers in practically every large town and city poured out into the streets, banded together and, where they did not loot the shops directly, forced the sale of rice to pre-war prices. Troops were called out in every large city. The workers faced the troops and called on them not to fire on their brothers and sisters. The government, realizing the ultimate possibilities of the situation, threw the troops into the shops to sell food over the counters at low prices, yes, and to give free rice to the poor. Only when the movement began to recede were the troops used for shootings and brutal suppression, many of those who had bought rice at the lowered prices being thrown into prison for indeterminate periods.

Had there been the barest kernel of a Bolshevik party in Japan at this time, the year 1918 might well have been hailed as the "1905" of the Japanese working class. But no such organization existed, ready to place itself consciously at the head of the masses in action and to formulate the necessary political slogans in the light of the existing situation and the relation of forces. The masses were not aware of developments in Russia, the censorship acting as a "cordon sanitaire" to prevent the infecting of the Japanese workers. Whatever leadership did exist was more under the influence of anarcho-syndicalism than under that of Communism. Hence the complete lack of preparation for events, the sporadic character of the outburst and the lack of political demands that could have served as a focal point for later organization. Soviets were out of the question but demands to end the war, to grant universal suffrage, to recognize the right of the workers to organize—under the circumstances the democratic slogans could have been linked up with the more elemental demand for bread and peace.

Nevertheless the rice riots of 1918 form a turning-point in Japanese history. The masses learned their own power and the utter helplessness of the ruling class in the face of a mass outpouring into the streets. The seed was planted for making the workers conscious of their historic role. Consciously or not, the first step had been taken on the road to the conquest of power. Immediately the riots resulted in a great impetus to unionization. The unions became a force to be reckoned with, one that could no longer be safely suppressed by the ruling class. Instead the government and the "enlightened" capitalists were impelled to resort to the new methods of "boring from within" the unions, helping to create organizations for "harmony" and the "mutual interests" of capital and labor.

Anarcho-Syndicalism and the Unions

In 1906 the worker-intellectual Kotoku returned to Japan from the U. S. where he had been active in the ranks of the I.W.W. Kotoku brought to Japan the best traditions of this movement, an insufficiently grounded but revolutionary precursor of Communism. The movement thus founded was ruthlessly hounded by the police until temporarily suppressed by the discovery of a bomb plot against the Emperor in 1911 for which eleven men and one woman were executed. Despite this inevitable result of individualist terror, the basic ideas of syndicalism, direct mass action and industrial unionism, penetrated deeply into some of the unions, particularly those organized in the newly-built dockyards, destined soon to closure under the blight of the after-the-war crisis of 1920. Encouraged by the uprising of 1918 in which they had taken a leading part, the syndicalists led several great dockyard strikes during the years 1919 and 1921. In the Kawasaki and Mitsubishi dockyard strikes of 1921 there was exhibited the inspiring heroic solidarity of thousands of workers. To combat the rapid spread of unemployment now engulfing the working masses, the strikers set up the slogan of workers' (syndicate) control and management of the shops. Many strikers felt that the proletarian revolution was at hand.

These strikes were the high point of syndicalist influence in Japan. They illustrate the splendid fighting qualities of the syndicalists but also the inevitable downfall of a workers' movement that attempts to ignore the state with its special armed forces prepared to crush any revolt. These strike struggles and the political consequences form an object lesson of the absolute need of a revolutionary vanguard in the form of the Communist party armed with the Marxist theory of the state, analyzing every new situation by means of its dialectic class approach and thus prepared to put forward correct tactics based on correct policies.

Our Club Plan

MILITANT BUILDERS

Since December 24th there has been no change in the rate at which subs are coming in. The record for December 24—January 4 is not a good one. Perhaps the reason is the year end holiday slack. Be that as it may we must now make up for lost time. To make this campaign a success, every branch must participate and there should be no let up in the work.

New York should be taken as an example of what splendid work can be done by taking advantage of our club plan. New York is in the lead again. In New York more comrades are participating in the campaign than anywhere else, and they are doing the work consistently.

Here is the record of the campaign from the beginning up to date by cities:

THE RECORD BY CITIES

New York	48
Chicago	32
Minneapolis	22
Pittsburgh	18
Philadelphia	15
Montreal	13
Toronto	10
Boston	10
New Castle, Pa.	8
St. Louis	4
Des Moines	4
Lynn, Mass.	4
South Bend, Ind.	4

THE STAFF

Chicago Friends of the Militant Club	12
H. Capelis	12
P. Vonnas	12
H. Nash	11
B. Morgenstern	8
V. R. Dunne	8
W. Krehm	6

A. Joel	6
J. Ross	6
H. A.	4
M. Hudson	4
F. Rayburn	4
M. Gottlieb	4
J. Hamilton	4
W. Koulkow	4
O. Coover	4
S. Lessin	4
J. Sifakis	4
E. McMullen	4
A. Miller	4
J. Weber	4
L. Basky	4
G. Drucker	4
C. Ingram	4
J. Ritz	4

The New York Branch is represented on this list by five members. That is the reason New York stands at the head of the list of cities.

Mobilize the membership for the campaign!

THE NEW YORK CLASS IN THE HISTORY OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

Due to the holidays at the end of the year, the course of lectures on "The History of the Communist International" being conducted by Max Shachtman at the International Workers School, 126 E. 16th Street, was postponed for two sessions. The course will be resumed this Sunday, January 8, 1933, with the "Fourth Congress of the Comintern" as the topic. All comrades are invited to attend.

LEON TROTSKY

Soviet Economy in Danger

The Situation on the Eve of the Second Five Year Plan

The official press now prints from issue to issue an uninterrupted list of accusations against the workers, the directors, the technicians, managers, co-operative personnel, and the trade unionists: all guilty of not fulfilling the plans, the instructions and "the six conditions". But where are the causes for this? Objective causes do not obtain. To blame for it all is the ill will of those entrusted with the fulfilling. And that is just what Pravda writes, "Do there obtain any objective causes whatever for this deterioration in the work? None whatever!" (October 2, 1932). People simply do not want to work as they should—and that's all there is to it. The October plenum of the CEC has ascertained that "there is unsatisfactory management in every link down the line." Except, of course, that link which is called the Central Executive Committee.

But are there really no objective causes for the poor quality of the workmanship? A specified amount of time is required not only for the ripening of wheat but also for the familiarization with the complex technological processes. Psychological processes, it is true, are more pliable than those of vegetation, but this pliability has its limits. One cannot skip over them. And in addition—and this is no less important—one cannot demand the maximum of intensity under minimum of nourishment.

The resolution of the October plenum of the CEC accuses the workers and the administrators of their inability "to clinch" their highest achievements, and of their continuing falling below the marks they had set. In reality, the breakdowns were ingrained in the character of the achievements themselves. By virtue of an exceptional effort a man can lift a weight that is far above his "average" strength. But he cannot long sustain such a load over his head. It is absurd to accuse him of his inability "to clinch" his effort.

Soviet economy is in danger! It is not difficult to determine its ailment. It springs from the nature of the successes themselves. From an excessive and poorly calculated strain the economy has suffered a rupture. One must proceed to cure, painstakingly and perseveringly. Rakovsky warned us as early as 1930, "We are entering an entire epoch, which will pass under the heading of payment in full for the entire past."

The Second Five-Year Plan

The second Five Year Plan was fashioned in the scales of "gigantism." It is difficult, to be more correctly, it is impossible to judge "by sight" the extent to which the final indices of the second Five Year Plan are exaggerated. But the question now touches not the balance of the Second Five Year Plan, but its points of departure, the line of its junction with the first Five Year Plan. The first year of the second Five Year Plan has received an onerous inheritance from the last year of the first Five Year Plan.

The second plan, according to the design, is the spiral continuation of the first plan. But the first plan has not been brought to completion. The second plan from the very beginning is left suspended in mid-air. If one leaves things to go on as they have been, then the second Five Year Plan will begin by patching up the holes of the first under the administrative whip. This means that the crisis will be aggravated. In this manner one can bring matters to a catastrophe.

There is only one way out: the inauguration of the Second Five Year Plan must be put off for one year. 1933 must be made a buffer between the first Five Year Plan and the second. In the course of this period it is necessary on the one hand, to verify the inheritance left by the first Five Year Plan, to fill in the most yawning gaps, to mitigate the unbearable disproportions and to straighten out the economic front; and on the other hand, to reconstruct the Second Five Year Plan, so calculating it as to make its points of departure about flush to the actual and not imaginary results of the first Five Year Plan. Doesn't this simply mean that the period for the completion of the first plan will be prolonged another year? No, unfortunately that is not the case. The material consequences of the four years' of hue and cry cannot be stricken out from reality by one stroke of a pen. A careful checking over is necessary, a regulation, and a determination of the coefficients of growth actually achieved. The present condition of economy excludes in general any possibility of planned work. 1933 cannot be a supplementary year of the first Five Year Plan, nor the first year of the second. It must occupy an independent position between the two, in order to assure the mitigation of the consequences of adventurism and the preparation of the material and moral prerequisites for planned expansion.

The Left Opposition in its own time was the first to demand the inauguration of the Five Year Plan. Now it is duty bound to say: It is necessary to put off the second Five Year Plan. Away with stock jobbing! There is no reconciling them with planned activity. Then, you are for retreat? Yes, for a temporary retreat. And what about the prestige of the infallible leadership? The fate of the dictatorship of the proletariat is more important than blown-up prestige.

* The hostility, an outright hatred, toward "gigantism" is rapidly growing in Soviet circles, as a natural and an inevitable reaction against the adventurism of the last period. There is no need, however, to explain to what extent this reaction, from which the petty bourgeois skifflet spirit derives satisfaction, may in the future become dangerous to the socialist construction.

The Year of Capital Reconstruction
Having been knocked off balance, Soviet economy is in need of serious reconstruction. Under capitalism the broken equilibrium is restored by the blind forces of the crisis. The Socialist Republic allows of applying conscious and rational cures.

It is impossible, of course, to halt production in the whole country as it is halted during repairs in a factory or in an enterprise. But there is also no need whatever for it. It is enough to lower the tempos. The current productive labor for 1933 cannot be carried on without a plan, but this plan must be one for a single year, worked out on the basis of moderate quality quotas.

Attainments in quality must be given first place. Inopportune constructions should be liquidated; all forces and resources must be concentrated upon constructions of the first rank; the interrelations between the various branches of industry must be balanced on the basis of experience; factories must be put in order; equipment must be restored.

Let there be an end to driving, and spurring, and establishing records, but let the productivity of each enterprise be subjected to its technological rhythm. Return to the laboratories whatever has been taken too soon from out of the laboratories. Finish building whatever still remains unfinished. Put in order the interrelations between the departments in factories. Straighten out whatever has been bent. Repair that which has been damaged. Prepare the factory for a transition to the highest stage. Quality quotas must be given a character both supple and conditional in order that they may not interfere with achievements in quantity.

1933 must gain complete mastery over the labor turn-over, by bettering the conditions of the workers; that's where the beginning must be made, for herein is to be found the key to everything else. Workers and their families must be assured of food, shelter and clothing. No matter what the price!

The management and the proletarian cadres of factories should be freed of supplementary burdens, such as the planting of potatoes, breeding rabbits, etc. All questions relating to supplying factories with necessities must be regulated as independent and not supplementary tasks.

Order must be brought into the production of objects for mass consumption. Commodities must be adapted to human needs and not to the raw by-products of the heavy industry.

The process of inflation must be stopped with an iron hand and the stable monetary unit must be restored. This difficult and painful operation cannot be undertaken without boldly curtailing capital investments, without sacrificing many hundred millions that have been inexpediently or inopportunistically sunk in new constructions, in order that thus losses into billions may be forestalled in the future.

A temporary retreat is exigent both in industry and in rural economy. The hitherto line of the retreat cannot be determined beforehand. It will be revealed only in the experience of capital reconstruction.

The managing organs must control, assist, and pick out everything that is capable of living and functioning but they should desist from driving enterprises to their doom, as is the case now. The economy and the human beings need a breathing spell from administrative violence and adventurism.

Many managers, as is shown by the papers, have independently arrived at the conclusion that 1933 must differ in some essential manner from the elapsing year. But they do not draw their ideas to their conclusion, in order not to expose themselves to danger.

As touches the rail transport, Economic Life writes, "One of the most important tasks of 1933 must be the task of a full and final liquidation of each and every imperfection, non-completion, poor tie-up and disproportion in the functioning of the different integral parts of the transport mechanism." Well spoken! This formula should be accepted in full, and be expanded to apply to the entire economy, as a whole.

As touches the tractor plant in Stalingrad, Pravda writes, "We must decisively dispense with defective methods of workmanship, we must put an end to fever along the conveyor in order to guarantee a regulated output of production." That is absolutely correct! Planned economy, taken as a whole, represents, in its type, a conveyor on a state scale. The method of stuffing up holes is incompatible with planned production. 1933 must "put an end to fever along the conveyor", or at least we must considerably lower the temperature.

The Soviet government itself has announced by proclamation a "turn" from quantity to quality in the sphere of rural economy. That is correct, but the question must be approached on a much wider scale. The matter touches not only the quality of the cultivation of the soil, but the entire kolkhoz and sovkhos policy and praxis. The turn from quantity to quality must be carried over into the functioning of the administration itself.

First of all, a retreat is inevitable in the sphere of collectivization. Here more than anywhere else the administration is the captive of its own mistakes. While superficially continuing to automatically command, and to specify under the signature of Molotov and Stalin the precise number of acres for grain tillage, the bureaucracy, in reality, is now floating with the current.

USE THE CLUB PLAN. GET SUBS FOR THE MINERS.

Concurrently, in the villages there has appeared a new stratum of the so-called "retired" i. e. former kolkhoz members. Their number is growing. It is out and out insanity to keep by force within the collective peasants who pilfer the crops, who sell the seed in bazaars and subsequently demand it from the government for sowing. However, it is no less criminal to leave the process of collectivization to its own course. The tendency to place a cross, just now, over the collectivization movement is now evidently raising its head even within party ranks. To allow this would be to throw out the child from the tub along with the soap suds.

1933 must serve to bring the collective rural economy into alignment with the technical, economic and cultural resources. This means—the selection of the most viable collectives, their reorganization in correspondence with experience and the wishes of the basic peasant mass, first of all the peasant poor. And, at the same time—the formulation of such conditions for leaving the kolkhozes as would reduce to a minimum the disruption of rural economy, to say nothing of the direct dangers of civil war.

The policy of mechanically "liquidating the kulak" is now factually discarded. A cross should be placed over it officially. And simultaneously it is necessary to establish the policy of severely restricting the exploiting tendencies of the kulak. With this goal in mind the lowest strata of the villages must be welded together into a union of the peasant poor.

In 1933 the moujiks will till the land, the textile workers will produce calico, the blast furnaces will smelt metal, and the railroads will transport people and the products of labor. But the highest criterion of this year will lie not in producing as much as one possibly can and as fast as possible but in putting economy in order; in checking over the inventories, separating the healthful from the diseased, and the good from the bad; in clearing away the rubbish and mud, in building the lacking houses and dining rooms, in finishing the roofs, in installing sanitary ventilation. For, in order that they may work well, people must first of all live like human beings, and consequently satisfy their human needs.

To set aside a special year of capital reconstruction is a measure which by itself solves nothing whatever of course. It can attain its major significance only under a change in the very approach to economy, and, first of all, to its living protagonists, the workers and peasants. The approach to economy pertains in the domain of politics. The weapon of politics is the party.

Our task of tasks is to resurrect the party. Here as well we must take an inventory of the onerous inheritance of the post-Lenin period, we must separate the healthy from the ailing, the good from the bad, we must clear away the rubbish and the mud, we must air and disinfect all the offices of the bureaucracy. After the party there follow the Soviets and the trade unions. The capital reconstruction of all Soviet organizations is the most important and the most urgent task of 1933.

—L. TROTSKY.

Prinkipo, October 22, 1932.

THE END.

Open Letter to Vandervelde

(Continued from page 1)
of this logic often enough fall upon proletarian revolutionists who took part in the establishment of the regime of the dictatorship. Yes, in the development of an isolated workers' state, betrayed by the international social democracy, the bureaucratic apparatus has acquired a potency which is dangerous for the socialist revolution. I have no need of this being called to my mind. But before the class enemy, I assume full responsibility not only for the October revolution which produced the regime of the dictatorship, but also for the Soviet republic as it is today, with its government which exiled me to a foreign land and deprived me of my Soviet citizenship rights.

We have destroyed democracy in order to master capitalism. You are defending capitalism allegedly in the name of democracy. But where is it hidden, this democracy?

Not in the port of Antwerp, in any case. There were ticks, cops, gendarmes equipped with rifles. But not even the shadow of the democratic right of asylum was to be found there.

And in spite of everything, I quit the waters of Antwerp without the slightest pessimism. During the midday pause, dockers gathered on the deck, emerging from the hold or coming from port. There were two or three dozens of them, of these strong and serene Flemish proletarians, blackened for the most part by coal dust. A cordon of detectives separated them from us. The dockers contemplated the tableau in silence, taking the measure of everyone present with their eyes. There is a solid dockworker in the direction of the flatfeet. Our deck replies with smiles; a movement surges through the workers. They have recognized their own. I do not say that the Antwerp dockers are Bolsheviks. But by a sound instinct they took their place. In resuming their work, they smiled amicably at us and many of them brought their gnarled fingers to

The Death of the Father of Revisionism

(Continued from last issue)

It is interesting to note that at the outset, the party fathers and the official theorists—Liebknecht the elder, Kautsky, Schoenlank and others included—attached no fundamental significance to Bernstein's views. The party press even wrote at the outset that there is something healthy in the idea to submit the party program to periodic revision on the basis of new developments. That the socialist movement would split on this rock which Bernstein threw into its midst, did not occur to most of the leaders at the beginning.

The credit for the first shot in the counter-offensive, seems to go to Parvus (Dr. Helfand), the brilliant Russian Marxist who was then active in the German movement. He was promptly followed by Rosa Luxemburg, whose comparative youth in the German movement did not diminish the effectiveness of the blows she continued to strike for the Left wing throughout her life, down to the very day when she was assassinated in Berlin by Bernstein's comrades-in-arms. Fighting on their side were also Clara Zetkin, Franz Mehring, Karl Kautsky—always a little belatedly, appearing on the battleground at the very end, as Rosa put it, like the Napoleonic Old Guard!—and the father of Russian Marxism Plechanov.

Defeats on Paper

With such an array of intellectual giants massed against him, it is no wonder that Bernstein suffered defeat after defeat. But these defeats were of a formal nature and left him and his movement unimpaired. In 1890, at the Hanover party congress, the party adopted Bebel's resolution against the revisionists: "The party stands as before on the foundation of the class struggle.... there is no reason for the party to change either its fundamental principles and demands, its tactics, or its name, that is, to become a democratic-socialist reform party in place of a social democratic party...."

In Dresden, four years later, the radical wing gained another paper triumph when the revisionist attempts to change the class struggle tactic of the party were condemned. Only 11 delegates voted against this resolution; some were Left wingers, not wholly satisfied with it, the rest were at the extreme Right. As for most of the revisionists, they mockingly voted for the resolution amidst considerable merriment. They knew better than most of the radicals that the resolution would remain on paper, whereas the practice of the party was swinging more definitely in their direction. So prominent a party father as Auer, who carefully refrained from voting for Bernstein at the party congress, is said to have written him: "Lieber Ede, so was tut man, aber man sagt es nicht!"—"My dear Eddie, that's the sort of thing you do, but you don't talk about it!" This classic formula contains more than cynicism; it sums up the ideas of the party leaders, on the road to their August 4, 1914 but prudent enough to conceal the fact under the old watchwords and banners.

The genuine Marxist wing of the movement was even then in favor of expelling Bernstein from the party. In 1901, Plechanov wrote: "In Bernstein's views there are now left only feeble traces of socialism. In reality he stands much closer to the petty bourgeois adherents of 'social reform' than to the revolutionary social democracy. Yet he is still called 'party comrade' and he is not requested to leave the party."

their caps in sign of greetings. There it was, our democracy.

When the boat descended the Scheldt, in the misty fog, all along the quays, with their cranes paralyzed by the crisis, cries of farewell resounded from

Eduard Bernstein's 'Triumph' Over Militant Marxism

Rosa Luxemburg also presented a proposal for his expulsion, but the very idea of such a ruthless measure horrified the party leaders and, for that matter, most of the Left wingers. It was never even taken up by the party congress. Kautsky, at that time still engaged in polemizing against Bernstein in that dry, pedantic, lifeless manner which proved to be no obstacle to their eventual reconciliation, opposed his expulsion. He stood for preserving that peculiar sort of "freedom of opinion in the party" which has always served to shield the Right wing from the attacks of the Left.

The discussion around Bernstein's views was not, of course, confined to the German movement. His writings not only gave a decisive impetus to a whole series of revisionist attacks upon the body of Marxian doctrine by petty bourgeois economists and sociologists, but formed the line of demarcation between the two principal tendencies in the international socialist movement.

In practice, and not infrequently in theory, the whole Second International was dominated by the revisionist school, as was shown most strikingly and fatally in the crucial moment when the world war broke out. The rise of imperialism in the most important countries of the two continents had reared a labor aristocracy that merged or almost merged with the lower middle class which was being attracted everywhere to the socialist movement. Their interests became bound up with the destinies of their respective imperialist fatherlands. Allegiance to socialism became a "practical ideal" which was reconciled without great difficulty with the frightful exploitation of those tens of millions of black, brown and yellow colonial peoples who never figured in the Bernsteinian scheme, and for good cause.

The upper strata of the working class, swelled by an influx of the petty bourgeoisie from town and country, fortified by a powerful trade union and party bureaucracy, bolstered up by well-established institutions and interests, recoiled from the prospect of social revolution. With the gradual improvement of their own conditions, and with every apparent prospect of steadily "growing into" socialism by the parliamentary process (the German socialist vote in 1912 reached 4,250,000; elsewhere it rose correspondingly), the criticism of the Left wing lost much of its vigor and effectiveness and the standpoint of Bernstein appeared to be justified by the facts of social evolution.

The Kautskys and Bernstein

Added to this was the fact that the official Marxist school, represented by Kautsky with whom Luxemburg broke long before the war, did not exclude the Bernsteinian conception; it rather supplemented it much in the manner that a left peg-leg assists a still vigorous right foot. While the official program of the German social democracy, adopted in Erfurt towards the end of the last century, was formally Marxian, it had wide gaps in it through which opportunist practice could enter with ease. The central criticism by Marx of the Gotha program—the omission of the dictatorship of the proletariat—was ignored at Erfurt too. At all events, the the port from unknown but faithful friends.

In finishing these lines between Antwerp and Vlissingen, I send the workers of Belgium a fraternal greeting. December 5, 1932.

Pioneer Publishers Notes

The following letter is a response to last week's announcement of our plans and difficulties by one of our friends and sympathizers who has himself raised twenty-five dollars for the publication of our pamphlets. We hope that it will be the signal for our friends to follow his example.

"The ideas of the Left Opposition are gradually penetrating into the ranks of the party members. The more honest party members and sympathizers are turning to the Left Opposition for true information on and a Marxian interpretation of the burning problems of the Chinese, German, Russian situations, the world economic crisis, unemployment and the trade union movement.

"The Stalinist leadership of the Comintern and the American party have done everything to confuse the proletarian vanguard. The Left Opposition is the only Communist current that has a Marxist position on revolutionary problems. The ideas of the Left Opposition are expounded in its press. But this is not sufficient. Pamphlets and books have to be published too. During the year 1932 books of extraordinary importance on the Chinese and German questions were published by the League. Events, however, move with great rapidity in Germany, the Soviet Union and in other countries. New questions arise and new solutions are needed.

"As announced in the last issue of the Militant the League has on hand a few timely pamphlets by comrade Trotsky and other comrades dealing with the crisis in Soviet economy, the situation in Germany, unemployment in this country, the role of the Left Opposition, etc. These pamphlets, a great need of the hour are, unfortunately, still in manuscript. Their publication is delayed because of lack of funds. Such a situation cannot be tolerated. These pamphlets should come out immediately.

"How can it be done? Very easily. Through the establishment of a Publishing Loan Fund. Comrades and sympathizers who are anxious to see the ideas of the Left Opposition propagated without undue delay should lend the League as much as they can afford for a definite period of time. This money will be used for the publication of books and pamphlets. The 'debt' will be paid back as rapidly as the pamphlets sell. There is no risk in making these loans and they don't require great sacrifices (and no sacrifices are too great for revolutionists).

"Comrades and sympathizers! Help realize this plan! Take out a few dollars from the bank and 'invest' them in the ideas of revolutionary internationalism! If you have no savings of your own persuade your friends to make a loan to the League. We must get these pamphlets out. Let us try and succeed will be on our side.

"Comradely,
"D. MARCUS"

Work is already under way on Unemployment and the American Working Class by Arne Swabeck. We will keep our movement informed of the progress we are making. But this does not mean that the idea put forth by comrade Marcus is not as absolutely necessary as he puts it. It is. There are many obstacles to overcome before we can finally say that this pamphlet, not to speak of the others, is off the press.

And those are the magic words we are anxiously awaiting the opportunity to announce. So let us have action on comrade Marcus' suggestion. Who will match his loan of 25 dollars?

Kautskyan formulation was open to interpretations from both sides.

Plechanov, however, when the program of the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party was being elaborated, did not fail to denounce the omission of a clear reference to the dictatorship of the proletariat in the Erfurt program as theoretically incorrect and, in practice, a cowardly concession to the opportunists. Cowardly concessions of this sort, screened by formal adherence to the terminology of the class struggle, proved to be the essence of Kautsky's fight against Bernstein. Plechanov's aphorism in his "Open Letter to Karl Kautsky" that "either the social democracy will be buried by Bernstein or Bernstein by the social democracy", was verified with cruel exactitude at the decisive hour.

The world war was the catalytic agent which precipitated the "theoretical dispute" into two clearly defined sides of the class struggle. What started out as an "abstract discussion" ended by splitting the socialist movement wide open, with the representatives of the proletarian revolution on one side of the barricades and the social-patriots, agents of imperialism, on the other. By and large, these two class camps were made up of the same elements who divided on the questions raised by Bernstein. The anti-Bernsteinians took their stand against the imperialist war; the revisionists supported the imperialist fatherland.

There were exceptions, it is true. Plechanov turned patriot; Lensch, who had played the radical before the war, volunteered for the front; Hyndman, with his arid pre-war orthodoxy, became a jingo. Bernstein on the other hand, turned Centrist and pacifist for the moment, and effected a touching reconciliation with his old friendly-enemy, Kautsky. But as a rule, the old pre-war divisions remained and became more rigid.

Bernstein had sowed the seed which yielded the fruits of social patriotism. One of his most insistent arguments had been directed against the Marxian idea that the workers have no fatherland. "This may have been justified in an agitational sense," he argued, "in 1847 when the workers had no rights and unlimited absolutism reigned throughout Europe. Now that the workers had won universal suffrage, had partaken of the cultural achievements of society, had invaded the legislative bodies—the workers did have a fatherland. This idea became the theoretical basis for all the outspoken social-chauvinists from whom Bernstein separated himself for a short time during the war."

A Short-Lived Centrist

It goes without saying that he found no place at the side of Lenin and the Bolsheviks during the war, any more than they were at his side in the two decades before the war. He did not stand with Liebknecht and his revolutionary opposition; nor did he ever reconcile himself with the other Spartacists—Luxemburg, Mehring, Zetkin—who continued their struggle against him with even greater vigor during the war. His anti-war position had almost everything in common with pacifism and, as in the past, nothing in common with socialism. He belonged to that group of 23 Reichstag deputies, led by Haase and Ledebour, who finally summoned up enough small courage to break the decision of the social democratic fraction and, on August 20, 1915, to leave the session during the vote on war credits. Seven months later, 18 of the deputies formed a fraction of their own which later became the Independent Social Democratic Party of Germany. In the Centrist (USPD), he shared leadership jointly with Kautsky, as a symbol of their essential reconciliability.

He did not wait for the split at the Halle Congress of the party where the majority of the membership joined the ranks of the Communist International. Just as he had pioneered the revisionist movement, he pioneered the most bitter anti-Bolshevik current in the social democracy. He was the first to denounce the bosom of Scheidemann, Noske and Ebert, who were realising in sanguinary practice the class collaboration theories of Bernstein. Here too he had not long to wait for Kautsky: both of them were active agents in re-cementing the ranks of the Majority socialists with the prodigal sons who had left it for a while under the pressure of discontented workers. Except for the very last years of his life, when old age would no longer permit it, he was drawn into all the special conferences of that particular faction which rules the party and regulates the antagonisms and ambitions of all the other factions: the group of Wels-Seydewitz, Breitscheid, Stampfer, Loebellmann.

Last Triumph

At the Heidelberg party congress in 1925, his signal services to reformism were generously acknowledged by the whole party in the formal programmatic repudiation of the class struggle. His coronation was also his vindication; but even more was it a vindication of Plechanov's prediction. Bernstein had buried the social democracy. But by that time it could no longer be re-animated into the "democratic-socialist reform party" of his early dreams. It already functioned not only as a bulwark against revolution, but also as an obstacle to social reform. It had betrayed the present of the movement as well as its future.

Bernstein triumphed not only over the Left wing in the social democracy (and that only formally, because the Left wing is today restored on a grander scale in the revolutionary Communist movement), but over the Centrist morass. His life's work is a lesson and a warning which the Communist movement, split into three wings as was the social democracy a generation ago, will profit by heeding.

—MAX SHACHTMAN.

Japan Seizes North China

Soviet Union Also Threatened

Events are moving rapidly in the Far East. The Japanese military expedition to carve a colonial empire out of Northern China has gotten under full swing as four Japanese armies numbering more than 10,000 soldiers are advancing with the aid of tanks, planes and artillery along a 225 mile front into the Jehol province. The Japanese assault which began with the ruthless invasion and destruction of the city of Shanhaiwan a little over a week ago, under the pretext of defensive measures against the impotent Chinese garrison located in the above mentioned city, has turned out according to universal expectation, which the Japanese did little to conceal, to be their first move in the partition of China.

Leaving a trail of devastation and ruin in their wake the Japanese imperialists are advancing upon their long talked-of aim to add the Jehol province and possibly Inner Mongolia to their puppet state Manchukuo. In spite of the bragadoes of the Chinese generals and the Kuo Min Tang, that they would resist to the last drop of blood, the Japanese have started their march with nothing to block their way but the intense cold. As a matter of fact, Japan refuses to be deterred by any circumstances from her Chinese conquest and rumors are current that Chiang Kai-Shek is looking towards negotiations "for an amicable settlement of the dispute." Were it not for the pressure from the Chinese masses and the foreign imperialists, who have their own axe to grind (on the Chinese people) the Chiang Kai-Sheks would capitulate to Japan without even their present pretensions.

And this is borne out by innumerable facts that even the Chinese censor could not keep hidden. The invasion of Shanhaiwan was known for some time previous to its occurrence not only by Chang Hsiao Lung, commander of the garrison, but also to many far less informed journalists. And yet no attempt was made to bring reinforcements to strengthen it. On the contrary the fort was abandoned to the tender mercies of the Japs who proceeded to wipe out every Chinese-looking person that was found in the city. During the battle which lasted hardly 24 hours the need for assistance became quite apparent. Every one looked to Chiang Kai-Shek, the generalissimo of the Chinese armies—but the general was too busy fighting Communists in southern China! Every now and then this general, proves that it is not only unwilling but incapable of fighting the Japanese marauders. The only place where the Chinese bourgeoisie and their dunkeys have shown any belligerency is in the talkiest chambers of the League of Nations. And no wonder! To call into being an effective resistance to the invaders would mean to set the Chinese masses into motion. The Chinese bourgeoisie fears, above everything else, the Chinese people. They conceive of them as a far greater enemy than all the imperialists combined. The bourgeoisie and the militarists are quite well aware that the struggle against the foreign invader might easily be turned against them as would have been the case in 1925-1927 were it not for the Menshevik policies of Stalin and Co.

But the Chinese bourgeoisie will not succeed in stifling the discontent of the toiling millions. Already widespread resentment is breaking loose against the Chinese compradors. Resolutions calling for decisive action are pouring into Nanjing from all parts of the country. Mass meetings of students burning with resentment against the flagrant betrayal of Chiang, are gaining in momentum. The Japanese imperialists may yet succeed—in blowing the spark of the third Chinese revolution into flames. And that is a conflagration that has burned more than one imperialism in the past!

The Japanese adventure in northern China is fraught with the direct consequences for the workers of the world and for the Soviet Union. World war hangs in the balance. The working class must remain on the alert.

Japan is staking everything on this Chinese expedition. Despite the severe crisis shaking Japanese economy to its very foundations: despite a huge national deficit which is growing every day; despite the falling value of the yen; despite an unprecedented mass hunger and privation that is wracking every Japanese city and village, the Military is plunging the country into an ever greater crisis in pursuit of their imperialist designs. All their grandiose plans may blow up under the huge volcano that is gathering fuel in the simmering discontent of the Japanese workers and peasants. The war-crazed and avaricious militarists will stop at nothing.

Simultaneous with the Jehol invasion has come the refusal to sign the non-aggression pact with the Soviet Union. What a striking confirmation that is of the Left Opposition's condemnation of the Stalinist signature of the Kellogg pact, to which these "non-aggression" pacts are merely a corollary. To sign Answer! Where Is Rakovsky?

Where is Christian Rakovsky and what has happened to him?

Persistent rumors are abroad concerning his fate. In some quarters the horrifying report is in circulation that he has already died. Under any circumstances we would never believe a report put in that form. For if the news of his death is verified, it will not be simply because "he has died"—but because he has been assassinated by the Stalinist regime!

For more than two generations, Christian Rakovsky has enriched the annals of the revolutionary working class struggle by word and deed. Not all the hatred and persecutions of the ruling classes in half a dozen countries ever caused him to waver for an instant in his devotion to the proletariat and its cause. With his name inseparably associated the history of the militant socialist movement throughout the Balkans, to which he gave instinctively of body and soul, his time, his energy, his money, and his brilliant talents.

The indomitable soldier was at his fighting post from the first day of the Bolshevik revolution when so many of his detractors and jailers were on the other side of the barricades. Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Ukraine, warrior in the fight against the counter-revolution and in the civil war, leader of the Bolshevik delegation which bearded the imperialists at the Genoa conference, ambassador of the Soviet republic to London and Paris—he has always clothed the post he occupied with a dignity, a revolutionary single-mindedness, a scintillating penetration which raised him to that eminence in the hearts of the proletariat and the councils of the party and the International which were his beyond question in the days of Lenin.

That hatred which the Rumanian boyars and the Czarist police against this great man who had no country but the International was transmitted to the bureaucratic apparatus which encountered in him the Left Oppositionist, the fighter against national socialism and for revolutionary internationalism. Expelled from the party together with Trotsky and the other Bolshevik-Leninists in 1927, he was immediately exiled. The last authentic news heard about Rakovsky was that he was seriously ill in Barnaul, his place of exile.

The latest information emanating from the Soviet Union gives us cause for the greatest alarm over comrade Rakovsky's fate. His courageous refusal to bend under the Stalinist repressions has only brought down on his head all the rabid persecutions of which the bureaucracy is capable. The deliberate failure to provide the exile with elementary medical attention has for some time put his life in danger. How long he would be able to last under this sort of treatment, has been an awful question in our minds for many months. The silence and lack of direct information concerning Rakovsky's position, have only increased our fears.

That is why we are compelled to cry out: Where is Christian Rakovsky? What has the Stalinist machine done with him? We will repeat our questions until an answer is given. The Communist workers will join us in this demand for the cause of Rakovsky is the cause of the whole proletariat!

TECHNOCRACY

Engineers Have New Plan To Save Bankrupt Capitalism

The engineers and technicians are gathering a mass of followers to the movement called technocracy. It is heralded as a new theory having revolutionary implications without revolution. Backing up their argument with a mass of indisputable facts which they state in a very capable manner, they explain the historical development of machine production and how the machine is displacing labor. The light they throw upon the marvelous machine development is most revealing and has positive value. But the light they throw upon the anarchy of capitalist production is nil.

Technocracy denotes the attempt of the scientists and technicians to get out of the impasse which the capitalist mode of production has arrived at without the elimination of the capitalist exploiters. Technocracy deals with the evils of the "price system" and considers the problem of "energy". Their survey in no way touches or considers the problem as an evil issuing from the field of production. This shifts the issue to the field of distribution.

When a ruling class nears its end, ideological decay and confusion mark the twilight of its decay. Such was the case when the early French materialists drove religion from pillar to post—until religion reconciled itself with the new exploiters.

Such, also, is the case with the scientists who function under the present bourgeois rule in the stage of its decay. They are floundering around advocating a thousand and one remedies. One of these widely heralded "solutions" for the "price system", for capitalism, is Technocracy. The real rulers have nothing in common with this viewpoint.

These technologists have discovered the following: "that in the last 200 years energy—that is power and machines—has multiplied man's ability to produce goods and to do useful work for himself by 75 to 100 fold." In their Energy Survey of North America they have assembled many worth-while facts of the productivity of labor and its displacement, but they arrive at no conclusions, or at false conclusions.

Howard Scott says that "technology smashes the price system." Price system means capitalism. They think they will be able to organize capitalism. Dr. N. Rautenstrauch says, "Technocracy is primarily concerned with...the problem of organizing a civilization to maintain itself on a given continental area." Of course not one word is said about how to get rid of the exploiters. They will "organize" capitalism in a vacuum.

The truth of the matter is that these technicians see the handwriting of the approaching revolution on the wall and desire to avoid it. Scott says: "Physical wealth is not measured in terms of labor, goods, or money, but in terms of energy. And with the discovery of this truth the bankers, the industrialists, the Marxists, the Fascists, the economists, the soldiers and the police are things of the past." To measure in terms of

(Continued on page 3)

The Civil War in China

Dangerous Turn From Partisan War to Pitched Battles

SHANGHAI—

Following the unification of the Chinese Left Opposition, it met with serious difficulties from the ruling class, in which renegades increased the obstacles in our development. Comrade Peter, one of the outstanding militants of the Opposition, died in prison. Now, with the help of renegades, the "Blue Shirt Society" (a secret Fascist organization) and the police, have captured comrade Chen Dushan and several other militants. My next letter will give you more information about this. Here I wish only to represent my views of the status of the peasant war in China, a vital question for the coming revolution.

Trotsky's Analysis Verified

Just as I began this letter, I received comrade Trotsky's letter on the present war in China of September 22, 1932. I read it over and over again, and I am convinced that what he says is quite right. His analysis conforms with the present developments in the peasant detachments. The news you usually receive in the United States does not correspond with the facts. It is either made up of bourgeois rumors, declaring that Chiang Kai-Shek has won big victories, or else it consists of the inflated accounts by Stalinists.

Despite all this, the fact is that the peasant detachments are at present weakened and the bourgeoisie has gained some triumphs in the "extermination of the red bandits". One clear example is the fact that during its victory against the "third extermination" by the white armies, the effectiveness of the "Red Army" on the borders of Anhwei, Honan and Hupeh provinces rose to several tens of thousands, and they succeeded in seizing stores of arms and ammunition from Chiang Kai-Shek's forces. But now, they are defeated, i. e., the strong force is greatly weakened, especially when its principal troops have met with big

United Front Call Issued For Unemployment Insurance

Opposition Welcomes Party Turn and Warns Against Opportunistic Tendencies

The call issued by the New York State Trade Union Committee for Unemployment Insurance for a conference to be held in New York City on January 22 at the Irving Plaza Hall, is a step forward which the Left Opposition cannot but welcome. Virtually from the beginning of the crisis, with its constantly growing unemployment, we have steadily advocated the establishment of a united front of all the working class organizations for the common fight to gain relief from the sufferings and hardships inflicted on the workers.

Despite the hailstorm of abuse and ridicule to which our standpoint was subjected by the official representatives of the Communist party we have held steadfastly to the view that the best way to mobilize the collective strength of the workers for the purpose of shifting the burdens of the crisis on to the shoulders of the ruling class, was the genuine united front once practised by the Communists, but thrown overboard and denounced as "counter-revolutionary" by the Stalinists. We declared at the outset that the inexorable pressure of the facts of the class struggle would lift our point of view to the top, piercing through the calumny and suppression of the bureaucracy. We uttered our warnings to the Communist workers that the policy imposed upon the party by the leadership would isolate the movement, would reduce it to a sectarian influence over the revolutionary workers and nobody else—unless the helm was turned and the course steered in the tested direction we had charted.

Opposition Stand Vindicated

The recent united front conference in Chicago, was the first big vindication of our point of view. However grudgingly and inadequately the turn was made in the Chicago conference, it was nevertheless sufficient to inspire tens of thousands of workers with confidence in their own strength, with the conviction that now the battle conducted with closed ranks would bring concrete results. The first stiff blow at the theory and practice of "social Fascism" and the "united front from below" was dealt by the Chicago conference. The proposal for the New York conference is the second blow struck at the theories which have crippled the effectiveness of the Communist movement, and consequently of the working class movement as a whole.

The editorial comment of the Daily Worker (January 11, 1933) which prefaces the call of the Trade Union Committee for Unemployment Insurance and Relief, is a far cry from the frenzy of the "Third Period": "The preliminary committee proposes a meeting of representatives of workers organizations to discuss the advisability of carrying through a state-wide workers' conference to map out a legislative program in defense of our interests. We propose that such a conference, if agreed upon, is to conclude the widest possible representation of all workers' organizations, social, fraternal and benevolent and above all labor unions, irrespective of political opinions or affiliations. The workers of this state have never before been confronted with the need for unity and united action as they are at the present time. Any attempt at dividing the forces of the workers at this time would be a betrayal of their interests."

The call itself proclaims that the Com-

SAVE THE MILITANT

In a previous issue the National Committee addressed an appeal to all members and to all friends and comrades of THE MILITANT calling attention to the great danger which now threatens our weekly organ. It was said frankly in that appeal that unless drastic measures are taken immediately the success which we have had thus far in maintaining the weekly will end with its collapse. This needs to be reiterated with all possible emphasis and to carry the addition that with this issue our financial conditions have become yet more acute.

It is no longer sufficient to speak of maintaining the weekly MILITANT in its regular appearance, the problem now is to SAVE THE MILITANT. In the solution of that problem all our comrades, all our friends and sympathizers, must take part. It is a serious task. It is an important task. It holds out no promise of personal rewards but it demands some real revolutionary sacrifice. That is what we request of you and we feel certain that such a request will not be addressed in vain to the members and supporters of the Left Opposition. We know that you have the will to display such a spirit of sacrifice and where the will exists the way can be found.

THE MILITANT, who have followed in its struggle for the Leninist path, fully appreciate the importance of saving our organ and again lodge it upon a more solid financial foundation. That the significance of its role increases from day to day, has been amply illustrated by all experienced so far. But the past will appear small compared to its future role and for that we must prepare.

To SAVE THE MILITANT the National Committee has launched a concentrated national campaign to collect a special fund of $1,000.00, apart from the regular income of the organization. This campaign is under way. It is to terminate March 1, 1933. A number of comrades have already come forward with their contributions. We know it represented a sacrifice on their part and we know that they will help further. We must say also in all seriousness that the number of comrades participating in the contributions to date is entirely too small and has not yet at all reached the point of diminishing the danger to our weekly organ. Because of this we count firmly upon the added support of all of you who read this appeal. We expect you to put your shoulders to the wheel. We expect you to help.

—ARNE SWABECK.

The following contributions have been received to date:

NEW YORK
Gordon	$3.00
Shulman	5.00
Cannon	2.00
Katsikis	1.00
Eckstadt	2.00
Kent	2.00
Sterling	5.00
Capells	3.00
Poulans	1.00
Saul	2.25
Rosa	1.00
Milton	1.00
Carmody	1.00
Kitt	3.00
Kaldis	1.00
Victor	1.00
Spiegel	2.00
Beardslee	5.00
Stamm	1.00
Marcus	4.00
Glee	.50
CLEVELAND
Branch Collect	3.12
Keller	1.00
PITTSBURGH
Oklin	1.00
Sifakis	1.00
Hilch	1.00
MINNEAPOLIS
Branch Collect	11.00
Total	$87.12

BANQUET

for THE MILITANT

Saturday, January 21, 9 P. M.

INTERNATIONAL WORKERS

SCHOOL HALL

126 East 16th Street

Music — Entertainment and a Good Time

TICKET . . . 40c

Zinaide Trotsky

From Berlin comes the shocking news of the death of Zinaide Trotsky, daughter of comrade Leon Trotsky. Hounded by the cruel persecution of the Centrist bureaucracy, she took her life, a victim to the thirst for personal vengeance that has animated Stalin in his campaign to annihilate Trotsky, his immediately family, and his best friends and associates.

Comrade Zinaide was driven to her death even though she was not actively engaged in the political movement. More than a year ago, she left her husband in Moscow and came to live with her son in the exile home of her father in Princeton. A year ago, suffering from lung trouble, she received permission to enter Germany for medical treatment. Some months ago, the rude and disloyal usurper deprived comrade Trotsky and his family of Soviet citizenship. Comrade Zinaide approached the Soviet Embassy in Berlin with the request that her passport be extended to enable her to continue her residence in Berlin. Her passport was taken from her by the Stalinist diplomats and a new one denied her. Legally without a country, she subsequently received notice that she was to be expelled from Germany. Last Tuesday she was found dead in her home.

Comrade Zinaide is the second of Trotsky's two daughters to die. A few years ago, the first died of pulmonary tuberculosis in a Moscow hospital, while her father was exiled in Alma-Ata. The bureaucracy kept the news from him until some time after the event, so as to deprive him of "grounds" for coming to Moscow to attend the funeral. It is with these monstrous persecutions, medieval in their calculated cruelty, that the Stalinist apparatus seeks to break down the heroic spirit of the greatest living revolutionist, Leon Trotsky, whom they cannot fight with honest weapons. It is the same sort of persecution that drove Trotsky's most intimate friend, the noble A. A. Joffe, to put a

(Continued on page 8)

OPEN FORUM

LENIN

Speaker:
J. P. CANNON

JANUARY 20, 1933

126 East 16 Street,

ADMISSION: 15c

Auspices:

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America (Opposition)

Letters from Militants

Chauvinism Among Pittsburgh Stalinists

PITTSBURGH.—Some time ago we wrote in the Militant of the chauvinism that is poisoning the well of our party in Pittsburgh. That was on the occasion of an attack by Jewish Stalinists against Greek Oppositionists. We said at that time that this chauvinism unfortunately does not extend to Left Oppositionists alone and warned the party of the danger.

At the present we have a telling proof of how correct our conscientious warning was. The fear, the Jewish organization which is led by the Stalinists, recently leased a headquarters. In the lease signed by the Stalinists representing the local clause is contained guaranteeing that no Negroes are to be allowed into the Headquarters! An unprecedented example of white chauvinism! A telling proof of the degeneration that Stalinism is bringing into the ranks of Communism!

In defense of their action, the Stalinists (and we can furnish the names) offer the unheard-of, most unprincipled excuse: the clause excluding the Negro workers is to continue in effect for only (only!) one month! We ask: Does the party leadership condone this action, or will they take drastic disciplinary measures against the party fraction in the room? The workers will expect an answer.

As for the Left Opposition, it does not demand "mass trials" which turn the serious problem of uprooting chauvinism into a farce. It demands disciplinary action coupled with Communist education, which is so lacking in the ranks of the party today. Only a return to Leninism—only a ruthless rejection of strangulating Stalinism—will once and for all put a stop to the degeneration of our party. The Left Opposition will fight tirelessly for a return to Leninism, for the Bolshevik training of the ranks of the Communist party.

Boston Branch Moves Forward

BOSTON.—While Boston has not been heard from in the columns of the Militant lately (except for the article by comrade Schechet on the ILD), there has been considerable activity in this district.

Three of our comrades are members of local ILD branches, one, comrade Schechet now serving on the executive committee of the John Reed Branch. Two comrades are very active in the Left Wing Needle Trades Union and have held several committee positions.

Comrade A. Konikow has given the following lectures:

- (1) "Why is there a Shortage of Food in Russia?" on November 13, before Branch 27 of the Independent Workers' Circle. Attendance 25.
- (2) "What does the Left Opposition Want?" on November 26 for the Independent Workers' Circle of Peabody. Attendance 75.
- (3) "Communism versus Socialism" on Dec. 14 for the Poole-Zionist Women's Club of Dorchester. Attendance 75.
- (4) "What the Left Opposition Stands For" on December 16 for the Chelsea Labor Lyceum Forum. Attendance 65.

Comrade W. Konikow spoke before the Independent Workers' Circle, Branch 27, on December 11th on "Communism versus Socialism", attendance 25.

At all these lectures there was much enthusiasm for the Left Opposition views and the sale of literature was good.

Through the efforts of some of our comrades the Social Science Club, a non-partisan organization for the study of Marxism, was formed three months ago, with a membership of 35. Twenty members enrolled in an intense study course in Elementary Marxist Economics. This course was a huge success. On Tuesday, Jan. 10 there will be a regular quarterly meeting of the club to which the public is invited, admission free. This meeting will be held in Tremont Temple, Room A at 8 P. M. There will be a lecture on "Communism versus Socialism". Three new courses will be started: "History of the Three Internationals", "The Russian Revolution", and "Elementary Marxist Economics". For further information write the Secretary, 11 Keswick St., Boston, Mass.

On Jan. 13, comrade A. Konikow will debate with Louis Marcus of the Socialist Party on "Socialism versus Communism" at No. 1 Stuart St., Boston, Mass.

On Jan. 22, comrade W. Konikow will speak before Independent Workers' Circle, Branch 27, at 12 noon, in Apleron Plaza (upper hall) on "Trotskyism, What It Stands For."

On Jan. 22, Dr. A. Konikow will speak on "Trotskyism, What It Stands For," in Huntington Chambers, Boston at 3 P. M. under the auspices of the New Thought Forum.

As a result of our activity we are glad to report the addition of two new members, with the possibility of three more joining very shortly.

THE MILITANT

Entered as second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th St., N. Y.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swaback

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1933
Vol. 6, No. 2 Whole No. 148

Greek Militant Expelled in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA.—

On December 27, a meeting of the ILD Greek Branch of our city was scheduled to take place at the headquarters of the Greek Workers Club, Spartacus. Comrade Theodore Pappas suggested to comrade Caldis who happened to be in Philadelphia that day, to go to the Club and meet certain workers who are anxious to know some truths about the views of the Left Opposition. So far the only thing they knew was the continuous hurling of epithets against the Opposition.

Comrade Goodman came along with the two Greek comrades at the Club, but unfortunately no meeting and no discussion took place, the Stalinists explaining that the rainy weather prevented many workers from reaching at the Club.

Comrade Pappas was asked by many workers to provide a Greek Oppositionist from New York to debate with a Stalinist in order to be able to grasp the fundamental differences of the two viewpoints, and that they were going to propose this at the next business meeting of the Club.

The local Stalinists were panic-stricken at the appearance of comrade Caldis and the distribution of the Militant and Communists by comrade Theodore Pappas, and last week called a special meeting to take measures against the spreading of sentiments in favor of the Left Opposition.

They adopted the same splitting attitude as their New York brothers by expelling comrade Pappas from the Club. Also they held a Stalinist trial and they issued a judgment against Pappas that he can remain at the Club only if he apologizes for his past conduct and also undertake the distribution of the Militant for three months. Comrade Pappas told the "court" that he is willing to sell the Militant for three years if they will convince him that its editors are genuine revolutionary Marxists and not incompetent mercenaries of Stalinism. Then a few of the Stalinists forced him out of the Club room and forbade him to attend it in the future because he is a "dangerous" element. Comrade Pappas bombarded the Greek Stalinists with the most effective weapon at his disposal at present: the Militant, Communists and pamphlets and books of the Opposition.

Stalinists Challenged in St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, MO.

At a recent meeting of the International Labor Defense, after listening for more than an hour to a young man from Cincinnati extolling the virtues of the I. L. D., I thought it time to place a few facts before the workers present. I was given a chance for the floor in the following manner. The young man from Cincinnati, evidently very well pleased with himself, proposed a question period following his speech. Posing before the speaker's stand, he was indeed a perfect picture of self-satisfaction.

Calmly taking the floor, I said first of all that I was in complete agreement with the role and functions of the ILD, but that certain events had convinced me that the organization was too narrow and sectarian. I cited the case of Morgenstern and Goodman, members of my organization, the Communist League (Opposition) who were arrested for distributing a leaflet pointing out not only the need for the struggle for immediate demands but stressing the fact that the final solution to the problems of the working class could only be the proletarian revolution. Yet the ILD had done nothing for them. I also cited the New York marine workers' case which the ILD sabotaged. I explained that while between the official party and the Left Opposition there were disagreements of a fundamental theoretical and tactical nature, this should not enter into the question of defense. The ILD must take up the case of any worker, regardless of his organizational affiliations.

During this short speech, the bureaucrats became very nervous. When I finished, the young Stalinist from Cincinnati apologized and shamefacedly admitted that the ILD had formerly been sectarian and had made mistakes. But he would remind the comrades (myself) that at the last convention of the ILD the formula of self-criticism had been applied, resolutions passed, and everything was hunky-dory now. From now on a Trotskyist would be treated like anybody else.

Despite the fact that the bureaucrats considered the discussion at an end, I asked for the floor again it was given to me grudgingly this time. First I asked if the selection of the National Hunger March delegates had not taken place since the "historic" convention of the ILD. Then I told them of the case of comrade Payer who, although duly elected as a Hunger March delegate from his ILD branch, had nevertheless been rejected at the last minute by a "meeting"—where it was held and by whom, only god knows—and a delegate substituted for him who was not even a member of that branch.

Glaring at me like a bull at a red shirt, the Cincinnati Stalinist, although not the chairman, called me to order and commanded me to sit down. It was at this point that the real fireworks began. I was accused of attempting to disrupt the meeting and of having been sent here for that purpose. I was accused of bringing "theoretical questions" into the ILD. They were not interested in "Trotskyism", etc. In this manner a lynching spirit was worked up and one Stalinist rose to demand that my application for membership be rejected. The bureaucrats rather nervously corrected this move, for it was a complete substantiation of my charge of discrimination against Oppositionists.

At this point, it was decided to "explain" the case of comrade Payer. The "explanation" by Julius Pollack, party candidate for U. S. Senator from Missouri, left the audience gasping for breath. To cover up the extraordinary procedure against Payer, Pollack employed the methods of calumny and falsehood. Knowing that comrade Payer was a coward, he said, and not steered in the class struggle, it was decided that he was not the man to help fight the Washington police, for he lacks the courage to fight the St. Louis police. Believing that I would not again get the floor, I shouted out that these were falsehoods. I was however given the floor by the chairman who asked what more I had to say on that point.

In spite of the threats of a physical attack, I took the floor to nail these lies to the wall. I cited Payer's long record of militancy in the struggle, his picketing of the British Consulate, arrest during our unemployment demonstration, record in the street meetings, and the number of times he had been arrested. I demanded a retraction of the falsehoods or a working class tribunal to hear the charges.

My proposals were of course not acted upon and discussion turned to other matters. Not until the meeting ended did a private discussion take place, with the Ohio Stalinist. He condescendingly explained that he disliked getting personal with a worker, as so many workers are confused, etc. I reminded him that we were so confused that we had numberless times invited the Stalinists to debate with us, so as to bring the differences before the working class; and at all times our invitation had been declined. With workers listening, he immediately proclaimed his willingness to debate as any time. But the bureaucrats promptly became cautious when I enthusiastically accepted. "Unless we cannot find time," they added, "and you know we are busy fighting the boss class." Nevertheless, we finally decided on the subject which (if they accept) is to be: "Is Trotsky a Friend of the Soviet Union?" That this is the last we will hear from this on the matter, is more than likely.

—G. ROBERTS.

Pittsburgh Branch Progresses

PITTSBURGH NOTES

The Stalinist terror campaign against the Left Opposition is in full swing here. Not only are Oppositionists slandered and attacked on every possible occasion, but even more, the tolerant party members are intimidated by the bureaucracy. Party members are forbidden to come to Opposition meetings and classes. Party members are warned against going into the houses of Left Opposition comrades. They are even threatened with disciplinary measures for speaking to our comrades.

In the meantime, the struggles of the rank and file within the party against the national bureaucracy are proceeding unabated. Only recently, the topmost bureaucrats have been forced to make a concession to the militant Pittsburgh rank and file. They have agreed to remove all the out-of-town functionaries, outside of the D. O., from their positions and to replace them with local comrades. While this is no doubt the fruit of courageous efforts by the bulk of the militants here it is important for them not to be deceived by such a measure. For, the bureaucrats still maintain the right to appoint functionaries (instead of having them elected by the responsible bodies), so as to assure themselves in the near future to place such local workers in leading positions as will carry out their bureaucratic designs and decisions.

But the Pittsburgh rank and file is wide-awake. It is conscious of the progress it has achieved by fighting and it has already been encouraged thereby to continue fighting, to clear the road for real Leninist advances. It would not be at all surprising, if the logic of their struggle will, very soon, lead them to demand the regular election of functionaries, which is a primary element of the old Leninist system of democratic centralism, instead of the appointment from above of functionaries, which is a distinguishing feature of the Stalinist system of bureaucratic centralism. In any case, the Leninist Left Opposition stands ready to offer every aid and to fight side by side with the rank and file militants.

In the Progressive Youth Club
Militant readers are acquainted with recent developments in the Progressive Youth Club. They know of the fight that the Stalinists—acting under the guise of "non-politicals"—carried on against letting in Left Oppositionists. Some time ago, we showed that this policy plays right into the hands of reactionaries and is bound to react even against the Stalinists. That we were not far from wrong, a more recent incident goes to prove. To wit:

Last week, two leading party comrades applied for membership to the club. A reactionary clique within the club, which has been thriving on the foolish struggle of the Stalinists against us, has cleverly used the anti-proletarian "No Politics" cry of the latter against the Leninist Opposition to entrench itself self-wisely with a good measure of power. In fact, they have grown so powerful, that they have found it extremely easy to reject these applications of the party members, abused them as being "disruptive Communists". They were so successful in their effort that they even managed to enlist support for this reactionary action from a miseducated party member serving on the committee

Leon Trotsky

History of the Russian Revolution

PUBLISHERS PRICE

Vol. One	Vol. Two	Vol. Three
$4.00	$3.50	$3.50

OUR PRICE

$3 per Volume

$9 the Boxed Set

POSTAGE ON ALL ORDERS: Extra

Send All Orders Immediately To

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 16th Street, New York

that handled the applications! The Stalinist policy worked like a boomerang! The party comrade's name is Nellie Martin and every Communist has a right to demand that she be taken to task for such unheard-of conduct. It remained, however, for the lone comrade from the Left Opposition, serving on that committee, to carry on the fight against the attack on Communism with the support of a few party sympathizers. Comrade Salov found it necessary, not only to represent the Left Opposition in this struggle, but the official party as well. And that is not so strange either. It is only natural. The conscientious party comrades will continue to discover this more and more from their own experiences: that Stalinism miseducates the Communist workers and that the Leninist Left Opposition alone educates them in a Communist sense; that Stalinism is incapable of teaching the workers to defend Communism and that the Left Oppositionists are the best fighters for the progress of our Communist party.

Opposition at Anti Pogrom Conference

PITTSBURGH.—

In the Anti-Pogrom United Front Conference, which was called here by party auxiliary organizations, the Left Opposition was represented by a delegate in order to participate in the work. Comrade Frank Salov offered the assistance of the local League organization, speaking in its name. The delegate of the Communist League (Opposition) was seated and elected to the Conference Committee.

Arrangements are now under way to hold a mass protest meeting and a demonstration. The Pittsburgh branch of the Communist League (Opposition) calls upon all its sympathizers and friends to participate energetically in these actions and to help make them a success. While taking an active part in the work, the organization reserves for itself the right to independent criticism of all the actions taken and proposals offered by the various organizations represented in the united front.

Hold Public Meeting

On Thursday evening, January 5, the Pittsburgh branch held a small mass meeting at the Irene Kaufman Settlement, on Centre Avenue. A representative worker crowd was on hand and listened attentively to comrade Gordon who spoke on the subject "The Communist Party and the Left Opposition." After the lecture, there were some interesting questions and discussions from the floor, to which the speaker replied in a brief summary. The group intends to hold more meetings of this sort in the future, in order systematically to bring the viewpoint of the Left Opposition before the Pittsburgh workers.

A HALF-YEAR SUB TO THE MILITANT IS $1: WITH THREE OTHERS ON A CLUB PLAN BLANK IT IS ONLY $6.

Czech Right Wing Collapses

Lovestone's Allies Take Final Step and Join Social Democracy

On October 16, 1932, the national conference of the Czechoslovakian Right Opposition decided upon unification with the social democracy and, together with a small number of members, it turned over to it a number of homes and other party properties which it had taken with it at the time of its expulsion. With this act, an instructive chapter in the history of Czech Communism finds its conclusion.

When in the year 1928 the Comintern leadership completed its swing from the Right-Centrist course of capitulation to "Murell and Chiang Kai-Shek" to the adventures of the "third period", it encountered a stiff resistance in Czechoslovakia from the party membership, all the more so as the beginning of the new course promptly produced the catastrophe of the Red Day of July 6, 1928. Stalinist diplomacy was intent upon confining the indignation of the party workers within such limits that it would not do damage to the prestige of the Comintern leadership. It permitted a criticism of the preceding opportunism in so far as it was replaced by ultra-radicalism, and guarded against a clarification of the ultra-Leftist blunders of the present. It succeeded in attributing the whole blame or the weakening of the party to the file leadership, in spite of the fact that the latter had simply acted as the executors of the Moscow chiefs.

Centrism Assists Right Wing

The majority of the party membership concentrated its hopes upon the new Gottwald-Fried opposition which was overthrown from Moscow. But immediately upon the first actions of the new leadership, broad strata of the party moved away. The proclaiming of the immediately revolutionary situation at the time of the textile workers' strike, at the beginning of 1929, the bureaucratically impatient foundation of new trade unions, after the opportunistic Hais secretary of the IAV (International One Big Union) had carried the majority of the membership by surprise with the aid of organizational swindling and the small following of the then removed party leadership and created the foundations of a new opposition.

The Gottwald party leadership, true to the Stalinist commandment, completely dropped the Leninist united front policy. The Right Opposition, at any hour of the day or night, was ready for a united front with the social democracy against the Communist party. The Right Opposition prepared the road for entry into the social democracy. But this remained concealed from many of its own members.

Even before it began to realize its goal of unification, the Opposition went through a split. A part of the deputies refused to contribute to the Opposition treasury out of their salaries. Is that how you understand democracy, that I, who do receive five times as high a salary as the average worker, should turn over half of it to the organization at a time when the others contribute a bare one—one hundredth of theirs?—said a deputy to the democratic babblers, and quit the Opposition.

When we came out for unity, then we mean above all the unity of the organizations' treasuries, for then the organizations will be all the stronger, opened old man Hais, and joined the social democratic trade unions with his organization. The German bishop Brandier was dispatched for the marriage ceremony and he even handed down a dispensation to the betrothed from the legally prescribed proclamation of the bans. The priest returned to Germany and described the Prague unification as a model of the Leninist tactic. It was indeed a model of Brandlerist policy; but it had nothing in common with Leninist trade union tactics. When Leninists come forward for the unity of the trade union movement, they put such conditions as guarantee the possibility of revolutionary agitation. The entry of the Hais organization into the social democratic trade union league was based upon a complete political capitulation to the social democracy. That was the music which Heinrich Brandler "overheard".

In the ranks of the Right Opposition could be heard soft voices which shyly criticized Hais' capitulation. But the secretariat of the Opposition remained in the Trade Union House, which now belonged to the social democracy.

The following which the Opposition leaders brought into the social democracy is slight. One part of their workers has remained indifferent, a second part capitulated to Stalinism, a third part is coming closer to the Left Opposition.

That the Czechoslovakian Right Opposition temporarily rallied a substantial number of party members around itself, that it was able for quite a time to deceive itself and its ranks about the direction of its course, is to be ascribed above all to the Stalinists. For the latter conducted the struggle against the Right wing principally with the accusation that it was for agreements with social democratic leaders. They thus permitted the liquidators to utilize for their own ends the mistakes of the Centrist party, which rejected the united front with the leaders under any circumstances. A second fact is of still greater significance. By the reduction of the difference between themselves and the Right wing to the question of "from above or from below", "united front with the leaders or without them", the Stalinists excluded from the discussion the fundamental strategical questions.

Decline of Right Opposition

The Czech Right Opposition rose to its height in 1929, after a temporary economic boom and a series of mistakes of the Stalinists, produced a new dissemination of democratic-pacifist illusions within the Czech working class. But when the consequences of the world economic crisis violently gripped the economic life of the country, when the million and a half unemployed and partly unemployed once more had the occasion to feel the effects of the ruling social democracy's methods, when the revolutionary wave began to rise, the Right Opposition receded. At the same time, the Czech Left Opposition took shape and grew.

The general direction of the Right Opposition was: Away from the revolution, over to the social democracy. The adventurist stupidities of the Stalinists, however, drove many workers into its ranks, who did not want to capitulate to reformism but to win the social democratic workers to the revolution on the basis of partial demands. That is why the process of differentiation within the remnants of the Right Opposition, which have not been drawn over to the social democracy, is inevitable. The Left Opposition says to these workers: We understand that the treachery and characterlessness of the leader of the Right Opposition restrain you from active policy and push you towards indifference. For you, for all of us, there is but one road: Closer to the Communist Party! Fight to win it back to the policy of Lenin, under the banner of International Left Opposition!

—O. FRIEDMANN.

North China Seized

(Continued from page 1)

this innocuous pact would have been of little consequence for the Japanese imperialists. It would not have stopped the military plans by one inch of conquered territory. But what they have done is significant. They have refused to sign the pact on a flimsy pretext. Stalin, they say, has changed the industrialization plans in preparation for war. In view of the present difficulties of the five year plan, this charge is not only absurd but is a cover for Japanese provocations against the Soviet Union. The Daily Worker reports that four Soviet ships have been interned by the Japanese military. Japan's hostile acts are clear to all.

At the same time another significant fact comes to light. Unlike the events of last year when the conquest of Manchuria was met with anxious outcries on the part of American and other imperialists who feared for their own profits and concessions, the silence of this year has been conspicuous. Is it because the imperialist powers know in advance that Japan's rampage will this time end up in an assault upon the Soviet Union? There are strong indications that this may be the case.

The workers must be on their guard for any eventuality. They must give their support to the Chinese workers and peasants in the struggle against the Japanese plunderers and the Chiang Kai-Shek butchers of the Chinese people!

—G. C.

ANNOUNCEMENT

All Militant readers are urged to watch for the next issue of the paper. It will be of especial interest to all Communist Militants. It is going to be a special anniversary number devoted to three great working class leaders, Lenin, Liebknecht and Luxemburg whose writings and deeds have blazed the trail for the Communist movement. The next issue will contain articles and reprints by well known revolutionary writers commemorating the life and analyzing the deeds of these heroic fighters for the proletariat. Watch for the next issue!

BOUND VOLUMES of the MILITANT

OLD FORMAT

from
Vol. 1, No. 1 to Vol. 4, No. 12
Nov. 15, 1928—June 15, 1931
71 Issues

$10

NEW FORMAT

from
Vol. 4, No. 13 to Vol. 5, No. 51
July 4, 1931—Dec. 31, 1932
76 Issues

$5

Order from
THE MILITANT
126 East 16th Street,
New York City

The Technocrats «Refute» Marxism

(Continued from page 1)
energy, according to Scott, will do away with classes and the class struggle, with revolution and with Marxists. Quite a large order!

Technocratic "Energy"

The whole structure of Technocracy revolves around the axis of "energy." Scott says, "Energy is defined as the capacity for doing work. All forces of heat transfer or of work done are said to involve a transfer of energy." Again: "Now energy appears in many forms but it is possible to measure them in units of work—the erg and the joule, or in units of heat, the calorie."

The "technocrats" hide behind the word "energy" every form of energy used in the present capitalist system of production. They do not make any distinction between determining factors of energy and contributing or auxiliary units of energy. Second, when they deal with human labor as a form of energy they primarily deal with one phase of the problem and ignore the other and most important phase.

The first phase of the problem of labor (energy) they deal with is its displacement by the machine. Scott says: "In other words a price system demands man-power if it is to succeed, and man-power for production success becomes more and more a thing of the past as the kilowatt hour takes its place." To refer to the displacement of labor or "man-power" and not to tell what effect this has upon that part of labor which is left in production, is to state the problem without stating the determining factor. The development of machines, new inventions and processes carry with them greater exploitation of labor.

Scott says kilowatt hours take the place of man-power. What really happens is that the higher composition of capital—an increase in constant capital (kilowatt hours, etc., means of production) and a decrease of variable capital (wage-labor in the form of labor) causes greater exploitation of the wage workers, a fall in the rate of profit but a rise in the mass of profit which goes not to society but to the owners of the tools of production.

If the technocracy school would realize that private ownership of the tools of production must be abolished and that social ownership must replace it, they would be a long way toward the proper utilization of the facts they have accumulated. Also this would be the opening of the door out of the blind alley they are now in. Failing this understanding their positive facts are lost or else they are utilized by reaction to mislead the workers.

Is Labor's Importance Decreasing?

Many are already using the "movement" for this purpose. But the technicians and scientists who want to be of service to mankind must see beyond the decay of capitalism into the future social system which is going through its birth stage in the Soviet Union now.

The change from hand-tool production to the machine age is viewed by the school of technocracy as the passing of man-power (labor) to kilowatt hours of energy units, etc. Where they see the replacement of man-power by machines, they conclude that the importance of man-power (labor) in a machine society diminishes. The truth is that the importance of labor in the relation of profits and exploitation increases with machine development.

Engineers Have New Plan to Save Bankrupt Capitalism

Let us restate the problem from a Marxist point of view and see what light it throws upon the school of technocracy. The foundation of the use-value (products or commodities) of every society is labor and nature. The determining factor in society is not nature but labor. The relation of labor to production and to the ownership of the means of production determines its status in that society, no matter how productive labor is.

All value, wealth of use-values in society, no matter what its form may be—buildings, machines, trains, roads, electric power, clothes, and other necessities—can be reduced, not to energy in the abstract, but to labor and natural properties, no matter if they were made by hand-tool production or machine production.

Two Debates in Chicago

Two debates are scheduled in Chicago which are of considerable importance and interest to the militants of that city, according to the announcements of the Chicago branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition).

On Tuesday, January 17, Norman Satir, of the Left Opposition, will debate with T. Statman, organizer for the IWW on the subject: "Communism or Syndicalism?"

On the same date, Joseph Giganti, organizer of the Left Opposition will debate with M. Olney, anarchist spokesman, on the subject, "What Next for the Spanish Worker—Communism or Anarchism?" This debate will take place under the auspices of the Spartacus Workers League, at its headquarters, 1045 W. Polk Street.

Both debates deal with themes of current importance and the debaters will undoubtedly bring forward their respective sides of the question in as thorough a manner as possible, enabling those who attend to judge the merits of the disputing tendencies in the labor movement. All Chicago militants are cordially invited to attend the debates.

relationship under capitalism. The social factor and the form of "energy" of LABOR is the decisive factor in the energy of any and every society. This determining "factor" is what the Technocracy school ignores.

In other words, if we were to find the basis of the equation of all use-values of society we must reduce the use-values to the amount "of socially necessary labor time embodied within them." (Energy?). Constant capital (machines, buildings, raw material, power, etc.) can be reduced to congealed labor time. The other part, necessary for capitalist production and the vital part—variable capital (wage labor)—can be transformed into labor, living labor, in the process of production. All forms of energy, measured by the kilowatt hour can be reduced to so many hours of socially necessary labor time. The equation of Dr. Rautenstrauch and Peral-Reed deals with an entirely different phase of the problem and does not touch the basic factors of the present day economic problems. The problem their equation does not touch is the problem that must be solved if we are to have an orderly and planned society. Many technicians desire this but do not know how it is to be attained.

The Key to the Problem

Let us consider the "energy of technocracy" in the field of capitalist production. So many yards of linen in value equal so many pounds of wheat not because we have some arbitrary "price system" but because each can be reduced to so many hours of labor embodied within the commodities. The only way to measure all forms of energy which are the result of man's labor is to reduce them to socially necessary labor time embodied in them. This labor time is the measure of value and the key to the understanding of the problem the technicians have unearthed but have not explained properly nor solved.

To regard "energy" in the abstract and leave out of consideration the measure of its value, labor time, is to leave the ground of concrete reality and lose the key to an understanding of the class problems and the contradictions of the capitalist mode of production. To find a way out of the capitalist contradictions, it is necessary first to state the problem correctly. This Marx and the Marxists did long ago. The displacement of man power by the machine, which is a progressive development under capitalism, was analyzed by Marx long ago and its consequences predicted. The school of technocracy has just now discovered the fact but has not yet drawn the conclusions which flow from them. What a difference between the dialectic materialist method and the bourgeois methods! And how superior it proves itself to be in analyzing and pointing the way to the solution.

Kilowatt hours, capital, commodities, or any other form of use-values can be reduced to congealed labor—to "dead labor." Under capitalism we have a system where "dead labor"—capital—controls and subjects living labor—the labor of the workers, in the process of production. Thereby capital controls the lives of the wage earners.

Only when the control of the capitalists over the means of production is broken can the workers be liberated. For this a revolution is required. Technocracy cannot solve the problem in a vacuum. It cannot eliminate the class struggle. There is no substitute for the proletarian revolution and the expropriation of the expropriators. For that reason "technocracy" remains an imposing deception.

—H. O.

ZINAIDE TROTSKY

(Continued from page 1)

bullet through his head in 1927 in protest against the Thermidorian vices of the party rulers. Three years before his death, in 1924, Trotsky's devoted secretary and collaborator, Glazman, took the same way out of the nightmare of venous intrigue brought into the life of the party by the dominant clique. One by one—Glazman, Joffe, Butov, Heinrichsen, Silov, Blumkin, Rosanoff, and now Zinaide Trotsky—these serene but unyielding spirits have been cut down in their youth or their rich prime—tormented to death, driven to suicide, or shot in obscure courtyards. While scoundrels and parasites, ex-Petlurists and Mensheviks, scavengers and camp-followers, penetrated to the highest posts of the Soviets and the party, the bravest of the brave and the cream of Bolshevism, the organizers of the insurrection and the heroes of the Civil War, were driven out of the party and... into the grave. It is the fate reserved by Stalin for the Left Oppositionists in prison and exile, for that fearless revolutionary chief, Rakovsky, for all those who have stood unflinchingly by the side of the Bolshevik exile who incarnates the international proletarian revolution. The blood of these Bolshevik victims is on Stalin's head!

To the bereaved exile in Turkey and to his family, we send our most deeply felt sympathy. At the graveside of our dear comrade Zinaide Trotsky, the American Bolshevik-Leninists pledge themselves anew to the unending struggle to liberate world Communism from the monstrous regime which has devastated it and sent a new victim to a premature death.

The International Workers School of the St. Louis Branch is conducting a class in the "Fundamentals of Communism" with Martin Payer as the instructor. The class is held every Monday evening, 7:30 P. M. at the Small Club Room of the Cruden Branch Library, 14th and Cass Avenues. All Militant readers and friends are invited to attend. The admission is free.

Opposition at Anti-War Meet

Left Delegates Issue Statement at Chicago Student Conference

The present world crisis in capitalist economy, occurring as it does in the epoch of imperialism, which is at once the period of the highest development of capitalism and the period of its decay, contains within itself the seeds of war. The spread of industrial capitalism during the past half century has increased the number of capitalist powers, the antagonisms between which with the growth of monopolies, trusts and cartels have created ever-sharpening rivalries between the imperialist nations. Before the Great War it was still possible for capitalism to escape from the recurrent crises by a continuous extension of the world market. That is no longer possible. The rival imperialist powers now find it impossible to lift themselves out of the crisis by expanding the over-seas markets. Today they are shackled with a vast army of unemployed workers who are becoming increasingly impatient. In order to avoid an internal upheaval which would jeopardize their own existence, the rival imperialist powers are compelled to struggle incessantly for markets, sources of raw materials and spheres of financial control. Inevitably the disproportion between the size of the productive forces (especially of the proletariat) and the markets in the possession of the different imperialist nations causes a break, and capitalism proceeds to settle its differences on the back and with the blood of the great masses of the population, the workers. But imperialist war cannot achieve a permanent solution of the problems of economic disequilibrium. Owing to the unequal development of capitalism in different countries, a time soon comes when markets and sources of raw materials must be redistributed and the struggle for economic hegemony appears on the order of the day once more. Obviously, therefore, imperialist wars are a product of the development of capitalist society and are inherent in it. In this epoch of socialized production, the historic task of putting an end to all wars falls upon the working class because of its indispensable role in the production process. The proletariat, itself the product of capitalist industry, is the only social force capable of overthrowing capitalism and establishing in its place the dictatorship of the proletariat which, when achieved on a world scale, lays the basis for the development of socialism. Only in such a society when the private ownership of the means of production has been abolished and class differences have disappeared, will the causes of war finally have been removed. To us, therefore, the problem of war is a problem of class conflict flowing from the extant mode of production and exchange today it is a problem for the working class because it is the workers who must do the fighting and the dying and it, the workers, leading all the oppressed masses, who alone can overthrow capitalism. Hence, we, as students, can play no independent role. While carrying on work in our respective fields, our task is essentially one of supporting the working class in its day-to-day struggle against capitalist exploitation and of helping it resist the outbreak of further imperialist wars by working with it towards the overthrow of capitalism.

While we oppose imperialist war, we affirm our support to all oppressed people seeking liberation from imperialist exploitation. We look upon wars of national liberation as progressive and as a step further on the road of final emancipation for the down-trodden masses. An uprising of the Chinese or Indian masses directed towards throwing off the yoke of foreign imperialism must receive our support. The struggle in the colonial countries does not end, however, with the eviction of the foreign imperialists, for the exploited masses will still have to deal with their own national capitalists. It is for this reason that the emancipation of these backward peoples can only be achieved under the leadership of revolutionary workers who must strive to extend the national revolt into a struggle for power which will eventuate in the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship.

Imperialist war assumes increased significance for the world proletariat when it takes the form of an interventionist attack upon the USSR. The Soviet Union is the first and only Workers' State in history and as such it is the duty of every revolutionary organization to defend the achievements of the Soviet Union and to insure the continued existence of the proletarian dictatorship in that country pending the further development of the world revolution. The events of the past few years have shown precisely how the flames of war lunge at the frontiers of the Soviet Union simultaneously from the Far East and from the closer West. At the same time strangling the independence of China, Japan constructs in Manchuria fortresses from which to strike at the Soviets. On the other hand, the advance of Fascism in Germany opens up the perspective of a struggle for life or death between a Fascist Germany and the Soviet Union. The struggle against war signifies under these conditions the struggle to save the lives of tens of millions of workers and peasants belonging to the new generation which has grown up since the Great War, to preserve all the conquests of labor and of thought, to save the first Workers' State and the whole future of humanity.

It follows naturally that we cannot support any program which condemns all wars in general. Each must be considered in its own context and from the point of view of the historical interest of the world proletariat.

Lastly, we must point out the irreconcilability between our position and that of pacifists, who, blind to the causes of armed conflict, dismiss all wars with a wave of the hand. Too long now have the masses been misled by statements such as that made by Henri Barbusse and Romain Rolland at the recent Amsterdam Anti-War Conference to the effect that a wave of opposition must be raised against "whatever war it may be, wherever it may come from and whoever it may menace." We repeat that we are opposed to such pacifist utterances and will consistently oppose adherence to a similar position at this conference. The problems of war can be discussed only on the basis of class interests.

We consider it absolutely wrong to create a permanent individual membership anti-war organization. Such an organization will only separate the struggle against war from the general struggle against capitalism.

planning liberation from imperialist exploitation. We look upon wars of national liberation as progressive and as a step further on the road of final emancipation for the down-trodden masses. An uprising of the Chinese or Indian masses directed towards throwing off the yoke of foreign imperialism must receive our support. The struggle in the colonial countries does not end, however, with the eviction of the foreign imperialists, for the exploited masses will still have to deal with their own national capitalists. It is for this reason that the emancipation of these backward peoples can only be achieved under the leadership of revolutionary workers who must strive to extend the national revolt into a struggle for power which will eventuate in the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship.

Imperialist war assumes increased significance for the world proletariat when it takes the form of an interventionist attack upon the USSR. The Soviet Union is the first and only Workers' State in history and as such it is the duty of every revolutionary organization to defend the achievements of the Soviet Union and to insure the continued existence of the proletarian dictatorship in that country pending the further development of the world revolution. The events of the past few years have shown precisely how the flames of war lunge at the frontiers of the Soviet Union simultaneously from the Far East and from the closer West. At the same time strangling the independence of China, Japan constructs in Manchuria fortresses from which to strike at the Soviets. On the other hand, the advance of Fascism in Germany opens up the perspective of a struggle for life or death between a Fascist Germany and the Soviet Union. The struggle against war signifies under these conditions the struggle to save the lives of tens of millions of workers and peasants belonging to the new generation which has grown up since the Great War, to preserve all the conquests of labor and of thought, to save the first Workers' State and the whole future of humanity.

It follows naturally that we cannot support any program which condemns all wars in general. Each must be considered in its own context and from the point of view of the historical interest of the world proletariat.

Lastly, we must point out the irreconcilability between our position and that of pacifists, who, blind to the causes of armed conflict, dismiss all wars with a wave of the hand. Too long now have the masses been misled by statements such as that made by Henri Barbusse and Romain Rolland at the recent Amsterdam Anti-War Conference to the effect that a wave of opposition must be raised against "whatever war it may be, wherever it may come from and whoever it may menace." We repeat that we are opposed to such pacifist utterances and will consistently oppose adherence to a similar position at this conference. The problems of war can be discussed only on the basis of class interests.

We consider it absolutely wrong to create a permanent individual membership anti-war organization. Such an organization will only separate the struggle against war from the general struggle against capitalism.

FOR A UNITED WORKER-STUDENT YOUTH CONFERENCE

The great weakness of this Congress lies in the fact that it has segregated the student youth from the working class youth. In view of this, the Congress goes on record as favoring:

- The organization of a nation-wide united front anti-war conference of all youth organizations, worker and student.
- The organization of a preliminary conference of all leading youth organizations to prepare for such a national conference.
- The election of an executive committee of the Student Congress Against War, that will help in the work toward such an end.
- We call upon the Young Communist League, the historic leader in the struggle against imperialist war and militarism, to initiate this movement.

SIGNED:

Yetta Barshefsky, Crane College, Chgo.
B. Landau, Crane College, Chicago.
Daniel Shelley, University of Chicago.
Meyer Freeman, University of Toronto.
Max Caplansky, University of Toronto.
Eric Renouf, University of Toronto.
Norman Knight, University of Toronto.
Norman Satir, Chgo. Branch C. L. of A.
Irving Bern, Spartacus Y. C., Chgo.
Ruth Stamm, Hunter College, N. Y.
Walter Karsner, Hunter College, N. Y.
Mannie Goltman, Brooklyn College
Sam Freidlich, Tukey High, Chicago.
Walter Danyluk, Tukey High, Chicago.
Charles Burle, Tukey High, Chicago.
H. Rosenfeld, Tukey High, Chicago.
Sally Goltz, Crane College, Chicago.
Al Giotzer, Youth Section C. L. of A.
Mannie Goltlieb, Spartacus Y. C.,
Des Moines, Iowa.

By an error, the above statement was announced for publication in the last issue of the MILITANT. It was carried over to this issue instead. The next issue will contain a critical analysis of the proceedings of the Chicago conference.

THE HISTORY OF COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

Max Shachtman

will speak every Sunday evening, 8 P. M. on the following subjects in the course:

Jan. 15 1922—The Last Leninist Congress.

Jan. 22 1924—The First Great Victory of the Right-Center Reaction and the Fifth Congress.

Jan. 29/30—The Triumph of the Epigones at the Sixth Congress.

Feb. 5 The Future of the Third International: Collapse or Regeneration?

INTERNATIONAL WORKERS SCHOOL

126 East 16th Street -- New York

Per Lecture: 15 Cents

Complete Course: $1.00

JAPAN

Its Rise from Feudalism to Capitalist Imperialism and the Development of the Proletariat

By Jack Weber

The High Speed of Japanese Development

A striking feature of post-war Japanese development is its rapid tempo. Born in the epoch of imperialism, Japanese capitalism, even before it has attained full maturity, undergoes all the sicknesses of decay—the stifling of expanding productive forces by the shrinking of markets. Its internal woes are so profound that desperate remedies are sought; hence the imperialist venture in China, a venture that not only sacrifices the lives of Japanese—and Chinese—workers for capitalist profit, but that demands for its accomplishment ever greater diversion of resources, growing budgets and mounting deficits, hence more intense exploitation of workers and peasants. The national income must be reapportioned; the middle class is taxed at the unbelievable rate of 30 percent of its earnings (every citizen with an income of $150, or more is taxed); the workers must receive even less than their previous pittance. In short, the class struggle is intensified at a pace corresponding to the unbounded program of imperialist expansion.

But not only does Japanese imperialism accomplish forced marches in the strain of catching up with the rival powers. The working class, too, undergoes rapid transformations. In the single decade since the war, the Japanese proletariat has condensed the long experience of a whole century of British development. Today the Japanese workers are strong out along the road of development with a rear-guard of opportunists and reformists always ready to desert and betray the vanguard of Communists in time of battle.

During this decade of proletarian growth the economic and political changes have followed each other with great rapidity—a sure indication of the revolutionary possibilities. The workers have shown themselves acutely sensitive to the international labor movement, but unless a leadership is built up that is grounded in Marxist principles, the principles of the Bolshevik-Leninists, and is at the same time, flexible in its tactics, with regard to the changing relations of forces, the results may well be disastrous for the working class.

Reformism and Opportunism

The great influence of syndicalism, later of Communism, in the post-war era forced the shrewd ruling class of Japan to avail itself of the generous assistance of reformism in attempting to trick the proletariat into following the path of "peaceful" agitation and development. The illuminating experiences of the English working class since the Chartist movement, the course followed by the revisionists in German social-democracy, the history of the second international—these lessons of betrayal were not learned in vain by Japanese politicians and capitalists. The classic method of dividing and ruling is applied in the union movement and on the political arena by the government's policy of encouraging the growth of Right wing organizations and suppressing brutally the Left wing. Thus the Yuaikai (Friendly Society of Laborers), organized in 1912 by the Christian socialist, Suzuki (the Gompers of Japan), under the patronage of one of the Elder Statesmen, was transformed into the Japanese General Federation of Labor in 1919. Its function was to combat syndicalism and divert the workers from the "dangerous" road of class struggle and mass action. Through the leadership of this federation of 46 unions with its 33,000 workers, and that of the 82,000 members of the Seamen's Union and the 42,000 members of the Naval Workers' Union, the capitalists hoped to create a division between the skilled and the unskilled, to form an aristocracy of labor, on the lines of the A. F. of L. that could be bribed into acquiescence to capitalist policy. Fortunately syndicalist influence and the lateness of development of Japanese unions, permitting their utilization of international experience, assured the formation of industrial unions. Only 9 percent of the organized workers are in craft unions, thus eliminating the artificial and fratricidal struggles between unions over jurisdiction.

If workers too often fail to realize the decisive importance of the class controlling an organization, the employers have no illusions on this score. The bosses in Japan have organized shop committees and company unions on a wide scale. In fact they now embrace 340,000 workers, as many as have been permitted to organize in all the workers' unions combined.

The year 1919 saw the gradual spread of information concerning the Russian Revolution among the workers. The spread of Communist ideas terrified governing circles and brought on a period of white terror that has not abated to the present time. The crisis of 1920 with its mass unemployment did not help to reassure the upper class. Nor did the Kobe strike of 1921 with its great solidarity parade of 30,000 workers. In 1922 the Comintern established relations with Japanese comrades and started an illegal, underground movement. The movement has remained small but exerts a profound influence despite the committing of many blunders under Stalinist control.

The earthquake of 1923 gave the government its opportunity to belabor the proletarian movement. The police and the military incited the reactionaries and their dupes among the masses to murder all Koreans under the pretext that they were responsible for the terrible conflagrations that broke out as a result of the quake. Simultaneously with the most brutal massacre of thousands of Koreans, those most exploited workers in Japan, performing the dirtiest work with the outcaste Etais, the soldiery seized hundreds of radicals of all shades and put the most prominent ones to the sword. In cruelty and cold-bloodedness this exploit of the Mikado outdid any of the Czar's pogroms of the Jews.

The Communists and the Labor Party

The promise by the government of universal suffrage in 1925 (the actual voting not to take place till 1928), started widespread agitation for the formation of working class political parties. The Right wing leaders in the unions at first looked askance at this new development, seeing in it a threat to their bureaucratic control through the organization of a rival leadership. But the example of the British Labor Party, then coming into power, heartened them and caused the attempt of creating a political party under union auspices. This same year saw the split of the General Federation of Labor—with what aid from the Communists is not clear but quite easily to be inferred from international developments in the "third period"—into Right and Left wings, the latter including syndicalists to an even greater extent than Communists. And the Communist party, despite the persecution and the handicaps of illegality, presented as clearly as was possible under the circumstances, their own political outlook had they differed, toward themselves sharply from the opportunist elements a large section of the syndicalists could have been won over to Communism, not to speak of other Left wing workers. But the Anglo-Russian Committee, the bloc of the Chinese party with the Kuo Min Tang, in short the obliteration and dispersing of the vanguard in the mass of uncrystallized workers, the voluntary yielding of initiative by the only force capable of leading the workers correctly to that force designed only to mislead—all this saw its counterpart in the attempts of the Communists, under the direction of the Comintern, to form a mass labor party.

The Peasants' Union (50,000 members) issued the call for all workers to unite in a proletarian party. In No. 16 of the Communist International may be found the attitude of the Comintern on the entire question. Vassiliev writes enthusiastically hailing the call. "Not only labor and progressive peasant elements are interested in the organization of a new party aiming at the thorough democratization of the State—the whole country demands this!" Further "the Communist wing of the commission for the formation of the proletarian party formulated its own platform as follows: The aim of the proletarian party is struggle against imperialism and the menace of imperialist wars. The slogans are: Korea's and other colonies' rights to self-determination; hands off China; those who till the land must own it; the 8 hour day; work or full maintenance for unemployed; workers' control; universal suffrage for all citizens over the age of 18; democratic liberties; abrogation of laws directed against the labor movement; abolition of the Upper Chamber and the Genro Council." Its immediate slogan is the "workers and peasants' government". Vassiliev adds naively that "after a perusal of the draft programs of action of the Left and the reformists, one is struck by the similarity of the most important points of the political and economic demands." He sees the conditions for a united front as very propitious. "Through their work within the proletarian party, the Japanese Communists will no doubt soon be able to grapple with the task of developing their ranks into a mass Leninist party with a strictly revolutionary program and iron discipline."

In No. 17 of the Communist International, after the complete fiasco of the all-embracing mass party, we find the following gossamer: "The reformists, after their unsuccessful attempts to balk the formation of the Proletarian Party by refusing participation, decided to achieve their sabotaging work by drawing up a program provoking the Left to a split. The latter took up a firm position, and acquiesced in making every concession if only to obtain the organization of a legal mass party. In their desire to preserve the legal physiognomy of the new party, the Left went so far that they abandoned without any reserves the demand for the independence of the colonies (they agreed to autonomy) and agreed to the abandonment of the demand for the confiscation of the land without compensation. But the reformists, who had previously come to an agreement with the police, quit the inaugural congress of the Proletarian party, declaring that they did not desire to be a weapon in the hands of the Left. The Lefts, continuing their policy of guaranteeing legality to the new party at all costs, also left the congress. The delegates of the Peasant Union and the Suheisha remained in the congress." Of course, the police closed the congress down anyhow. But to go on: "But the reformists will not enjoy their victory for long. Even if at first the Proletarian party did not have a program of action worked out according to all the rules of Lenin, etc., even if in its program it made opportunist, reformist, false steps, all this is not so essentially important. What is important is the fundamental fact that the working and peasant masses are being brought into the proletarian party and it is also important that the objective situation of the country unrestrainedly urges the Japanese workers and peasants to decisive acts and big tasks."

From Istanbul to Copenhagen

From Istanbul to Copenhagen and back by a whole series of means of locomotion—boat, automobile, train—there is something that might have furnished an interesting theme for an able writer. Yet you cannot find even an attempt in this direction in the press: a few pen-pushers confined themselves to invented interviews, like that in the Petit Journal, whose correspondent, it appears, met Trotsky last year on the island of Majorca! But this indigence did not prevent the press from revealing on several occasions—by information, by distortion or by silence—its sentiments towards the various stages of the trip. Let us set down the position of those who claim to express "public opinion," the position of the capitalist governments and also the attitude of those proletarians who were encountered along the route.

Let us pass over everything which smacks of fantasy, imagination and a taste for scandal. Objective reports, or rather strict information, are rarely to be found. The Italian press preserve a prudent restraint: a few French papers did the same; the socialist Populaire in particular had no illusions concerning the social democratic tribune accepted by Trotsky to deliver his justification for the October against the social democracy. Not a single paper gave any sort of an objective exposition of the ideas of the Left Opposition.

The Anti-Bolshevik Fury

On the other hand, the anti-Bolshevik hatred, too true of capitalism which has retained an ever-smarting souvenir of the October and the years of the civil war, expressed itself with a terrific violence in the canards of the various countries. In France, in the big press, it is the Journaux that took front place by its vertiginous provocations. The courageous acts of the Bolsheviks, showing the whole world proletariat the emptiness of the ideas of capitalist fatherland, of national defense—the signing of the Brest-Litovsk treaty, is denounced by the Journaux as "treason." It seeks to exploit all the chauvinistic and conservative sentiments of the petty bourgeoisie against the Russian revolution. It is quite normal on the part of an organ which was one of the most rapid supporters of czarism, of Russian loans—not out of benevolence, to be sure—and whose "patriotism" did not cease to overlook its treasury during the war. In the Belgian press, the anti-Communist hatred expressed itself with just as much frenzy, but in addition it had that special imprint which a few grotesque provincialists put upon it. In the Antwerp Matin, the editors deplore in an indelible style, the police measures... because they did not permit "the cures" to reach the ears of Trotsky. In reality, the police measures could not prevent a number of shouts of sympathy from reaching our comrade.

To be sure! a number of Danish journals made a good deal of noise about comrade Trotsky's presence in Copenhagen. The "repulsive Communist," the "Bolshevik agitator," "blood covered hands"—the expressions have not changed since 1917. The reactionary Danish press gained an ally in the person of Prince Aage, whose sole distinction lies in having served as an officer in the Foreign Legion. This individual found it in place to recall the noted phrase: "There is something rotten in the state of Denmark." Prince Aage never thought of the fact that among the characters of Shakespeare there are not Hamlets but also clowns and buffoons.

The Danish socialist paper, Socialdemokratiet at first sought to exploit the act of its government in granting a visa for eight days. It presumptuously pretended that the social democracy had made it possible for Trotsky to emerge "for an hour from the prison where his friends confined him." But Trotsky's speech put a damper on their pretensions: Trotsky was not affected by their efforts; he had remained the Communist, the warrior of October. Four years of exile had done nothing to make his lean towards democracy.

A number of papers, in Denmark and in other countries, displayed their disappointment over the fact that in his speech Trotsky did not engage in polemic against the Stalinist policy and that on the contrary he gave an exposition, based upon scientific conceptions, of Marxism, of Leninism, the most magnificent and clear-sighted justification of the Russian revolution, putting in the shade all the ritualistic and hollow phrases which the official Stalinist propaganda spreads throughout the world. Naturally, the bourgeois and the social democratic press could not appraise the indirect manner in which our comrade combatted Stalinism. Some expressed their astonishment and their discontent without restraint: "The October revolution, stage in the historical rise of humanity—this was the quintessence of the declarations. But Trotsky does not say the least little word about his conflicts with Stalin and his exile. The question must be put frankly as to why Trotsky accepted the invitation of the social democratic students..." wrote the Hamburger Fremdenblatt of November 2, 1932. In the report of Socialdemokratiet, you can read: "applause which had only a polite character." "Trotsky affirmed, and it was quite superfluous, that he was a Communist." "In the first half, Trotsky bore himself as a professor, delivering a lecture... but after a while, he spoke loudly and gesticulated, turning to all sides, striking the table with his voice acquired a great force. He was an impassioned agitator..." What stupor among the indolent social democrats!

Bourgeois and social democrats were not alone in their discontent with Trotsky's speech. If it did not correspond with their views, it corresponded just as little with the interests of the Stalinist faction.

What Happened Along the Route of Trotsky's Trip?

During his passage through France, en route to Denmark, the Stalinist Humanite was very reserved. The hateful campaign of the bourgeois press must certainly have dictated such an attitude to it. Let us point also to the fact that, for example, Macdonald, declared to one of our comrades: "If we had anything to say to the bourgeoisie, it would be: the workers settle their differences among themselves and the bourgeoisie has nothing to do with our quarrels." We are heartily in agreement. It is more than deplorable that the TASS agency did not follow this advice. On the way back, Humanite contented itself with a few empty comments; it had to pay tribute to Moscow. The bureaucracy of the French Communist Party found the way of covering itself up before its superiors: that's the only thing that mattered.

The Danish Communist paper, Arbejderbladet, bi-weekly, was obliged to give an important place to "Trotskyism." Never has the Danish party known any Left Oppositionists; isolated from the Comintern, "Trotskyism" had never been fought in this tiny party. This time, Stalinism let go in full. But not a single new argument: upbuilding of socialism, five year plan... at the meetings organized by the Danish party. Opposition comrades who had come to Copenhagen re-established the facts—in spite of the difficulties in language—and the Stalinist campaign was shot full of holes. It is from Moscow, that is, from Stalin, that the worst provocations had to come. The fear expressed in this title of Pravda, "The Lion Has Escaped," led Stalin to a direct and open denunciation to the international police against a so-called "International Conference" of the "Trotskyists" in Copenhagen. Soviet diplomacy also made its contribution: above the interests of the proletariat state, it put the interests of the bureaucracy and the Stalinist faction.

The capitalist governments of the states through which Trotsky had to pass, conducted themselves variously, some with a measure of correctness, others with more cynicism and crudeness, but all with the same intention: guard Trotsky closely, prevent him from entering into contact with the proletarians, the Communist movements. The Italian Fascist government, which really has no need of justifying its reactionary nature, permitted itself a cheap gesture and authorized Trotsky to visit Pompei. The "democratic" and "social democratic" governments which must give guarantee to their capitalism, felt themselves obliged to act in a very strict manner. At Copenhagen, not a single day of extension of the visa; two days were left him before the departure of the boat; it was an affair of state, order was endangered. Belgium—where the social democracy has such strong positions—did not permit a single one of Trotsky's traveling companions to disembark. An illegal measure from the standpoint of bourgeois legislation itself; but what matter: a few hours of promenade along the boulevard of the capital... And "democratic" France, of the right of asylum to the Gorgulova and all the White scoundrels, not a minute more than necessary was granted. Herriot, during his visit to Russia in 1923—had promised that when he would be minister, the decree on expulsion issued against Trotsky in 1916 would be recalled if he wished to come to France. Empty promise! A sojourn in France for a few hours would have "made the mother sick." When the voyage threatened to change the pre-established plan by a single iota, there was not one government that did not cast off its mask of hypocritical politeness and reveal the fear that inspired it.

In spite of all imaginable measures, the feelings of the proletariat, of the revolutionists, showed themselves on various occasions during the voyage. We will say nothing about the comrades charged by their various sections of the Opposition to assure security; they did their duty and they laugh at what the bourgeois and the social democrats have to say about it. The bourgeois press is not accustomed to giving much space to the demonstrations of the Communist party. But for once, it changed its habits and exaggerated the hostile demonstration organized by the Stalinists during the disembarkation at Esbjerg, which was limited to a few feeble whistles and nothing more. On the other hand, it preserved silence about all the demonstrations of sympathy towards the organizer of the Red Army.

In Greece, there not only was no Stalinist demonstration at Piræus—it was the pretext invented by the Greek police for refusing Trotsky authorization to visit the city—but our Archie-Marxist comrades made demonstrations on the quay, later in accompanying Trotsky's wife, comrade N. I. Sedoff, during her visit in Athens and finally above all, the demonstration organized at night time by the Corinth nucleus and party members who during the passage of the boat through the Corinthian canal, shouted: Long live Trotsky—Long live the Commune!

In Denmark, between Esbjerg and Copenhagen, at many of the stops, railroad workers, metal workers... came to shake Trotsky's hand. A German worker expressed his hope of seeing our comrade return to Russian right away.

We do not report Antwerp here, for the narrative is contained in the open letter to Vandervelde.

Finally, during the return, at the North Station in Paris, the engineer and fireman of the train saluted Trotsky; and in the Lyons station, while journalists and photographers waited in vain on the quay, on the other side of the train a score of railroaders came to shake Trotsky by the hand, greeting him with the "Rot Front" of the German Communists.

The voyage is at an end. Trotsky is back in Prinkipo. An important episode in the life of the Left Opposition and of the revolutionary movement has been concluded. The leader of the world proletarian revolution has spoken before thousands of auditors; his voice was carried by radio over the vast territory of the United States; by means of the film, thousands upon thousands of people will be reached. In the wall erected by world capitalism, to which the Stalinist faction brings its support in the form of calumny and falsehood, a large breach has been made. Nothing can fill it up again.

AT MARSEILLES

The return voyage of our comrade Trotsky ended according to Hoyle; the nervousness of the police, the provocations of the reactionary press—and the insults of Humanite showed without a doubt that Trotsky, that the ideas he embodies, remain the implacable foes of capitalism and of everything that demoralizes the proletariat.

At the moment when Humanite tried to besmirch our comrade, here is whom it joined in chorus: let every party comrade read these provocations in L'Ami du Peuple (12-5-32): "One of the greatest assassins of all times, which called himself 'Bronstein' or 'Braunstein' in the ghetto and whom the parties respectfully call M. Trotsky, has paid us the honor of a visit. It might be feared that the relatives of the Russos butchered by the Bolsheviks would not take kindly to the butcher. 'Monsieur Trotsky' was guarded by our police much more effectively than the Ukrainian Hetman Petlura and M. Doumer, president of the Republic."

"A tectonic deputy has demanded from M. Herriot's ministry if the costs of this solitude, in accordance with the Franco-Soviet pact, will be reimbursed to our poor budget by the Soviets. The reply is to appear, according to the rules, in the Journal Officiel."

"As 'Monsieur Trotsky' was to proceed to Copenhagen, a Danish prince who served as an officer of the Foreign Legion, became indignant that his people forgot so quickly the exploits of the monster: a Danish princess was the czarina of Russia her two sons and tiny children were massacred by order of Trotsky. Was it necessary to repeat: 'There is something rotten in the state of Denmark'?"

At Marseilles, the boat for Istanbul left. By force, the police sought to embark our comrade on an Italian freighter. Trotsky refused to travel 15 days in this manner. He addressed the following telegram to Herriot, Chautemps, De Monzie, with a copy to the socialist leader Bism and the party leader Thorez:

"Together with my wife, I have received authorization to pass through France, from Constantinople to Copenhagen and return. At Dunkirk, my friends informed me that by losing the boat we would be forced to remain 8 days in France, near Marseilles, which did not enter into our traveling plans. We made arrangements accordingly. Upon our arrival in Marseilles we were put on an Italian boat 'Campidoglio', in spite of the fact that this unexpected turn disorganized the new arrangements made. We ascended the boat without objection in order not to create an incident. We then learned that this boat is not indicated in our voyage and that it takes 15 days to get to Constantinople which, without speaking of the material difficulties, would be entirely prejudicial to the health of my wife and me. When I tried to explain to the special commissioner that I cannot leave on this boat, he threatened me with violent measures."

"The transit visa, even the strictest, do not signify, at least without previous formal advice, the right of the police to hold me as a prisoner and to force me to take a boat which is absolutely contrary to that indicated for my trip. I hope that the French government will prevent this abuse. I am ready to quit France by way of Italy, and I hope that the Italian government will not refuse me a transit visa through Venice, which would permit me to leave France tomorrow or the day after."

"I await your reply on the quai of Marseilles, with my wife surrounded by police agents. The declaration of the police chief that he can take no responsibility for the attitude of the Russian Whites cannot change my decision, which is dictated by the circumstances."

"P. S.—I have just learned that the police are going to put us in a hotel in order to set us on the Italian boat by force, if the Italian visa is not given us before our departure."

In the end, the Italian transit visa were granted. The French police, which was above all concerned with Trotsky not gaining any contact with the French workers, authorized the departure through Italy.

Humanite, by its whole attitude during the voyage, characterized itself principally by its cowardice, and devoted a few lines of information to the last incident.

—VERITE.

The Stalinist Policy in the Chinese Peasant War in the ranks of the K. M. T. militarists, acute and serious.

(Continued from page 1)

The responsibility for the defeats of the peasant detachments is due largely to the light-mindedness of the Stalinists. First, their evaluation of the present situation in China is erroneous. In the political resolution of the latter part of 1932, the official Chinese Communist Party writes:

"In evaluating the present situation, we must point out the fact that the comparative relationship of class forces in our country has undergone a change which is wholly to the advantage of the workers and the peasantry as well as to the Red Army and the Soviet movement. The strength of each section of the Kuo Min Tang has been weakened, whereas on the contrary, the workers and peasantry and the Soviet government have grown and been consolidated. The Red Army has become a large and strong force, the Soviet power reigns over a territory of several tens of millions in population. The advance of the Red Army has brought it to lay siege around Nanchang, Chian, Wuhan and other principal and semi-principal cities. The policy actually pursued in the past of not occupying large cities, does not now harmonize with the facts. The enlarged Soviet districts must draw in the fragmentary districts into one whole, and given the advantages of political and military conditions, must occupy one or two important central cities. This will constitute the beginnings of the first triumph in one or several provinces. This is now on the order of the day for the whole party and the Soviet movement."

Policy Change Is Injurious

Here we ask the Stalinists: Is the strength of every section of the K. M. T. actually weakened? To what degree are they weakened? Only the Stalinists, who shut their eyes to the facts, do not see them. At a decisive moment, the Kuo Min Tang militarists find it quite easy to unite and to wage a brutal attack upon the armed forces of the peasantry. The exaggerations of the Stalinists do not help the peasant troops at all, on the contrary, it does them a great injury.

In the second place, the political line of the Stalinists is to have the village surround the city, to have it lead the workers, and not to have the proletariat lead the peasantry. The victories of the Stalinists come out of the military advances of the peasant detachments and not from the power of the workers, and as a result, the Stalinists are leading the party onto the road of a peasant's party.

Moreover, the political mistakes exercise an influence on the military defeat. The Stalinists, in order to harmonize the situation with their false evaluation ("first triumph in one or several provinces") are giving up the guerrilla tactics which are favorable to the partisan troops, and replacing them with pitched battles which are unfavorable to the peasant detachments, but warmly welcomed by Chiang Kai-Shek, who is able to give his heavy cannon and airplanes a more decisive role to play. In guerrilla warfare, cannon and airplanes play little part, the former being almost totally ineffective owing to tremendous weight and difficulty of transportation. This was clearly revealed in the events of Western Hupeh and on the borders of Anhwei and Honan. Before the peasant detachments adopted the tactics of pitched battles, their defeats were very few and rare. On the contrary, they always gained victories which even the bourgeois press had to acknowledge. The Stalinists became dizzy with rejoicing over these triumphs and loudly proclaimed the coming of a revolutionary situation, changing the guerrilla tactics into tactics of pitched battles. They assembled the fragmentary peasant detachments as a whole—"the Red Army"—and attacked large central cities, fighting for "the first triumph in one or several provinces." But the facts showed that the "Red Army" was not only unable to deal the enemy the fatal blow, but on the contrary, it suffered many heavy defeats and had to retreat to the Northwestern part of China.

All that we have mentioned here clearly proves the erroneousness of the Stalinist political line. Of course, Stalin himself will deny this and in a very distant future he will make somebody responsible. In the period of opportunism, the man "responsible" was Chen Du-Hsiu. In the period of putschism, it was Tsui-Tsu Bo, and during 1929-1930, it was the "Li Li San line." Who will be the scapegoat now? We do not yet know. But the clever Stalin has undoubtedly selected somebody whose name we shall soon learn. The fact is that so-called Chen Du-Hsiuism, Tsui-Tsu Bolsin and Li Li Sanism are, taken together, the true expression of Stalin's own line. We do not assert, of course, that no mistakes were made by Chen Du-Hsiu, Tsui-Tsu Bo and Li Li San, but their errors pale into insignificance before the "international line" of the Stalinist leadership.

It is well to note the fact that the Stalinists who charge the Left Opposition with being "liquidators," have removed the Central Committee of the Chinese party into the "Soviet districts." This proves that the Stalinists are not "liquidators" but the banner-bearers of "run-awayism." They have left behind the urban proletariat: Such a flight is no small matter. The development of the "Red Army" has brought the Stalinists to the attempt to realize the fantasy of the village laying siege to the city, that is, the line of the peasantry "leading" the workers. What will be the result of such an idea and course? This: the Chinese Communist Party will be led by the Stalinists along the road of a pea-

New York United Front

Party's New Turn in Right Direction Contains Serious Dangers

(Continued from page 1)

In a word wherever changes have been made in the party policy, as indicated above, have not only been in the right direction, but more specifically, they have been in the direction advocated by the Left Opposition during all the time when its advocacy was equivalent to little better than "Left Social-Fascism" in the eyes of the Stalinists.

But when we say above that "we can agree with" the change in policy represented by the New York conference call, we also have in mind several distinct reservations. Without setting down frankly our inability to accept the present turn unreservedly, we should be guilty of dereliction of duty. When the ruling group in the party made a sharp turn away from the opportunist right wing course of five years ago, and swung abruptly to the Left—at that time also in the direction indicated by the Opposition—we did not make the mistake of swallowing everything uncritically. We raised our voices then to admonish the party against the infantile and extremist aspects of the Leftward turn of Centrism. The failure to heed the warning of the Opposition brought the now well-established results.

The same holds true this time also. Even if in reverse order. In the first place, the party leaders have made the turn behind the back of the party. The inevitable consequence of such a practice will be revealed tomorrow: the bureaucracy will accuse the rank and file militants of having failed to carry out or understand properly the "correct general line." The militants will be unable to understand and execute the policy of the party unless the party states plainly:

(1) that there has been a turn; (2) what is the nature of the turn and the reasons for it; (3) that the policy of yesterday was false. "One uncondemned error always leads to another or prepares the ground for it." Not the least reason for the injurious consequences of the opportunist "united fronts" with Chiang Kai-Shek and Purcell which preceded it, and the failure to condemn them clearly. This maxim holds true in the present case with just as much vigor.

If the party fails to explain clearly why the socialist and A. F. of L. unions were social-Fascist or outright Fascist yesterday, with which no united front was admissible, whereas today a united front with these elements is a "need" that brings "good results"—it will not only fail to generate concerted and intelligent action by the party members, but it will fall also to mobilize under the banner of the united front call those non-Communist workers who, only the day before, were repulsed by the old policy.

Opportunist Aspects of Change

In the second place, we must call attention to another aspect of the change of front. The years of leadership of bureaucratic Centrism in the Communist movement have proved beyond the peradventure of a doubt that it is incapable of pursuing a consistent Leninist policy. It swings like a pendulum between Right wing opportunism and infantile ultra-Leftism. Class conscious militants cannot permit the struggle for relief from the scourge of unemployment to be confined within the narrow channels into which the reformists of all shades seek to divert it. Not only from strictly party platforms, but particularly in the united front movements, the Communists must strive patiently to enlighten the workers to the fundamental truth that purely parliamentary action is at best a secondary, auxiliary weapon. The main emphasis must always be placed upon the militant fight of the masses, in their organizations, in demonstrations, in all the forms of the struggle outside the poisoned, sterile atmosphere of capitalism's legislative halls.

With these considerations in mind, the call of the Trade Union Committee is open to the most serious criticism. The only concrete proposal for action contained in the call is expressed in the extract already quoted above. The conference is being called solely for the purpose of discussing the "advantages of carrying through a state-wide workers' conference to map out a legislative program in defense of our interests." We are not concerned with quibbling over words. Yet the whole phrase reeks with the spirit of those arch-respectable petty bourgeois "legislative campaigns" so dear to the hearts of the A. F. of L. lobbyists, or the ambitious Socialist party statesmen of the Waldman-Solomon-Thomas-Blanchard school. Whoever makes the slightest concession to this spirit, which the reactionaries and reformists have so sedulously cultivated in the minds of multitudes of workers, is doing a distinct disservice to the movement.

Without in the least ignoring or rejecting the tribute offered the workers, employed and unemployed, by the legislative chambers of the ruling class, without underestimating the value of working class demonstrations and the presentation of our demands before the state and federal capitols, our main task remains the mobilization of the workers for struggle outside the parliamentary halls of capitalism. The very first appearance in the Communist movement of any tendency to minimize or ignore the primary importance of this task, must be promptly combatted and checked. Only by the extra-parliamentary mobilization of the masses will our demands upon the legislature gain that momentum and force which will compel action by the capitalist law-makers. Any other conception is an opium dream or outright deception.

We refrain from dwelling here on other shortcomings of the call. It would have been far more in harmony with the requirements of the situation had it been issued formally to all the working class organizations directly, without resorting to the petty and ineffectual evasion of appealing only to "branches" and "locals." Furthermore, it is not correct to confine the objective of the movement to the demand for unemployment insurance. Especially now must the demands for immediate relief, for long term credits and recognition of the Soviet Union, and the six-hour day without reduction in pay, be put forth in an unemployment program, not as disconnected demands, but as inseparable parts of a whole.

But bearing all these reservations and criticisms in mind, the fact nevertheless remains that the movement initiated by the Trade Union Committee is a distinct step forward. That the Communist League of America (Opposition) will support it, will help advance it with all the resources at its command, goes without saying. It should meet with the support of every worker, employed or unemployed, and of every working class organization.

—M. S.

Cannon Speaks at Right Wing Forum

As our readers know from the reports and analyses which the Militant carried, the Right wing of the Communist movement internationally is in the process of disintegration. In Czechoslovakia it has gone over bag and baggage to the social democracy. Not so long ago that redoubtable Trotsky-ester and defender of the infallible line, Bert Miller, accompanied by a small number of satellites, deserted the soiled banner of Lovestone for the shoddy progressiveness of Munde.

Now the Lovestone group is in the throes of a serious internal division over the Russian question. The people who proclaimed the correctness of the Stalinist line—for Russia—contend with the contradictions which their false position and their entire course have created.

The serious situation in Soviet economy has its repercussions in the American stronghold of the Brandler international. Under the pressure of their rank and file the Lovestone leadership is resorting to maneuvers to wriggle out of their contradictory position. Giffow assails the Stalinist policies as "Trotskyist." Lovestone, still pursuing visions of power and position, is attempting to ingratiate himself with Browder, Amter and the other pillars of American Stalinism. Of this nature was his "unity" conference of last spring. For the same reasons they recently invited the Left Opposition to speak at one of its forums. The League accepted and sent comrade Cannon to speak on—What the Left Opposition Stands For.

Comrade Cannon spoke on Sunday, January 8, to a crowd of some 300 Left Oppositionist, Lovestoneite and party and YCL members. The meeting lasted until one o'clock. In the discussion period the Weisbordites made a united front from below in attacking the Left Opposition by attempting to discredit its representative. Their stock in trade was isolated, half quotations and gossip in the Hearst "exposure" style.

Benjamin, Wolfe and Zam were the Lovestoneite heavy artillery. All three made a miserable showing. They made no effort to counterpose any point of view of their own to the presentation of our stand by comrade Cannon. What they accomplished was a terrific exposure of their bankruptcy. This was apparent to all not blinded by Lovestoneite patriotism. And even on these workers a serious impression was made by the unavailability of our position.

It is almost unnecessary to report that this meeting was entirely peaceful. Four years have not passed in vain. The black-jack and knife assaults committed against us have passed into the limbo of history. We think that the Lovestoneites will think twice before resorting again to this method of ideological argument. These are now the exclusive property of the Stalinist regime in the Comintern,

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Weekly Organ of the Communist League of America [Opposition]

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 3 [WHOLE NO. 150] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1933 PRICE 5 CENTS

The New Party Turn

The new turn, or half-turn, of the Party in the unemployment movement opens up the possibility for a broad development of the unemployment struggle which hitherto has owed its stagnation and ineffectiveness, in no small degree, to the absurdly narrow and sectarian policy of the Stalinists. To the extent that it creates the conditions for the free participation of all workers organizations, whose members have a good cause and a genuine will to react against the fearful pressure of unemployment, the new policy of the party creates the primary conditions for the transformation of the isolated vanguard actions of the Communist militants into a united movement embracing masses of workers. Such a movement, driven forward by the appalling mass misery and discontent, and putting all parties and leaders to the test of action, can lead to a stormy development of working class struggle and a rapid expansion of Communist influence. From this point of view the Left Opposition is bound to greet the new turn, to support it with full strength and to penetrate into the very heart of the unfolding movement.

At the same time the new turn puts the Left Opposition before new opportunities and tasks. By releasing their monopolistic stranglehold on the emancipated movement, and inviting all workers' organizations, "irrespective of political opinions or affiliations," the Stalinists are perforce required to leave a crack open for the feared and hated "Trotskyists". We must and we will make our way through that crack, spread it wider, and establish direct contact with the workers, including the Communists, who are assembling for struggle under the banner of the united front. Up to now the strength of the Marxist wing of the movement has been revealed chiefly in its criticism. The opportunity to participate in a movement of struggle against the plague of unemployment places us also before the test of action. The Left Opposition will grow in numbers and influence to the extent that it makes good in this test—to the extent that it demonstrates its qualities as a fighting political organization—not a mere propaganda circle.

But this direct participation in actions can be really effective for the unemployment movement only if it supplements and reinforces the criticism of all harmful and retarding currents and tendencies, including the tendency of bureaucratic Centrism. In no case and under no circumstances can this criticism be submerged in a general sentiment of "unity". First of all, we have to see things as they really are and to talk out loud about them. Not a few party members discouraged and demoralized by the devastation of the "Third Period", will hail the "new turn" uncritically, as a way of salvation. Is it possible that a Left Oppositionist here and there, chafing for action and wearied of the drawn-out struggle of our small faction for the principle of foundations, can fall into the same error? Hardly. But such things have happened before. Every zig-zag of Stalinism, the whole course of which is a series of zig-zags to the Left and to the Right, has claimed its credulous victims. For this reason alone a critical appraisal of the new united front policy at the beginning, and at every turn, must go along with and condition our support.

In initiating the new tactic the Stalinists have been true to themselves—to the vacillating, cowardly, half-measure character of Centrism. In the first place the turn from the "social Fascist" theory is not a complete one; the branches of the Socialist Party and the local A. F. of L. unions are invited to the united front—but what of the central bodies of these organizations? What of the leaders? Can you convince any Socialist worker or A. F. of L. unionist that these leaders are unwilling and unable to participate? (Continued under Editorial Notes on Page Four)

OPEN FORUM

REPORT OF THE OPPOSITION
DELEGATES TO THE UNITED FRONT
UNEMPLOYMENT CONFERENCE.

Speakers:
J. P. CANNON
MAX SHACHTMAN

January 27, 1933
126 East 16 Street,

ADMISSION: 15c

Auspices:

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America
(Opposition)

WHO WILL PREVAIL?

They are watching the financial appeal column every week with an interested eye. Our MILITANT is sick. Of this its enemies are, by now, quite convinced; and its creators, those who have made it and those for whom it has been a light, have no reason to deny it. Indeed, they cannot, for the appeals that appear here every week now are all too patently the desperate cry of distress. And more than that, the two issues that were skipped and the two issues that came out in half size described too graphically the mad upward course of the temperature markings on the fever chart of the sick paper.

Yes, the MILITANT is in desperate trouble. The financial crisis harks like a high fever from week to week and from day to day. The sickness is a financial sickness—the prole bills, past due, accumulating, becoming more and more insistent in the demand for payments—this is the mortal illness that assails the paper.

Who will prevail?—that is the question. With your help, dear friends of the MILITANT, we shall answer that question our way. The paper will prevail. Its message will prevail. The courage, the sacrifice, the unconquerable spirit of the Bolshevik-Leninists will prevail.

The Left Opposition in America, and on an international scale, is on the eve of great adventures. All its ideas are being vindicated, its predictions verified. Its organization grows and extends to every capitalist country in the world.

Its cadres grow firmer, harder, more confident of victory and more determined to achieve it. We have the right to victory and we have no right to turn back and the path of resolute struggle leads toward it.

In this struggle the MILITANT is our voice and our banner. The voice shall not be silenced. The banner shall not come down. The means will be found, the sacrifices will be made, the paper will be saved. We say this because we have confidence that those who have made the paper and kept it alive in all adversity will do their duty when they know how matters stand. There is no doubt now how matters stand. The need is for money—not tomorrow, but today. That is your first obligation. Do not let anything take precedence over it. Send in your contribution now.

—JAMES P. CANNON.

JANUARY YOUNG SPARTACUS OUT

The January number of the YOUNG SPARTACUS is off the press and ready for sale and distribution. It is an eight page devoted primarily to the anniversary of Lenin, Liebknecht and Luxemburg and the struggle against imperialism. It contains reports of the New York and Chicago Anti-War Conferences and articles on the latest developments in the Young Communist League, besides items of general working class interest. Order your YSPs. Reach the young Communists, YSPs and working youth with the YOUNG SPARTACUS.

L. Trotsky Ill

An Associated Press dispatch from Istanbul on January 9 reports that comrade Leon Trotsky is seriously ill in his home on the island of Prinkipo. The report states further that comrade Jan Frankel, who has worked as Trotsky's secretary for almost three years of his exile, is on his way to Europe for the purpose of securing the services of a foreign specialist.

It appears that the exertions attendant upon his recent trip through Europe en route to Copenhagen, overtaxed comrade Trotsky and rendered more acute the ailments from which he has been suffering for many years now. The secret agreement between Stalin and Kemal Pasha has kept Trotsky virtually a prisoner in Turkey. Under the pressure of the Soviet embassies in various countries, every application for a visa—has been denied by practically all of the European governments, whose claims to the defense of the right of asylum, do not extend to the leader of the Bolshevik-Leninists. His isolation in Turkey has made it impossible for him to obtain the special medical attention he requires.

Is it not high time for the Communist workers everywhere to reflect upon this matter, and to raise their voices in protest against the hideous united front between Stalin and the European bourgeoisie which keeps in Turkish confinement the organizer of the Bolshevik insurrection, the leader of the Red Army, the closest collaborator of Lenin?

Japanese Invasion of Jehol Creates Tense Situation

World Imperialist Powers Press for Their Share of Loot

The rattle of the sabre grows louder in the Far East. As the Japanese conquest grows in scope and as the plunder and murder of these robber bandits proceeds unabated grave events of international consequence loom on the horizon. Fear for their territory and sources of exploitation have struck fear into the hearts of American and British imperialism. The equanimity that marked the original attitude of American imperialism has given way to an attitude of extreme anxiety over Japan's possible purpose in her invasion of the Jehol territory. At the outset, when it seemed that the Japanese military expedition might end in intervention against the Soviet Union, the diplomatic circles in Washington were quiet as the grave. But now, when it appears that American profits and the huge Chinese colonial market will be swallowed up by Japanese capitalism, a virtual furor of protest has emerged from the Washington watchdogs of the Wall Street bankers, munition makers and manufacturers' interests in every part of the globe.

Already recrimination, abuse and contradictory rumors calculated to incite the war fever fill the air, both in America and in Japan. The old and familiar story of "atrocities" begins to make screaming headlines on the front pages of the yellow journals. The Tokyo War Office gives out information to the Japanese press that the United States is making huge sales of war supplies to the Chinese. The United States foreign office counters by saying the whole matter is a colossal fabrication. The truth is a mere bagatelle. The truth perhaps lies somewhere between these two, although it is a well known fact that the Du Ponts are not wasting any opportunity to reap profits from their deadly products. And they will sell this war paraphernalia to the Japanese just as soon as to the Chinese. Such are the noble and principled motives that actuate these same gentlemen to the last world slaughter. They have but one criterion—pecuniary gain. They reserve the sentimental phrases for consumption by the masses.

Simultaneously a new sensation has flashed across the American scandal sheets. A group of Japanese workers, according to these press reports stormed the Singer Sewing Machine plant in Yokohama and left a wreckage behind them amounting to several hundreds of thousands of dollars. Counter charges and claims are made that there was insufficient police protection; that it was a group of left wing workers that committed the deed, etc., etc., ad nauseum. And now we hear still more ominous news that the Japanese fleet maneuvers have been advanced from October to June or July in the Pacific. And the American naval maneuvers, likewise to the Pacific, are scheduled to take place in about a month. Naval maneuvers are usually the prelude to more serious action.

At the same time we notice another significant fact. The attitude of the League of Nations has undergone an abrupt and fundamental revision. In less than a week the position of the "black international of imperialism" changed from one of yielding to all the Japanese demands to a hard boiled attitude of no concessions whatever. At first glance this is somewhat astonishing. But upon looking deeper into this change it is quite in accord with the spirit of recent international events.

During this past week when the Lytton report hung fire the American Congress intervened to lay down the law. To the public it merely reaffirmed its policy on the Far Eastern question of January 1932. "Protection of the open door.... respect for the territorial and administrative integrity of China.... the Nine Power pact.... the Kellogg-Briand Peace Treaty" and all the other shams that serve to camouflage the desire of the American capitalist class for self-aggrandizement in China and the opening up of huge markets for the profiteers. But behind the scenes another and more powerful weapon was brought into action. And with this weapon the American imperialists bludgeoned the League of Nations to make its position conform to American interests.

This weapon is the war debt, which has been suspended over the heads of the defaulting nations, by the U. S. for this purpose among others. The voice of the American Whirlwind has thundered forth; "If you want a favorable settlement on the debt you owe us, then support our policy against the Japanese!" And as the old saying goes "money talks". The whole League of Nations including France which has previously given Japan her warmest support fell into line. And now the papers tell us that a strong condemnatory resolution against Japan will be adopted. Great Britain which had been reticent about "provoking Japan" has now offered diplomatic representations to the latter about the tense situation which is endangering British interests. The American whip strikes sharply and imperatively. But any illusion that any possible action of the League of Nations will permanently stop Japan's adventure in Jehol and elsewhere is not only absurd but dangerous. The most any action of the League can accomplish is to cause war alignments and intensify imperialist rivalry to the breaking point. The Wall Street agents to Washington are using the League of Nations as their battering ram against the Japan. (Continued on page 4)

Leon Trotsky Defends the October Revolution

Full Text of Speech Delivered to the Social Democratic Students at Copenhagen November 27th 1932

My dear listeners,

Permit me to begin by expressing my sincere regrets over my inability to speak before a Copenhagen audience in the Danish tongue. Let us not ask whether the listeners lose by it. As to the speaker, his ignorance of the Danish language deprives him of the possibility of familiarizing himself with Scandinavian life and Scandinavian literature immediately, at first hand and in the original. And that is a great loss.

The German language, to which I have had to take recourse, is rich and powerful. My German, however, is fairly limited. To discuss complicated questions with the necessary freedom, moreover, is possible only in one's own language. I must therefore beg the indulgence of the audience in advance. The first time that I was to Copenhagen was at the international Socialist Congress, and I took away with me the kindest recollections of your city. But that was over a quarter of a century ago. Since then, the water in the Ore-Sund and in the fjords has changed over and over again. And not the water alone. The war broke the backbone of the old European continent. The rivers and seas of Europe have washed down not a little blood. Mankind, and particularly European mankind, has gone through severe trials, has become more sombre and more brutal. Every kind of conflict has become more bitter. The world has entered into the period of the great change. Its most extreme expressions are war and revolution.

Before I pass on to the theme of my lecture, the Revolution, I consider it my duty to express my thanks to the organizers of this meeting, the Copenhagen organization of the social-democratic student body. I do this as a political opponent. My lecture, it is true, pursues historic-scientific and not political aims. I want to emphasize this right from the beginning. But it is impossible to speak of a Revolution, out of which the Soviet Republic arose, without taking up a political position. As a lecturer I stand under the same banner as I did when I participated in the events of the Revolution.

Up to the war, the Bolshevik Party belonged to the international social-democracy. On August 4, 1914, the vote of the German social-democracy for the war credits put an end to this connection once and for all, and opened the period of uninterrupted and irreconcilable struggle of Bolshevism against social-democracy. Does this mean that the organizers of this assembly made a mistake in inviting me as a lecturer? On this point the audience will be able to judge only after my lecture. To justify my acceptance of the kind invitation to present a report on the Russian Revolution, permit me to point to the fact that during the 35 years of my political life the question of the Russian Revolution has been the practical and theoretical axis of my interests and of my actions. The four years of my stay in Turkey were principally devoted to the historical elaboration of the problems of the Russian Revolution. Perhaps this fact gives me a certain right to hope that I will succeed, in part, at least, in helping not only friends and sympathizers, but also opponents, better to understand many features of the Revolution which had escaped their attention before. At all events, the purpose of my lecture is: to help to understand. I do not intend to conduct propaganda for the Revolution nor to call upon you to join the Revolution. I intend to explain the Revolution.

I do not know if in the Scandinavian Olympus there was a special goddess of rebellion. Scarcely! In any case, we shall not call upon her favor today. We shall place our lecture under the sign of Athena, the old goddess of knowledge. Despite the passionate drama of the Revolution as a living event, we shall endeavor to treat it as a dispassionate anatomy. If the lecturer is drier because of it, the listeners will, let us hope, take it into the bargain.

Let us begin with some elementary sociological principles, which are doubtless familiar to you all, but as to which we must refresh our memory in approaching so complicated a phenomenon as the Revolution.

Human society is an historically-originated collaboration in the struggle for existence and the assurance of the maintenance of the generations. The character of a society is determined by the character of its economy. The character of its economy is determined by its means of productive labor.

For every great epoch in the development of the productive forces there is a definite corresponding social regime. Every social regime until now has secured enormous advantages to the ruling class.

Out of what has been said, it is clear that social regimes are not eternal. They arise historically, and then become fetters on further progress. "All that arises deserves to be destroyed".

But no ruling class has ever voluntarily and peacefully abdicated. In questions of life and death arguments based on reason have never replaced the argument of force. This may be sad, but it is so. It is not we that have made this world. We can do nothing but take it as it is.

The Meaning of Revolution

Revolution means a change of the social order. It transfers the power from the hands of a class which has exhausted itself to those of another class, which is on the rise. The insurrection is the sharpest and most critical moment in the struggle of two classes for power. The insurrection can lead to the real victory of the revolution and to the establishment of a new order only when it is based on a progressive class, which is able to rally around it the overwhelming majority of the people.

As distinguished from the processes of nature, a revolution is made by human beings and through human beings. But in the course of evolution, too, men act under the influence of social conditions which are not freely chosen by them, but are handed down from the past and imperatively point out the road which they must follow. For this reason, and only for this reason, a revolution follows certain laws.

But human consciousness does not merely passively reflect its objective conditions. It is accustomed to react to them actively. At certain times this reaction assumes a tense, passionate, mass character. The barriers of right and might are broken down. The active intervention of the masses in historical events is in fact the most indispensable element of a revolution.

But even the stormiest activity can remain in the stage of demonstration or rebellion without rising to the height of revolution. The uprising of the masses must lead to the overthrow of the domination of one class and to the establishment of the domination of another. Only then have we a whole revolution. A mass uprising is no isolated undertaking, which can be conjured up any time one pleases. It represents an objectively-conditioned element in the development of a revolution, as a revolution represents an objectively-conditioned process in the development of society. But if the necessary conditions for the uprising exist, one must not simply wait passively, with open mouth: as

Shakespeare says, "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

To sweep away the outlived social order, the progressive class must understand that its hour has struck, and set before itself the task of conquering power. Here opens the field of conscious revolutionary action, where foresight and calculation combine with will and courage. In other words: here opens the field of action of the Party.

The revolutionary Party unites within itself the flower of the progressive class. Without a Party which is able to orientate itself in its environment, evaluate the progress and rhythm of events, and early win the confidence of the masses, the victory of the proletarian revolution is impossible. These are the reciprocal relations of the objective and the subjective factors in insurrection and in revolution.

The Causes of October

What questions does the October revolution raise in the mind of a thinking man?

1. Why and how did this Revolution take place? More concretely, why did the proletarian revolution conquer in one of the most backward countries of Europe?

2. What have been the results of the October revolution? and finally,

3. Has the October revolution stood the test? The first question, as to the causes, can now be answered more or less exhaustively. I have attempted to do this in great detail in my "History of the Revolution". Here I can formulate only the most important conclusions.

The fact that the proletariat reached power for the first time in such a backward country as the former Tsarist Russia seems mysterious only at first glance; in reality, it is fully in accord with historical law. It could have been predicted and it was predicted. Still more, on the basis of the prediction of this fact the revolutionary Marxists built up their strategy long before the decisive events.

The first and most general explanation is: Russia is a backward country, but only a part of world economy, only an element of the capitalist world system. In this sense Lenin exhausted the riddle of the Russian revolution with the lapidary formula, "The chain broke at its weakest link".

A crude illustration: the great war, the result of the contradictions of world imperialism, drew into its maelstrom countries of different stages of development, but made the same claims on all the participants. It is clear that the burdens of the war had to be particularly intolerable for the most backward countries. Russia was the first to be compelled to leave the field. But to tear itself away from the war, the Russian people had to overthrow the ruling classes. In this way the chain of war broke at its weakest link.

Still, war is not a catastrophe coming from outside, like an earthquake, but as old Clausewitz said, the continuation of politics by other means. In the last war, the main tendencies of the imperialistic system of "peace-time" only expressed themselves more crudely. The higher the general forces of production, the tenser the competition on the world markets, the sharper the antagonisms, and the madder the race for armaments, and that measure the more difficult it became for the weaker participants. For precisely this reason the backward countries assumed the first places in the succession of collapses. The chain of world capitalism always tends to break at its weakest link.

(Continued on PAGE TWO)

International Workers School

CLASS to ELEMENTARY COMMUNISM

by

MARTIN ABERN

MONDAY—8 P. M.

126 East 16th Street

BANQUET FOR THE BENEFIT OF "THE MILITANT" SAT., JAN. 21 at 8 P. M.

Spaghetti Dinner

Music

Entertainment

126 E. 16 St.
ADMISSION

40c

«The Russian Revolution Will Become The First Stage Of The Socialist World Revolution» - 1905

(Continued from page 1)

If, as a result of exceptional or exceptionally unfavorable circumstances—let us say, a successful military intervention from the outside or irreparable mistakes on the part of the Soviet Government itself—capitalism should arise again on the immeasurably wide Soviet territory, together with it would inevitably arise also its historical inadequacy, and such capitalism would in turn soon become the victim of the same contradictions which caused its explosion in 1917. No tactical recipe could have called the October Revolution into being, if Russia had not carried it within its body. The revolutionary Party in the last analysis can claim only the role of an obstetrician, who is compelled to resort to a Caesarian operation.

One might say in answer to this: "Your general considerations may adequately explain why old Russia had to suffer shipwreck, that country where backward capitalism and an impoverished peasantry were crowned by a parasitic nobility and a rotten monarchy. But in the simile of the chain and its weakest link there is still missing the key to the real riddle: how could the socialist revolution conquer in a backward country? History knows of more than a few illustrations of the decay of countries and civilizations accompanied by the collapse of the old classes for which no progressive successors had been found. The breakdown of old Russia should, at first sight, rather have changed the country into a capitalist colony than into a socialist state."

This objection is very interesting. It leads us directly to the kernel of the whole problem. And yet, this objection is erroneous; I might say, it lacks internal symmetry. On the one hand, it starts from an exaggerated conception of the backwardness of Russia; on the other, from a false theoretical conception of the phenomenon of historical backwardness in general.

Living beings, including man, of course, go through similar stages of development in accordance with their ages. In a normal five-year old child, we find a certain correspondence between the weight, and the size of the parts of the body and the internal organs. But when we deal with human consciousness, the situation is different. Contrary to anatomy and physiology, psychology, both individual and collective, is distinguished by exception 1) power of absorption, flexibility and elasticity; there in consists the aristocratic advantage of man over his nearest zoological relatives, the apes. The absorptive and flexible psyche, as a necessary condition for historical progress, confers on the so-called social "organisms", as distinguished from the real, that is, biological organisms, an exceptional instability of internal structure. In the development of nations and states, particularly capitalist ones, there is neither similarity nor regularity. Different stages of civilization, even polar opposites, approach and intermingle with one another in the life of one and the same country.

Let us not forget, my esteemed listeners, that historical backwardness is a relative concept. There being both backward and progressive countries, there is also a reciprocal influencing of one by the other; there is the pressure of the progressive countries on the backward ones; there is the necessity for the backward countries to catch up with the progressive ones, to borrow their technology and science, etc. In this way arises the combined type of development: features of backwardness are combined with the last word in world technology and in world thinking. Finally, the historically backward countries, in order to escape from their backwardness, are often compelled to rush ahead of the others.

The flexibility of the collective consciousness makes it possible under certain conditions to achieve the result, in the social arena, which in individual psychology is called "overcoming the consciousness of inferiority". In this sense we can say that the October revolution was an heroic means whereby the people of Russia were able to overcome their own economic and cultural inferiority.

But let us pass over from these historical-philosophic, perhaps somewhat too abstract generalizations, and put the same question in concrete form, that is, within the cross-section of living economic facts. The backwardness of Russia expressed itself most clearly at the beginning of the twentieth century in the fact that industry occupied a small place in that country in comparison with agriculture, the city in comparison with the village, the proletariat in comparison with the peasantry. Taken as a whole, this meant a low productivity of the national labor. Suffice it to say that on the eve of the war, when Tsarist Russia had reached the peak of its well-being, the national income was 8 to 10 times lower than in the United States. This is expressed in figures, the "amplitude" of its backwardness, if the word "amplitude" can be used at all in connection with backwardness.

At the same time, however, the law of combined development expresses itself in the economic field at every step, in simple as well as in complex phenomena. Almost without highways, Russia was compelled to build railroads. Without having gone through the stage of European artisanry and manufacture, Russia passed on directly to mechanized production. To jump over intermediate stages is the fate of backward countries.

While peasant agriculture often remained at the level of the 17th century, Russia's industry, if not in scope, at least in type, stood at the level of the progressive countries and rushed ahead of them in some respects. It suffices to say that the giant enterprises, with over a thousand employees each, employed, in the United States, less than 18 percent of the total number of industrial workers, in Russia over 41 percent. This fact is hard to reconcile with the conventional conception of the economic backwardness of Russia. It does not, on the other hand, refute this backwardness, but complements it dialectically.

The same contradictory character was shown by the class structure of the country. The finance capital of Europe industrialized Russian economy at an accelerated tempo. Thereby the industrial bourgeoisie assumed a large-scale capitalistic and anti-popular character. The foreign stockholders, moreover, lived outside of the country. The workers, on the other hand, were naturally Russians. Against a numerically weak Russian bourgeoisie, which had no national roots, stood therefore a relatively strong proletariat, with strong roots in the depths of the people.

The revolutionary character of the proletariat was furthered by the fact that Russia in particular, as a backward country, under the compulsion of catching up with its opponents, had not been able to work out its own conservatism, either social or political. The most conservative country of Europe, in fact of the entire world, is considered, and correctly, to be the oldest capitalist country—England. The European country freest of conservatism would in all probability be Russia.

But the young, fresh, determined proletariat of Russia still constituted only a tiny minority of the nation. The reserves of its revolutionary power lay outside of the proletariat itself—in the peasantry, living in half-serfdom, and in the oppressed nationalities.

The Peasantry

The subsoil of the Revolution was the agrarian question. The old feudal-monarchic system became doubly intolerable under the conditions of the new capitalist exploitation. The peasant communal areas amounted to some 140 million desyatines.* But thirty thousand large landowners, whose average holdings were over 2,000 desyatines, owned altogether 70 million desyatines, that is, as much as some 10 million peasant families or 50 millions of peasant population. These statistics of land tenure constituted a ready-made program of agrarian revolt.

The nobleman, Bokorkin, wrote in 1917 to the dignitary, Rodsianko, the chairman of the last municipal Duma, "I am a landowner and I cannot get it into my head that I must lose my land, and for an unbelievable purpose to boot, for the experiment of the socialist doctrine". But it is precisely the task of revolutions to accomplish that which the ruling classes cannot get into their heads.

In Autumn 1917 almost the whole country was the scene of peasant revolts. Of the 624 departments of old Russia, 482, that is, 77 percent, were affected by the movement! The reflection of the burning villages lit up the arena of the insurrections in the cities.

But the war of the peasants against the landowners—you will reply to me—is one of the classic elements of the bourgeois, by no means of the proletarian revolution!

Perfectly right, I reply—so it was in the past. But the inability of capitalist society to survive in an historically backward country was expressed precisely in the fact that the peasant insurrections did not drive the bourgeois classes of Russia forward, but on the contrary drove them back for good into the camp of the reaction. If the peasantry did not want to be completely ruined, there was nothing else left for it but to join the industrial proletariat. This revolutionary joining of the two oppressed classes was foreseen with genius by Lenin and prepared by him long ahead of time.

Had the bourgeoisie courageously solved the agrarian question, the proletariat of Russia would not, obviously, have been able to take the power in 1917. But the greedy and cowardly Russian bourgeoisie, too late on the scene, prematurely a victim of senility, did not dare to lift its hand against feudal property. But thereby it delivered the power to the proletariat and together with it the right to dispose of the destinies of bourgeois society.

In order for the Soviet state to come into existence, therefore, it was necessary for two factors of different historical nature to collaborate: the peasant war, that is, a movement which is characteristic of the dawn of bourgeois development, and the proletarian insurrection, that is, a movement which announces the decline of the bourgeois movement. Precisely therein consists the combined character of the Russian Revolution.

Once the peasant bear stands up on his hind feet, he becomes terrible in his wrath. But he is unable to give conscious expression to his indignation. He needs a leader. For the first time in the history of the world, the insurrectionary peasantry found a faithful leader in the person of the proletariat.

Four million industrial and transportation workers led a hundred million peasants. That was the natural and inevitable reciprocal relation between proletariat and peasantry in the Revolution.

The National Question

The second revolutionary reserve of the proletariat was constituted by the oppressed nationalities, who moreover were also predominantly made up of peasants. Closely tied up with the historical backwardness of the country is the extensive character of the development of the state, which spread out like a grease spot from the center at Moscow to the circumference. In the East, it subjugated the still more backward peoples, basing itself upon them, in order to stifle the more developed nationalities of the West. To the 70 million Great Russians, who constituted the main mass of the population, were added gradually some 90 millions of "other races".

In this way arose the Empire, in whose composition the ruling nationality made up only 43 percent of the population, while the remaining 57 percent consisted of nationalities of varying degrees of civilization and legal deprivation. The national pressure was incomparably cruder in Russia than in the neighboring states, and not only those beyond the western boundary but beyond the eastern one, too. This conferred on the national problem a monstrous explosive force.

The Russian liberal bourgeoisie, in the national as well as in the agrarian question, would not go beyond certain ameliorations of the regime of oppression and violence. The "democratic" governments of Milukov and Kerensky, which reflected the interests of the Great Russian bourgeoisie and bureaucracy, actually hastened to impress upon the discontented nationalities, in the course of the eight months of their existence, "You will obtain only what you tear away by force".

The inevitability of the development of the centrifugal national movement had been early taken into consideration by Lenin. The Bolshevik Party struggled obstinately for years for the right of self-determination for nations, that is, for the right of full secession. Only through this courageous position on the national question could the Russian proletariat gradually win the confidence of the oppressed peoples. The national independence movement, as well as the agrarian movement, necessarily turned against the official democracy, strengthened the proletariat, and poured into the stream of the October upheaval.

* One desyatine equals 140 acres.

The Permanent Revolution

In these ways the riddle of the proletarian upheaval in an historically backward country loses its veil of mystery.

Marxist revolutionaries predicted, long before the events, the march of the Revolution and the historical role of the young Russian proletariat. I may be permitted to repeat here a passage from a work of my own in 1905:

"In an economically backward country the proletariat can arrive at power earlier than in a capitalistically advanced one...."

"The Russian Revolution creates the conditions under which the power can (and in the event of a successful revolution must) be transferred to the proletariat, even before the policy of bourgeois liberalism receives the opportunity of unfolding its genius for government to its full extent."

"The destiny of the most elementary revolutionary interests of the peasantry... is bound up with the destiny of the whole revolution, that is, with the destiny of the proletariat. The proletariat, once arrived at power, will appear before the peasantry as the liberating class."

"The proletariat enters into the government as the revolutionary representative of the nation, as the acknowledged leader of the people in the struggle with absolutism and the barbarism of serfdom."

"The proletarian regime will have to stand from the very beginning for the solution of the agrarian question, with which the question of the destiny of tremendous masses of the population of Russia is bound up."

I have taken the liberty of quoting these passages as evidence that the theory of the October Revolution which I am presenting today is no casual improvisation, and was not constructed ex post facto under the pressure of events. No, in the form of a political prognosis it preceded the October upheaval by a long time. You will agree that a theory is in general valuable only insofar as it helps to foresee the course of development and influences it purposefully. Therein, in general terms, is the invaluable importance of Marxism as a weapon of social and historical orientation. I am sorry that the narrow limits of the lecture do not permit me to enlarge the above quotation materially. I will therefore content myself with a brief resume of the whole work which dates from 1905.

In accordance with its immediate tasks, the Russian Revolution is a bourgeois revolution. But the Russian bourgeoisie is anti-revolutionary. The victory of the Revolution is therefore possible only as a victory of the proletariat. But the victorious proletariat will not stop at the program of bourgeois democracy; it will go on to the program of Socialism. The Russian Revolution will become the first stage of the Socialist world revolution.

This was the theory of the permanent revolution formulated by me in 1905 and since then exposed to the severest criticism under the name of "Trotskyism".

To be more exact, it is only a part of this theory. The other part, which is particularly timely now, states:

"The present productive forces have long outgrown their national limits. A Socialist society is not feasible within national boundaries. Significant as the economic successes of an isolated workers' state may be, the program of 'Socialism in one country' is a petty-bourgeois Utopia. Only a European and then a world federation of Socialist republics can be the real arena for a harmonious Socialist society."

Today, after the test of events, I see less reason than ever to dissociate myself from this theory.

The Bolshevik Party

After all that has been said above, is it still worth while to recall the Marxist writer, Malaparte, who ascribes to me tactics which are independent of strategy and amount to a series of technical recipes for insurrection, applicable in all latitudes and longitudes? It is a good thing that the name of the luckless theoretician of the coup d'Etat makes it easy to distinguish him from the victorious practitioner of the coup d'Etat; no one therefore runs the risk of confusing Malaparte with Bonaparte.

Without the armed insurrection of November 7, 1917, the Soviet state would not be in existence. But the insurrection itself did not drop from Heaven. A series of historical prerequisites was necessary for the October revolution.

1. The rooting away of the old ruling classes—the nobility, the monarchy, the bureaucracy.
2. The political weakness of the bourgeoisie, which had no roots in the masses of the people.
3. The revolutionary character of the peasant question.

4. The revolutionary character of the problem of the oppressed nations.

5. The significant social weight of the proletariat.

To these organic pre-conditions we must add certain conjunctural conditions of the highest importance:

6. The Revolution of 1905 was the great school, or in Lenin's words, the "dress rehearsal" of the Revolution of 1917. The Soviets, as the irreplaceable organizational form of the proletarian united front in the revolution, were created for the first time in the year 1905.

7. The imperialist war sharpened all the contradictions, tore the backward masses out of their immobility and thereby prepared the grandiose scale of the catastrophe.

But all these conditions, which fully sufficed for the outbreak of the Revolution, were insufficient to assure the victory of the proletariat in the Revolution. For this victory one condition more was needed:

8. The Bolshevik Party.

When I enumerate this condition as the last in the series, I do it only because it follows the necessities of the logical order, and not because I assign the Party the last place in the order of importance.

No, I am far from such a thought. The liberal bourgeoisie—yes, it can seize the power and has seized it more than once as the result of struggles in which it took a part; it possesses organs of seizure which are admirably adapted to the purpose. But the working masses are in a different position; they have long been accustomed to give, and not to take. They work, are patient as long as they can be, hope, lose their patience, rise up and struggle, die, bring victory to the others, are betrayed, fall into dependency, again bow their necks, again work. This is the history of the masses of the people under all regimes. In order to take the power firmly and surely into its hands the proletariat needs a Party, which far surpasses the other parties in the clarity of its thought and in its revolutionary determination.

The Party of the Bolsheviks, which has been described more than once and with complete justification as the most revolutionary Party in the history of mankind, was the living condensation of the modern history of Russia, of all that was dynamic in it. The overthrow of Tsarism had long since become the necessary condition for the development of economy and culture. But for the solution of this task, the forces were insufficient. The bourgeoisie feared the revolution. The intelligentsia tried to bring the peasant to his feet. The muzhik, incapable of generalizing his own miseries and his aims, left this appeal unanswered. The intelligentsia armed itself with dynamite. A whole generation was burned up in this struggle.

On March 1, 1887, Alexander Ulianov carried out the last of the great terrorist plots. The attempted assassination of Alexander III failed. Ulianov and the other participants were executed. The attempt to substitute a chemical preparation for the revolutionary class suffered shipwreck. Even the most heroic intelligentsia is nothing without the masses. Under the immediate impression of these facts and conclusion grew up Ulianov's younger brother Vladimir, the later Lenin, the greatest figure of Russian history. Even in his early youth he placed himself on the foundations of Marxism, and turned his face toward the proletariat. Without losing sight of the village for a moment, he sought the way to the peasantry through the workers. Having inherited from his revolutionary predecessors their determination, their capacity for self-sacrifice, and their willingness to go to the limit, Lenin at an early age became the teacher of the new generation of the intelligentsia and of the advanced workers. In strikes and street fights, in prisons and in exile, the workers received the necessary tempering. They needed the searchlight of Marxism to light up their historical road in the darkness of absolutism.

In the year 1883 there arose among the enigmas the first Marxist group. In the year 1898, at a secret meeting, the foundation of the Russian Social-Democratic Workers' Party was proclaimed (we all called ourselves Social-Democrats in those days). In the year 1903 occurred the split between Bolsheviks and Mensheviks. In the year 1912 the Bolshevik fraction finally became an independent Party.

It learned to recognize the class mechanics of society in struggle, in the grandiose events of twelve years (1905-1917). It educated cadres equally capable of initiative and of subordination. The discipline of its revolutionary army was based on the unity of its doctrine, on the tradition of common struggles and on confidence in its tested leadership.

Thus stood the Party in the year 1917. Despised by the official "public opinion" and the paper thunder of the intelligentsia press, it adapted itself to the movement of the masses. Firmly it kept in hand the control of factories and regiments. More and more the peasant masses turned toward it. If we understand by "nation", not the privileged heads, but the majority of the people, that is, the workers and peasants, then Bolshevism became in the course of the year 1917 a truly national Russian Party.

In September 1917, Lenin, who was compelled to keep in hiding, gave the signal. "The crisis is ripe, the hour of the insurrection has approached". He was right. The ruling classes had landed in a blind alley before the problems of the war, the land and national liberation. The bourgeoisie finally lost its head. The democratic parties, the Mensheviks and social-revolutionaries wasted the remains of the confidence of the masses in them by their support of the imperialist war, by their policy of ineffectual compromise and concession to the bourgeois and feudal property-owners. The awakened army no longer wanted to fight for the alien aims of imperialism. Disregarding democratic advice, the peasantry smoked the landowners out of their estates. The oppressed nationalities at the periphery rose up against the bureaucracy of Petrograd. In the most important workers' and soldiers' Soviets the Bolsheviks were dominant. The workers and soldiers demanded action. The ulcer was ripe. It needed a cut of the lancet.

Only under these social and political conditions was the insurrection possible. And thus it also became inevitable. But there is no playing around with the insurrection. Woe to the surgeon who is careless in the use of the lancet! Insurrection is an art. It has its laws and its rules.

The Party carried through the October insurrection with cold calculation and with flaming determination. Thanks to this, it conquered almost without victims. Through the victorious Soviets the Bolsheviks placed themselves at the head of a country which occupies one sixth of the surface of the globe.

The majority of my present listeners, it is to be presumed, did not occupy themselves at all with politics in the year 1917. So much the better. Before the young generation lies much that is interesting, if not always easy. But the representatives of the older generation in this hall will surely well remember how the seizure of power by the Bolsheviks was received: as a curiosity, as a misunderstanding, as a scandal; most often as a nightmare which was bound to disappear with the first rays of

(Continued on PAGE THREE)

LEON TROTSKY

History of the Russian Revolution

PUBLISHERS PRICE

Vol. One Vol. Two Vol. Three

$4.00 $3.50 $3.50

Send All Orders Immediately To

OUR PRICE

$3 per Volume

$9 the Boxed Set

POSTAGE 20c PER VOLUME Extra

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York

«The October Revolution Has Laid The Foundation For A New Civilization» - 1932

(Continued from page 2)

dawn. The Bolsheviks would last twenty-four hours, a week, a month, a year. The period had to be constantly lengthened.... The rulers of the whole world armed themselves against the first workers' state: civil war was stirred up, interventions again and again, blockade. So passed year after year. Meantime history has recorded fifteen years of existence of the Soviet power.

15 Years of the Soviet Regime

"Yes," some opponent will say, "the adventure of October has shown itself to be much more substantial than many of us thought. Perhaps it was not even quite an 'adventure'. Nevertheless, the question remains its full force: What was achieved at this high cost? Were then those dazzling tasks fulfilled which the Bolsheviks proclaimed on the eve of the Revolution?"

Before we answer the hypothetical question, let us note that the question in and of itself is not new. On the contrary, it followed right at the heels of the October Revolution, since the day of its birth. The French journalist, Claude Auet, who was in Petrograd during the Revolution, wrote as early as October 27, 1917:

"Les maximalistes ont pris le pouvoir et le grand jour est arrivé. Enfin, me dis-je, je vais voir se réaliser l'Eden socialiste qu'on nous promet depuis tant d'années... Admirable aventure! Position privilégiée!"

"The maximalists (which was what the French called the Bolsheviks at that time) have seized the power and the great day has come. At last, I say to myself, I shall behold the realization of the socialist Eden which has been promised us for so many years.... Admirable adventure! A privileged position!" And so on and so forth. What sincere hatred behind the ironical salutation! The very morning after the capture of the Winter Palace, the reactionary journalist hurried to Eden. Fifteen years have passed since the Revolution. With all the greater absence of ceremony our enemies reveal their malicious joy over the fact that the land of the Soviets, even today, bears but little resemblance to a realm of general well-being. Why then the Revolution and why the sacrifices?

Worthy listeners—permit me to think that the contradictions, difficulties, mistakes and want of the Soviet regime are no less familiar to me than to anyone else. I personally have never concealed them, whether in speech or in writing. I have believed and I still believe that revolutionary politics, as distinguished from conservative, cannot be built up on concealment. "To speak out that which is" must be the highest principle of the workers' state.

But in criticism, as well as in creative activity, perspective is necessary. Subjectivism is a poor adviser, particularly in great questions. Periods of time must be commensurate with the tasks, and not with individual caprices. Fifteen years! How much that is in the life of one man! Within that period not a few of our generation were borne to their graves and those who remain have added innumerable gray hairs. But these same fifteen years—what an insignificant period in the life of a people! Only a minute on the clock of history.

Capitalism required centuries to maintain itself in the struggle against the Middle Ages, to raise the level of science and technology, to build railroads, to stretch electric wires. And then? Then humanity was thrust by capitalism into the hell of wars and crises! But Socialism is allowed by its enemies, that is, by the adherents of capitalism, only a decade and a half to install Paradise on earth with all modern improvements. No, such obligations were never assumed by us. Such periods of time were never set forth. The processes of great changes must be measured by scales which are commensurate with them. I do not know if the Socialist state will resemble the biblical Paradise. I doubt it. But in the Soviet Union there is no Socialism as yet. The situation that prevails there is one of transition, full of contradictions, burdened with the heavy inheritance of the past, and in addition under the hostile pressure of the capitalist states. The October Revolution has proclaimed the principle of the new society. The Soviet Republic has shown only the first stage of its realization. Edison's first lamp was very bad. We must know how to distinguish the future from among the mistakes and faults of the first Socialist construction.

But the unhappiness that rains on living men? Do the results of the Revolution justify the sacrifice which it has caused? A fruitless question, rhetorical through and through; as if the processes of history admitted of an accounting balance-sheet! We might just as well ask, in view of the difficulties and miseries of human existence, "Does it pay to be born altogether?" To which I have written, "And the fool waits for answer". Such melancholy reflections have not hindered mankind from being born and from giving birth. Suicides, even in these days of unexampled world crisis, fortunately constitute an unimportant percentage. But peoples never resort to suicide. When their hardships are intolerable, they seek a way out through revolution.

Besides, who becomes indignant over the victims of the socialist upheaval? Most often those who have paved the way for the victims of the imperialist war, and have glorified or, at least, easily accommodated themselves to it. It is now our turn to ask, "Has the war justified itself? What has it given us? What has it taught?"

The reactionary historian, Hippolyte Taine, in his eleven-volume pamphlet against the great French Revolution describes, not without malicious joy, the sufferings of the French people in the years of the dictatorship of the Jacobins and afterward. The worst off were the lower classes of the cities, the plebeians, who as "sansculottes" had given up the best of their souls for the revolution. Now they or their wives stood in line throughout cold nights to return empty-handed to the extinguished family hearth. In the tenth year of the revolution Paris was poorer than before it began. Carefully selected, artificially pieced-out facts serve Taine as justification for his annihilating verdict against the revolution. Look, the plebeians wanted to be dictators and have precipitated themselves into misery!

It is hard to conceive of a more uninspired piece of moralizing. First of all, if the revolution precipitated the country into misery, the blame lay principally on the ruling classes who drove the people to revolution. Second, the great French revolution did not exhaust itself in hungry lines before bakeries. The whole of modern France, in many respects the whole of modern civilization, arose out of the bath of the French Revolution!

In the course of the Civil War in the United States in the '60's of the past century, 50,000 men were killed. Can these sacrifices be justified?

From the standpoint of the American slaveholder and the ruling classes of Great Britain who marched with them—no! From the standpoint of the negro or of the British workingman—absolutely! And from the standpoint of the development of humanity as a whole—there can be no doubt whatever. Out of the Civil War of the '60's came the present United States with its unbounded practical initiative, its rationalized technology, its economic plan. On these achievements of Americanism humanity will build the new society.

The October Revolution penetrated deeper than any of its predecessors into the Holy of Holies of society—into its property relations. So much the longer time is necessary to reveal the creative consequences of the Revolution in all the domains of life. But the general direction of the upheaval is already clear: the Soviet Republic has no reason whatever to hang its head before its capitalist accusers and speak the language of apology.

To evaluate the new regime from the standpoint of human development, one must first answer the question, "How does social progress express itself and how can it be measured?"

Balance Sheet of October

The deepest, the most objective and the most indisputable criterion says—progress can be measured by the growth of the productivity of social labor. The evaluation of the October Revolution from this point of view is already given by experience. The principle of socialistic organization has for the first time in history shown its ability to record unheard-of results in production in a short space of time.

The curve of the industrial development of Russia, expressed in crude index numbers, is as follows, taking 1913, the last year before the war, as 100. The year 1920, the highest point of the civil war, is also the lowest point in industry—only 25, that is to say, a quarter of the pre-war production. In 1925 it rose to 75, that is, three-quarters of the pre-war production; in 1929 about 200, in 1932, 300, that is to say, three times as much as on the eve of the war.

The picture becomes even more striking in the light of the international index. From 1925 to 1932 the industrial production of Germany has declined one and a half times, in America twice; in the Soviet Union it has increased fourfold. These figures speak for themselves.

I have no intention of denying or concealing the sunny side of Soviet economy. The results of the industrial index are extraordinarily influenced by the unfavorable development of agriculture, that is to say, of that field which has essentially not yet risen to Socialist methods, but at the same time has been led on the road to collectivization with insufficient preparation, bureaucratically rather than technically and economically. This is a great question, which however goes beyond the limits of my lecture.

The index numbers cited require another important reservation. The indisputable and, in their way, splendid results of Soviet industrialization demand a further economic checking-up from the standpoint of the mutual adaptation of the various elements of economy, their dynamic equilibrium and consequently their productive capacity. Here great difficulties and even setbacks are inevitable. Socialism does not arise in its perfected form from the Five-Year Plan, like Minerva from the head of Jupiter, or Venus from the foam of the sea. Before it are decades of persistent work, of mistakes, corrections and reorganization. Moreover, let us not forget that Socialist construction in accordance with its very nature can only reach perfection on the international arena. But even the most unfavorable economic balance-sheet of the results obtained so far could reveal only the incorrectness of the preliminary calculations, the errors of the plan and the mistakes of the leadership, but could in no way refute the empirically firmly established fact—the possibility, with the aid of Socialist methods, of raising the productivity of collective labor to an unheard-of height. This conquest, of world-historical importance, cannot be taken away from us by anybody or anything.

After what has been said, it is scarcely worth while to spend time on the complaints, that the October revolution has brought Russia to the downfall of its civilization. That is the voice of the dispirited ruling houses and the salons. The feudal-horror "civilization" overthrown by the proletarian upheaval was only barbarism with decorations à la Taine. Like it remained inaccessible to the Russian people, it brought little that was new to the treasury of mankind.

But even with respect to this civilization, which is so demeaned by the white emigres, we must put the question more precisely—in what sense is it ruined? Only in one sense; the monopoly of a small minority in the treasures of civilization has been destroyed. But everything of cultural value in the old Russian civilization has remained untouched. The Huns of Bolshevism have shattered neither the conquests of the mind nor the creations of art. On the contrary, they carefully collected the monuments of human creativeness and arranged them in model order. The culture of the monarchy, the nobility and the bourgeoisie has now become the culture of the museums.

The people visits these museums eagerly. But it does not live in them. It learns. It builds. The fact alone that the October Revolution taught the Russian people, the dozens of peoples of Tsarist Russia, to read and write, stands immeasurably higher than the whole former hot-house Russian civilization.

The October Revolution has laid the foundations for a new civilization, which is designed, not for a select few, but for all. This is felt by the masses of the whole world. Hence their sympathy for the Soviet Union, which is as passionate as once was their hatred for Tsarist Russia.

Worthy listeners—you know that human language is an irreplaceable tool, not only for giving names to events but also for evaluating them. By filtering out that which is accidental, episodic, artificial, it absorbs that which is essential, characteristic, of full weight. Notice with what nicety the languages of civilized nations have distinguished two epochs in the development of Russia. The culture of the nobility brought into world currency such barbarisms as Tsar, Cossack, pogrom, nagalka. You know these words and what they mean. The October Revolution introduced into the language of the world such words as Bolshevik, Soviet, kolkhoz, Gosplan, Piatiletka. Here practical linguistics holds its historical supreme court!

The profoundest significance, but the hardest to submit to immediate measurement, of that great Revolution consists in the fact that it forms and tempers the character of the people. The conception of the Russian people as slow, passive, melancholy-mystical, is widely spread and not accidental. It has its roots in the past. But in Western countries up to the present time those far-reaching changes have not been sufficiently considered which have been introduced into the character of the people by the Revolution. Could it have been otherwise?

Every man with experience of life can recall the picture of some youth, that he has known, receptive, lyrical, all too susceptible, who later, all at once, under the influence of a powerful moral impulse, became hardened and unresponsive. In the development of a whole nation, such moral transformations are wrought by the revolution.

The February insurrection against the autocracy, the struggle against the nobility, against the imperialist war, for peace, for land, for national equality, the October insurrection, the overthrow of the bourgeoisie, and of those parties which sought agreements with the bourgeoisie, three years of civil war on a front of 5,000 miles, the years of blockade, hunger, misery and epidemics, the years of tense economic reconstruction, of new difficulties and renaissances—these make a barrel but a good steel. The hammer of the Revolution forged the steel of the people's character.

"Who will believe?" wrote a Tsarist general, Zaslavski, with indignation, shortly after the upheaval, "that a porter or a watchman suddenly becomes a chief justice, a hospital attendant—the director of a hospital, a barber—an officeholder, a corporal—a commander-in-chief, a day worker—a mayor, a locksmith—the director of a factory?"

"Who will believe it?" They had to believe it. They could do nothing else but believe it, when the corporals defeated generals, when the mayor—the former day worker—broke the resistance of the old bureaucracy, the wagon-greaser put the transportation system in order, the locksmith as director put the industrial equipment into working condition. "Who will believe it?" Let them only try and not believe it.

For an explanation of the extraordinary persistence which the masses of the people of the Soviet Union are showing throughout the years of the Revolution, many foreign observers rely, in accord with ancient habit, on the "passivity" of the Russian character. The revolutionary masses endure their privations patiently but not passively. With their own hands they are creating a better future and they want to create it, at any cost. Let the class enemy only attempt to impose his will from the outside on these patient masses! No, he would do better not to try it!

Help Us Publish Trotsky's Speech On "The Defense of the October Revolution"

It is impossible to speak of the speech which comrade Trotsky made to the social-democratic students in Copenhagen without the greatest enthusiasm. It is a masterpiece. We know that it will take its place with the inspired teachings of our great revolutionary leaders.

It is, at the same time, a crushing and unanswerable refutation of the slanders with which the degenerated Stalinist regime seeks to maintain its crumbling prestige. Who, reading this speech, can lend credence to the boomeranged legend that Trotsky and the Left Opposition are counter-revolutionists? What belief could he place in pieces like this? (Daily Worker, January 19, 1933): "Trotsky, like the Socialist Daily Forward, acts on the theory that any difficulty in the Soviet Union is his opportunity. The main line of imperialist attack consists in the attempt to discredit revolution as a weapon of the working class, as the way out of the miseries of capitalism; it consists in the attempt to convince the masses in the imperialist and colonial countries that no matter how bad their conditions are, things are still worse for the masses of the Soviet Union. This is Trotsky's line." Is not the speech itself, if we are to leave out of account for the moment, all the writings and deeds of the International Left Opposition, a sufficient answer to this trash of the Stalinists? We think it is. That is why we want to bring it out as a pamphlet and give it a wide distribution.

Will you help us get this pamphlet out? The cost is about ninety dollars. That is the figure we must raise, and raise at once. Work on the pamphlet has already begun. The question is: can we raise the money necessary to get it out quickly? Our comrades and friends must give the answer.

Elsewhere in this issue we explain how the publishing fund works. Let us apply it now, concretely, to the problem of getting out this pamphlet. Let those of us who can afford it make donations for this purpose. No one should hesitate to send in what he can. No amount is too small, and, of course, no amount is ever too large. Perhaps there are some friends who would like to help us get the pamphlet out but who are not in a position to make donations. They can help with loans.

No one should hesitate to make a loan. The money will be used exclusively for the purpose of getting out the pamphlet. A strict accounting will be kept and given. A record will be published in the MILITANT. And, of course, every penny will be paid back.

Now let us raise the money in the shortest possible time. Ninety dollars are not much. We can do it. Rush all notices to PIONEER PUBLISHERS, at 84 East 10th Street, New York.

The Revolution and Its Place in History

Let us now in closing attempt to ascertain the place of the October Revolution, not only in the history of Russia but in the history of the world. During the year 1917, in a period of eight months, two historical eras intersect. The February upheaval—that belated echo of the great struggles which had erupted out in past centuries on the territories of Holland, England, France, almost all of Continental Europe—takes its place in the series of bourgeois revolutions. The October Revolution proclaims and opens the domination of the proletariat. It was world capitalism that suffered its first great defeat on the territory of Russia. The chain broke at its weakest link. But it was the chain that broke, and not only the link.

Capitalism has outlived itself as a world system. It has ceased to fulfill its essential mission, the increase of human power and human wealth. Humanity cannot stand still at the level which it has reached. Only a powerful increase in productive force and a sound, planned, that is, Socialist organization of production and distribution can assure humanity—all humanity—of a decent standard of life and at the same time give it the precious feeling of freedom with respect to its own economy. Freedom in two senses—first of all, man will no longer be compelled to devote the greater part of his life to physical labor. Second, he will no longer be dependent on the laws of the market, that is, on the blind and dark forces which have grown up behind his back. He will build up his economy freely, that is, according to a plan, with compass in hand. This time it is a question of subjecting the anatomy of society to the X-ray through and through, of disclosing all its secrets and subjecting all its functions to the reason and the will of collective humanity. In this sense, Socialism must become a new step in the historical advance of mankind. Before our ancestor, who first armed himself with a stone axe, the whole of nature represented a conspiracy of secret and hostile forces. Since then, the natural sciences, hand in hand with practical technology, have illuminated nature down to its most secret depths. By means of electrical energy, the physicist passes judgment on the nucleus of the atom. The hour is not far when science will easily solve the task of the alchemists, and turn manure into gold and gold into manure. Where the demons and furies of nature once raged, now rules ever more courageously the industrial will of man.

But while he wrestled victoriously with nature, man built up his relations to other men blindly, almost like the bee or the ant. Belatedly and most undecidably he approached the problems of human society. He began with religion, and passed on to politics. The Reformation represented the first victory of bourgeois individualism and rationalism in a domain which had been ruled by dead tradition. From the church, critical thought went on to the state. Born in the struggle with absolutism and the medieval people, the doctrine of the sovereignty of the people and of the rights of man and the citizen grew stronger. Thus arose the system of parliamentarism. Critical thought penetrated into the domain of government administration. The political rationalism of democracy was the highest achievement of the revolutionary bourgeoisie.

But between nature and the state stands economic life. Technology liberated man from the tyranny of the old elements—earth, water, fire and air—only to subject him to its own tyranny. Man ceased to be a slave to nature, to become a slave to the machine, and, still worse, a slave to supply and demand. The present world crisis testifies in especially tragic fashion how man, who dives to the bottom of the ocean, who rises up to the stratosphere, who converses on invisible waves with the Antipodes, how this proud and daring ruler of nature remains a slave to the blind forces of his own economy. The historical task of our epoch consists in replacing the uncontrolled play of the market by reasonable planning, in disciplining the forces of production, compelling them to work together in harmony and obediently serve the needs of mankind. Only on this new basis will man be able to stretch his weary limbs and—every man and every woman, not only a selected few—become a full citizen in the realm of thought.

But this is not yet the end of the road. No, it is only the beginning. Man calls himself the crown of creation. He has a certain right to that claim. But who has asserted that present-day man is the last and highest representative of the species Homo sapiens? No, physically as well as spiritually he is very far from perfection, prematurely born biologically, sick in mind and without new organic equilibrium.

It is true that humanity has more than once brought forth giants of thought and action, who tower over their contemporaries like summits in a chain of mountains. The human race has a right to be proud of its Aristotle, Shakespeare, Darwin, Beethoven, Goethe, Marx, Edison, and Lenin. But why are they so rare? Above all because, almost without exception, they came out of the upper and middle classes. Apart from rare exceptions, the sparks of genius in the suppressed depths of the people are choked before they can burst into flame. But also because the processes of creating, developing and educating a human being have been and remain essentially a matter of chance, not illuminated by theory and practice, not subject to consciousness and will.

Anthropology, biology, physiology and psychology have accumulated mountains of material to raise up before mankind in their full scope the tasks of perfecting and developing body and spirit. Psychoanalysis, with the inspired hand of Sigmund Freud, has lifted the cover of the well which is poetically called the "soul". And what has been revealed? Our conscious thought is only a small part of the work of the dark psychic forces. Learned divers descend to the bottom of the ocean and there take photographs of mysterious fishes. Human thought, descending to the bottom of its own psychic sources, must shed light on the most mysterious driving forces of the soul and subject them to reason and to will.

Once he has done with the anarchic forces of his own society, man will set to work on himself, in the pebble and the retort of the chemist. For the first time mankind will regard itself as raw material, or at best as a physical and psychic semi-finished product. Socialism will mean a leap from the realm of necessity into the realm of freedom in that other sense too, that the present-day contradictory and disharmonious man will pave the way for a new and happier race.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE NEW PARTY TURN—

(Continued from page 1)
 pate in a real struggle for the unemployed if they are not even invited to do so? Secondly, the turn of policy is carried out, not in the direct, straightforward manner of Bolsheviki, but in the indirect and shame-faced manner of Stalinists. The party does not proclaim the policy, issue the call and take the lead. That is all left to the "Trade Union Committee" controlled by the party. Thirdly, there is no frank acknowledgment of the ruinous errors of the "Third Period"; and no explanations of the reasons for the change. Thus the door is left open for a retreat—also without explanations.

Yet another—and the most dangerous—of all the weaknesses in the new step of the Stalinists has already been pointed out in last week's Militant. That is the parliamentary reformist trend of the proposals. The time to warn against such a trend is now. Having concocted their policy of ultra-Left adventurism in an artificial atmosphere of revolutionary urgency the Stalinists can now be expected to swing to the other extreme and transform the party militants into petitioners for piecemeal reforms. The Amsterdam Congress against War heralded this swing to the right on an international scale. The watering down of policy in every field is on the order of the day. The over-emphasis on purely parliamentary action in the call for the Unemployment Conference becomes all the more menacing in the light of this general shift of policy to the right.

Having failed to conquer American capitalism in frontal attack the Stalinist generals have now given the signal to go after a little at a time; to tone down the talk about the final goal of the struggle. A highly amusing, but none the less significant incident is reported from Des Moines. A functionary, responding to a critical speech by comrade Lewitt, explained that he had been instructed "not to talk about revolution in the West." In this crude remark of the naive field worker is embodied the essence of the new Stalinist strategy: "We couldn't get the workers by command; now let us fool them in." By this maneuver they can fool the workers and themselves into the swamp of reformism, but never into a revolutionary struggle.

The Left Opposition, and only the Left Opposition, can sound the alarm against this element of the new turn in united front policy and lead the struggle against it. But this cannot be done effectively by a negative or standing-aside attitude toward the united front movement. On the contrary. Such an attitude can only alienate the Left Opposition from the Communist workers and doom its criticism to futility. An active participation in the movement, in the work and in the fight is the only way to make the revolutionary influence of the Left Opposition count in the new turn of events.

A NEW FEDERATION OF LABOR?

The Conference of Illinois trade unionists held at Gillespie on December 27th, and the second one scheduled for January 29th—both of them sponsored by the Gillespie Trades and Labor Council and the Progressive Miners of America—are events of exceptional interest to the progressive and revolutionary elements throughout the country. The first conference call proposed to discuss and lay plans for "formulating a Progressive Federation of Labor displacing the old and practically defunct American Federation of Labor." Such a project raises again, and very concretely, a crucial question of tactics, which the Left wing militants must answer realistically and correctly if disastrous errors are to be avoided.

That the coming resurgence of working class militancy, the conditions for which are maturing under the fearful pressure of the crisis, will break out of the formal bounds of the conservative trade union organizations—of this we have not the slightest doubt. That it will result in, or at least make possible, the formation of new, modern organizations on the industrial union basis in various fields is a reasonable calculation. The emergence out of the stormy conflicts of a new trade union center is not excluded; it is rather the most probable prospect. But, assuming all this, it by no means follows that the basis now exists for the formation of such a new trade union center. And, still less does it follow that organizational steps in this direction, at the present time, will facilitate the development of the progressive movement. On the contrary, at the present moment, they can only add another demoralizing failure and place new obstacles in the way of a normal and solidly-grounded development of the new union movement. From this point of view the progressive sentiments and aims of the Illinois militants run the danger of being negated by ill-considered tactics. The moderation of the original project at the December 27th Conference is to be welcomed with the hope that it is to be followed by a still further moderation of tactics on January 29th.

A new trade union center contesting the A. F. of L. for supremacy in the labor movement will very likely make its appearance at a certain stage in the development of the American labor movement towards eventual unity on a class struggle basis. But such a new, central organization cannot be made to order. It cannot come into life at the call of the impatient militants, of a new isolate unions. A union in one industry alone, or rather in one section of one industry, and with a still problematical stability in that restricted section—as is the case with the Progressive Miners of America—is not a sufficient basis. The addition of a few, or even of all, the progressive labor organizations now existing in isolated localities and trades would not constitute a new trade union center in the real sense of the word. It could only give the deceptive appearance of such a center, tend to isolate the dynamic militant elements from the conservative organizations and arrest the radical ferment within them. Instead of creating a new progressive labor center on a firm basis the premature step now under consideration at Gillespie would retard the development in this direction. Instead of reinforcing the position of the Progressive Miners union the proposed, new venture would undermine it, cut it off arbitrarily from its natural allies, the half-former progressive movements in the conservative unions, and weaken the prestige and authority of the Progressive Miners organization. The reactionary labor bureaucracy at which the Gillespie enterprise is subjectively aimed will be the real gainers if the original plan to "formulate a New Progressive Federation of Labor" is not radically modified.

The Progressive Miners organization of Illinois enjoys a high respect among the militant and progressive labor elements throughout the country. And justly so. It has won this respect in stirring battles which wrote, and are still writing, bright pages of labor history. It is a militant organization and, despite the weakness and vacillations in its leadership has a profound urge within its rank and file to extend the battle front and to join hands with kindred elements on a national scale. This is the impulse behind the Conference at Gillespie, and it is a fundamentally sound one. Properly directed the Illinois miners movement can become a real influence for the revival of militant labor throughout the country. All the more reason therefore, to guard against the dissipation of this influence in premature and ill-considered ventures which leave the present reality out of account.

According to the report in the "Progressive Miner" the first Conference at Gillespie decided "to continue indefinitely the work of fighting within the American Federation of Labor." From this it is to be inferred that the plan to form an independent labor federation has already been modified to a certain extent, or at least postponed. It is to be hoped that the second Conference on January 29th, will revise the plan fundamentally and take the organization of a new federation off the agenda for the present.

At the present stage of developments a general propaganda movement for a militant program is needed. Such a movement can unite the militant and progressive forces in all the labor organizations, inside as well as outside the A. F. of L., and consolidate their forces for common struggle. The formation of a new, independent labor movement all intentions to the contrary notwithstanding, would pull these forces apart and weaken the struggle of each.

—J. P. C.

Pauline Gutringer

Comrade Pauline Gutringer, member of the New York Branch, has passed away. Her activity was in the forefront of the American movement against the capitalists and the revisionists within our ranks. In the Socialist party comrade Gutringer fought with the other Left wingers against the opportunism and revisionism of the socialist "leaders."

The building of the American Communist movement and its Hungarian section had the active support of comrade Gutringer. When the struggle between the Left Opposition and the Right Centre bloc broke out in the United States comrade Gutringer became a foundation member of the American section of the Left Opposition. In our movement she carried on the same active work she did before in the party. With exemplary courage she sold the Militant in Union Square and unflinchingly stood the physical attacks of the Stalinist bureaucrats.

She was well informed on the international movement, and followed the working class struggle throughout the world as a true revolutionist. Her keen interest in the youth of our movement reflected her understanding of the needs of the American section. The struggle against capitalism gave her strength, but as with most sincere revolutionists the internal struggles left deep marks upon her. None the less she consistently trod the path of the international revolution and Marxist principles.

Let her struggle be a lesson to the comrades of the movement. A worker-fighter whose activity must be carried on and replaced by tens and hundreds of recruits into the ranks of the Left Opposition.

LENIN ISSUE

As announced in the last issue of the Militant this issue was to be a combined Lenin, Liebknecht, Luxemburg issue. For technical reasons the material prepared was not ready in time. It is possible all of it will appear in the next issue.

Protomagia at United Front Meet

The Daily Worker and the Empire have lauded the success of the Greek-speaking workers' Unemployed United Front because it succeeded in obtaining $100,000 from the Charity Fund of the Archbishop. Although we do not disagree with the action of the unemployed in obtaining relief wherever possible, we do disagree with the methods that the Stalinist leadership pursued until last Sunday. Instead of calling a genuine united front in the beginning they confined themselves to a united front only with the Greek Archbishop.

The United Front Committee invited, for the first time since its inception, every Greek organization to participate in the discussion scheduled to take place on Sunday, January 8th. Our Greek workers Club Protomagia responded to this call and elected three comrades as delegates, Caldis, Katsikis and Haidons.

The meeting took place at the appointed time and the first speaker to address the gathering was a priest representing the Archbishop. He very consciously exploited the opportunity and used very clever demagoguery to strengthen the prestige of the bankrupt clergy. His final words were applauded by many ignorant workers. Comrade Daniels followed him as a reporter of the U. F. Committee and availed himself of the opportunity to attack the archbishop.

His entire remarks were concentrated against the Greek bosses without a single word to be uttered against the native bourgeoisie and the necessity of linking the struggle of the Greek workers with that of the American workers. Then the period of discussion began and the first delegate to speak was our comrade Katsikis who greeted the gathering and emphasized the necessity of linking up the struggle and preventing it from becoming isolated within narrow federalist lines. Many other delegates of party auxiliaries greeted the gathering and then a Stalinist delegate from the Food Workers Industrial Union had the audacity to attack the members of Protomagia as people that only contribute criticism and that those who are active, are always liable to commit mistakes.

Comrade Caldis addressed the meeting and told the Stalinists that on such occasions as this, the workers in reviewing their activities propose certain things and in general do not confine themselves to pious wishes but offer some healthy criticism for the benefit of the struggle. Also he emphasized the necessity of linking the struggle of the Greek workers with those of the native workers and of classifying the Greek bosses as American exploiters. He criticized the Stalinists for their statements that the struggle is not political and pointed out that the charity methods are very opportunistic. He demanded representation of the Protomagia in the United Front Committee in order that its members might serve effectively in the Unemployment drive. To this demand the Stalinist chairman answered that at the 12th of February Conference of the U. F. C. a proportional representation would be given to all organizations.

The Empire delegate told the comrades that the Empire did not receive the reports of the Committee in time and that the next issue would surely print enough. He hinted that the delegates of Protomagia came here not to participate in any of the activities but just to disrupt. Our next delegate, comrade Haidons, answered sharply that "we are here as revolutionists to do our work with all the class conscious workers and it's up to all of you present to judge for yourselves who we are in the field of the class struggle." A prejudiced worker shouted that "we have only one workers' club"; to this worker comrade Haidons very correctly answered that at present the time is not proper to discuss the reasons of this dual club existence but declared that Protomagia is an educational club and was founded to fill the gap that the Spartacus left open for reasons that we can discuss on another occasion.

Then comrade Daniels summed up and forgot everything about the class enemies and merely concentrated his attacks against the Left Opposition of Greece that "kills workers and acts as stool pigeons for the police." Also he tried to develop a lynching spirit against the American Oppositionists who "killed two workers" on the corner of 7th and Ave. A. The workers remained silent and after the meeting were very anxious to know the reason for these attacks by the Stalinists. We told them that they heard enough about the Food Workers Industrial Union, how militant it is. And therefore, as food workers, they should join the Union and find out for themselves who are these "counter-revolutionists" and Trotskyists. Many Communist sympathizers expressed the wish that we should unite again in the ranks of the Spartacus Club and to this comrade Repanis shouted, "I am the treasurer of the club and all its funds are at the disposal of the Spartacus Club. We will be very glad to dispense with our organization. It is up to you workers to fight militantly for the unification of our forces!"

The Daily Worker pretends to show that the Greek Club, Protomagia, which participated in the united front conference of the unemployed on January 8th is a fake club, and was used by the Trotskyites in order to appear as delegates.

The fact of the matter is that the members of Protomagia are bona fide trade union members. Many of them have long party membership prior to their adherence to the views of the Left Opposition. This fact is well-known, especially to those workers who participated in the above mentioned gathering. If it was otherwise, as the Daily Worker pretends, the Greek Stalinists would never have given the floor to our comrades.

The effect of the healthy criticism of our comrades is proved beyond any doubt by the apologies of the editorial board of Empire, of January 14th, in which they try to place the blame for their shameful co-operation with the Greek cardinal on the shoulders of the comrades assigned to the united front committee. The truth of the matter is that these very same mercenaries of the editorial board were personally directing these ultra-Right wing methods of co-operation with the Greek archbishop, and, thereby strengthened with their action the prejudices of the ignorant workers.

—A. C.

Japs in Jehol

(Continued from page 1)

ese. When the time comes they will pass over from the realm of words. Already we hear the music of the future.

Secretary of State, Stimson in his statement to Congress on the question of Philippine independence, on Jan. 16th said, regarding the situation that might ensue if the Philippines were freed, "Such a situation might be an irreparable blow to American influence at a time when the state of affairs in the Far East is chaotic, when every element of stability is threatened and when may come out of the Orient one of these historic moments which might disturb the whole earth." Stripped of the diplomatic verbiage the meaning of this statement is clear as day. The danger of war stands in close proximity.

But parallel with the danger of a world conflagration rises the possibility of a bloody assault upon the Soviet Union. For, however rich and desirable the Chinese market is to the imperialist bandits their interests would be better served by an attack upon the workers' fatherland than by tearing one other's throats over their booty.

The Japanese militarists have many times tried to provoke the Soviet Union. In the last issue of the Militant we recounted their hostile acts. They are enraged over Russia's refusal to recognize the puppet state of Manchukuo and her resumption of diplomatic relations with China. They want to force the Soviet Union to act according to the standards of capitalist greed. But the Soviet Union has no imperialist axe to grind. Its interests are the interests of the international proletariat and conversely. The present actions of Japan and the other capitalist powers must alarm the working class to the growing danger of another world war. Not only does an imperialist war become a present danger but a united attack upon the Soviet Union is threatened.

After four years of misery and privation for the working class the imperialists are preparing a huge blood bath for them to drown their sorrows in. To these preparations, intrigues, and the like the working class must be ready to answer with the only answer at their disposal, the transformation of the imperialist war into the civil war for the overthrow of the capitalist system.

—GEO. CLARKE.

BOUND VOLUMES

We want to remind our readers that the Bound Volumes of the Militant—both formats—are still available at $5 for the new format (recent issues); and $10 for the old format. Lack of space compels us to omit the usual ad.

Pioneer Publishing Fund

Two weeks ago we published a letter from comrade D. Marcus asking the friends of the League to come to its support by donating and lending money to Pioneer Publishers Publishing Fund. Comrade Marcus explained, as we had done before, that this fund was to be used exclusively for the publication of our literature. And to set an example to the entire movement he raised twenty-five dollars as a loan.

That was the beginning. As the first result we got our Unemployment and the American Working Class by comrade Swabeck in record time. Now we are ready to go ahead. We have plenty of manuscripts on hand. There is the all-important work by comrade Trotsky on Soviet Economy in Danger with which we will publish, as one pamphlet, his analysis of the Expulsion of Zinoviev. There is also the second in our series of popular Marxist pamphlets for workers: The Left Opposition of the Comintern; its history and its principles by comrade Shachtman. There are also The Only Road by comrade Trotsky and the

The Program of the U. W. P.

Proletarian Party Offshoot Elaborates Opportunist Program

The United Workers Party, an offshoot of the disintegrated Proletarian Party Opposition has at last given birth to an eight-point program. Within the program there are many correct sentences and ideas but considered as a whole it is a miserable failure at an attempt to formulate a program. Where Marxism ideas are presented they are negated by other ideas within the very same paragraph. To the readers of the Militant it will be sufficient to give the essence of the "program" with a short comment to show its fallacy.

1. The U. W. P. takes the stand that: "The crisis is permanent." "We are living in a period of permanent crisis; capitalism throughout the world is collapsing." "—no factors are operating to help capitalism overcome its present crisis." This would be a hopeless situation for capitalism and we know there are no absolutely hopeless situations for the exploiters. The program fails to take into consideration the relation between the present decay stage of capitalism and the ebbs and flows within this period. The program lumps these two relations together which results in confusion and contradictions.

2. The program correctly tells us that: "The only revolutionary class is the proletariat." The program says the U. W. P. will not "make concessions to the agrarian and petit-bourgeois class" but "we will cooperate with any group or organization for the purpose of sharpening and deepening the class struggle." If they mean concessions from the standpoint of principles we can agree but concessions to allies (Negro share croppers, etc., etc.) in our united effort to overthrow American imperialism, under the leadership of the workers and their party which retains its organizational independence in such united action, is essential. A program that does not distinguish between these two different kinds of concessions means that its writers have learned little from the Russian revolution and what has followed as well as what went before.

3. The section dealing with industry lists some correct points but repeats in different words the formula dealing with the crisis: "that no factors are operating to help capitalism overcome its present crisis."

4. The section dealing with unions leaves out most of the important factors of present day relations between the existing unions and the task of building new industrial unions. On unions, they say the following: "In the period of ascendancy of capitalism these organizations could succeed in obtaining results; but in the period of decline, no concessions can possibly be gotten." A pamphlet could be written explaining the fallacy of this position and the harm it can do to the class if accepted. Capitalism will grant concessions to unions as the pressure of the working class upon it increases.

5. The section dealing with unemployment errs mainly in omission, because, after all its said and done, nothing vital for the class has been said. No program, no tactics and no line of march for the class. The U. W. P. has been very active in the day-to-day work and for immediate relief but its program cannot be considered Communist. The needs of the class on the one hand and the limited "program" of the U. W. P. as applied in the Workers' Councils on the other hand, condemns these Communists in advance.

—H. O.

up new propaganda possibilities for us. Five pamphlets are only twenty-five cents. At no time should a member or sympathizer of the League be without five of these pamphlets in his or her pocket. If you cannot sell them, give them away to workers!

Let's make this pamphlet the signal for a new spurt of propaganda activity. Why see how easy it is! Everything about the pamphlet conduces to this end. Its price, its size, the number of pages, the style in which it is written; all these make it ideal for this purpose.

SOVIET ECONOMY IN DANGER AND THE EXPULSION OF ZINOVIEV

This will be the next pamphlet. Just as we were going to press comrade Marcus walked in here and put down twenty more dollars on our desk as another loan. He said he raised it on the basis of the immediate necessity of throwing the light of Marxist illumination on the present crisis in Soviet Economy.

Work will start immediately. In two or three weeks, at the utmost, the pamphlet will be off the press. That, of course, depends to a large extent on whether our other friends take a cue from comrade Marcus and duplicate his splendid work. Of one thing we can be sure. Twenty dollars will not suffice to publish the pamphlet. If that were all that were required it would be possible to turn out pamphlets much more quickly and without performing the miracles which are sometimes necessary. So let's see what can be done.

If the number on your wrapper is 150 that means your subscription expires with this issue. If it is a lower number your subscription has expired prior to this issue.

You know the Militant is in a financial crisis. Help it by renewing your subscription now — immediately.

Use the club plan in setting new subscriptions. Four half year subs on a club plan are only 50c apiece. Singly they are one dollar. Help circulate a Marxist paper for workers.

Unemployment and the American Working Class

by Arne Swabeck

A popular Marxist analysis for workers of the unemployment situation and the basis for a revolutionary workingclass program of action!

24 Pages

5 Cents

Minimum Order

5 Copies

Postage 1c extra per copy

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York, N. Y.

Liberals Protest Chen's Arrest

The continued imprisonment of comrade Chen Du-Hsiu, leader of the Left Opposition in China, has called forth a protest from a number of leading liberal and radical figures in American public life. A cablegram sent by them to Chiang Kai-Shek in Nanking reads as follows: "Leading Americans protest prosecution Professor Chen Du-Hsiu and associates. Urge their release."

Among those who signed their names to the cabled protest were a number of writers who are notably sympathetic to the Communist movement in the United States and closely associated with it. These include Theodore Dreiser, Sherwood Anderson, H. W. L. Dana, Malcolm Cowley and Waldo Frank. Among the liberals and socialists who signed the protest are to be found Upton Sinclair, John Haynes Holmes of the Community Church in New York, Floyd Dell, Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of the liberal weekly, THE NATION, Arthur Garfield Hays, the lawyer, and Roger N. Baldwin, of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The official Communist party, however, and the International Labor Defense, have not yet raised a single protest against the arrest of comrade Chen and his comrades, whose lives are still endangered. The only comment yet made by the Daily Worker was aimed at preventing any protest from the militant labor movement on the grounds that comrade Chen is a "counter-revolutionary Trotskyist." To the disgrace of the movement, it has remained for liberals and radical intellectuals to speak out where the party preserved that dreadful silence which could not be of greater good to Chiang Kai-Shek and his henchmen than if the latter themselves had arranged for it.

The Communist workers must wipe out this shameful blot by demanding that the party and the I. L. D. take up the fight for the Left Oppositionists in China and connect their case with those of the many other brave militants whose lives are at the mercy of the Kuo Min Tang brigands.

HELP!

There is every reason to hope that the Weekly MILITANT will continue. Thus far, our paper has depended almost exclusively upon the membership of the Communist League, out of their limited resources, to maintain the leading English expression of Bolshevism. Now, today, our readers and sympathizers must lend a hand to save the Weekly. The demands upon our numerically small membership have been heavy, especially so in this lengthy period of economic crisis.

We have no doubt that our readers will respond to the plain, frank appeal of the Left Opposition to maintain the Weekly MILITANT.

The requirements of the situation demand more and more the participation and direction of the Left Opposition in the daily class struggles. Through the MILITANT, still our best organizer, the ideas and practices of Leninism, of the Left Opposition, are made known to the Communist movement, to the Left Opposition, to the broad masses of workers coming steadily, if yet slowly, toward class consciousness and Communism.

The MILITANT can and must be maintained. Its existence as a Weekly through these scouring years of the economic crisis, have shown clearly the devotion and sacrifice of the supporters of the Left Opposition to their paper. What has been done before, can be done again—better and even more generously. Sympathizers, readers—help the MILITANT now! Save our and your Weekly!

Send money at once to:
THE MILITANT
126 East 16th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Left Opposition Demands Broad United Front at N. Y. Unemployment Conference

Presents Revolutionary Program to Stalinist Confab Oriented on Opportunist Half-Turn

L. O. Resolutions

Note: This statement was distributed to the delegates at the Unemployment Conference at Irving Plaza, New York, on Sunday, January 22.

The United Front conference for Unemployment Insurance and relief is a step in the proper direction. Properly developed it can result in a genuine and big movement of the working class against the scourge of unemployment and its source capitalism.

Through such a broad movement the working class can be more closely welded together in common struggle for the immediate and historical interest of the masses. The Communist League of America heartily welcomes this movement and works for its advancement.

The call for the present conference proposes a state-wide conference to lay out a legislative program in defense of the interests of the unemployed and working class. This proposal to put pressure on the capitalist legislature is a necessary part of a fighting movement for the unemployed. The fight on this front, however, can become really effective, even to serve the immediate interests of the unemployed only if it is supplemented by and combined with a program of direct mass pressure through huge united demonstrations of the workers.

This preliminary conference, should aim to put the movement on a firm foundation by recommending a concrete program for the consideration of the State-wide conference. For this program we proposed the following points:

1. Immediate Relief.
2. Unemployment Insurance, to be paid for by the employers and State government.
3. The 6 hour day and 5 day week, without reduction in pay.
4. Long term credit to the Soviet Union, as a means of unemployment relief for American workers and the cementing of fraternal relations between the American and Russian workers. This implies the demand for recognition of the Soviet Government and the establishment of trade relations.

In supporting the movement for legislative action the Communist Left Opposition deems it necessary to point out the inadequacies of a parliamentary campaign to achieve any one of these demands. Such a tactic by itself is insufficient and would be misleading and incapable of obtaining the aims of the Conference. The broad masses of the workers must be drawn into class struggle activity for these demands. Through mass demonstrations and activity among the working class organizations—trade unions, fraternal organizations, etc., the employed and unemployed, the organized and unorganized must be united in the fight for these demands. In short, the widest possible mass pressure of the economic and political organizations of the working class must be exerted upon the ruling class to reinforce the legislative demands.

It is necessary that this Conference should conduct a sharp campaign of exposure and criticism of the so-called labor representatives and their lobbying methods behind the scenes with the politicians at Albany and elsewhere in order to secure a few cheap and meager concessions for the unemployed. This capitalist "politics" is only a snare and delusion to the workers and serves to disarm them before the attacks of the capitalists and their agents. These labor fakers must be shown up in their true colors by counterposing a program of class struggle to their political chicanery.

In order to achieve the aims of the Conference in concerted struggle, it is necessary to take a further step forward on the road of a broad united front of all working class organizations—unions and political parties (A. F. of L., Socialist Party, Communist Party, etc.) It is not enough to invite the branches of these organizations. The respective central organizations and the official leaders of these organizations must be put to the test before the eyes of the workers and compelled to show their colors in action. The Communist Party must participate officially in this movement and undertake thereby, to give direct leadership to the struggles of the workers for their immediate needs and final aims—the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of a Soviet Government.

Communist League of America
(Opposition) N. Y. Branch
126 East 16th Street
New York City

(Continued on page 4)

The New York conference held under the auspices of the A. F. of L. Committee for Unemployed Insurance on Sunday, January 22, 1933, was of such significance for the struggle against unemployment in general, and the Communist movement in particular, that it deserves a detailed account and treatment.

The importance of the Conference did not lie so much in the organizations represented. In this respect, the gathering fell far short of the possibilities as well as the requirements of the situation. Of the American Federation of Labor locals in the city, only a handful (23 of them). With isolated exceptions, the balance of the organizations present were those in which the Communists have already gained predominance. When it is considered that the ravages of the crisis, plus the treacherous passivity of all the reformist leaders and the exclusive position occupied by the Communists in leading whatever militant fight for unemployment relief there has been in this country, it will be seen that the representation at Sunday's conference was far below the vast possibilities at hand for the mobilization of a strong fighting movement. The very fact that the meagre response can be said by the Daily Worker to have "exceeded the best expectations of the Committee", is only an indication of the extent to which the sectarian policies of the official party in the past period have isolated it from the bulk of the workers and their organizations.

This phase of the Conference may be summed up in the following observation: To the extent that the representation from non-Communist organizations was small in comparison with what it should and could have been, its size is to be attributed to the "Third Period" antics of the past, the elimination of the united front, the ultimatum policy of the party, as well as to the inadequacy of the turn made in the recent Chicago united front and at the present Conference. To the extent that non-Communist participation "exceeded the best expectations" it is due to the turn made in dropping the idiotic verbiage about "social fascism" and approaching the standpoint on the Leninist united front which the Left Opposition has sought to drill into the mind of the party for the past few years.

Our Reservations Justified

The fact that the turn was made, and while still defective, was nevertheless made in the right direction, could not fail to bring it the endorsement of the Left Opposition. At the same time, however, all the shortcomings and dangers already perceptible at the first stages of the party's turn—which we pointed out from the very beginning as factors which made it impossible for the Opposition to accord the turn an unreserved endorsement—were obtrusively present at the very first Conference in New York.

The keynote of the Conference was struck by the Committee representative who opened the meeting, Bordman, and by the Committee chairman, Weinstein, who made the general report for the hand-picked credentials committee. The burden of their appeal was the need of presenting to the legislature soon to convene in Albany a program for "unemployment insurance and other labor legislation". The burning problem of connecting with the fight for unemployment insurance, the demands for immediate relief, the six-hour day and five-day week without pay reduction, and long-term credits to the Soviet Union—this was not dealt with at all by either of the two spokesmen before the Conference. Anxious to get as far away as possible from yesterday's "fight for the streets", of the "Third Period", the speakers sedulously avoided any reference to the need of mass pressure from the workers in the attainment of their demands. The whole program of action outlined by them slithered down to the presentation of a petition to the capitalist legislators assembled at the Capitol. With not a single word did these two Communists—who apparently think that the way to function in the trade union movement is to cease acting and fighting like Communists—emphasize the danger of entertaining any illusions about what could be obtained by "petitioning the legislature", or the limits necessarily set by a parliamentary campaign. They neither drew a clear line of demarcation between their program of action and the pernicious "lobbying system" of the A. F. of L. and the Socialists, nor did they stress the quintessential importance of organized action by the masses to force concessions from the ruling class and its government.

Against the tendency towards parliamentary opportunism already visible in the party's half-turn, proved to be more than well-founded. The straining towards "respectability" was positively painful. In an overwhelming Communist assembly, the party members and apparently been instructed to adhere strictly to the solemn ritual of avoiding the term "comrade" and addressing each other as "brother" and "sister", obviously for the sole purpose of impressing the half-dozen or less "pure and simple" A. F. of L. delegates present with the fact that the sponsors of the Conference were beyond reproach or the suspicion of being connected in any way with the "Reds".

Socialist Workers Absent

The same game of hide-and-seek was played by the party in the selection of the chairman. The call for the conference, while saying nothing about "so-

(Continued on page 2)

Com. Cannon's Speech

Comrades and Fellow-workers:

In the limited time allotted for speech from the floor it is naturally impossible to deal adequately with the whole problem which has brought us into conference here today. I will therefore confine myself to some of the most salient points which must be considered in connection with our next steps on the road to a broader movement and a more effective struggle. Permit me to refer you to the mimeographed copies of the statement and resolutions of the Communist Left Opposition which have been distributed to the delegates. In this material you will find a more thorough elaboration of the program and tactics which the Bolshevik-Leninists advocate than I will be able to present orally in my limited time.

The conference here today represents a step forward in the direction of a united struggle of the workers against the unbearable burdens of the crisis. The tendency towards such a union of forces in the fight constitutes, from our point of view, the progressive feature of this conference. For it is only when the workers of various organizations and political trends are welded together in a common front that real blows can be directed against the class enemy on the great class issue of unemployment. When this union of forces is lacking, when the comparatively small groups of the workers' vanguard take the field alone and fight as isolated detachments, the blows fall heaviest on them, the class enemy remains unshaken and the masses of the workers gain no advantages.

To the extent that the present conference signifies a progressive step toward the united front struggles of the workers, we, of the Left Opposition, declare our readiness to give hearty support to the movement and to work loyally for its advancement.

Broader Base Necessary

The invitation to the branches of the Socialist Party, to the trade union locals of the A. F. of L. and similar conservative organizations means in itself and can only mean a recognition of the fact that the unemployed issue is not an issue of any party, tendency or group, but rather an issue of the class. This is the only way to present the question and to lay the groundwork for a real struggle. But this step in itself remains uncompleted. The roll call of the delegation bears eloquent testimony to this fact. Between the aspirations of the committee which called the conference and the workers' organizations actually represented there is an enormous gap. From this we do not conclude that the calculations of the committee were wrong or that the aspirations to draw the reformist and even the reactionary organizations into the joint struggle are without foundation.

No. We only have to conclude that the step taken toward this end must be followed by others. The tactics of the united front as Lenin laid them down, and as they have been verified by experience on an international scale, must be unfolded in their full scope. It is not sufficient to invite the branches of the Socialist party and the local unions of the A. F. of L. to join us in a common fight. To be sure that is something. By such an invitation we recognize the fact that the workers in these organizations also suffer from the plague of unemployment and that it is quite possible for them to join in a fight for a program of immediate demands even while they remain reformist and conservative in their political views, even while they retain membership in organizations representing these political currents. That is the beginning of wisdom on the question of the united front.

But it is by no means the whole of it. The fact remains that these workers in the reformist and reactionary organizations who have good cause and very probably a real will to fight against the scourge of unemployment are not ready to break with their organizations and are not convinced that their leaders who talk against the evils of unemployment no less than we do, do not mean what they say. They are not ready to break with their leaders at the present moment and to respond to appeals over the heads of their official leadership and their respective central organizations. This is the situation as it exists in reality, and not in somebody's imagination. The problem is to base ourselves on this reality and find the way to draw these workers into the common struggle with us in spite of that. For this we must have recourse to the political wisdom of Lenin who has taught us how to do it. For this we must have recourse to the genuine tactics of the united front.

The appeal to the Socialist party branches of greater New York brought a response from one single branch which is represented here alone—and even that branch is located outside the metropolitan territory. The appeal to the A. F. of L. locals brought a mere handful of delegates and even these, in almost every case, come from locals already under the influence of the Left wing. Do not shut your eyes to these facts, comrades. Let us not delude ourselves with the idea that we have a united working-class front. For that we must have a large section of the workers who are absent here today. If we proceed from the point of view of the committee that the workers generally, regardless of their political views and their affiliations, want to struggle against unemployment—and I think this is the correct point of view—then we ought to ask ourselves why they have not responded to the call.

And if we face the problem clearly, we will have to say that the fault lies not with the workers but rather with the manner in which they were approached. By ignoring the central organizations, by ignoring the official leadership of the reformist and conservative organizations, the committee unfortunately gave these treacherous leaders all the ground they needed to excuse themselves before their own membership for their failure to participate.

Moreover it put the locals and branches of these organizations before the problem of acting over the heads of their official leadership and their official bodies. If you understand something of the mechanics of organization you will recognize that this is an untimely demand. The reformist workers take their organizations seriously, no less perhaps than we do. They do not act over the head of their official in-

(Continued on page 4)

International Workers School

AMERICAN LABOR LEADERS
The Movements and the Men
A Series of 8 Popular Lectures on American Labor History and Its Outstanding Personalities

by

JAMES P. CANNON

FEE. 12—TERENCE V. POWERLY

The "Grand Master Workman" of the Knights of Labor.

FEE. 19—SAMUEL GOMPERS

The Labor Lieutenant of the Capitalist Class.

FEE. 26—ALBERT PARSONS

The Haymarket Martyrs and the Eight Hour Movement.

MAR. 5—EUGENE V. OEBES

The Socialist Agitator—The American Railway Union and After.

MAR. 12—DANIEL DE LEON

The Socialist Theoretician.

MAR. 19—WILLIAM D. HAYWOOD

Industrial Unionism, the Western Federation of Miners and the I. W. W.

MAR. 26—SIDNEY HILLMAN

"Business Efficiency" in the Betrayal of the Workers.

MAR. 2—WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

The Blight of Stalinism.

Single Lectures—15 Cents

One Dollar for the Course.

SUNDAY 8 P. M.

126 East 16th Street

Nazis, Cops Provoke CPG

Von Schleicher Uses Fascists to Bolster Bonapartist Regime

On Sunday, January 22, tens of thousands of Fascists made a demonstration in Germany. In clashes with workers and Communists one worker was killed and a hundred were wounded. According to the press the occasion was the anniversary of the death of a Fascist killed in an assault upon workers. Touching sentimentality! The Kaiser sent a wreath of flowers to lay upon the grave.

Had the demonstration for this sort of human rubbish been part of the usual Fascist tinsel of bluster and burlesque pomp it could have been set down as another item in the ledger of the working class account with these agents of capitalist reaction, to be settled in full and forever by the proletarian revolution. But there are aspects of the demonstration that mark it as an event of great significance for the German and international working class and its vanguard.

In Berlin the Fascists invaded the heart of the proletarian districts to assemble in front of Communist party headquarters. Alone the Fascists would not have dared the anger of the workers. But the Fascists were "guarded" by the largest police mobilization ever made in Berlin. This was a sinister united front between the Fascist hordes and the Bonapartist police. This fact gave the demonstration a character of the highest political significance. It was not a memorial meeting at all, but an enormous provocation of the workers' vanguard. Under the circumstances the party correctly refused to be drawn. That is to its credit.

In the mind of every worker questions will arise: Why was the party not able to arouse the masses of workers to resist this hostile demonstration in its stronghold? Why could it not call on the socialist democratic workers to join with it against their common foe? The knowledge of its ability to do so would have made the demonstration in red Berlin impossible.

To ask the questions is to hint at

OPEN FORUM

REPORT OF THE PROGRESSIVE TRADE UNIONS CONFERENCE AT GILLESPIE, ILLINOIS

Speaker:

J. P. CANNON

now in Illinois Coal Fields

Friday, February 3, 1933

126 East 16 Street,

ADMISSION: 15c

Auspices:

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America

(Opposition)

(Continued on page 4)

Letters from Militants

Twenty-two P. M. A. Miners Framed

TAYLORVILLE, ILL.—

The working class is again on trial in a county called Christian. Twenty-two members of the Progressive Miners of America will stand trial March 13 on a murder charge, growing out of the Kincaid battle of two weeks ago when Emma Cumerlatto, an Auxiliary member, and two Peabody strike-breakers were killed and 18 others wounded.

In an atmosphere that smells notoriously Peabody, our fellow workers are being held like convicts of old behind dismal walls that have been constantly in service for the Insull Empire since the beginning of the strike struggle against the scab-herding United Mine Workers of America.

The Christian county grand jury has rendered murder indictments against the backbone of the midland strike movement. Besides the 22 charged with murder, there are 32 others charged with unlawful assembly and inciting to riot. The names of others are being suppressed by the court. The suppression is, no doubt, to be used as a club over an active striker's head.

Bills charging murder were reported against the following persons:

Albert Mattozo, Kincaid Chief of Police Nick Passa
Fred Bassano
Vincent Calza
Emilio Vitali
Ferdinand Patterozzi
Walter Lusebrink
Emil Dupire

Other charges have been placed against the victims. 10 of the 22 indicted on the most serious charges are already held in the Christian county jail without bond. Defense attorneys have been employed by the Progressive Miners of America to defend the miners.

The case developed from the gun fight that took place between striking coal miners and Peabody guards, when the latter attempted to disperse a group of pickets that had formed along the sidewalks of the mining town of Kincaid. The guards approached the miners with guns in their hands and white banners tied around their arms, as an identification mark to prevent their side from shooting at them.

The Peabody guards were the aggressors in this fight as they have been in many other struggles that have taken place in the strike-torn region.

Thugs Terrorize Miners

It developed, however, that in the melee that took place the striking miners properly defended themselves and for once the Peabody guards got the worst of the fray. In retreating the thugs sniped Mrs. Emma Cumerlatto as she was opening the door of her home to save her husband from the wild shooting.

Vincent Rodens, formerly a national guard, now employed by Peabody as a guard, died as a result of wounds. The following morning James Guy Hickman, imported from West Virginia, was killed as he shot at the relief station of the Progressive Miners of America in Kincaid.

Immediately following the battle the Peabody gunmen, backed by members of the national guards, began a reign of terror. Relief stations were smashed; women and men were dragged from their homes and beaten; striking miners were kidnapped and strike leaders were hounded for weeks. The blood lust of the Peabody Coal Company started one fight in which the miners did not bow like slaves before their master. W. C. August, general superintendent of the Peabody Coal Company, issued a statement that the scabs were unarmed. "They were helpless," he stated to the press. Yet in recent conferences it has been proved that strike-breakers have a checking room in wash houses where they store their guns before going into the pits.

Members of the Progressive Miners of America have been urging the formation of a defense committee to secure national attention on the cases that threaten to execute active members of the Progressive Miners of America. The formation of such a committee is under consideration.

GERRY ALLARD.

Stalinists Collaborate With Clergy, Millionaires

PHILADELPHIA.—

Because of our exposure of their shameful collaboration with the Greek clergy at the Greek meeting on Jan. 8th, the Empress placed the blame on the shoulders of the comrades of the Unemployed Committee of N. Y. City. In spite of this the Empress of Jan. 21st encouraged the Philadelphia Stalinists to undertake a united front with the semi-Fascist organization, Abegan, a priest of St. George Church, and a rival church which is controlled by a group of Greeks headed by the millionaires, Stefanou Brothers. This meeting coincided with the day of our lecture in Philadelphia. Many Greek workers whom I met upon my arrival suggested that we postpone the hour so they could be present.

This we did and went with the comrades to the Church where the meeting was taking place. There we were amazed to see the Stalinists guarding the gates of the church! Against whom were they on guard? Not against the bourgeoisie. They were supporting the meeting and were using again the services of the famous lackey, Savelarios (former editor of Empress whom we helped to remove), who still parades as a Communist thanks to the Stalinist regime of the party which covers every section committee that brought the charges. Of most significance was the vote of the jury. Seventeen vote for expulsion and eleven for probation. While most of the party members and YCLers voted for expulsion most of the members of the party-controlled organizations voted for probation. The audience was divided on this decision, not unlike the members of the jury.

To rid the working class of white chauvinism mass trials must not be made farces. What is needed is Communist education. This Leninist method, which is foreign to the Stalinist bureaucracy, must be revived.

—L. ROBERTS.

League Activities in Youngstown

On Sunday, January 8, the Youngstown Branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) held a lecture and discussion on "The Communist Party and the Left Opposition", at Central Auditorium, Youngstown. The meeting began at 2:30 P. M., with comrade Gordon presenting a brief outline of the history of the Bolshevik-Leninist Opposition in the Russian Communist Party. He followed this sketch of the Left Opposition's origin with a summary of the platform of the Opposition today, dealing with the question of the united front against Fascism in Germany, the betrayal of the Chinese Revolution and their problems confronting the Communist movement.

There was an interested audience of workers present—several members of the C. P., S. L. Pites, and a number of workers interested in Trotsky's position. The crowd totally forty, most of whom were very favorably impressed by our platform. A number of them asked very pertinent questions on the united front policy, and we were able to explain Lenin's tactic to workers who will ponder the questions seriously.

After a summary by comrade Gordon, in which he refuted the charges of Trotsky's having broken discipline and explained what Bolshevik discipline is, the meeting, and, consequently, we were able to make clear to all the workers present that despite our bureaucratic expulsion from the C. I., we remain the Left wing of the Communist International. The meeting was a success for the Opposition.

Bureaucrats Checked in I. L. D.

Recently several members of the Left Opposition, after repeated attempts, were finally admitted into the ILLD branch in Youngstown. This organization, like all the other Party organizations here, have been terribly run down by the Stalin regime, so that hardly a skeleton remains of its former self. Our comrades joined, declaring their willingness to exert every possible effort in helping to rebuild the workers' defense organization. They were sympathetically received by the membership at the first meeting they attended and one of their number was even elected to the Section Bureau.

The Party bureaucrats, alarmed by the progress of the Left Opposition, immediately set out to "rectify" this "mistake". To the next meeting they sent down a representative, a certain Lewis, who is not even a member of the organization, to "wipe out" the Trotskyites. Lewis took the floor without anybody's permission, denounced the Left Opposition, and declared that they had no place in the ILLD. This provocative action of the bureaucrats' representative naturally aroused the resentment of all the members present and after a brief struggle on the floor he was overruled and the meeting proceeded to its order of business.

The Left Oppositionists remained at their posts in spite of the bureaucrats' attack. We consider this, and not without cause, a victory for the Left Opposition and a defeat for the Stalinist bureaucrats. The utterly unfounded and slanderous accusations of Lewis—going so far as to call one of our comrades, without rhyme or reason, a "white chauvinist"—left a deeply negative impression on all those present. The Left Opposition will not be harried from its course and will continue its efforts to help build up the ILLD.

At a recent meeting a national reporter stated that in the course of the Scottsboro campaign all the other sections of the International Red Aid registered advance, only the American section—the ILLD—did not only did not gain, but even had to register losses. The foregoing example of bureaucracy as well as other examples to follow do much to illustrate the causes for such a sad state of affairs. The Youngstown branch, for instance, is small and weak. The bureaucrats, in a purely mechanical manner, without consulting the membership, have proceeded to split up this branch into even smaller units and thereby to deprive it of whatever vitality the ILLD has left here. Naturally, every serious worker, not to mention every serious Communist, has to oppose such a reckless tactic and to fight for the preservation of the single branch up to a point where it will be so strengthened that it can only gain by expanding into more numerous units.

Another example of bureaucracy: applications for membership are passed, by the membership, but by the section bureau, without the membership having any say in the matter! The same holds true for expulsions, appointments and removals! It is no wonder then, that the initiative of the membership is thereby altogether deadened and such results as loss in membership are not at all surprising. The Left Opposition here, as elsewhere, will have as one of its first tasks in helping to pull our movement out of the rut: raising the initiative of the membership—in the case of the ILLD—by throwing off the shackles of bureaucracy and reestablishing a regime of proletarian democracy.

H. S.

Report of Unemployed Conference

(Continued from page 1)

cial Fascists, did not address itself to the Socialist party or the A. F. of L. Such a turn-about face—demanded by the situation as well as by the elementary Leninist conception of the united front—was too much to expect from the Stalinist bureaucracy which only yesterday opposed any united front at all. The result naturally was that only the most advanced sections of the A. F. of L.—and comparatively few of them—responded to the call and the militants were deprived of the opportunity of pressing the A. F. of L. leaders to the wall on a concrete issue and revealing to the rank and file conservative workers what their leaders are worth. The same held true with regard to the Socialist party. The call was addressed to "locals of the Socialist party", thus making it unnecessary for the S. P. hierarchy to put themselves on record. Concrete results of this "united front below" of the second edition? One local of the Socialist party responded to the Conference, and not a local from the metropolitan area, but one of the least important groups—Huntington, Long Island. The rank and file of the socialist workers, who by and large feel as much attached to their organization as do the Communist workers to their party, responded just as coldly to the Sunday Conference call to the "locals of the S. P." as, let us say, the individual shop nuclei of the Communist party would respond to a "united front" appeal of the Socialists addressed to the "lower branches" of the Communist party. This simple fact, which does not require a course in the Moscow Lenin School to be comprehended (more accurately: only such a course is capable of rendering the student incapable of comprehension!) has not yet penetrated into the skulls of the Stalinist bureaucracy. If it has, they have thought the better of it in the interests of maintaining themselves in the international apparatus.

To make up for this mortifying failure to bring the socialist workers into the conference, the Conference directors elected as chairman the sole S. P. delegate from Huntington! This decorative trick—worthy of the intellectual level of a stage manager in a small-town theater which is short of appropriate scenery—was the Stalinist substitute for the united front proposed by the Left Opposition which would bring together into a militant movement not only the Communist but also the socialist workers.

In the invention of such two-faced tactics, the Conference stage-managers were inexhaustible. The call asked for the election of two delegates from every organization; but the call was meant for the Left Opposition. When the self-appointed credentials committee reported, its secretary proposed the unseating of one of the two delegates from the New York branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition), one of the two from the Young Spartacus Club, from the Unemployed Workers Club and from the Protomagia, the Greek workers' club sympathetic to the Left Opposition. Furthermore, James Gordon, unanimously elected by the cafeteria department of the Food Workers Industrial Union, was marked for the discard by the credentials committee. Finally, the Lovestonite youth group was to be unseated altogether, as were also two of the three delegates sent by the parent body.

"Brilliant Tactics"

The motivation for these unseatings was positively brilliant and worthy of the masterful strategist who conceived it. Where the central organizations—like the A. F. of L. or the S. P.—did not have delegates, it was explained, their local organizations were entitled to two apiece. But where the central organizations did send delegates—like the Communist party, the "Communist Oppositions", the Unemployed Councils they would be adequately represented by one delegate! Thus, the TUUL, with its how-many-thousands of members was given one delegate, while a carpenter's local of, let us say, a hundred or more members, was given two delegates. What could be fairer? Thus the Communist party, with Hathaway, its one official delegate (together with the dozens of Rubins, Winters, Benjamins, Neesins, and others from party-controlled auxiliaries), was on an "equal footing" with the Left Opposition or the Lovestonite group!

Protests against this ruling were voted down. Another ruling was that there shall be one speaker from each "trade" or "political" group. That is only one carpenter could speak at the conference; only one member of an Unemployed Council could speak; only "one" member of the Communist party could speak as a "Communist"; naturally, only one Left Oppositionist could speak; and let us not omit to mention that comrade James Gordon, the Oppositionist whom the bureaucrats just expelled from the party, could not speak at all because he was unseated on the grounds that the Executive Board of the Food Workers Industrial Union had sent a delegate, thus voiding the unanimous decision of the Cafeteria department to send its delegates. In this manner, Shachtman of the Left Opposition delegation, Carter of the Spartacus Youth Club, Bonanes from the Protomagia, and two Lovestonite delegates were required to leave the conference when it went into "executive session". With this ingenious tactical plan the Stalinists won the signal and decisive victory of ridding themselves of a handful of Oppositionists from the Conference, even if their pretensions to "respectability" made it extremely difficult to unseat us altogether. The motion of comrade William Kitt, of the Alternation Painters Union, to seat as fraternal delegates those whom the Stalinists proposed to exclude, was defeated by a show of hands, thus saving the American revolution, the Communist International and the Soviet Union.

This picaresque trick did not keep the Opposition from presenting its standpoint to the conference, just as little as the well-oiled maneuvers at the New York "anti-war" conference prevented us from making known our point of view.

Opposition Speaks

No sooner was the floor thrown open for discussion than comrade Cannon, representing the League, was up to the front of the room and ready to speak for the Opposition. A vigilant Stalinist promptly jumped up to propose a limitation of speaking time to seven minutes, which was adopted and to which comrade Cannon was held with laudable strictness! The Opposition had already issued a leaflet to the conference in which our point of view was set forth. In addition, we had handed out to every delegate a copy of the two resolutions which we presented to the conference for consideration. One dealt with the need of organizing immediately for a second conference on a broader basis to which would be invited not only local but central organizations, like the A. F. of L., the Socialist party, the Communist party and the independent trade unions. The other proposed a concrete and all-embracing program of action on unemployment which would go beyond the mere demand for an unemployment insurance bill and a parliamentary agitation front. All three documents are printed elsewhere in this issue, as is also the speech delivered by Cannon.

Our representative spoke on the resolution for a broader conference and expounded, for the first time in years before an audience composed overwhelmingly of Communist party members, the A. I. C. of the united front as outlined in the Communist International by Lenin and Trotsky. There was not only the closest attention paid to his remarks, and a complete absence of interruptions, but at the end of it there was a good round of applause. The presentation of our standpoint, in the resolutions and the speech, was a striking advance of the Left Opposition. The turn made by the party was in the direction we had been demanding for a long time and the apparatus men felt uncomfortable about the fact. By the very nature of things, the Opposition set the tone for the conference from the outset of the discussion.

The numerous party members who took the floor after Cannon, spoke generally in an agitational spirit, but none of them ventured to attack or abuse the Left Opposition in that contemptible routine manner which has always been the stock in trade of the Stalinists in their campaign against the Bolshevik-Leninists. Of considerable interest was the speech of one of the two Huntington S. P. delegates who referred to comrade Cannon: "I deny the assertion of the first speaker that the Socialist party is unwilling to fight for unemployment insurance and relief," he said. "It is necessary to use politics. The Labor party in England had unemployment insurance. In Germany and other countries the Socialist party got unemployment insurance for the workers. In Holland, they have good unemployment insurance. (All of which will be gratifying news to the German, British and Dutch workers!) I will conclude with the hope that we will support the Socialist party—but we must not fight amongst ourselves." The Communist delegates carefully refrained from disputing the illusions of the socialist delegate. Like him, they were anxious "not to fight amongst ourselves"—which they understand to mean the concealment of the Communist point of view.

Stalinist Confusion

The Negro delegate from the Carpenters' Union, comrade Moore, opposed the Opposition's resolution and offered a sorry example of Stalinist mis-education. "Don't waste time on the leaders of these organizations," he urged, referring to the S. P. and the A. F. of L. "The rank and file are with us". The only trouble with his assertions was that they were, unfortunately, not true. It was and is precisely because the rank and file are not yet "with us" that the revolutionists must "waste time on the leaders" and organizations whom the masses still follow.

Among the delegates who did support our viewpoint was comrade Dreyer, of the Pharmacists Union, who called our resolution the only united front proposal made along the line of Lenin's teachings. His speech is not even mentioned by the Daily Worker, it does, however, mention the "fact" that the Left Opposition "did not have a single worker representative of organizations outside of themselves". Not only were we supported by the Spartacus Youth Club, the Unemployed Workers Club and the Protomagia, but also by such delegates as Dreyer of the Pharmacists, Bill Kitt of the Alternation Painters Union, William Hermann of the Carpenters Local 2090, Henry Stone of the Technical Men's Union, and a couple of delegates from the International Labor Defense. Out of a total of 90 delegates, Cannon received 18 votes as candidate for the resolutions committee, with the highest vote cast for a candidate standing in at all.

The Lovestonite delegate, Lifschitz, spoke in favor of the united front, and Weisbord, representing his group, announced his support of Cannon's argument for a new conference and a broad united front, adding that it did not "go far enough" because it did not propose to aim at a... general strike. All during this discussion, the representatives of the official party were silent, apparently not greatly concerned with our intervention on the grounds that "we have the votes anyway; let them talk". But at the end of the discussion, the floor was taken by the "sole" representative of the party, Hathaway. He took his place in the division of labor arranged for by the steering committee which he directed. The Communist workers and militants who did not directly represent the party, were allotted the task of speaking like trade unionists—not as Communist trade unionists but as "respectable" trade unionists! The "pure Communist" standpoint was to be presented solely by the official party spokesman. Thus, while the bulk of the speeches made by the Communist militants could have been made without much difficulty by a somewhat advanced representative of the A. F. of L. school, "comrade" (not brother, or sister) Hathaway took care to maintain appearances by telling the audience not to "think that the legislature will give anything it is not forced to give". "We have to reject," he added, "the proposal of Cannon as a proposal to delay." What Hathaway meant was that the movement had to orient itself—not on the mobilization of the widest section of the working class, but on the legislative calendar at Albany. In this single sentence, Hathaway revealed that aside from a few formally radical phrases about "relying" on the legislatures, his viewpoint differed in no serious degree from the vulgar parliamentary opportunism with which the speeches of the other party-instructed delegates were drenched.

Genuine United Front Rejected

The proposal to "invite the leaders", as he put it, was also rejected by Hathaway because, you see, they are sabotaging the fight; Hathaway only neglected to point out that the workers still following these leaders by the millions, are not yet aware of the sabotage, unless Hathaway believes either that nobody of importance is following them or that they are being followed because they sabotage the interests of their followers.

In any case, it is interesting to note that Hathaway refrained from the customary slanders about our "counter-revolutionism".

The resolutions committee report proposed that all the delegates present constitute themselves as the provisional committee for the Albany state-wide conference. As to the resolutions we submitted, the committee found itself obliged to borrow virtually all our concrete demands. Instead of confining the movement to social insurance, the program now included the demand for immediate relief, and for the shorter work day, without, however, specifying the six-hour day and five-day week. The only one of our proposals not incorporated by the committee was the one dealing with credits to the Soviet Union. Our resolution for a broader conference was rejected without a single political argument being presented against it. The cornered Stalinists merely argued that there were only six weeks left until the legislature convened, and they were so anxious to be on time to meet it that they would not be able to find time in which to call a wide united front conference to precede it!

Yet, so demoralized were the Stalinists, caught in the contradictions inherent in the half-heartedness of the turn, of its inadequacy and one-sidedness, that upon Weisbord's motion that the central bodies—the A. F. of L., the S. P., the

(Continued on page 4)

LEON TROTSKY

History of the Russian Revolution

PUBLISHERS PRICE

Vol. One Vol. Two Vol. Three

$4.00 $3.50 $3.50

Send All Orders Immediately To

POSTAGE 20c PER VOLUME Extra

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

OUR PRICE

$3 per Volume

$9 the Boxed Set

84 East 10th Street, New York

Confusion Marks Stalinist Policy on Fight Against War

Student Conference Compromises Communism in Chicago Edition of Amsterdam; Yield Principled Positions

The Student Congress held in Mandel Hall, University of Chicago, on December 26th and 27th, gave further testimony to the political revision invoked upon the Communist movement by Stalinism. The congress signified that the struggle against imperialist war and militarism was the task not of the Communists and revolutionary workers, but of the students. The progenitor of this gathering was the Amsterdam Congress held in Brussels in the summer of 1932. For that occasion, the International Left Opposition presented an extremely sharp criticism of the present regime in the Communist International, because it turned the struggle against war over to an arbitrarily appointed group of pacifists, liberals, poets, musicians, artists, actors and what not, removing this decisive activity from the hands of the Communist International, and its sections.

Over the question of the war the working class movements during the war-years split. The culmination of years of political and theoretical struggle in the 2nd International came at the outbreak of the war when the leading party in the 2nd International, the German Social Democratic Party, voted for war credits. That action was a signal for the other Socialist Parties to follow suit. With each section of the Socialist International supporting its own fatherland, the doom of Social Democracy as the leader of the revolutionary proletariat was sealed. Out of the background of this collapse, rose the international Left wing which was later to form the Communist International. The attitude toward the war in particular, and militarism in general, was the burning question in those trying days, and upon which the attitude, the political fate of the movement depended.

Upon the experiences of the world war, the Communist International in its early years set for itself the task of clarifying the great confusion of that time and made clear to the revolutionary movement that the struggle against war is one of the chief tasks of the Communists. It must at all times carry out a systematic agitation and propaganda against war. The ranks of the army must be penetrated by the Communists. In the event of war the aim of the Communists must be set upon transforming the imperialist war into a civil war. Upon concrete issues the Communists must initiate united front movements of the working class and its organizations against war and militarism. But above all do not entrust the struggle against war, to pacifists, to liberals, to the socialists, the petty-bourgeoisie or other such groupings. Unless the Communists direct the struggle against war, that struggle will in the end result in betrayal. Wasn't that the lesson of experience? Certainly! International pacifism, international social-democracy, international liberalism, betrayed the masses and came to the support of the imperialist conflicts. That is why it is all-important that in organizing united front movements against war, political policy must be absolutely correct. It is impossible to unite on the basis of an "agreement" on program with other political groupings. The basis for united front action is the concrete situation—but the Communists at no time surrender their political aims, modify them or alter them in the interests of forming united front action. That is why the Fourth Congress of the Young Communist International found it necessary to declare:

"The Young Communist International and the Young Communist Leagues, in close connection with the Party and paralleled with the struggle against bourgeois militarism and the danger of new imperialist wars must carry on a SPECIAL AGITATION, PROPAGANDA AND EDUCATION FOR THE INEVITABILITY OF THE CIVIL WAR, THE NECESSITY FOR MILITARY PREPARATION AND THE ARMING OF THE PROLETARIAT AND THE RIGHT TO DEFEND THE PROLETARIAN REVOLUTION BY FORCE OF ARMS, THAT IS TO SAY THE CREATION OF THE ARMED PROLETARIAN POWER, THE RED ARMY."

Not any artificially created organizations have the task of carrying on the general struggle against war, not the pacifists, or the liberals, but the Communists. Isn't that clear? The Communists do not conceive of war as an abstract issue but understand it as a product of the economic order of capitalism. The elimination of war and militarism will come about with the abolition of capitalism. Thus the struggle against war as an integral part of capitalism must be unified with the general social system and its replacement with Communism.

The Amsterdam Congress marked a departure from Communist principles. The Communist International, instead of organizing and leading the struggle against war, turned this task over to Barbuse, Rolland, Patel and others. Officially the Communist International was represented at the Congress. But the actual organization, of the Congress, its political program, its direction, was in the hands of an arbitrarily selected group who in reality represented nobody. Is it any wonder that the ripples created by Amsterdam have now settled to a dead calm? Confusion marked the program of that Congress. Genuine issues making necessary the existence of such a congress were not fully blossomed. The Congress in Amsterdam only succeeded in creating confusion on the question of the struggle against war. The Communists hid behind the veil of the congress.

How does the further confusion of Amsterdam take place? It took place in the form of the organization of the American Committee against War, another arbitrarily selected committee of elements akin to those who organized the Amsterdam Congress. And just as the Amsterdam Congress not only formally but actually replaces the C. I. and YCL, as the organization to lead the struggle against war and militarism, so the American Committee against War, accomplishes the same end nationally. It was also, on the basis of a cable from the Amsterdam Congress, that the National Students League initiated the movement for the Student Congress Against War. Building upon the experience of Amsterdam and the American Committee Against War, the NSL arbitrarily organized a National Committee for the Student Congress Against War composed of a variety of elements representing numerous political views ranging from pacifism to Communism, but actually representing no organizations or members. It was this committee that organized and directed the congress. But behind this committee, as behind Amsterdam and the American Committee, stood the Communist party and the Young Communist League. Official Communism hid once more behind the cloak of a "National Committee". And so we witnessed again the spectacle of the Communists turning over the struggle against war to semi-Communists, pacifists, liberals, and anti-Communists. But what is outstanding in relation to this affair, is that for the first time since the organization of the C. I. and YCL, we are made to understand that the struggle against war and militarism is to be carried out this by the students, divorced from the working class and the class struggle.

Paying lip-service to the contrary, means nothing. The fact is that the first organized attempt to build an anti-war movement was turned over to the students. It is necessary to analyze this further. But before that, one other observation is necessary. Stalinism, which rejects the united front tactic as originated at the third and fourth congresses of the Comintern, and so much insisted upon by the Left Opposition, on the basis that they could not "unite with leaders", "but only from below", betrays itself on the question of war. Here of all places, the "united front from below" is completely forgotten and what does take place is a united front purely from the top, with individual and isolated leaders of various movements, without contact or control by the workers. It is but another instant of Stalinist zig-zags.

The advanced student in capitalist countries represents socially and ideologically the ruling class. The percentage of proletarian students is extremely small. Students do not play an independent role in the class struggle and for the most part they support capitalism and become its intellectual leaders. As a mass the students are reactionary. Only small sections of the students can be won to Communism or to the support of the proletariat. But under no circumstances can the students independently engage in struggle let alone lead any struggle against capitalism. That is the view that dominated the Young Communist International, at its inception. (At a future date the writer will present for discussion an article on the role of the student and National Student League). It is the task of the Communists to win support of the small minority of proletarian students and draw them into the struggle. That activity belongs to the Young Communist League. But what happened is that the student movement initiated the anti-war movement, gave it its leadership and only succeeded in realizing what Amsterdam has: confusion.

If our analysis of the student is correct (that analysis coincides with the resolution of the Young Communist International adopted at its 2nd congress) then it was utterly false to transfer the anti-war work into the hands of the students. Actually in relation to the youth, this task is one of the chief activities of the Young Communist League, which embodies in itself the glorious traditions of the world youth movement during the war days. But here again, following the logic of Amsterdam, the YCL, which should have initiated the movement was nowhere to be seen. It was not even represented at the congress. It was afraid to take the congress with Communism. "Keep it pure" was the slogan, because the aim is to win the pacifists and liberals! That is how the pre-congress period looked. The students were organizing the movement against war and militarism!

Let us examine briefly the pre-congress period. First of all, a burning concrete issue was absent. Therefore the congress took on the character of a united front (among students!) for the drawing up of a program in the struggle against war. When it is understood that the whole affair was initiated by the Communists, the criminal nature of the understanding becomes clear. The working youth was not invited to the congress thereby cutting off all relations between the students and the workers. That was criminal act number two. In an effort to win the pacifists and liberals the call for the congress was addressed in the vaguest terms. What is more the congress call was false. It raised the cry for a struggle against war without specifying what kind of war. In popularizing the congress, the Soviet Union and its defense was not even mentioned. So close a sympathizer to the Communist movement as Carl Haessler, in speaking for the congress at one of the colleges in Chicago, did not mention the Soviet Union and its defense. When confronted with objections by members of the Spartacus Youth Club, he replied that if he were to do that it would drive the non-Communists away from the congress. Such and more marked all the activities of the NSL. The Young Communist League remained ignominiously silent during this whole period.

It was on one of the above mentioned situation that the Spartacus Youth Club in Chicago issued two statements, one addressed to the National Students League and the other to the YCL, outlining our criticisms of the congress preparative and proposing the necessary changes. These statements were well received by the rank and file. The leadership, however, attempted to edge out from under the criticism with charges of "Leftism" and "sectarianism". The proposal to invite working class youth organizations to the congress, made by a member of the Spartacus Youth Club at a meeting of the high school division of the NSL, was defeated by the vote of members of the YCL. It was to be a pure student gathering and the organizers made sure in advance that it would be tainted by delegates representing workers organizations.

The nature of the congress becomes clear. Its composition was woeful. There gathered some five or six hundred students. A majority represented the NSL, some socialists and pacifists, and a great number individual students. The agenda of the Congress was an un-serious one. For a Congress that was to take up the question of how the students should struggle against war, to work up a program and resolutions, one day was allotted to speeches by Communists, pacifists, and socialists. The various speeches did not help to clarify those gathered. At best confusion became more confused. On the evening of the first day, study classes were held on various questions relating to war and militarism, directed by Communists, pacifists and socialists. And mind you, this was a congress. On the second day the practical questions of how to struggle against war, the resolutions, the election of the executive was to take place. Quite understandably, the proceedings the second day were rushed through with such speed that it was impossible for the delegates to actually assimilate its deliberations.

On the opening day of the congress the Spartacus Youth Club distributed a statement expressing the views of the Opposition youth on the congress and making concrete proposals to it. In addition to this statement the declaration of the International Left Opposition to the Amsterdam Congress was distributed. The Opposition pointed out in the statement the false nature of the congress, its failure to unite with the working youth, confusion in program, the need to adopt a revolutionary position in the struggle against war, the error in attempting to organize a permanent anti-war organizations and called upon the Young Communist League to issue an invitation for a broad united front conference of working class organizations to struggle on concrete issues against war.

(To be continued)

—ALBERT GLOTZER.

Daily Worker Decries Promoter of the Amsterdam Congress

Out of the clear blue sky, we read the following comment under the "International Notes" written by "Robert Hamilton" in the Daily Worker of January 27, 1933: "H. G. Wells, noted British novelist, has been engaged in a war of words with the London Morning Post, in which he endeavors to play the honest pacifist. Strange words, indeed, for the author of the Outline of History! We recall this to warn workers of the two-faced pacifists such as H. G. Wells, who ten years after the World War shrieks his anti-war attitudes to the four winds, but keeps his mouth shut about the bombing of Iraq tribesmen and Hindu revolutionists, and who will whoop it up for murder again when the next imperialist conflict breaks out."

It would not be imagined from the violent tone of the Daily Worker that this is the first time that Wells has been endeavoring "to play the honest pacifist". Were "Robert Hamilton" to give the full story, it would prove to be an inconvenient revelation of the fact that only a few months ago, the whole international Stalinist press was not only engaged in a big publicity campaign for H. G. Wells and his kidney, presenting him to the militant workers as "honest pacifists" but also in helping the "two-faced pacifists" such as H. G. Wells to "shriek his anti-war attitudes to the four winds" through every megaphone the Comintern could put to his lips.

For Wells is one of the original signers of the Barbuse-Rolland-Stalin call for the notorious Amsterdam Congress which addressed itself to "all men and women of good will". While the Bolshevik-Levinists of the Left Opposition were virtually driven from the tribunes of the international and national "anti-war" conferences, the Wellses of every country were hailed by the Comintern apparatus and press as "honest pacifists", "sincere fighters against war", "reliable friends of the Soviet Union!"

The Comintern abused the Opposition for demanding that an open call be addressed to the social democratic and reformist trade union organizations for a united front against the war danger. "We will not unite with the treacherous leaders." But the "honest pacifist fighters"—with them they not only united and continue to delude—the class conscious workers with the idea that the miserable masquerade of Amsterdam was a powerful weapon of struggle against imperialist war. We of the Left Opposition, even under the hail of calumny, warned that the petty bourgeois literateurs, doctors, dentists, pacifists and generals without armies—represented nobody in particular and would add to the movement only deception and confusion. Wells is the first concrete example that the Stalinists themselves have been compelled to recognize—long after the fact and without any explanation. As a matter of fact, they "wisely" refrain from referring to Wells' co-initiation of the Amsterdam Congress. It would be a little... embarrassing.

If Wells is the first, there is no reason to think that he will be the last. The pamphlet recently issued on the Congress by the "American Committee", announces that among the delegates "two were French socialist members of the Chamber of Deputies, Hamon and Poupy; another was Nicole, editor of Travail, a Swiss socialist paper. These socialists as a group passed a resolution in which they stated: 'We decided to work zealously within our respective organizations to win them over for a united front against war, and for the defense of the Russian revolution...' Hamon and Poupy are still denpites; Poupy is even a member of the Permanent International Committee. As every two-year old child knows, France is the principal backer of Japan in its Manchurian adventure, and that in the most direct sense. What have Hamon and Poupy said in the Chamber of Deputies—to say nothing about what they have done among the masses outside the Chamber—concerning the piratical war Japan is conducting in Manchuria, and the role of French imperialism in it? To our knowledge—nothing!

And the Amsterdam Committee itself, what is it doing about the erupting volcano in Manchuria which threatens to engulf the East in a new world war? It is doing the maximum it is capable of doing: nothing! The movement which was conceived as a joint substitute for the Communist struggle against imperialist war and the united front of all the workers for action against the war danger—proves to be impotent and passive when confronted by the first situation that calls for action. The Amsterdam Committee does not act—it cannot. It does not even speak. And what could it say about so acute and unambiguous a situation as the Manchurian conflict, what proposals could it make that would harmonize with the views of the Communists on the one hand, and the H. G. Wellses, Henri Barbusses, General von Schoenaichs and Ala Nazimovas on the other?

What the Opposition once said about the Anglo-Russian Committee, holds good for the Amsterdam Committee: At the moment of real crisis (when deeds are required and not merely words), as the danger of war and attack upon the Soviet Union becomes more acute, this Committee will reveal either its silent impotence or—its treachery of the illusions it aroused, or more accurately, of the illusions which the Stalinists aroused in its name.

Before the Communists are presented with new shocks in the form of the sudden discovery of new "Jingo H. G. Wells" (as the Daily Worker now calls him), this whole monstrosity of Amsterdam must be removed from the scene. Before the road can be clear, the obstacles must be cast aside. The Amsterdam masquerade is such an obstacle. The Communists must start from the beginning again. At the very outset, the party must renounce the opportunistic idea of forming a permanent organization with non-Communist elements for the "leadership" in the movement to educate the workers about the struggle against its oppressors. That is the function of the party alone. But the party must take the initiative in the formation of a united front of all workers' organizations, the socialist parties and the trade unions included, for a joint struggle based upon a minimum program of action, concrete and clearly defined, and not going (i. e., attempting to go) beyond the strict limits within which such a united front is inevitably circumscribed.

—S.

JAPAN

Its Rise from Feudalism to Capitalist Imperialism and the Development of the Proletariat

By Jack Weber

Can there be any greater irony than that the Comintern, founded by Lenin and Trotsky, should urge the Japanese Communists to gain "legality" at any price, including the yielding of its own platform and program? What better object lesson is required of the extreme importance of maintaining unity of action through clarity of policy and unity of point of view—that is, through restriction of the membership of the Party to those advanced workers only, who accept Marxism and the Leninist concept of discipline—than the rich history of the Russian Bolshevik Party? And under what striking similarity of conditions! Yet history presented that irony in Japan as elsewhere. Fortunately the adventure proved in vain.

It is the function of the Party to utilize every vital activity of the proletariat to lead and direct the class along the road to power. In the light of its ultimate "illegal" revolutionary goal—the dictatorship of the proletariat—the Party demands democracy not for its own sake but for the political education of the masses, for their disillusioning with all reformist methods and objectives. The Party demands the "right" to propagate its own revolutionary platform and if this right jeopardizes democracy, so much the worse for democracy. The workers must fight for democracy, for legality of the Party, for reforms—but this struggle must never leave the masses in doubt as to the position of the Communists who, taking the objective conditions of the moment and their future trend into account, advance the interests of the working-class as a whole so as to strengthen the class for further struggle along the road to power. Even those Communist parties that have achieved legality never forget for a single instant that they may, under changing circumstances, be forced underground.

Universal suffrage was granted to the Japanese workers under the strong pressure of the masses. But it bore also a different character. It was used as a pawn by the bourgeois capitalists in an attempt to win over the workers and the petty bourgeoisie for a struggle against the militarists. The capitalists would prefer, if possible, peaceful penetration to outright conquest in China. But the struggle proved abortive, the capitalists were tied hand and foot to the war machine. Furthermore the internal crisis resolved the problem for the capitalist imperialists by its urgent demand for the most desperate remedies. Not in vain are the changes in the mode of production and in the productive forces the "shock factors" of historic development!

The moment universal suffrage was promised, in 1925, the militarists prepared carefully for any untoward eventualities. Baron Tanaka—the author of the Tanaka document—immediately resigned from the army and became president of the Seijukai Party. In the eyes of the military clique the situation called ed for a "strong" man, a Bonaparte. And Tanaka was groomed for the task at precisely the same moment and in precisely the same fashion as Marshal von Hindenburg (as President) in Germany. Tanaka became premier in the first elections held under universal suffrage, elections so tainted by fraud and corruption, so strongly controlled by acts of autocracy that to stifle the angry criticism of the masses a thousand workers and intellectuals were arrested under the frame-up of a nation-wide Communist plot. The Tanaka regime ended in scandals strikingly like those of the Harding administration in America.

The wily Japanese capitalists have made every effort to establish the two-party system in Japanese politics. The Seijukai may be compared with the English Tory party the Minseitō with the Whigs. Both parties are under complete boss control. The party platforms mean nothing, are much alike, in fact do not vary from election to election. The government connection with big business, plain enough in America, is far more open in Japan. The party leaders become directors of the South Manchuria Railroad, of steamship companies, etc. These leaders cannot reward their followers with government jobs as these are reserved for the bureaucracy under the military clique. Hence, the parties resort to a more open cash system. The cost of elections is far greater, owing to greater corruption, than in other countries, and elections are more frequent. Before the War it took more than 20,000 yen to elect a man to the Diet. Now it costs more. Each candidate pays one-half the requisite sum—the party the rest. Since four hundred are elected each time, party expenses are enormous, control falling naturally into the hands of the rich (as elsewhere). The pay in the Diet is small but bribery for concessions and purchases provide rich plums.

The workers have no illusions concerning the bourgeois parties whose history has been all too short to permit the use of those refined niceties of technique of the Western countries. The masses pin little faith in types like the first great "commoner", premier, Hara, who came to power after the Rice-Riots. This lawyer in the pay of the copper king, Furukawa, this liberal whose doctrines were expressed in his remark: "My platform is a blank sheet of paper. I can write upon it what I will", was the willing tool of the military in the Siberian adventure. It was Hara and his minister for Home Affairs, Tokonami (one of the worst suppressors of free speech and the press), who organized one of the largest of the thirty reactionary societies ready at all times to attack the workers. Despite his personal bodyguard, despite his great services in the interests of the ruling class, Hara was assassinated for the slight difference that existed between the interests of finance capital and those of the military clique the situation called

(Continued on page 4)

Our Club Plan MILITANT BUILDERS

THE THREE-IN-ONE REVOLVING FUND

Our campaign is not in full swing yet. Many are the comrades who failed to take advantage of the club plan and the Paid Sub Cards. What can be achieved by taking advantage of the club plan is shown by the New York comrades by whom fifty-two subs out of a total of sixty-one have been turned in since the beginning of this drive. There are a number of sympathizers who have invested a couple of dollars in Paid Sub Cards and after selling them re-invest the money in additional sub cards. This creates revolving fund of $2 per comrade-investor, helps the Militant financially and extends its circulation. This is the best way of keeping money in circulation, at the same time increasing the circulation of the Militant.

THE RECORD BY CITIES

New York	61
Chicago	36
Minneapolis	22
Pittsburgh	16
Philadelphia	15
Montreal	15
Toronto	10
Boston	10
New Castle, Pa.	8
Lynn, Mass.	5
South Bend, Ind.	5
St. Louis	4
Des Moines	4
Youngstown	4

That up-and-coming sub-getter from the local environs has done it. He has crashed through to first place. Is he going to stay there? What do you say, comrade Vomas? And you, comrade Nash? And what has the Chicago Friends of the Militant Club to say? And all our other comrades? If he's going to stay there make him do some lively stepping to keep his place.

H. Capella	14
Chicago Friends of the Militant Club	12
P. Vomas	12
H. Nash	12
B. Morgenstern	8
V. R. Dunne	8
J. Weber	7
W. Krehm	6
A. Joel	6
A. Ross	6
L. Basky	5
C. Ingram	5
H. A.	4
M. Hudson	4
F. Rayburn	4
M. Gottlieb	4
J. Hamilton	4
W. Konikow	4
O. Coover	4
S. Lessin	4
J. Sifakis	4
E. McMillen	4
A. Miller	4
G. Drucker	4
J. Ritz	4
M. Koehler	4
J. Ruby	4

BOUND VOLUMES of the MILITANT

OLD FORMAT

from
Vol. 1, No. 1 to Vol. 4, No. 12
Nov. 15, 1928—June 15, 1931
71 Issues

$10

NEW FORMAT

from
Vol. 4, No. 13 to Vol. 5, No. 51
July 4, 1931—Dec. 31, 1932
70 Issues

$5

Order from
THE MILITANT
126 East 16th Street,
New York City

AN APOLOGY

The burning importance of the New York United Conference on Unemployment made it necessary for us to carry over to next week the material we had planned to run in this issue on Lenin, Liebknecht and Luxemburg.

THE MILITANT

Entered as second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition)
at 126 East 16th St., N. Y.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabeck

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1933
Vol. 6, No. 4 Whole No. 1

Conference Report

(Continued from page 2)

Workmen's Circle and so forth—be invited to the Albany conference, the resolutions committee stated that this is what they had intended to do in any case, and when it was put to a vote, it was carried by a majority! Thus, on paper at least, the "united front from below" was rejected. It is most likely that the adopted motion will remain on paper. It involves too much of a blow at the party bureaucracy and its ever-changing policies to have much chance of being carried out seriously in practice.

From the whole course of the conference, it is clear that the party is in the midst of a serious turn-about-face, forced upon it by the increasing misery of the masses, the bankruptcy of its previous line of policy, and the incessant hammer-blows of Left Opposition criticism. Nor can there be any doubt that the turn is also the result of pressure from the party ranks which have been disturbed and disoriented with the policy of sectarianism and ultimatum which proved so sterile for the movement. That the turn is inadequate, that it is rendered far less effective than it should be, was also demonstrated clearly by the New York conference. The retention of yesterday's ultra-Leftism with regard to "no united front with the leaders or the organizations" continues to be a heavy anchor preventing the movement from advancing with the necessary power and speed. The combination with this feature of the turn of the opportunistic, parliamentary twist that has been incorporated into it, contains a grave danger for tomorrow. The Centrist bureaucracy, which swings between ultra-Leftism and a Right wing policy, is quite capable of dragging the promising movement into a stinking parliamentary swamp. In this respect, it has not changed fundamentally from the days when it worked in unbreakable harmony with Purcell and Chiang Kai-Shek. And that is what must be guarded against with the utmost vigilance.

Not only was the confused nature of the party's leadership of the present movement strikingly shown at the conference (opposition to "united front with leaders", but adoption of Weisbord's last motion, to give one example) but it was clear that the Stalinists have not thought out what their next step will be. To neglect this factor in any movement, is fatal. The function of a revolutionary leadership is to make a thorough analysis of the situation at hand in the light of past experiences; and on the basis of it to forecast the line of development for the next period; to think out problems and programs to the end; and to drive consciously and clearly-headed along the right course. This the party leadership has done at no stage of the struggle. It is incapable of doing it. It is the task of the Opposition to stand unflinchingly by its

INTERNATIONAL WORKERS SCHOOL NOTES

At the conclusion of his course in the History of the Third International comrade Shachtman will begin one in the Principles of the Left Opposition. Comrades interested in following the course from out of town should get in touch with comrade Weber, the administrator who will supply outlines and a list of reference works.

Such a syllabus on the Fundamentals of Communism drawn up by comrade Oehler is available.

The class in Elementary Communism by comrade Abern is proceeding smoothly.

Pioneer Publishers will supply all the literature required by the courses of the International Workers School.

The Case of Chas. Yale Harrison

We have received a copy of the statement sent out by Mr. Charles Yale Harrison, the author, announcing his resignation from the editorial board of the New Masses in protest against the treatment accorded to comrade Trotsky's daughter, Zinaida, which led to her suicide. The malicious attempt of the Daily Worker to link Mr. Harrison with the Left Opposition makes it necessary for us to state that there is not the slightest connection between the two.

Moreover, the whole tone and content of Mr. Harrison's statement reveals so clearly the unbridgeable chasm between him and the revolutionary Left Opposition that only the hirelings of the Daily Worker's staff could impute to us any association with the author in question. That reactionaries or petty bourgeois "sympathizers" with the movement have taken advantage, from time to time, of the disputes within the proletarian movement to air their own particular prejudices or anti-working class views, is all too well known. In the present instance, the revolting persecution of our deceased comrade Zinaida, purely in the interests of Stalin's thirst for personal vengeance upon Trotsky, brought upon the bureaucratic regime the flaming protests of proletarian revolutionists. The bureaucracy was also laid open to hypocritical chidings from the enemy camp, especially from the bourgeois press, which shed some crocodile tears in the hope that they would wipe out the fact that every single day the bourgeoisie of the capitalist world adds new murders of working class fighters to its bloody record.

The Left Opposition, and the revolutionary workers it continues to draw to its banner, will settle accounts with the rude and disloyal bureaucracy, stamped with the brand of Cain, without any of the unskilled assistance of elements alien to the genuine proletarian movement.

policy, which is verified over and over again by the events of every day, and to fight for its victory in the ranks of the Communist vanguard. The New York conference showed again that the Opposition is fulfilling its task.

—MAX SHACHTMAN.

Resolutions Presented to the N. Y. Conference

(Continued from page 1)

(Introduced at the Unemployment Conference by the delegation of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition).)

This Conference for the Unemployed recognizes that although a base has been laid for a broad workers' movement, the representation at this Conference is insufficient for a really effective campaign for our demands. It is necessary that a united front movement on the broadest basis for the unemployed be developed. Such a United Front movement must include representatives from all working class organizations—trade unions, fraternal bodies, political parties and groups. Therefore, this Conference goes on record to issue a call for a second Conference within two weeks time. To this conference all working class bodies—central bodies as well as local and branch organizations—shall be invited to participate in a movement on the basis of a minimum program of concrete demands. The respective central organizations of the Communist party, the A. F. of L., the Socialist party and independent trade unions shall be directly invited to participate. At this conference all representatives shall as a matter of course have the right to maintain their own particular views, but shall be under the obligation to engage in a common struggle for the adopted program.

In accord with the foregoing, a standing committee shall be elected with the following instructions:

1. To issue a call immediately for the Second Conference inviting all working class organizations to participate.
2. To organize the sending of speakers to the various organizations to urge the acceptance of the invitation and explain the aims of the movement.
3. To issue a minimum of 50,000 leaflets to popularize the conference and its projected program.
4. To call upon each organization represented to hold a public meeting in support of the conference under its own auspices.
5. To organize a joint mass meeting of all organizations participating in the conference with representative speakers from each tendency.

RESOLUTION ON PROGRAM AND TACTICS

(Introduced at the Unemployment Conference by the delegation of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition).)

We must aim to develop this conference into a broad movement of the working class against the menace of unemployment and against its breeder, capitalist society. In such a movement the working class can be united more closely and militantly in common struggle.

The call for the present conference proposes a statewide conference to map out a legislative program in defense of the interests of the unemployed and working class. This proposal is acceptable but in order to obtain the objects of this Conference, in part or whole, the program must be widened.

Therefore, this Conference shall go on record as favoring the following program of immediate demands:

1. Immediate Relief.
 2. Unemployment Insurance, to be paid for by the Employers and the State Government.
 3. For the 6 hour day and 5 day week with no reduction in pay.
 4. For trade relations with, and the extension of credits to the Soviet Union, as a means of unemployment relief for American workers and for drawing the American and Russian workers into a closer fraternal bond.
 5. Recognition of the Soviet Union by the United States Government.
- This Conference recognizes also the need to develop the struggle for its program beyond a merely legislative and parliamentary program. It is incumbent

STRIKE WHILE THE IRON IS HOT!

Because the Militant goes to press before correspondence from the middle and far west, on the basis of the previous issue, has time to reach us, we are unable, at this writing, to gauge the response to our appeal for funds to print comrade Trotsky's speech, "The Defense of the October Revolution", as a pamphlet.

Of one thing we are sure. That is, that if the speech meets with the same reception outside of New York—as it did here—as it is sure to do—it will be hailed as a political weapon of tremendous importance for our movement. Once more we want to emphasize the absolutely burning importance of bringing it out as a pamphlet in the shortest possible time. Fully half a hundred comrades and friends here have been struck with the same idea independently of one another.

There must be hundreds more. While their enthusiasm is at white heat, while the greatness and beauty of the speech are still upon them—let us strike! Devoted comrades and sincere sympathizers need no exhortations to lubricate the revolutionary movement with funds. They will know how to act in the present situation. But out on the periphery of the movement there are people who must be moved by some unusual event or writing. This speech is such an exceptional event. The impulse to acquaint friends and fellow-workers with therefore to build a broad united front movement of all working class and political organizations for mass struggles for the conference's aims through demonstrations and activity in all workers' organizations for the unity of the employed and the organized and unorganized. The utmost mass pressure must be exerted upon the capitalist class and its agents to obtain our demands.

The Conference resolves further to work for the mobilization of all working class organizations for the attainment of its program in the swiftest possible time.

Cannon's Speech

(Continued from page 1)

situations and leadership until they are ready, or nearly ready to break with the central organization. Do we act otherwise? And cannot we find our way to the reformist workers more effectively if we attribute to them something of the same sense of organizational loyalty that we ourselves manifest?

In the resolutions of the Communist Left Opposition which I have introduced here, there is a proposal to call a second conference within two weeks and to invite to this conference not only the locals and branches of the A. F. of L., the Socialist party, the Workmen's Circles and similar organizations but also their respective central bodies. I will be answered to the effect that the leaders of these organizations obstruct and sabotage the movement and do not want to engage in any real struggle with the employers and the state. We are quite convinced that this is true. But the A. F. of L. and Socialist party workers are by no means convinced and will not be convinced merely by our denunciations.

The way to convince them is to put their leaders to the test in action. That is the meaning of our proposal to invite also the leaders to join in the common struggle. It puts the conscientious workers in these organizations—those who really want to fight—in a position to demand of their leaders that they translate their words into deeds without in any way, at the beginning, involving a break with their organization. It puts them in a position to bring pressure on their leaders by normal organization means, to force some of them, if only for a short time, to participate in the united movement and to convince themselves by this test, by this experience that their leaders have been deceiving them with phrases.

Only in this way, in this process can we separate the masses of the conscientious workers in the reformist organizations from their treacherous leaders and draw them into a common struggle with those leaders and against them. This is not a new revelation of the Left Opposition. This, comrades and fellow-workers, is the A. B. C. of the united front tactic of Lenin.

This is the way we must move. This is the way the movement is tending under the enormous pressure of conditions on the one side, and the bankruptcy of all other tactics on the other. The united front tactic as we have laid it down in our resolution is a means for the mobilization of a genuine workers' mass movement for the struggle against the class enemy. It is, at the same time, a means for the separation of the reformist workers from the influence of their treacherous, phrase-mongering leaders.

The tactic that has been employed up till now, despite all the good intention, has served opposite ends. Here in the fourth year of the crisis the capitalists remain secure and arrogant. The reformist and reactionary labor bureaucracy in the political as well as in the trade union field remains unshaken in its position. The vanguard workers' movement remains comparatively weak, isolated and ineffective. All the objective conditions point to a difference state of affairs. The fearful mass misery, the appalling hunger, destitution and discontent of the millions is a powerful force to change the whole situation in a comparatively short time. It is to aid this process that the Left Opposition has come to this conference and submitted its resolutions for your consideration.

Japan

(Continued from page 3)

Japanese history embodies a great lore of bloody deeds of vengeance. When feudal society was dissolved by decree, there remained a class of "masterless men", the former samurai whose only occupation had been the wielding of the sword in the services of some lord. These ronin form the hirelings of the reactionaries in politics to convey and carry out threats against political opponents. Assassinations by these feudal mercenaries are of frequent occurrence.

In the split that followed the debacle of the all-embracing farmer-labor mass party, three parties gradually crystallized out, each one supported by a split-off section of the trade unions. The writer has been unable to obtain sufficient data as to the precise activities of the Communists in the various splits so that he can merely enumerate the parties and their strength. The Japanese General Federation of Labor supports the Shikai Minshuto (Right wing social democratic party) which obtained 165,000 votes and 4 seats in the 1928 elections. The Nihon Ronoto-Japanese Labor-Farmer Party was organized by the centrists of the General Federation of Japanese Labor and Farmers. It captured 2 seats with 96,000 votes in 1928. The Left wing organized the Rodo Nomo into which obtained no seats despite its 85,000 votes. The centrists and Left wing parties were both dissolved by the government as being dangerous. However, the party reorganized, the Lefts forming the Shin Ronoto (Labor Farmer Party) in 1929. The centrists formed the Nihon Taishuto or Japan Mass Party. In the 1930 elections the combined vote of the parties was over half a million.

From the attacks made by Japanese Communists at the present time on the "social fascists" of the other worker parties, it is clear that the Japanese Communists have followed blindly the Stalinist zig-zag tactics, tactics that have resulted at this crucial moment in the history of the working class of the world, in causing loss of confidence in the vanguard by the Japanese masses. Although we cannot accept without question the opinion of so confirmed an enemy of the Communists as Matsuoaka of the Japanese General Federation of Labor, yet there is a sufficient element of truth in his remark, made in 1929: "The Communist movement is getting more and more idealized and formalized. In other words the movement has become one of students or young men and women; it is diverging increasingly from the practical fighting line, so that it is coming more and more under the surveillance of the Minister of Education than that of the Home Minister. Their sphere of action is passing from the factories, mines and agrarian villages to the schools and colleges."

Nazis Provoke CPG

(Continued from page 1)

"dress rehearsal" by this means to bolster his regime; this was the game of Von Schleicher and Hitler.

To accomplish this, Hitler moved up to the firing line. The time is not ripe for his special services of unrestrained murder and pillage of the working class organizations. But it may be soon in the calculations of the world bourgeoisie. The working class throughout the world must be on guard, alert.

Some shifts are taking place in the world situation but the key is still in Germany. Some shifts have taken place in the German situation but the slower tempo has not altered the basic issue. It is still: Communism or Fascism. The workers must tell Von Schleicher and the bourgeoisie that the alternative to Bonapartism is not Fascism but that the solution to the problem is the proletarian revolution. Everywhere the workers, and particularly the Communist vanguard must raise their voices with the Left Opposition to demand that the C. I. and the German party throw overboard the ruinous theory of social-Fascism and adopt the Leninist united front to unite the German working class around the banner of Communism for the proletarian revolution. —T. STANM.

Unemployed & Barter Exchange

Petty Bourgeois «Solution» Reflects Pressure of the Crisis

The capitalist press has now picked up the "Self-Help" and "Barter Exchange" movements as remedies to solve the problem of the breakdown of capitalist production. Every new theory and new movement which claims to alleviate the desperate situation within the confines of capitalism is grasped by the press with the eagerness of a drowning man clutching a straw. This is the case with the widespread national movement of barter exchange.

Large sections of the middle class are participating in the movement. Exchange organizations have been set up by business interests in order to put their frozen assets into circulation. Otherwise these small business enterprises will fall into bankruptcy and thence the hands of the local bankers. The small business interests, taking the initiative in this field, hope to keep up a semblance of profit and prevent big business from taking its toll on the wave of the crisis. These movements first obtained a foothold in the West. Now they have been extended, in one form or another, to all parts of the country, drawing in large sections of the urban middle class, farmers and unemployed workers.

Whole layers of the working class have been drawn into the barter exchange movement. These unemployed workers, pressed between unemployment and starvation on the one hand and inadequate and, often, no relief on the other, have turned to the barter and self-help movements in an attempt to cheat hunger and starvation—until better times.

The barter exchange movement finds a working basis for the exchange of unmanufactured and farm products for the idle labor power of the workers. These movements take on varied forms, depending upon the initiative of local industries and organizations. The organizations vary from the business men's "cooperatives" to the cooperatives of the workers, with hybrids and temporary class collaboration plans in between. The business men's associations which have drawn in the workers as an auxiliary have by far been the most successful.

A Note On Max Eastman

To the Editorial Board of the Militant: Dear Comrades:

Recently I have repeatedly had opportunity to convince myself of the fact that Max Eastman is carrying on a systematic fight against materialist dialectics, the philosophical foundation of Marxism and scientific Communism. In its content and its theoretical tendency this fight does not differ in any way from the other varieties of petty bourgeois revisionism, beginning with Bernsteinism (in its philosophical-theoretical parts). If Eastman while so doing keeps his warm sympathy for the October revolution and even for the Left Opposition this crying illogicality is subjectively honorable for him but does not raise by one iota the value of his criticism of Marxism.

I could have left the Croton variety of revisionism silently to its proper destiny, if I had not been bound for a long time to Eastman himself by personal and literary ties. Eastman recently translated three volumes of my History of the Revolution into the English language. As is generally acknowledged, he has carried out this great work in an excellent manner. I have expressed to him my sincere thankfulness for this, and am prepared to repeat it here. But as soon as Eastman attempts to translate Marxist dialectics into the language of vulgar empiricism, his work provokes in me a feeling which is the direct opposite of thankfulness. For the purpose of avoiding all doubts and misunderstandings I consider it my duty to bring this to the knowledge of everybody. With Communist greetings, L. TROTSKY.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND THE AMERICAN WORKING CLASS

How many have you sold? Have you made yourself into a literature agent to dispose of this pamphlet in record time? It is easy, incredibly easy. Five cent pamphlets are just the thing. Everyone can afford them.

In the last few years, especially, a vast literature has been written about unemployment. Most of it is a "Niagara of trash pouring into oblivion." Very little of it is Marxist. Even that which bears the stamp of the official party is not free from serious errors. But here is a simply written, short piece which is Marxist.

It opens up new propaganda fields for us. Who is not interested in the question? And what worker is not looking for a clear Marxist statement on it? We must strive to put copies into the hands of thousands of workers. The carefully and painfully built-up prestige of the Left Opposition will not be the least advantage to us in presenting our position on unemployment to the class. The weapon is forged. Let us wield it.

A REMINDER

Just a short note to remind our comrades and readers that we still have the following on hand and get in more from time to time: Revolutionary Lessons by Lenin; Whither England by Trotsky; Value, Price and Profit; Wages, Labor and Capital; the Communist Manifesto; and other Marxist classics. If you want any of these speak up.

Under the guiding hand of the business men's barter exchange associations, labor power takes on a form of charity.

The exploitation of labor power is still further disguised behind the "brotherhood of men", "self-help" and "charity". It becomes a substitute for social and unemployment insurance paid by the capitalists and their state. It "replaces" the class struggle; or, rather, becomes an inverted expression of the class struggle. This kind of charity is only given for a certain amount of labor power. The workers exchange their labor power at a discount for food and supplies. If this can be extended the local charity drive and the agitation for social insurance can be held in reserve—until the class pressure forces action.

These barter exchange organizations usually function on the basis of negotiable credit certificates or script. The smaller associations function on a pure barter basis. The whole barter exchange movement, regardless of which way it leans—in the direction of the workers or the capitalists—is the result of the breakdown of commodity production and distribution under capitalism. It is a return to more elementary forms of exchange. This is no sense denotes a step forward. Socialism, not barter exchange, is the solution for the breakdown of capitalism. Barter exchange in a crisis, under the domination of the business interests, is not a step toward socialism. It is a class collaboration move to prevent the free play of the class struggle development of the working class. The barter exchange movement is an attempt to bridge through the crisis until normal exchange, which rests upon the capitalist mode of production, is re-established.

The barter exchange and self-help movement has more than one side for the workers too. Dominated by the business interests, the movement becomes a powerful lever of class collaboration. Where the self-help movement becomes a workers cooperative movement, subordinated to the interest and aims of the class and the party, it can be useful to the workers as an auxiliary movement. It cannot substitute for the class struggle. It cannot replace the struggle of the employed and unemployed for demands against the capitalists and their government, such as immediate relief, social and unemployment insurance, the six hour day and five day week with no reduction in pay; in short, it cannot replace the class struggle.

The workers who raise the slogan of "workers' control" in relation to the barter exchange and self-help movement are suffering from the worst kind of ultra-Left sickness. Opportunist class collaboration ideas and ultra-Left slogans go hand in hand. The slogans of workers' control are slogans for a period of the class struggle that we have not yet reached in America. When the class struggle reaches this stage, to delay issuing these slogans will be suicidal. In the dual power stage, when the working class and its organizations become the kernel and the capitalist class and its governmental and industrial administration becomes the shell, then the time is ripe. In the meantime, a revolutionary, international program with proper tactics in the day-to-day struggles of the workers is the order of the day.

—HUGO OEHLER.

Resolution on Weisbord

The following resolution was adopted by the N. Y. Branch:

The N. Y. branch of the Communist League of America endorses the position taken by the NEC in its negotiations with the C. L. of Struggle. We view as entirely correct the present suspension of the negotiations on the following grounds:

1. Every opportunity was afforded to comrade Weisbord, as spokesman for the C. L. of Struggle to clarify his position in relation to the Left Opposition. The NEC posed correctly, after the initial blunders of comrade Weisbord, the minimal, principle requirements set by the League for the fusion of the two organizations. The columns of the Militant were open for the free expression of comrade Weisbord's views on these requirements. Comrade Weisbord failed to meet the requirements.

2. The NEC in all its negotiations with comrade Weisbord showed clearly its desire to leave the road open for the entrance of the Communist League of Struggle into our organization. Comrade Weisbord, on the contrary, has yet to show that he seriously wishes to fuse with the League. Even aside from basic principle difference which remain unliquidated, notably those involving the relations within the Communist movements, of its three groupings—the question of centrism—the entire approach of comrade Weisbord was based on a false policy of maneuvering, on attacks on the NEC rather than a serious approach to the International Left Opposition, on the holding of public meetings for the specific purpose of appealing to the membership (united front from below) over the heads of our leadership.

3. We emphatically state that comrade Weisbord has placed obstacles in the way of fusion with our organization. If comrade Weisbord and his group still desire to make it possible for them to become an organic part of the C. L. of A. and the I. L. O. they must be guided genuinely by the proposals made them by the NEC.

Pioneer Publishing Fund

It must be well-nigh irresistible. For this purpose everyone will be willing to donate something. It cannot be otherwise.

Not very much is needed. Only ninety dollars. Here in New York we have already raised six and a half, four and a half through the efforts of comrade Finkel, one dollar from comrade Vonnas in Pittsburgh and one from a party member in New York. That is only a small beginning. Let us go to work!

Unemployment and the American Working Class

by Arne Swabeck

A popular Marxian analysis for workers of the unemployment situation and the basis for a revolution any workingclass program of action!

24 Pages

5 Cents

Minimum Order

5 Copies

Postage 1c extra per copy

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York, N. Y.

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Weekly Organ of the Communist League of America [Opposition]

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 5 [WHOLE NO 152] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1933 PRICE 5 CENTS

Hitler in Power; Civil War Starts

LEON TROTSKY

The Danger of Thermidor

An Analysis of the Significance of Stalin's Latest Speech

The Soviet regime rests on the alliance between the proletariat and the peasantry. The proletariat constitutes the minority of the population; the peasantry, the overwhelming majority. Yet in the hands of the proletariat are the most concentrated means of production. The forces of the peasantry, on the contrary, are split up through their economic relations. Still more, it is not a homogeneous group. As long as there is no thoroughgoing change in technique and economy in the village—and for this even under the most favorable circumstances the work of a whole generation would be needed—the peasantry will crystallize out of itself a stratum of kulaks, which inevitably strives towards capitalism. The mechanical destruction of the present kulaks decides nothing. After the alleged "liquidation of the kulaks as a class" the Soviet press constantly keeps complaining (having gone over from materialism to idealism, since bureaucrats are always idealists), of the power of the kulak "ideology", of the remains of kulak psychology, etc. In fact, behind these complaints is hidden the fact that the middle class of peasants, although locked up into kolkhozes, faced with the present level of technique and economy, sees no other way out for itself than to lift itself up to the level of the kulaks.

What the Peasants Demand

In the October peasant two revolutions were interlarded; the end of the democratic one and the beginning of the socialist. By doing away with lease payments, the democratic revolution saved the peasantry almost half a billion gold rubles. The fruits of the socialist revolution are valued by the poor peasants according to the quantity of industrial products which he can obtain in exchange for a given quantity of grain. The peasant is no utopian; he does not demand that socialism be built up in one country and in five years at that. But he does demand that socialist industry deliver him goods under conditions which are no worse than those of capitalist industry. Under these conditions, the peasant is prepared to extend an unlimited credit in political confidence to the proletariat and its party. The Soviet state would receive the possibility of maneuvering according to the internal conditions and the world situation, and of drawing the peasantry into socialist economy.

The basis of mass collectivization can only be the equivalent exchange of the products of industry and agriculture. Without going into the theoretical economic half-splitting, we must regard as "equivalent" such an exchange as will stimulate the peasants, individual as well as collectivized, to fill as much land and harvest as much grain as possible, selling the greater part to the city in order to obtain for it as large a quantity of industrial products as possible. Only such reciprocal economic relation between city and country—what Lenin called the "smytchka"—can free the workers state from the necessity of taking forcible measures against the village to compel the exchange. Only from the moment when the voluntary exchange is assured will the proletarian dictatorship be unshakable. The "smytchka" thus secured, means the closest political alliance of the poor peasantry with the urban workers, the firm support of the decisive masses of the middle peasantry, and consequently, the political isolation of the kulaks and of all capitalist elements in the country in general. The "smytchka", thus secured, means the unshakable loyalty of the Red Army to the proletarian dictatorship, which in view of the unsuccessful industrialization and the uneconomic human, largely peasant, reserves, will make it possible for the Soviet state to repulse any imperialist intervention.

As the Left Opposition has declared since 1923, industrialization is the prerequisite of the march towards socialism. Without a rising industrialization neither linen nor nails, not to speak of tractors, can be supplied to the peasants. But industrialization must be carried through at such a tempo and in accordance with such plans that the relation of the quantity of goods between city and village will steadily if slowly improve, and the standard of living of workers and peasants rise. This foremost condition of the stability of the whole regime limits the permissible tempo of industrialization and collectivization.

Back to War Communism

It means nothing to add, "Has the five year plan abolished class and introduced socialism?" But we must unquestionably ask, "Has it assured the 'smytchka' between city and country?" The answer is "No", it has shaken and weakened it." In his last speech at the plenum of the Central Committee, Stalin boasted that the planned collectivization had been exceeded three times over. But who needs these figures outside of the bureaucratic boasters? The statistics of collectivization do not take the place of bread. The kolkhozes are numerous, but there is no meat and no vegetables. The city has nothing to eat. Industry is disorganized because the workers are hungry. In its relation to the peasant, the city has passed from a semi-voluntary exchange through a tax in kind to compulsory expropriations, that is, to the methods of war-time Communism.

The hungry workers are dissatisfied with the policies of the party. The party is dissatisfied with the leadership. The peasantry is dissatisfied with industrialization, with collectivization, with the city. Part of the peasantry is dissatisfied with the regime. What part? We cannot know, but it is clear that under present circumstances, it can only grow. "The planned collectivization has been exceeded three times over!" But that is precisely the misfortune. The forced kolkhozes not only do not lead to socialism, but on the contrary undermine the foundations of the dictatorship of the proletariat by becoming the organized form of the strike of the peasants against the city. By hiding its grain from the state or purposely limiting its seedling, the peasantry places itself on the road of the kulaks. "Permit me," it

(Continued on page 4)

GIVE NOW!

The drive to SAVE THE MILITANT is the first order of business of the League and its sympathizers in the present period. We are confronted with the most serious financial condition possible and unless we obtain several hundred dollars, the very existence of the MILITANT is threatened. On top of this, the Post Office threatens to revoke our mailing rights if we skip another issue.

What are you doing about this? Have you called on your fellow-workers and asked for contributions? Help Save the MILITANT. Send in your contribution at once and then visit your friends and collect funds for the MILITANT.

The MILITANT has performed an international revolutionary duty to the class and the party in keeping the Marxian theories and the Bolshevik-Leninist needs of the day before the English-speaking workers of the whole world. While the press of Stalinism sways between opportunism and adventurism the MILITANT has held high the international revolutionary principles of Marxism. The need of the organization is not a retreat to a semi-monthly but an increase in propaganda in order to keep pace with the growing activity of the League and the sharpening world events. In all parts of the country the demand for our press and our literature is on the increase. The demand is one positive side of the problem. The other side is the organizational end. We must send out organizers, but all this will fail of accomplishment unless the MILITANT is kept before the workers each week.

You cannot allow the financial difficulties to drown the voice of the MILITANT. You must strain every resource to help SAVE THE MILITANT. Send in your contribution at once, solicit funds for the Militant. Rush all funds to the MILITANT, 126 East 16th St., New York City.

—HUGO OEHLE

Opposition's Demand for United Front Is Need of the Hour in Germany

Responsibility for Rise of Fascism Must be Established

President von Hindenburg, the victorious candidate of the socialist "Front", the "bulwark of the Republic against Fascism", has finally appointed Hitler to the Chancellorship of the Reich. With the Fascist leader are his lieutenants, Hermann Goering, Speaker of the Reichstag, who is in control of the Prussian police force of 150,000 armed men, and the notorious Dr. William Frick, who has taken over the Ministry of the Interior.

The Hitler government starts out with the inclusion of all the other representatives of the extreme reaction in Germany. The von Papens, Hugenburgs, von Krosigks, von Neuraths and Seldtes represent all that is intensely chauvinistic in Germany, all that stands for the domination of heavy industry and the preservation of the "dirty East Prussian" agrarian lords. In the first collection of forces under Hitler, the monarchists, nationalists, militarists, bankers, landlords and trust magnates rub shoulders amicably with the most prominent representatives of Fascism.

Schleicher's Role

The von Papen government, and the von Schleicher regime which succeeded it, fell after having accomplished the maximum of their abilities the task and role assigned to them. Neither of the two "Presidential" governments which preceded Hitler had behind it a parliamentary majority upon which to lean, or a mass movement to base itself on. These representatives of the Bonapartist bourgeoisie could only be stop gaps, creating the illusion among sections of the working class that they stood "above the classes" and would regulate the conflicts between them. Even more than Papen, von Schleicher succeeded in winning the benevolent neutrality of reactionary social democratic trade union leaders, headed by Loh, a neutrality which meant nothing short of a betrayal of the working class. In the period of their domination, Papen and Schleicher did all they could to stave off the resistance of the working class, to weaken and demoralize it, to avoid—in the interests of the bourgeoisie—the heavy costs of a civil war, and to stake their cards upon the mirage of an economic boom.

The fact that Hindenburg, who was undoubtedly hostile to Hitler, even if not in a fundamentally class sense, finally called upon the Fascist leader to take over the government, is eloquent testimony to the desperation of the German bourgeoisie. Capitalism, in its "normal" state, never does more than keep its Fascist hordes in reserve. The German ruling class knows that the seizure of power by the Brown-shirted bandits, especially in a country with a well-organized and socially conscious working class, means civil war and the consequent disruption of the economic and political life of the country, at least until the issue of the struggle is decided. The German bourgeoisie has gone to all conceivable lengths to avoid the heavy expenses of a civil war; it has turned over the government to social democrats; it has drawn them into bourgeois coalitions; it has sought to preserve an equilibrium with the aid of the Bruening party of ultramontanism; it has resorted to the Bonapartist regimes of Papen and von Schleicher. But none of these expedients has enabled it to emerge from the profound crisis undermining its domination, the crisis which has driven hundreds of thousands of workers to the support of the party of social revolution. For just as the bourgeoisie finds it impossible to rule in the old way, the masses are refusing to live

OPEN FORUM

TECHNOCRACY
AND OTHER TRENDS IN BOURGEOIS POLITICAL ECONOMY
Technicians and the Working Class

Speaker:
HUGO OEHLE
Friday, 8 P. M. FEBRUARY 10th
126 East 16 Street,
ADMISSION: 15c

Sponsored by:
N. Y. Br. Communist League of America
(Opposition)

Pass Philippines Bill Over Veto

The Philippines, under the leadership of Quezon and a large section of the national-bourgeoisie, are fighting the Independence Bill. The 35 year struggle for independence is taking on a new form, since the Independence Bill comes from the United States. This can be accounted for when one realizes what is behind this bill. The Independence Bill tries to please different layers of the American exploiters, and in doing so, has forced Congress to turn out an Independence Bill loaded with jokers. The Bill retains all of the essential needs of the imperialists and at the same time attempts to eliminate the advantage the national bourgeoisie of the Philippines have with regard to those commodities they export to America in competition with other American producers.

The Bill in its final form provides the following safeguards for imperialists: The Philippines must call a special convention to adopt a republican constitution. Ten years after this they will have "independence." The Bill reserves the right for naval bases and retains the right to military posts after the attainment of "independence." At the same time the Bill provides the following for the American competitors, who were the main ones to drive through the bill. After ten years the islands will be outside the American tariff walls. In the meantime the imports are to be limited. A graduated scale of export tax on commodities of a competitive nature that are sent to America will be imposed. In this period all goods shipped from the United States to the islands will be duty free. Emigration will also be cut. The Bill attempts to unite all sections of the American people behind it. It will have all sections of the Filipino people against it, except the section of American flunkies. The American workers must demand the immediate and unconditional release and freedom of the Filipino people.

10,000 in Strike in Detroit

Wages and «Dead Time» Issues in Briggs Auto Walkout

Marking one of the first mass struggles of the auto workers against the boss class since the crisis started, more than 10,000 men at the four plants of the Briggs Mfg. Corp., makers of auto bodies, in Detroit, have struck against "dead time." ("Dead time" is the time piece workers are kept idle without pay while being shifted to other departments or, while forced to wait for repairs or parts necessary to their process in the industry. Piece workers lose many hours a week through this method of wage cutting. It is "little things" like this that make basic wage rates so misleading in the statistical reports.)

According to the Daily Worker, the progress of the strike movement reads as follows:

January 12—500 workers strike against 20 percent wage cut at Briggs Vernon Highway Plant in Detroit.

January 21—1,000 workers in Motor Products Corp., Detroit, strike against 15 percent wage cut.

January 24—Strike in Briggs Highland Park plant, Detroit; and Hayes Body plant in Grand Rapids, Mich.

January 25—Strike of Briggs Mack Ave. workers brings total up to 8,000.

January 26—Two more Briggs plants strike and raise total up to 10,000. Capitalist press "discovers" the strike movement.

January 27—Motor Products workers, who won their strike, refuse to work on material from Briggs plants. 700 of these workers join A. W. U. Ford lays off 150,000.

January 28—Murray Body Company forced to close through fear; men join strike movement.

Solidarity of Workers!

The Briggs Company—three hours after Ford paid a visit to his Highland Park plant in which the Briggs factory in Detroit is housed, agreed to abolish "dead-time" and guarantee its employees an hourly wage. It also agrees to raise some wages, though not as high as the workers demand and in some instances the new scale is lower than the old. The company, however, has not negotiated with the strike committee but has simply posted the notice of its proposals. Attempts were made, of course, to arouse the Ford workers against the strikers with the argument that the Briggs strikers have thrown them out of work.

The workers had until Monday noon, January 30, to return to work or be replaced by men from Detroit's army of unemployed. But so far the workers have maintained their solidarity and their effectiveness through mass picketing.

The Briggs strike became effective January 26, when, after several prior outbreaks, 10,000 closed their ranks against the bosses. Ford is boss of Briggs. He was not slow to try to take advantage of the situation. He seized the opportunity to lockout 150,000 workers in his employ, on the pretext that the failure of the Briggs Co. to deliver bodies disrupted the entire Ford belt system of production. This was an attempt to turn the Ford workers against the strikers. But the workers have not been taken in by this lying cant. They have refused to work on stuff coming from Briggs.

In his efforts to discredit the strike Ford has spread the story that rival manufacturers have instigated the workers against Briggs. Speaking of the men who work in the plants that bear his name Ford said: "There is not a man among them that would strike," even if his scale of wages is little, if any, higher than that of other manufacturers. Lies! We are confident that the Ford workers will not be long in following the example of the Briggs workers. And as for meddling instigation!—

CANNON AT FORUM

Comrade Cannon will speak this Friday, Feb. 3 at 8 P. M. at the Left Opposition Open Forum at 126 East 16th Street. The subject of his lecture will be "Is the Time Ripe for a New Federation of Labor?" He will discuss in this lecture the most important conference in Gillespie, Ill., in which Comrade Cannon participated and which adopted the policy of the Left Opposition. It promises to be an intensely interesting meeting. Be sure to attend!

mass meeting The CRISIS in GERMANY

James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman

Stuyvesant Casino
SECOND AVE., Near NINTH ST., SUN-DAY, FEB. 5th, 8 P. M. ADM. 15 CTS.

The Elections and Labor's Struggle

Note must be taken, now that detailed figures are available, of the extremely low poll of the various parties of the working class in the national elections in November. Even in absolute terms, in round figures, higher votes have been polled in other elections. But when consideration is given to the millions of new voters, due to increase of population and extension of suffrage to women. It is found that the various labor parties—the Communist party, Socialist party, SLP—received proportionately the lowest vote in 32 years. Such a result is surprising in view of the years of economic crisis, which, one could expect or hope, would have a radicalizing, if not revolutionary, influence on the political attitude of the American worker. Yet, not only did the Communist party receive a distressingly low vote, but even the Socialist party with its emancipated program appealing to the vast mass of the petty bourgeoisie and what remains of the upper strata or aristocracy of labor, obtained a vote lower than the high vote of Debs.

Some Factors in the Low Vote

It will give some comfort, but not be telling the whole story, to acknowledge a number of factors and deficiencies of American political life which effect the tabulation of the voting strength of the American workers. First there is the disfranchisement of vast numbers of the foreign-born, though that need not be a permanent obstacle; there is, too, the intimidation and terror in the South which brings about the real, if not formal, disfranchisement of the mass of Negro workers and peasants. Corruption and vote-stealing are factors, perhaps even worse than conceived by revolutionists themselves, as revealed in the recent elections in New York City when even a Democrat, McKee, swerving from the Tammany machine, found later that some 150,000 votes for him had not been tallied. Allow, then, for wholesale stealing of Communist and socialist votes. The political writer Kent maintains that the political machine having the most money for campaign purposes always wins the major elections. Grant its importance to the capitalist parties, that phase can nevertheless have only a secondary significance for the working class parties which depend on basic social and economic factors for their ultimate victory. The social-patriot and many times "socialist" minister of Belgium's monarchy, Emile Vandervelde, in his book, "Socialism Versus the State" made out something of a case for the tremendous ballyhoo methods of the American capitalist parties to affect the working class in casting their ballots. But that too can have but transitory significance and had its basis, in part, in a stable American capitalism. In addition, many millions of people continued the practice of staying away together from the polls.

The sad truth is that in 1932, almost four years after the most terrific economic crisis in American history, the workers as well as the bourgeoisie, middle classes and farmers, voted their belief in the efficacy of capitalism yet to solve the ills of unemployment, low wages, etc., etc. It is true that they rejected the reactionary administration of Hoover and accepted the demagogic politician Roosevelt, but that of course was a case of tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee. The shift basically was not a change from their capitalist outlook, but only a change of administrators of the system of private property.

Does this mean that relatively swift changes of the political physiognomy of the American people, and particularly the proletariat, are excluded? By no means. Despite the affirmation of faith of the vast mass of American people in the social system of capitalism, it is nevertheless observable that there is a search for new methods, even new systems. There is no longer the same certainty about the durability of capitalism or its parts. Too many dents have been made in its armor and the soldier doesn't seem to be such an ardent fighter. It is a fact that with one hand the American workers gave their okay to American political system as such, and that with the other, they are girding themselves for struggles which will bring them into sharp conflict with capitalist property rights and ideas.

The masses often devise their own strategies in the class struggle, evidently preferring or finding it necessary to experience every possible solution for their requirements. The American workers, having had in the past the least need for independent political experience and actions, because of the circumstances and character of American economic life as against that of Europe, are proceeding to turn over in their minds the ways and means out of their impasse. In this, they are no different than the workers in other countries, albeit not yet so advanced politically and industrially.

A Lesson from England

People often shift their base of attack in the hope of effecting their aims. When the ravages of the Industrial Revolution in England, in the beginnings of capitalism, ate their way into the sinews and bones of the English workers, they turned toward trade unionism and initiated big struggles. Various factors contributed to their defeat on the economic field and they abandoned that field almost entirely and entered the struggle for the granting of suffrage and other political rights. The Chartist movement was the essence of this transference of struggle by the English proletariat from the economic to the political field. The Chartist movement had its vital importance in the evolution of the English labor movement, as did also a sharp turn at another time toward the co-operative movement led by Robert Owen as a panacea for the miserably exploited English workers.

Struggles of all description were to en-

What the Presidential Vote Means for the Workers

For many decades before the English labor and political movement had made headway in the direction of joint action or agreement between the industrial and political arms of labor to achieve labor's aims. The movement has proceeded by the process of evolution and division. Rapid changes in the condition of Great Britain's imperialist domain bring the mass of English workers, who adhere to the political platform of socialism, to the point where they will have to abandon once and for all the tempo of "gradualism" in socialism and go over to the tempo and outlook of Communism.

There is need to allow and hope to believe in swifter reactions and development among the American workers from now on. Though in the last elections, their vote indicated from a class standpoint, almost total ignorance of the significance of the economic crisis in this social milieu, the fact remains that in their daily life they pay very close attention to it, and can be expected to generalize their experiences in a more thorough-going class manner. How does this show itself?

The Labor Party

Let us take the matter, briefly of the Labor party. It is still by no means excluded that there will be formed a Labor party in the United States. But the relation of the Communists toward it, at least that of the Left Opposition, has been clarified; namely, that of sharp exposure and opposition, despite our readiness to consider what might be our working relation to it if such a movement develops.

Not so many years ago, when Labor party agitation and attempts at organization reached their heights, the bulk of the proponents of the Labor party, in accepting it, undoubtedly attached a definite class significance to it, in fact in many cases, a revolutionary importance. They viewed it, not as the Communists did—as a part of a process of American political evolution—but rather as the class movement of the workers and a substitute for any other revolutionary movement. It is true, also, that this same bulk removed from the Labor party any idea of mass actions, extra-parliamentary activity and viewed it in the parliamentary or English Labor Party sense. And such a Labor party, if it develops, will have all that opportunist virus and confusion. But such as it was in those years of 1922-28, it was essentially a movement of labor and even regarded by opponent classes and groups as a narrow class movement which might have its dangers for capitalism.

But today, irrespective of the development of a Labor party, such a party is looked upon altogether differently. The experiences of the English Labor Party have made their way on an international scale, not excepting America. Among its proponents in America are middle-class leaders who find in the platform of a Labor Party the reflection of the middle classes' own needs and ambitions. The wiser bourgeoisie, despite contrary noise, view such a possibility or other changes with might break up the two-party, Republican and Democratic, system, with equality. In fact, such a shrewd political observer as Samuel G. Blythe foresees such a break-up in one more, maybe two elections.

Communists, surely, have no illusions about a Labor party (or do some of them still have?). The Labor opponents of revolution, the middle class and the bourgeoisie—all view such a party as a bulwark against effective class struggle and social revolution. The working class in the United States, which will move on both the social reformist and revolutionary fronts simultaneously, will more swiftly hereafter grasp political lessons, whether or not one of those lessons takes the form of the Labor party. Hence, in respect to the Labor party, it must be said that the last few years have witnessed changes in outlook about it.

But if the American workers have not reacted on the political, or more strictly, the parliamentary, field more in accordance with the acuteness of the economic conditions, they are preparing for class struggle on other fronts. None other than William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, speaks about economic struggles that will engage the workers on many and big fronts. It is not needed here to explain Green's role or his sudden espousal of the cause of militant labor struggle and a "new deal" for labor. That has been done already in the columns of the Militant. But it is noteworthy that Green has felt it necessary to give lip service so far to the pressure of the mass of the labor movement.

Even more important is the fact that the new program of the labor movement, with all the confusion and illusion still to be found, has begun to catch up with

10,000 Out in Briggs Auto Strike

(Continued from page 1)
they have not forgotten the machine gun fusillade of last spring when four workers were shot down in cold blood for demanding relief from Ford.

Of the same yarn is the fabrication that "You can't stop progress—our plants will be going again full tilt in a very short time." What is full tilt? Before the depression the capacity production of cars in the United States was 7,700,000 a year; the average yearly production was 4,500,000; the peak year of actual production was 1929 with 5,621,715. The latest figures for a full year during the depression give a production for 1932 of approximately 1,411,000 cars and trucks. This last figure is about 18.4 of capacity and 25.0 of the production of the peak year. Full tilt? Pap.

The A. F. of L. and the A. W. U.

This struggle seems to have been quite spontaneous in its beginnings. Certainly the A. F. of L. which has claimed jurisdiction over these fiercely exploited workers, was not on hand and has not offered even to help. It will be recalled that in 1926 the A. F. of L. asserted its intention of organizing the automobile industry. At that time seventeen crafts agreed to waive jurisdictional claims during the proposed campaign, but even with this enormous impetus to start the job no move whatever was made.

According to the Daily Worker, Ford's lay-off is a move to break the Briggs strike and prevent it from spreading to "his" own plants where strike sentiment was growing as a result of the activities of the A. W. U. Be that as it may the Murray Body men, like the Briggs strikers, are following the leadership of the militant A. W. U. (Daily Worker, Jan. 28). The Daily Worker also claims militant mass picketing:—"At the Mack Avenue plant the police attempted to drive the strikers away but failed because of the militant mass picketing. The A. W. U. is leading the strike." (Daily Worker, January 27).

The rumor was spread in the capitalist press that the Briggs workers adopted a resolution banning Communists the new situation produced by American capitalism. In this new social program for official labor, which, besides industrial struggles, envisages also independent political action by the workers, is to be seen the positive side of the workers' reaction to the economic crisis. The negative side, the vote of labor in the November elections, has already been recorded—and, more important, is and will be rapidly forgotten in the natural course of the struggles of the working class with the employers and the government-al apparatus.

There need be no doubt that unorganized labor will be found ready to add its forces to organized labor in common struggle, and, indeed, to go beyond the official program in all respects. But that is not under discussion here. What is decisive and important is that the dialectics of the struggle are about to reconcile the seeming contradictions of the actions of the American working class on a higher plane of struggle and vision. While the election results are, therefore, extremely "disappointing" and this field of struggle is yet to be militantly invaded by the American workers, still they are not the final and only barometer. Behind the peaceful gesture of American labor at the ballot box, there is to be seen already the clenched fist about to do battle with his class enemy. The Communist party and the Communist Left Opposition must be prepared to assist and lead in the historic battles that will tend to change rapidly the face of American social and political life.

—MARTIN ABERN.

from participation in the strike, but the New York Times of Jan. 29 states that Phil Raymond, former Communist candidate for Mayor of Detroit, is taking an active part in the strike. Raymond stated that he was a representative of the A. W. U. and had been hired by the strikers to organize their forces.

The A. W. U. in existence now for several years, has yet to prove itself to the workers. This strike is its opportunity leadership of workers exploited by systems, unemployment, low wages, speed-up, and all the refinements characteristic of Ford's "progress." With the auto workers out on strike and the momentum of the mass movement, the workers will quickly sense and follow a responsible leadership which really means to achieve an industrial union for mass blows against the dead hand of trustified competition in the auto industry.

—MARTIN BEARDSLEE.

Mooney Congress

(Continued from page 1)
freedom. No. The language of the call precludes any such idea. There is also the fact that the date is set for April and May. Mooney chose this time knowing that a hearing in the Superior Court on the last count in the original indictment against him and Billings is scheduled for February 11. The dates alone speak volumes.

But what Mooney's move does mean is that he considers the apathy of the Communists no means of solving the problem of his freedom. And we must acknowledge that he is correct. Our failure to act is a disgrace. But for that we are not to blame. The Stalinists, as we have pointed out, must answer to the class for this.

At the Chicago Conference everything will again favor the Communists. Mooney's call insures that no liberal-socialist-Wobblie clique will bar them. It lays the basis for a class struggle fight. Chicago is the scene of the recent gigantic united front of socialist and Communist workers for relief. The traditions of that struggle and the fighting role of the Communists will stand them in good stead at the coming conference. It will give them a sympathetic hearing and following.

Lastly, there is the half-truth that the party and the I.L.D. are making. Hacker admitted at a meeting last Sunday that the line of the I.L.D. in the Mooney fight had been sectarian. And Frank Spector writes in the February issue of the Labor Defender: "At the bottom of our failure to develop a broad united front has nearly always been the sectarian attitude on our part." This does not trace the root of the trouble to the soil from which spring these weeds of policy—the theory of social-Fascism. But it is the beginning of wisdom.

If the party members will raise their voices and demand a full accounting instead of this half-way apology (which is accompanied by the usual benedictions of the line and the criticisms of the execution) they can make this turn a genuine one. They must insist that they enter the Chicago conference prepared to work with the other groups represented there, not giving up for a minute their independent role as the vanguard of the class and their right to criticism of their opponents. With a correct policy on the question of the united front and the capital of Mooney's call, plus their splendid record in the relief demonstrations the Communists can win the leadership of the movement and raise the struggle to new heights.

This can very well be the impetus which the class needs to resist the onslaughts of the bosses. Mooney has correctly insisted that the struggle for his freedom is inextricably bound up with the fight of the class against its capitalist masters. That is how we approach the problem, too. Everything now depends on the party. The Left Opposition will be present to raise its voice for Mooney's freedom and Communism, and work energetically in the movement.

—T. STAMM.

Left Opposition Grows in China

PEIPING.—

About a month ago we received comrade L. D.'s first letter. About two weeks ago we received his second letter together with yours. The Russian texts have been translated into Chinese and circulated among the revolutionary masses. We are very happy to have these new, precious writings.

Before September 18, 1931, the date of the invasion of Japanese imperialism of last year, the Left Opposition in Northern China was mainly occupied with theoretical questions. After the "invasion" our comrades appeared here and there in the leadership of the movement. Our political program was widely carried out. And we truly became "the most dangerous enemy of the Chinese C. P." as the Stalinists put it.

When the anti-Japanese imperialist sentiment was raging the majority of the Stalinist comrades co-operated with us. Only when the anti-imperialist movement receded did the bureaucratic Stalinist leaders find us "the most dangerous enemy". At the same time they spread more illusions about the peasants' "Red Army" among the masses, while they continued their course along the road of bureaucratic adventurism.

A certain number of the new generation have joined the L. O. and fought energetically for it. Not long before the arrest of comrade Chen Du-Hsiu we gained more militants for the Marxist-Leninist Fighting Club. This club was formerly semi-party in character and was composed mostly of members emerging from the Stalin clique. But now they fully accepted the ideas of the International Left Opposition under Trotsky's leadership and declared their allegiance to the official Left Opposition. They were earnestly welcomed, and are now working for the Left Opposition as a new force.

Despite the blow of comrade Chen Du Hsiu's arrest the work of the Left Opposition took a step forward. More public meetings and debates on theoretical and current political problems were held. More inner discussion was carried on. More members willingly went to work in the workers' districts. More pamphlets and papers were written and distributed. Larger masses were aroused under the Opposition's program. More money was collected.

But we must recognize that this is far from enough. In every respect we must make greater efforts to catch up with the objective needs and become strong enough to correct the wrong course of the Stalinists. We are now working under tremendous physical difficulties but we are sure that "the greater the effort the less the difficulty" is true.

As to our relations with you we must say that we owe you very much and expect much more from you! The scattered copies of the Militant that we received enabled us to learn a great deal about the experiences of the International Left Opposition and lessen our mistakes.

Our organ is called the Vanguard. We have now published six issues. Besides this we have a workers' newspaper which is a weekly and a student weekly, four issues of which have been published. If you can find a Chinese comrade to translate them we will send you some copies.

—LEFT OPPOSITION OF NORTH CHINA.

Oppositionists Expelled from I.L.D.

YOUNGSTOWN.—

On December 29, four workers were admitted to the I.L.D. here in Youngstown. Three of us entered as Left Oppositionists. Our purpose as we stated at the time of our admission was to help in building up the I.L.D. as a weapon of defense against the capitalist class.

About a week ago we met the section organizer of the I.L.D. on the street. She told us that the four of us were expelled from the I.L.D. in our absence, without a hearing and an opportunity to defend ourselves before the membership. When we asked her what the charges were, she said: "Because of being renegades and counter-revolutionists." That is because we are Left Oppositionists. The fourth worker is comrade Love, a foundation member of the party in Youngstown, now sympathetic to the Lovestone group.

On Friday, January 27, we went to the general membership meeting to ask the comrades whether what the section organizer had told us was true, and to demand that we be given our rights as workers to be heard in our defense. The bureaucrats tried to get around this elementary workers' right by ruling that the I.L.D. meeting was a closed meeting and telling all those who were not members to leave. Two workers who had come to the meeting to join protested.

The membership saw the sense of their protest and our demand. Together with them we succeeded in getting the question on the agenda. At this point Rogers, section organizer of the party, left the meeting and went into the cellar.

After a discussion conducted, surprisingly enough, in a comradely spirit, we came to the vote. There were about eighteen members present. The chairman who, as far as bureaucratic procedure is concerned has nothing to learn from John L. Lewis, counted nine votes for our expulsion. And that, as far as he was concerned, was the end of the matter. Despite our protests no vote against was taken; nor were the abstentions recorded.

The Left Opposition comrades rose and left demonstratively. Love remained declaring that he was a member of the I.L.D. and would not be expelled by such bureaucratic procedure. The bureaucrats attacked him. The noise of the fight reached us on the street. We rushed back to separate the comrades and prevent the interference of the police.

The workers in the hall were decidedly against this disgraceful scene. Their interference, however, was temporarily postponed by the sudden appearance of Rogers. He rushed in and drew a murderous wood scraper from his coat. Brandishing this he made for the Left Opposition comrades. He might have killed us had not the workers, alarmed by this lunatic, forced him to curb his lust. "Comrades of the party," he shouted, "throw them out." The workers anxious to put an end to the whole business threw us out.

But this is no solution. The workers must understand that it is not the Left Opposition that must be thrown out but the managerial bureaucrats. The Left Opposition will continue to press forward in Youngstown, as elsewhere, with the ideas of Marxism. Not all the murderous bureaucrats in the Stalinist apparatus can stifle the voice of the proletarian revolutionists. We will return to the I.L.D. and the party.

—S. F.

The "Save The Militant" Drive

To date our comrades and friends have responded to our appeals with the following amounts:

NEW YORK:

M. Beardslee	$ 5.00
J. Cannatta	1.00
M. C.	1.00
J. P. Cannon	2.00
H. Capelis	5.00
A. Caldis	1.00
J. Carmody	1.00
D. Colay	1.00
G. Compton	2.00
F. Charles	3.00
L. Basky	2.50
B. Eckstadt	5.00
J. Gordon	5.00
M. Glee	.50
A. Katsikas	2.00
M. Kent	2.00
W. Kitt	3.50
A. Marcus	5.00
L. Miller	4.00
H. Milton	1.00
J. Marsh	.50
J. Poulos	4.00
H. Ross	1.00
A. Robin	1.00
G. Saul	4.25
M. Sterling	5.00
P. Schulman	5.00
R. Spiegala	8.00
T. Stamm	1.25
Unser Kamf	5.00
F. Victor	2.00
A. Weaver	23.00

CHICAGO:

Friends of the Militant Club	6.50
South Side Group	7.00

MINNEAPOLIS:

Minneapolis Br.	10.00
Y. R. Dunne	1.00

CLEVELAND:

Cleveland Branch	2.25
J. Keller	1.00

BOSTON:

Boston Branch	20.00
---------------	-------

YOUNGSTOWN:

M. Koehler	2.00
E. Krusselbrink	1.00

A Friend	1.00
PHILADELPHIA:
C. Katz	1.00
T. Wilson	5.00
L. Goodman	1.50

KANSAS CITY:

Kansas City Branch	2.00
A. Buehler	1.00

PITTSBURGH:

A. Oklin	1.00
J. Sifakis	1.50
C. Hinich	1.00
N. Liparis	.75
S. Rubinstein	.75
P. Vornas	2.00

NEW HAVEN:

G. Duell	2.50
S. Gendelman	1.00

MISCELLANEOUS:

W. Graham
Minnetola, N. J.	5.00

Total $189.75

International Workers School

AMERICAN LABOR LEADERS

The Movements and the Men
A Series of 8 Popular Lectures on American Labor History and Its Outstanding Personalities

by
JAMES P. CANNON

Single Lecture—15 Cents
One Dollar for the Course.
SUNDAY 8 P. M.
120 East 16th Street

UNEMPLOYMENT and the AMERICAN WORKING CLASS

by
ARNE SWABECK

24 PAGES FIVE CENTS
PIONEER PUBLISHERS
84 East 10th Street,
New York, N. Y.

192 Pages

CLOTH 65c

PAPER 35c

PIONEER

Postage 6c Extra

PUBLISHERS

The Danger of Thermidor

An Analysis of the Significance of Stalin's Latest Speech

(Continued from page 1)

says, "to buy and sell at will." From whom and to whom? To and from the one who owns the right prices, whether it be the state, a private dealer, or a foreign capitalist. The peasant strike for the freedom of internal trade leads immediately to the demand for the abolition of the monopoly of foreign trade. That is the logic of the mistakes of the five year plan.

In his speech Stalin gave the summary. As to this we shall speak in a separate article. But in planned economy the statistical balance sheet corresponds to the economic balance sheet only in case the plan is correct. A plan full of mistakes, on the contrary, can compromise or even annul the greatest successes. The five year plan has brought enormous gains in technique and in production. But its economic results are extraordinarily contradictory. As far as the political balance-sheet is concerned, it shows an open and very great deficit. But politics is condensed, concentrated economy. Politics is decisive. A socialist construction, which drives a wedge between the worker and the peasant and sows dissatisfaction among the proletariat is a lying construction. No figures can change this objective estimation. The real balance is not given on the pages of the newspapers, but in the fields of the peasants, in the barns of the kolkhozes, in the warehouses of the factories, in the dining-rooms of the workers and finally, in the heads of the workers and of the peasants.

Through all its zig-zags, its delays, its forward-leaps, bureaucratic Centrism has not strengthened the dictatorship of the proletariat, but on the contrary, has increased the danger of Thermidor. Only onwards can fear to name this result out loud. Facts are stronger than words. In order to struggle against imperialist facts, we must call them by their right names. We must also call those responsible by their names; Stalin and his clique.

Why do we speak precisely of Thermidor? Because it is the best known and most complete historical example of a masked counter-revolution which still contains the outward forms and the ritual of the revolution, but which already changes the class content of the state. Here the clever ones will interrupt us, to show their cleverness, "In 18th century France, it was a question of a bourgeois revolution, in 20th century Russia, of a proletarian revolution; social conditions have changed considerably, the world situation has changed, etc., etc." With such commonplace, any Philistine takes on an appearance of extraordinary profundity. For us too, the difference between the October revolution and the Jacobin revolution is no mystery. But that is no reason for turning one's back on history. Lenin wrote in 1903 that the Bolsheviks are Jacobins who are inseparably bound up with the working class. At that time I replied to Lenin explaining in detail the difference between Marxist and Jacobin. My remarks, correct in themselves, completely failed of their purpose. Lenin knew well that Marxist and Jacobin are not the same thing, but it was necessary for a definite reason for him to point out the features which they have in common. Without such methods one can learn absolutely nothing from history.

In the same sense in which Lenin called the Bolsheviks the proletarian Jacobins, we can detect in the reaction against the dictatorship of the proletariat, features of Thermidor. Not every counter-revolution can be compared with Thermidor neither; Kornilov, nor Koltchak, nor Lenin, nor Wrangel had anything in common with Thermidor. In all these cases it was a question of an armed struggle of capitalists and landowners to restore their domination. This danger was repulsed by the proletarian state. Can this danger rise up again? As an independent factor—scarcely. The Russian big bourgeoisie has been destroyed to the roots. The surviving remains could appear on the stage only as the tail-end of a foreign military intervention or of Thermidor.

Of all the past counter-revolutionary movements in the Soviet Union, the Kronstadt rebellion of March 1921 is the closest to Thermidor in type. All the proletarian elements of the Kronstadt garrison had been removed during the three preceding years for the purposes of Soviet construction and the civil war; the best of them had been destroyed. On the ships and in the barracks remained only the immature, half-starved peasant elements. Many of these sailors considered themselves as Bolsheviks, but they did not want the Communists; they were for the Soviets, but without Communists. It was the rebellion of the injured, dissatisfied peasantry, which had lost its patience, against the dictatorship of the proletariat. If the petty bourgeoisie had won, it would have shown its bankruptcy the next day, and its place could only have been taken by the big bourgeoisie. Under the conditions of the present day, that is, of the 20th and not of the 18th century, years would not have been necessary for this; months, even weeks, would have sufficed. The petty bourgeois counter-revolution, which still honestly regards itself as revolution, which does not want the domination of capitalism, but inevitably prepares it—that is Thermidor.

In the Soviet Union, only the peasantry can become a Thermidorian power. For this it is necessary that it seriously separate itself from the proletariat. The destruction of the normal relation between city and village, the administrative collectivization, the compulsory expropriation of agricultural products, confront the peasantry with the Soviet state now no less sharply than in the winter of 1920-21. It is true that the prole-tarial is now numerically much stronger; therein lies the success of industrialization. But the proletariat is completely deprived of an active, watchful Party, capable of action. The apparent Party is without a Marxist leadership. On the other hand, the peasantry has acquired an organization for resistance against the Soviet state, in the form of the kolkhozes. The abolition of the "smychka" which was beginning to be formed, threatens to break the political alliance between proletariat and peasantry. Precisely therein lies the source of the danger of Thermidor.

We must not represent the matter to ourselves in such a way, that the break must be marked by a very exact social line; on the one side the peasants, on the other, the workers. The peasant masses surround and interlock with the proletariat from all sides. In the proletariat itself there are millions who have just come from the village. Finally, the open mistakes of the policies of the leadership, the shipwreck of bureaucratic adventurism, the absence of a clear orientation, the absolute choking-off of workers democracy—all this makes even the genuine worker accessible to the pressure of petty-bourgeois ideology. therein lies the second source of danger of Thermidor.

But we also must not think that the line of fracture will have to go somewhere between the party on the one hand, and the peasantry and a part of the working class on the other. No—the line of Thermidor would inevitably have to pass through the party itself. In his will, Lenin wrote, "Our party is supported by two classes. For this reason, an upset of its stability is possible, and if no agreement between both classes can exist, the breakdown of the party is inevitable.... In such a case, no measures could prevent a split (of the party—L. J.); but I confidently expect such a possibility will prove too remote, such an event too improbable, to need to be discussed." Lenin in those days expressed the certainty that ten to twenty years of correct policy toward the peasantry would assure the victory of the proletarian revolution on the world scale. Precisely for this reason he thought—and we all did too—that the perspectives of Thermidor were not only far off, but also highly improbable.

Of the ten to twenty years indicated by Lenin, ten have already passed. On the field of the international revolution, the counter-revolution during this period has reaped only defeats. Today, in spite of the exceptionally favorable objective conditions, Communism and consequently the international revolution is weaker than at the time when Lenin wrote his will. In addition, the danger of a split between the two classes on which the dictatorship in the USSR rests, has been extraordinarily acute.

In spite of the great difficulties, there is nothing in the economic situation of the country which cannot be repaired. But something is needed to do the repairing—a party is needed. But a party in the true sense of the word does not exist. There is an organization, which formally includes millions and millions of members and candidates. Both members and candidates have no rights. In the tight limits of the party there are in fact the terrorized elements of two parties, the proletarian and the Thermidorian. Above them rises the bureaucracy. It bears the responsibility for the mistakes in economic policy, for the undermining of the "smychka". It bears a still heavier responsibility for choking the party. At the same time, as through its policy it confronts hostilely the peasantry and the state, it has politically disarmed and split up the proletariat. Not only do the workers physically wander from one factory to another, but politically too they find no permanent place.

It would be false to assume that the line of the Thermidorian split must pass between the Stalinist apparatus and the Right wing of the party. No—it must pass through the apparatus itself. What percentage of Bessedovsky's and Agabekov's does it contain? That, even the betrayers of tomorrow do not know. All depends on the relation of forces outside of the apparatus. It needs only a sufficient blow from the petty bourgeoisie for the bureaucratic Thermidorians to recognize themselves and to leap over the wall that separates them from the class enemy. Therein lies the third source of danger of Thermidor.

But, someone from the Stalinists or their admirers will say, "Don't you see that the C. C. is preparing to purge the party of the Right wingers? Just this proves that Stalin is taking measures against Thermidor." "No", we will answer, "the bureaucratic 'purging' only facilitates the work of Thermidor." The new purging, like all those that have preceded it in the course of the past ten years, will be directed primarily against the Left Opposition, and in general against the thinking and the most critical proletarian elements. In spite of the official slogan, "The main danger is to the Right"—Rykov too repeats this formulation now—prisons and places of exile are being filled primarily with Left Oppositionists. Still, even when the blows fall on the Right wing they do not strengthen the Party but weaken it. Among the Right wing, besides the truly Thermidorian elements, there are hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, who are profound enemies of a capitalist restoration, but who demand the revision of the whole policy from the standpoint of the working masses in city and village. The program of these Right wingers is confused. They can for a time support Thermidor; but they can also support the revivification of the party by the revolutionary way. The Stalinist bureaucracy prevents them from understanding the situation. Through its "purging" it endeavors first of all to choke off critical thinking. Thereby it only strengthens the Right wing.

And who will do the purging? In Paris, Bessedovsky led the commission that "purged" Rakovsky. Let us never forget this. Since then the demoralization of the apparatus has gone further. In all the letters which we receive from the USSR, the most tragic note is this: "No one has confidence in another; everyone is afraid that a class enemy with a party card is next to him." Louder than anyone else, the careerists, the adventurers, the Bessedovskys and the Agabekovs will shout about the necessity for a purging. But who will purge the party of these purgers? Not the apparatus, but only the irreconcilable enemies of the absolutism of the apparatus.

Is the situation hopeless? Such words do not belong to our vocabulary. The struggle will decide. On the side of the proletarian revolution, there are many historical possibilities, negative ones; the dreadful decay of capitalism, the raging quarrels of the imperialists, the bankruptcy of reformism, as well as positive ones: the hardened cadres of the Bolshevik-Leninists, understanding the course of development, clear perspectives. The struggle will decide. The danger has grown and has come nearer—that is absolutely unquestionable. But the poison of Thermidor carries within itself too the elements of the antidote. The more immediate and the nearer the danger, the stronger becomes the need of resistance. The more the Stalinist bureaucracy loses its head, and the more its omnipotence proves to be only apparent power, the louder will be the demands of the advanced workers for a Bolshevik leadership.

The last speech of Stalin—we come back to this—means a turn to the Right. Every phrase of his bureaucratic boasting is only a concealed recognition of the falsehood of the whole "general line", which has brought the dictatorship nearer to Thermidor. The diseases and dangers will be treated by Stalin through a new bureaucratic zig-zag amidst redoubled bureaucratic terror. A redoubled struggle against Stalinism will be our answer.

Prinkipo, January 11, 1933

—LEON TROTSKY.

Hitler in Power; Civil War Starts

(Continued from page 1)

Hitler today is in a better position than the Hitler of several months ago. Hitler out of office has only his own forces at his disposal, the "illegal" detachments of black reaction. Hitler in office has the opportunity of strengthening the inchoate mass of demoralized petty bourgeoisie, students, and duped proletarians who compose his forces. Hitler in office has the opportunity of really creating a powerful military force. It is not yet too late to smash Hitler and Fascism—only renegades and scoundrels will speak that way to the still undetected working class of Germany. The decisive battle is still ahead. But it is now clear beyond dispute that the warnings of the International Left Opposition, the demand it made that Hitlerism be smashed before it reached the seats of power—were justified a thousand times over. Had the slogan of the Left Opposition for a genuine united front of the Communists, socialists and the trade unions, been realized in life at the right time, many, many months ago, the Fascist monster would have been crushed like an eggshell and the revolutionary movement of the proletariat would have been far ahead on the road to victory.

Who bears the responsibility for the rise to power of Fascism? It is high time to draw the balance sheet and draw it completely.

Above all and in the first place, the leadership of the yellow social democracy. The course embarked upon in August 1914 has been crowned with the triumph of Hitlerism. It is the social democracy which first turned the masses into the slaughter house of the world war in the name of the imperialist fatherland. It is the social democracy, which defended the monarchy until the last moment, when Scheidemann proclaimed the republic from the balcony of the Reichstag only in order to restrain the forces of the social revolution. It is the social democracy which sent Noske to Kiel to prevent the insurrectionary sailors from proclaiming the Red republic. It is in the name of the social democracy that Noske the Bloodhound martyred the Berlin working class during the heroic days of the Spartacist uprising in 1919. It is the social democracy which sent Goering to slaughter the workers of Central Germany in 1921. It is the social democracy which joined with the reaction in 1923 to strangle the rising revolutionary movement in Saxony and Thuringia.

It is the social democracy which dragged its followers down to the lowest depths of degradation, giving active or "tolerant" support to one reactionary regime after another. It is the social democracy which made possible Brüning of the Emergency Decrees. It is the social democracy which dragged the workers into the shameful policy of the "lesser evil", during which it seated in the presidential chair the present patron of Hitler—Paul von Hindenburg, generalissimo of the Kaiser's imperial armies during the war, and candidate of the social democratic "Iron Front", "bulwark of the Republic against Fascism" in 1931.

At every stage of its development in the past years, the social democracy paved the road for the march to power of Fascism, by dividing the ranks of the working class, by tying it to the chariot of the bourgeoisie, by bringing demoralization and confusion into the proletariat, by weakening it physically and morally so that its power of resistance to Fascism was appreciably lessened. Hitler will reward it for its services with the same contemptuous kick which its Italian colleagues received from Mussolini for their equally invaluable services to Fascism.

Stalinist Blunders

But the social democracy has not been the only force in the ranks of the proletariat that has served the interests of Fascism. It must be said straight out that without the criminal blundering of the Stalinist leadership of the Communist International and of the German Communist Party, the Fascist hordes would not today be in the favorable position they actually occupy. The party had the matchless opportunity of mobilizing the masses of the German proletariat around the militant banner of the class struggle. It stubbornly refused to seize the opportunity. The Left Opposition was the very first to sound the alarm signal that Fascism threatened, that it had to be crushed by the united front of all the workers' organizations. We demanded that the Communist party initiate the movement for a real united front of all the workers to smash the Brown Shirts. Our demands fell on the deaf ears of the Stalinist bureaucracy. The latter operated on the theory of the "third period" and "social Fascism". No better assistance could have been offered to the Fascists on the one hand, and the Social democratic leaders on the other. Instead of building a solid front with their class brothers in the social democracy, the Communists were forced by the Stalinist leadership to enter into an indecent nationalistic competition with the Nazis.

Fate of World Revolution in Balance

The party reconstructed its program to read a "program of national and social emancipation". It allowed itself to be poisoned by the "national-Bolshevism" and anti-Semitism of the Lieutenant Scherfingers. It alienated itself from the socialist masses by its criminal support of the Fascist referendum in Prussia. While the Fascists were gaining victory after victory, the party confined itself to the sterile ultimatum policy of demanding that the socialist workers concede in advance the leadership of the Communist party or else there would be no united front. The minds of the class conscious militants were hopelessly befuddled by the irresponsible Stalinist declarations that the Brüning regime was already the victory of Fascism, then, that the von Papen regime and finally the von Schleicher regime, were all the rule of the Fascism. In this manner, the vigilance of the proletariat was relaxed, its attention was diverted from the real danger, its strength was not mobilized and consolidated. When the elections showed a momentary decline of Fascism several months ago, the bureaucracy became intoxicated with its purely parliamentary successes and the parliamentary decline of the Nazis, and announced with smug self-contentment that the acute Fascist danger was at an end. The parliamentary crisis in the Stalinist ranks did not, in this case, rise above the level of their socialist brothers-under-the-skin.

The Maryland Leader, socialist organ, proclaimed in its headlines in November: "Hitler Through in Germany". The Stalinist press rang with the same refrain. At that time we warned the bureaucratic optimists in the columns of the Militant (November 12, 1932) not to "roar with vicarious pride over the party's gains in Germany as if the loss of two million Fascist votes and almost a million socialist votes had settled the whole problem". We emphasized how erroneous was the idea "that the Fascist danger to the German proletariat is now eliminated or even definitely on the decline. Such a conclusion can be drawn only by those for whom the class struggle begins at the ballot box and ends with a parliamentary mandate".

Unbelievable as it might appear, the Daily Worker, as late as last Monday, that is, on the very day of Hitler's appointment to the Chancellorship, declared that "the tactics pursued by von Schleicher of splitting the Hitler party, have also caused widespread disintegration in the ranks of the National Socialist party, with several of Hitler's chief lieutenants breaking away from their allegiance to him" (Our emphasis). Both Schleicher and von Papen did indeed negotiate with some of Hitler's lieutenants, but only in the hope of drawing Hitler into a cabinet in an entirely subordinated position. Hitler was too wise to fall into the snare, and that is why all the "breaking away" of some lieutenants had no appreciable significance. The Daily Worker merely mistook Hitler's strength, his plan of campaign for the taking over of the government, for the "widespread disintegration" of Fascism! This is the way in which the Stalinists put the masses on the alert against the Fascist danger. This is how they refuted the thousand-times-over corroborated analyses of comrade Trotsky and the Left Opposition!

The news dispatches, which are so annoyingly inadequate and unclear, declare that the Communist and social democratic parties have formed a united front in Berlin, with eight socialists and seven Communists on the Committee of Action to resist Hitlerism; also, that the Communist party has issued the call for a general strike. It is still too early to comment on the exact nature or significance of these reports, for the superfluity and unreliability of the bourgeois press is only too well known.

United Front Imperative
But it is not too early to declare that unless a genuine united front of the Communist party, the social democracy, the socialist trade unions, the Reichsbanner and the Communist Red Front Fighters, is immediately formed, unless the Communists immediately take the initiative in calling for this united front and compel the social democratic leaders to enter into it—the results will be catastrophic not only for the German working class, but for the working class movement of the whole world, for the Communist International, and the Soviet Union!

A crushing defeat for the working class of Germany means a crushing defeat of the Communist party, for it is the first organization against which the attacks of the brigands of Hitler's shock troop detachments—assisted by the armed forces of the state—will be directed. A mortal blow at the German Communist Party, means the breaking of the backbone of the Communist International, and for this calamity we declare that the Stalinist leadership of the International will have been primarily responsible. A lasting triumph of Fascism in Germany, furthermore, is inconceivable without an armed attack upon the Soviet Union. Fascism in Germany can maintain itself in the face of chauvinist France only if it becomes the vanguard of the imperialist intervention against the arch-enemy of imperialism—the Soviet Union. The consequences of a Fascist triumph are thus, it is easy to see, of far-reaching historical import for the whole ensuing period.

That is why the Left Opposition cries out today more loudly than ever: The Communist International must speak out in the language of Lenin, in defense of the international proletarian revolution, in defense of the German working class. It must speak out for the mobilization of the world proletariat to crush the monster of Fascism in Germany. It must speak out to say how this is to be done, for it can be done successfully in only one way: by the establishment of a Leninist united front of the whole German proletariat.

To smash Fascism is an obligation and task of the workers everywhere. Upon the class conscious militants and the Communist workers in this country, devolves the solemn duty of joining with the Left Opposition to force that turn in party policy which is now so absolutely imperative, without which the worst calamities are ahead. Our call to the party to form the united front to smash Fascism before it took the governmental helm—was not heeded, and the proletariat in Germany and the rest of the world has been set back accordingly. Today again we repeat: It is not too late! But the time to act is now!

The fate of the German working class, of the Communist International, of the Soviet Union, of the world revolution, hangs in the balance!

—MAX SHACHTMAN.

Shall the Revolutionary Students Be Organized Into Separate Movements

DISCUSSION ARTICLE

The existence for some time now of the National Students League in the United States, organized through the instrumentality of the Communist party and YCL, requires from the Left Opposition a fundamental statement of its attitude toward the NSL. Can the Communists stand by quietly when there is formed an independent students' organization, with its own programmatic policy? Moreover, can Communists assist in, and be responsible for, the formation of such independent student organizations?

The recent activities of the NSL and its assumption of various roles in the class struggle bring this question sharply to the forefront and demand a clear enunciation of policy on our part. The organization recently of the Students League of Canada only adds to the need for clarification on the question. The writer presents his views here in sketchy form in order to initiate a discussion which will speed the adoption of a position by the Left Opposition. Communists in principle, must oppose, in our opinion, the formation of an independent or separate organization of either the students or the intellectuals. This position, which has been the principle position of the Communists and the Young Communist International in theses adopted at the second congress of the Y. C. L., requires no revision today.

Role of Students

The students have no independent role to play in society and require no separate organization. The division of the students may be roughly made into rich, middle class or petty-bourgeois and proletarian students. Even so, the particular social, economic and political positions of these groupings in society negate any idea that these groups can have an independent role in the class struggle as student groups. Our concern here is mainly with the proletarian students who have historically no interests separate and apart from the industrial proletariat, from the working class as such. The proletarian students to be at all effective in the labor movement, must link themselves organizationally and politically with the vanguard of the revolutionary movement—the Communist party and the YCL, and conduct such activities as they are able to on a Communist program. The Communist student would necessarily, therefore, direct his energies primarily among the proletarian students.

The matter becomes even clearer when it is seen that the National Students League and the Students League of Canada are not formed on the basis of a "broad" student organization which supposedly might appeal to all classes of students for the preservation of student rights and needs on the campus, or conduct "general propaganda" and education for liberal, socialist or revolutionary ideas. Both Student Leagues, on the contrary, recognize the weakness of such a position and make their appeal on a "revolutionary" or even "Communist" basis. In fact, they regard themselves as Communist student organizations. The Spark, official organ of the Students League of Canada, is most clear and explicit on the matter of the character of its appeal to the student body. In the issue of December 1932, the Spark editorially says:

"...The majority of students...are not members of the proletariat, even though a good many come from working class homes. Because of this fact Marxism, however logical, can have no appeal to most university students for it is inimical to the interests of their class. Accordingly, the Students League has no illusions regarding the student body as a whole.... We only aim to attract the small number of students who see an identity between their interests and those of the working class and who are, therefore, willing to take an active part in the working class movement. After all, a few active members are far more valuable than a passive recognition of the validity of our views from the majority of the student body—and again on this latter score we have no illusions." (Our emphasis).

What the Spark says is correct. But if there is this identity of interests between the students minority, that is, the proletarian students and the workers, then why a separate organization? What are those special tasks of so-called revolutionary or Communist student organizations which cannot better and more correctly be performed in the revolutionary political organization of the youth—the Young Communist League? In our opinion, none; and such an independent student organization can only lead to confusion and malpractices in the revolutionary movement, and bring about just the opposite results from those intended, as will be shown.

The Communist Left Opposition particularly has every reason to reject the organization of separate students organizations. The Left Opposition, in its condemnation of the Stalinists, has stated often, and correctly, its opposition in principle to the creation of so-called "anti-imperialist" Leagues, "peasants' parties," "workers and peasants parties," labor or Farmer-Labor parties, etc., etc. We condemn the formation of these bodies on the ground that they usurp, or attempt to, the role legitimately and necessarily belonging to the Communist party, and, further, that every concession to the formation and activity of such organizations brings successive betrayals of the working class, emasculates and caricatures the revolutionary position, and weakens or destroys the Communist party or YCL. In short, the theoretical position of the Left Opposition, based on historical experiences, refuses to attribute an independent or revolutionary role to such hodge-podge bodies. Our attitude toward the NSL and the Students League of Canada must flow clearly from our fundamental position to analogous organizations in other fields. In the case of an independent students organization, the issue is even plainer.

The Left Opposition contends that the role of a "peasants' party," an "anti-imperialist League," a "four class Kuo Min Tang," a Labor party, etc., proves in every case to be false to, a betrayal of, and reactionary in relation to the working class as a whole, and also, thereby, to the Communists and their organizations, the C. P. and YCL. In such cases, where "independent" organizations like the NSL pretend to a "revolutionary", even Communist position, they place themselves directly in the road of the genuine revolutionization of the proletarian students who, if they accept the revolutionary, the Communist position, should join the organization of their class, the YCL, and function actively therein in their allotted tasks. Wittingly or otherwise, the "revolutionary" position of the NSL, sponsored and organized by the YCL, actually forms a bulwark against—and not a bridge to—students joining the YCL. Yet what is demanded of them in the way of profession of belief and activity in the NSL that is not demanded of them in the YCL—minus the discipline required of a member of the YCL? Little or nothing, under ordinary circumstances.

It is demonstrated, not merely in theory but by numerous practices, that when the students or intellectuals undertake tasks, in lieu of no objection by others, which are not theirs historically and which they cannot properly execute—they bungle the job badly, confuse and mislead the workers, ignore the revolutionary position and, by default, usurp the role which only a C. P. or YCL can undertake. They are not to blame, since no one says they may, and, worse yet, the Communists themselves urge them on in their false steps.

MARTIN ABBERN.

(To be continued)

How Far Will The Stalinists Go?

Close observation of the recent zig-zags in the party's united front policy would lead one to draw one of the following conclusions: 1. That the Stalinists have set themselves the task of deviating the united front tactic; 2. That the mad zig-zag results from utter confusion; 3. That they are caught in the contradiction of a fundamentally wrong course hitherto pursued. Discounting the first which would be true only if Stalinism had already severed its weak bonds with the working class one must accept the second and third explanation.

We, in Chicago, are rather fortunate in having been able to watch and in some cases participate in every shade of united front conference, from the ultra-Left sectarian, vest-pocket, united front "from below" species, to the ultra-Right opportunist policy in the present aldermanic election campaign. But our good fortune lies, perhaps, after all in being able to participate in the genuine united front movement which defeated the threatened 50 percent cut in unemployed relief.

The Change in Chicago

The Oct. 16th conference marked the first faltering step of the party, away from the "below" policy. Suddenly, out of the clear sky, amid the loud chanting of ultra-Left hymns "from below", the party found itself faced with the dilemma of either participating in the united front movement together with other ORGANIZATIONS and thus deviate from the line thus far followed, or boycott the impending united front of the Workers' League and the Workers' Committee and thus disgrace itself completely. It wisely chose to participate and later tried to justify itself by a process of rationalization. All at once the Stalinists decided to run the risk of staining their simon purity and sat at the same table with reformist leaders whom it had a moment ago stigmatized as "social-fascists". The victory won by this unity of action proved the correctness of the Left Opposition's position on the united front. But in no way can the success of the united front be credited to the party. The fact is that the party leaders were forced into the united front in the same way as were the socialist leaders. And it must also be remembered that if anyone came near wrecking the Conference, it was none other than the party's representative, Williamson, with his provocative speech, previously commented on in the Militant.

So great was the force of this united front that it shook the party out of its political lethargy and resulted in the Verblin-Williamson polemic in the December Communist. For the first time in years, were the pages of the Communist invaded by heterodox opinion. Verblin actually succeeded in setting forth his views which, while not drawing 100 percent political conclusions, nevertheless presented an essentially correct position on the united front. While Williamson and other party sages labored to refute Verblin and justify their own position,

The Swing to Opportunism in Chicago

The customary fervor was noticeably lacking. Certainly the "Leninist leadership" could not afford to have its infallibility questioned. Self-preservation still remains the first law of nature, politically as well as biologically.

Subsequent events seem to point however to the possibility that the first step away from the "below" policy in Chicago has resulted in a national turn. The recent call for a united front in New York seems to point in that direction. It is quite possible that the Stalinists have decided to scrap at least part of the "below" policy secretly and without the knowledge of the party membership and start a turn to the Right. If this be so then we have much to fear. Under the Stalinist leadership the party proceeds in its turns in a very similar fashion to that of the proverbial drunken sailor who, in attempting to make progress, reels and staggers from the wall on the one side of the road to the ditch on the other. The results of the 1928-29 turn are still fresh in our minds. There is no telling to what opportunist extremes the present Right turn will carry the party. In this respect recent experiences in Chicago are rather indicative.

Students Congress against War

That the "anti-war" adventure would turn out to be a great farce was evident from the start. In sheer despair over the utter impossibility of creating a single "below" united front, the International Stalinist leadership conceived the Amsterdam substitute which no sooner flickered up than it went up in smoke; but not before begetting the Chicago miscarriage in the form of the Student Congress. Engineered by the young Stalinists, this Congress carefully segregated the students from the working class youth. The YCL, with its formally "Communist" anti-war program was very conspicuous by not having even a single delegate, in spite of the fact that it was the YCL that really organized the whole thing. Instead they preferred to masquerade behind the Students League which, proceeding along pacifist lines to the last moment, was planning to organize a permanent anti-war organization using the Anti-Imperialist League as a model.

The intervention of the Left Opposition youth was the intervention of the subjective factor which prevented downright degeneration into pacifism and forced the adoption of a formally "correct" though still treacherously ambiguous resolution in the end. But our intervention was insufficient to make something decisive out of this Congress. In their haste to record another paper achievement, the young Stalinists and the old ones to for that matter, forgot to do a very simple thing: they completely forgot to raise a concrete issue for the united front. They came to the congress to work out an anti-war PROGRAM with the socialists and pacifists. The result of course was that no unity was achieved on any point. Like its deceased progenitor, this Congress gave up its ghost as soon as the last session was adjourned. The silence of the Stalinist press on the "achievements" of this Congress, is more eloquent than any words in proving their disappointment in the whole affair. From our standpoint, quick death is the best thing that could happen to an unnatural monstrosity of this sort.

The Aldermanic Elections

Having stumbled over the anti-war fiasco on the Right, does not seem to have dampened their spirits. On the contrary Stalinism in Chicago continues to career madly further to the Right, plunging into the swamp of opportunism up to the neck. Bourgeoisie tradition would have it, that in Chicago, Aldermanic candidates do not run on party tickets. In actual practice this is of course not followed and all candidates are supported by one party or the other. But suddenly the Communist party has voluntarily become the dupe of this parliamentary subterfuge.

Instead of running candidates on its own ticket in the various wards, the party has resorted to other measures. United front conference were called in some wards by some mysterious "united front of workingmen's organization" and anonymously in other wards to nominate a "workers' candidate". At these conferences, any worker regardless of his organizational affiliation who agrees to the proposed platform and received the majority of the votes of the delegates present, would stand as the candidate that the party would support. Unfortunately the platform consists entirely of minimum immediate demands on which a Socialist or any bourgeois demagogue could run just as well as a Communist.

In one ward on the South Side this almost came to pass. It happened that a bank clerk of a decidedly bourgeois turn of mind almost received the nomination. Had that happened, the Communist party would either have had to keep its promise and support a bourgeois candidate or break its "pledge" and place a Communist rival in the field. One may well shudder at the consequences of a consistent policy flowing from the party's premise.

Moreover, the policy seems to be to hide the face of the party as much as possible in the present campaign. In this connection, the following anecdote, related to the writer by a party sympathizer is of interest. This sympathizer was one night visited by a comrade which requested him to sign a petition for a "workers' candidate" for alderman. Upon inquiry as to the party affiliation of the candidate, the committee replied that he was not connected with any political party. Asked specifically whether this candidate was a Communist, the committee emphatically denied it. Whereupon this sympathizer refused to give his signature. The following night another committee came to see him about signing for the same candidate. They behaved in exactly the same manner as the first committee, and again did not receive the man's signature. Only after inquiry among party members of his acquaintance, was the secret finally divulged to this man that the candidate is a Communist.

To such depths of parliamentary opportunism has the Stalinist leadership dragged the party—to a united Labor ticket forsooth. In vain it seems, did the Second Congress of the C. I. elaborate a thesis on Communist parliamentary tactics. In vain all the writings of Lenin, Luxemburg and Liebknecht against the parliamentary opportunism of the Second International. It is all lost on the Stalinists.

But after all the present tactics in Chicago differ from the tactics in the presidential election campaign only in degree. Whereas in the presidential elections the revolutionary aim of the party were carefully avoided and all emphasis laid on six badly chosen reformist demands; the Chicago campaign has gone to the extent of avoiding the open and clear mention of the party. And having gone to the limit to this extent, who knows where they will stop?

All the greater is the responsibility of the Left Opposition at this moment. All the greater must be our efforts to swing back the party to the correct path. A gigantic task no doubt. The coarse mocking voice of Stalin at the 15th Congress is heard across the years: "Just imagine a small boat which can hardly float on the surface of the sea... and imagine a splendid steamer which majestically cuts through the waves and advances with full confidence. What would you say if this small boat should come to save this huge steamer?" Laughter greeted this asinine humor. Laughter of officials who had ignorantly and bureaucratically sent away the trained helmsmen and navigators in a small boat together with the charts and compass. And this in the name of the passengers' interests. The "advance with full confidence" has now become a blind drift towards dangerous shoals. Only the intervention of the "small boat" can prevent political disaster on the reefs of opportunism.

Chicago, Ill. —N. SATIE.

THE MILITANT

Entered as second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th St., N. Y.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabeck

Vol. 6, No. 5 Whole No. 152
SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1933

Confusion Marks Stalinist Policy on Fight Against War

(Continued from last issue)

We pointed out that it was impossible for the students to play any independent role, but that it must lend its support to the revolutionary workers. This statement made a good impression upon the Communist delegates and threw the leaders of the congress into a state of horror. The corridor remarks on the "activity of the god-damn Trotskyites" began. The Stalinists considered giving the Opposition delegates the bum's rush out of the congress. We have no doubt as to the discomfort of the Stalinists. Our presence was unquestionably a thorn in their side and they would have preferred to refuse us admission. But in attempting to make the congress extremely broad (it could hardly have been broader) they could not very well raise the question of the admission of Oppositionists without at once causing a struggle on the floor. The Opposition was represented by thirteen regular delegates, (three sympathizers who were regular delegates) and four alternate delegates. This small group was the clearest political section of the congress.

The first act of the Opposition caucus was a proposal made to the NSL and the YCL for a joint caucus of the Left wing delegates to agree upon policy and present a united action against pacifism and socialism in the congress. Our aim was to fight for the acceptance of a Communist position on the part of the NSL delegates first and then to propose such a policy for adoption by the congress. Our proposal for a joint Left wing caucus was rejected by the Stalinists on the excuse that "it was decided not to hold any caucuses. This congress will not be run by any caucuses!" Actually of course, the refusal was because they would have nothing to do with the Opposition.

The congress divided into groupings at once (as if this was unavoidable). The outstanding tendencies were represented by Communism, socialism and pacifism. At times the struggle between these tendencies were extremely sharp, toward the close of the congress threatening on split. The important day of the congress was the second and final day, since at this session actual resolutions, program and organization would take place. The Opposition caucus in session the night before prepared a general resolution (See Militant No. 2, Vol. 6) on the struggle against war and appended to it one on the defense of the Soviet Union. We reiterated our position as embodied in the statements and added to it the practical proposals also. This resolution was presented to the resolutions committee.

The most important session of the congress was the report of the resolutions committee. Here the congress was presented with a number of minor resolutions that carried without any difficulties. Because no resolutions were prepared in advance, no program was worked up prior to the congress; all of that was done on the congress floor in the midst of the session. At this session the resolutions were run off the mimeograph and discussed simultaneously. With such organization no serious discussion could be held. A resolution supporting the pledge of Amsterdam carried. The Opposition delegates did not vote on this in line with the general position of the Opposition at Amsterdam. Similarly with the resolution on practical activity, we were prepared at a genuine conference to propose a minimum program of activity. For this congress our chief aim was to get the congress to adopt a correct resolution and to recognize that by itself it could do nothing; that it must follow the working class and adopt a program in accordance with revolutionary principles. There is no other way out on the question of war. That is why our resolution stressed fundamentals above all. The surprise of the congress came with the presentation of the main resolution. This resolution, coming upon the pre-congress preparations, the attitude of the leaders of the congress, the early sessions of the congress, was a complete surprise because it marked a decisive change in the right direction. It must be said that in general (we are not concerned at the moment with the practical points contained at the end of the resolution upon which the opposition did not vote) this resolution was correct. It was correct in analyzing the question of war as the product of capitalism, the solution of which will come with the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of a classless society. It was correct in establishing (for the first time) that the students could not play an independent role but must join hands with the working class; it stressed the need of the defense of the Soviet Union; it came out against a permanent organization. The question immediately arises: how is it that the resolution was written in this manner, one which marked a complete right about face? I believe that the NSL was dominated by two factors: had the delegation of the pacifists and socialist been larger or equal to the Communist delegation the resolution would have conformed with the pre-congress preparations, it would have been an opportunist one. But in view of the overwhelming delegation of Communists and Communist sympathizers, the organizers of the congress felt at ease in the presentation of a revolutionary position. In addition, the Left Opposition, which had its material in the hands of all the delegates and put pressure upon the Communists, was a strong factor.

The efforts of the leaders of the NSL to laugh off the influence of the Opposition fails miserably when it is recalled how insistent they were in making clear that no resolutions were prepared beforehand, and in defending the whole pre-congress period. One must read the main resolution of the congress alongside a copy of the Opposition resolution to see how on the political questions, the similarity is marked. We insist that the resolutions committee which had no resolution of its own, plagiarized the resolution of the Opposition which was not read to the congress. The resolution did not contain every point of the Opposition resolution, but the main ones were present in it. Because of the manner in which the congress was proceeding the Opposition delegates felt that it was well-nigh impossible to read our resolution from the floor, and because of similarity of the main political views expressed in the congress resolution it was decided to withhold the struggle from the floor. However, several amendments were made by us. Our amendment to include unconditional defense of the Soviet Union in the main resolution was defeated primarily through the active intervention of the YCL delegates who feared that this would create unnecessary schisms in the congress. But a lengthy amendment presented by one of the Canadian delegates (Canadian Students League) taken from the resolution of the Opposition (See Militant, No. 2, Vol. 6, "The present world crisis... who alone can overthrow capitalism") was accepted by the congress. On the resolution calling for the recognition of the Soviet Union, an amendment introduced by an Opposition delegate for the issuance of the slogan of "economic collaboration with and the extension of long term credits to the Soviet Union" was rejected, once again, by the interference of the YCL delegates (the YCL delegates referred to, represented the National Students League).

(To be continued)
—ALBERT GLOTZER.

JAPAN

Its Rise from Feudalism to Capitalist Imperialism and the Development of the Proletariat

By Jack Weber

(Continued from last issue)

It is a far cry from the peaceful, agitational phase of the Japanese labor movement at the time of the Russo-Japanese War to the necessarily stern and virile movement of the present time. At that time the Japanese Social Democrats wrote their famous greetings to the Russian comrades despite the reality of the imperialist war into which both governments had plunged the two nations. The Japanese workers, struggling against nationalist jingoism and capitalist imperialism, understood clearly the international aspect of their movement. Yet they had not advanced beyond the stage where they could say: "We are neither nihilists nor terrorists, but we are Social Democrats. We object absolutely to using military force in our fighting. We have to fight by peaceful means, by reason and speech." Lenin replied to these historic greetings in Iskra and his words stand out today, the day of open violence and organized terror against the Japanese workers, in startling boldness and with striking applicability: "Amid the jingoistic chorus of both countries, their voice sounds as a herald from that better world, which, though it exists today only in the mind of the class-conscious proletariat, will become a reality tomorrow. We do not know when that 'tomorrow' will come. But we, the Social Democrats the world over, are all working to bring it nearer and nearer. We are digging a grave for the miserable today—the present social order. We are organizing the forces which will finally bury it. Force against force, violence against violence! And in saying this we speak neither as nihilists, nor as terrorists... What is important for us is the feeling of solidarity, which the Japanese comrades have expressed in their message to us. We send them a hearty greeting. Down with militarism! Hail to the international social democracy!"

THE EPOCH OF WARS AND REVOLUTIONS

Ours is a stormy epoch, an epoch of profound upheavals. Capitalist civilization, its contradictions laid bare before the entire world, its component parts warring against each other, is bankrupt and threatens chaos unless the vanguard of the workers leads the proletariat along the only road out. But leadership is not a mechanical process, it is dynamic and creative and, after clear-sighted analysis of each situation, it must carefully choose the proper weapons for the struggle.

THE GREAT OBSTACLE

The vanguard must know above all how to unite and rally the workers for the march to power. This road remains blocked and impassable so long as the majority of the working class remain under the deadening influence of the reformists and opportunists. Mere denouncing of these misleaders as social fascists, not only does not accomplish anything, but tends to alienate the masses still under the yoke of the reformists. Surely the Japanese Communists, the vanguard of a movement that has from the first shown itself sensitive to the bitter lessons of the international proletariat, have learned from the experience in China with Chiang Kai-Shek, the need for a separate, unified Communist party. But surely also they have learned from a study of the German situation for the past several years, the danger of alienating themselves from the masses, the aid given to the reformist leaders by the Stalinist blunders in united front tactics. In Japan the acuteness of the crisis, the crushing of workers and peasants under the heels of the imperialists, offers an unexampled opportunity to unite the workers in struggle. As in every country, the immediate demands must be for relief for the unemployed and the starving, then the workers must be rallied together to demand unemployment insurance. But particularly in Japan, the struggle for bread can be linked directly with the struggle for peace, against militarism. The workers and peasants starve while the government wastes huge sums to maintain an army of conquest. Remember the rice riots!

SPECIAL TASKS OF THE JAPANESE PARTY

The Japanese face the task, as in no other country, of liberating women through organization, first in unions, then in the Party. Young girls and women form the majority of factory workers, the overwhelming majority of textile workers, Japanese women, like all women of the East, have been kept in virtual slavery in the home as well as in the shops and factories. There has been the duty of unquestioning obedience. It is of utmost significance that divorces in Japan are three times as great in number as in America, the classic land of divorce. The reason for this is the wretched position of the woman in the home. Signs are not lacking that the working women of Japan are learning to throw in their lot with that of the organized workers. But organization of women kept in dormitories is necessarily difficult. All unions can surely be united in the fight against this vicious system which has actually been utilized on occasion to starve women into subjection where they have had the courage to strike.

THE ETA

The second special task of the Communists is to secure the cooperation of the outcaste Etas of Japan. The three million or so Etas have an organization of their own, the Suiseisha or Equality Society. This society with its 200,000 members played an important role in organizing the first labor party. The Etas, rough toilers, not afraid of violence, took a most active part in the rice riots of 1918. They live in separate villages generally shunned by the forces of law and order. The Communists must see to it that these sturdy outcasts are not misled into dissipating their energy entirely in a fight for social equality, important as such a fight is. The Etas are inevitably part of the working class and must be taught the importance of struggling for the interests of the entire working class. At the same time the other workers must prove their willingness to accept the Etas into their organizations on an equal footing.

THE ARMY

Conscription makes of the Japanese army essentially a peasant army with a peasant psychology. The army is at the same time the strength and the weakness of Japanese imperialism. The peasants are not suddenly metamorphosed in the army; they remain the potential rebellion. They cannot help but wonder at the contrast between the misery and starvation in the homes they have just left, and the care taken of their health and "welfare" in the army. As cannon-fodder they are evidently worth far more than as toilers on the land.

The army is the armed peasantry and workers. It is in this sense that Communists must propagandize the army, bringing home the meaning of the contrasts between civilian and military life, showing that the starvation at home is the direct result of the use of the army abroad. The Chinese comrades have in this respect a duty whose fulfillment may prove decisive. They must aid their Japanese comrades to spread Communist propaganda among the troops. It may well be that if the next phase of the Chinese revolution, resulting from the Japanese aggression, once more brings the Chinese proletariat in the arena of struggle. The red heat of the Chinese revolution will communicate its intensity to the Japanese army.

The soldier workers and peasants must be forewarned particularly against their use as tools to set up a Bonaparte to stave off the revolution. The military clan in Japan, the dictators to both the Emperor and the Shadow government ever since the Restoration, is ready to proclaim army rule at a moment's notice. The generals are not lacking in Bonapartist aspirations. The Machiavellian role of the military clique in keeping workers and peasants under the heavy yoke of exploitation by using a special (armed) part of the working class and peasantry, must be emphasized in soldier propaganda. Not Fascism is the danger in Japan but Bonapartism (military "mediation" between the classes) due to the special historic status of the generals. Bourgeois democracy has never been established in reality and hence need not be swept aside.

THE PERMANENT REVOLUTION.

It is unthinkable that the present crisis in Japan can pass without profound changes. It is the extreme instability of Japanese economy that forces the army into Manchuria in search of desperate remedies. The war of conquest threatens to precipitate world war at any moment, on the one hand with the U. S., on the other with the USSR. To the revolutionist, it is utterly out of the question to think of helping to precipitate an imperialist war (between the U. S. and Japan) in order to avoid an attack on the Soviet Union, as has been in the minds of some. Just as inconceivable is it to think of any alliance between the U. S. and the USSR against Japan. Imperialism must be fought on all fronts, more especially on the home front. And if war nevertheless results, the Japanese workers long ago set an example of solidarity for all the world (of workers) to follow.

The revolutionary war out is only through the proletarian revolution. In Japan the situation is a rapidly-changing one. Under mass pressure, the capitalists, to save their own skins, may attempt to lead the workers and peasants against the militarists. The Communist must know in advance how to act in such an eventuality. If the capitalists are permitted to place themselves undisturbed at the head of the peasants, the revolution is doomed to failure. The Communists at the head of the proletariat must teach the peasants to carry out in actuality their real demands—to seize the land, to refuse to pay rents, to repudiate debts—and thus assure the "drone" phase of the revolution. But the proletariat must not stop there. It must, with the aid of the poor, overburdened petty bourgeoisie, establish the dictatorship of the proletariat. The international proletariat, beginning with the Russians, must help in this tremendous task.

THE END.

Pioneer Publishing Fund

This is a period of abrupt turns, says comrade Trotsky in the "Strategy". That is true in our publishing plans too. We were driving along the road of getting Soviet Economy out next. Now comes the German developments. The line of march must be changed. First on the agenda stands "The Only Road". All efforts now must be bent to get it out without delay. Already we have waited too long. That is not because of choice. Money was lacking. But in view of the burning urgency of the German situation the money must be raised. And it must be raised at once.

$50 is the sum necessary. And it must be raised in the shortest possible time. Not next month, or at some vague future time but now! It is our duty to influence the course of the party in this desperate situation. We must act with decision and speed. That is why we ask that all our comrades and sympathizers make the necessary sacrifice to get the book out quickly.

Let the donations pour in. Let them take whatever size and form our comrades can manage. But let them come quickly. Speed is vital. Act quickly. Send funds to Pioneer Publishers, 84 East 10th Street, New York, N. Y.

Militant Builders

THE COPENHAGEN SPEECH

Do you know that the issue containing comrade Trotsky's speech to the social democratic students at Copenhagen was a political sensation? Requests for additional copies are coming in. We want to inform our comrades here that we understand well the burning desire on the part of everyone who reads it to have every one else read it too. That will have to wait now until we get it out in pamphlet form. There are no more of the issue left.

But what is important at the moment now is: what have you done using the opportunity this speech created to get subs on the club plan? Not enough, according to the results that have come to hand. Lack of space forbids us from sermonizing on this theme. Let the records below speak for themselves. Cities and comrades who have improved their records are noted in bold type.

THE RECORD BY CITIES:

NEW YORK	65
Chicago	36
Minneapolis	22
PITTSBURGH	20
Philadelphia	15
Montreal	15
Toronto	10
Boston	10
New Castle, Pa.	8
Youngstown	8
Lynn, Mass.	5
St. Bend, Ind.	5
St. Louis	4
Des Moines	4

IN THE NEXT ISSUE

The next issue of the Militant will contain a report by comrade Cannon of the Gillespie conference of trade unions. Comrade Cannon was the principal speaker at the conference and a mass meeting which followed it.

WORKERS OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Weekly Organ of the Communist League of America [Opposition]

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879

VOLUME VI, NO. 6 [WHOLE NO. 153]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1933

PRICE 5 CENTS

Why Is the Comintern Silent on Germany?

The Militant to Appear Three Times A Week During Drive!

The National Committee Issues A Call to Action to All!

CALL TO ACTION
To all branches, members, and supporters of the Left Opposition.

Dear Comrades:
CONCENTRATE ALL ACTIVITY ON THE GERMAN CAMPAIGN OF THE LEAGUE!

The League is reacting to the German crisis with the greatest campaign in its history. It is precisely at the moment of sharp turns and world-shaking events, when the Centrist bureaucracy reveals its impotence and bankruptcy, that the Left Opposition must show its political initiative, its boldness, and its capacity to multiply its activities many fold. From this point of view the National Committee has already taken a number of decisive steps which are shaking the Communist movement in New York to its foundations.

The first of these actions, and the pivotal point of our campaign, is the decision to publish the MILITANT during the next month THREE TIMES A WEEK!

This decision was made with the greatest deliberation and sobriety and will be carried out in life. It is not a bluff or an empty gesture, and must in no case be so regarded by a single member of the organization. At the time of making the decision we had no money on hand—not a penny, in fact; nothing but pressing bills and obligations. Our resources for the execution of this ambitious plan consist exclusively in the burning world importance of the German crisis and the movement we shall create on the basis of that issue. That is enough.

The correctness of our decision from a practical as well as from a political standpoint was confirmed to the hilt at the magnificent mass meeting of the Left Opposition in New York Sunday. Never since the days following the Russian Bolshevik revolution has New York seen such a meeting—such unrestrained enthusiasm, such a stormy assertion of the spirit of proletarian internationalism. And what is no less significant—one could see by the size of the splendid audience, by its fervid demonstration of support of our campaign, how quickly the Left Opposition, if it acts boldly at the moment of great happenings, can bound forward and rally the Communist workers around its banner. The financial contributions alone—five and ten dollar bills in the fourth year of the crisis!—registered a spirit of sacrifice that stops at nothing; a spirit that has not been seen in the years of Stalinist degeneration.

This glorious beginning of our great campaign filled us all with unbounded confidence that we can carry it through and fulfill our international duty in a manner worthy of a section of the International Left Opposition. The appearance of the MILITANT three times a week in this fateful period cannot fail to electrify the Communist workers, to shake them out of passivity and routine. It cannot fail to awaken them to an understanding that the defense of the German proletariat against the dreadful scourge of Fascism is a matter of days, perhaps of hours. This is our aim—to awaken the Communist workers. This is why we begin our campaign and center it around the triple editions of the MILITANT.

But the struggle of the Left Opposition will not be confined to the literary sphere. Our three-times-a-week MILITANT must be for us not merely the propagandist, but also the agitator and organizer of a great movement, as Lenin said a Communist paper should be. Mass meetings must be held everywhere. Workers meetings, shops, gatherings of every kind must be invaded boldly with the burning message of the Left Opposition on the German crisis. Every member of the organization, and every sympathetic worker, must be mobilized for daily activity to distribute the MILITANT. The whole revolutionary labor movement must be shaken from top to bottom with the message of internationalism.

And now the capacity of the Left Oppositionists for material sacrifices must really assert itself. We expect that every Bolshevik-Leninist will put his duty to the German revolution above every personal consideration and see to it that the funds necessary to assure the steady appearance of the MILITANT on the new schedule are forthcoming without delay. Do this, comrades, do everything, not tomorrow but today!

With Communist Greetings,
National Committee,
Communist League of America
(Opposition)
JAMES P. CANNON,
National Secretary.

500 Workers Pack New York Hall To Hear Opposition on Germany

Despite the bitterly cold weather five hundred workers packed the largest meeting yet held by the Left Opposition in New York to hear our speakers in the Stuyvesant Casino present an analysis of the acute crisis in Germany today. With Martin Abern in the chair, the meeting got under way with a recounting by Max Shachtman of the role played in the victory of Fascism by the treachery of the social democracy, on the one hand, and on the other the criminal policy of blundering pursued by Stalinism in Germany. James P. Cannon dealt with the significance of Fascism, the imminent threat to the Soviet Union and the Communist International. The question of the united front of Communist and social democratic workers and their organizations, for the purpose of crushing Fascism was emphasized in the speeches and the summary. The intense interest of the audience may be gauged by the fact that more than 50 questions were sent up to the chairman by representatives of all tendencies. In summing up, Shachtman pointed out that it was impossible to reply to all the questions; when the proposal was put to call another meeting two weeks later, to discuss the German events further, it was enthusiastically endorsed. Despite this proposal, the floor was given to a spokesman for the official Communist party who offered a sad example of the mis-education of the Communist workers by Stalinism. Not only was a good collection taken, running close to $100., but those in attendance, amongst them being several score party members and Lovestonite sympathizers, voted with enthusiastic unanimity (save for four contrary votes!) for the following resolution which was put for adoption:

This mass meeting of 500 workers assembled at Stuyvesant Casino at the call of the Communist League of America (Opposition), raises its voice in vigorous condemnation of a regime of Fascism in Germany and declares its unyielding solidarity with the struggle of the German working class against the Hitlerist monster. We appeal urgently to the Communist party and the Communist International to take cognizance of the critical situation and fulfill its responsibility by leading the German working class to the victorious struggle against Fascism, employing the tactic of the united front as it has been expounded by Lenin and after him by the International Left Opposition.

We appeal to the Communist Party of the United States to initiate at once a series of huge united front demonstrations against the Hitler regime and to demand of the Socialist party and the trade unions that they take part in this single united front movement of the American workers in solidarity with the embattled proletariat of Germany.

Long live the united front of the working class!
Down with the Fascist murderers!
Long live the German proletarian revolution!

Now more than ever we demand the return to the Soviet Union and to the party of Leon Trolsky and Christian Rakovsky, the leaders of the International Left Opposition and the proletarian world revolution!

(Six votes were cast against this resolution by show of hands, whereas the rest of the several hundreds present voted enthusiastically for it.)

Opposition at Gillespie

League's View Triumphs at Progressive Miners Conference

170 delegates, more than a half of whom came from the locals of the Progressive Miners of America, assembled at the conference in Gillespie, Illinois, on January 29 in response to the call of the Gillespie Trades and Labor Council to discuss the project of a new federation of labor. The representation at the conference and the sentiments expressed by the great majority of the delegates gave a most emphatic confirmation to the estimate which the Militant had made of the new movement and of the proposal to organize a new trade union center. The conference revealed most convincingly that the organizational basis for a new general labor movement is by no means sufficient at the present time, and the project was taken off the agenda. Instead of that, a realistic program of agitation to coordinate the work of militants inside and outside the A. F. of L. was adopted.

A Mistake Avoided
This outcome of the conference should be a matter of great satisfaction to the militants throughout the country who warmly support the new rise of the progressive miners' movement and who feared that it might handicap itself at the beginning by a dangerous mistake. At the same time, both by its size and by its spirit, the conference refuted those conservative and sterile formalists, such as the Right wing Communists, who look upon the Progressive Miners organization as simply another unfortunate split. The conception of the Stalinists that Progressive Miners of America is just another edition of the Lewis type of union could likewise find nothing to nourish it at the Gillespie conference.

The P. M. of A., whose locals furnished the driving force and the bulk of the delegates at the Gillespie Conference, is a movement pulsing with life. It is calling out new resources of proletarian energy and militancy, new hope and vision. In the course of epic struggles it is throwing up a cadre of new leaders from among the young miners who, if they still lack experience and ease of orientation in complicated problems, are by that uncorrupted and unspolied by the deadening routine, conservatism, and treachery of the old bureaucracy. Behind them is a surging militant rank and file. From all these aspects one who looks at the Gillespie conference with a clear eye can see that although it could not constitute the basis for a new labor federation, it did nevertheless, represent a significant step on the path of a regenerated labor movement, and contained forces which are destined to be a dynamic factor in advancing that movement.

The program adopted by the conference tallied very closely with that of the advanced Left wing labor elements nearly everywhere. Industrial unionism, shorter work day, unemployment insur-

Hitlerites Move Forward; Communists Mark Time

Nine days have passed since the Austrian adventurer, Hitler, was appointed Chancellor of the German Republic by the social democratic "Bulwark against Fascism" President Paul von Hindenburg. To sum up this brief period into which so much has been condensed, we must say:

The forces of reaction, and primarily the forces of Fascism have been enormously strengthened and consolidated, become more insolent and audacious.

The forces of proletarian resistance to the triumph of Fascism have not yet rallied into serried ranks. The social democracy still plays its treacherous role of "watchful waiting", which is synonymous with a passivity that plays into the hands of a relentlessly advancing Fascist. The Communists have not yet been able to stir out of that impotence with which the pernicious policy of sectarianism paralyzes it.

In a word, right in the midst of a situation where days are substituted for months and years, where hours count in place of days, the Fascists are gaining in strength and strategic position, while the Communists, who alone can lead a genuine struggle to smash the brown-shirted monster, are marking time, demoralized and not knowing in which direction to move.

The Comintern is Silent!

And above everything else, with nine precious, crucial, fateful days already gone by, the general staff of the world revolution, the leadership of the revolutionary movement, the Executive Committee of the Communist International—IS SILENT! Instead of guidance to the Communists and the militant working class of Germany in this zero hour—the Communist International preserves an ominous silence. Instead of a ringing call to arms, which the Communist International is duty-bound to issue at such a moment—Moscow is as silent as the grave. Instead of a flaming appeal to the workers of the whole world for solidarity action with the hard-pressed German proletariat, the International Stalinist staff maintains—what milder term can be applied?—a criminal and treacherous silence!

What is happening? What should have happened?

The minute Hitler was appointed Chancellor, and took the first real steps to establish the genuine Fascist dictatorship of blood and iron, the working class should have replied, with the same unanimity it displayed during the days of the Kapp putsch, by a general strike. But the German working class could not declare this general strike without a leadership to organize and direct it. The social democracy wants no militant struggle which may lead to the triumph of Bolshevism; true to its role, it continues to hold the restless masses in check. The Communist party could not call the strike, or more exactly, its call met with no response from the bulk of the working class. And for cause: the ultimatum policy of the party in the past, the demand it made that the workers of all tendencies first recognize its leadership, has not increased its hold over the organized, socialist, workers. The general strike could not be on the order of the day because the party had not energetically pursued the policy of the united front which would have made possible the mobilization of the masses around a concrete program of struggle. Result: the first call for a general strike issued by the Communist party ended in a fiasco, for the masses did not respond. In this way the Communist party, and by the same token, the German proletariat, is paying heavily for the blunders and crimes of Stalinism.

The Hitler regime has been quick in press its advantage. Its aim is: weaken the proletariat further, bleed it slowly by the dirk and the bludgeon, exhaust it and distract its attention with parliamentary maneuvers, press harder on the institutions of the proletariat, and then deliver the final blows with drawn saber, torch and machine gun. How has it proceeded?

Fascist Advances

One: the Reichstag has been dissolved and elections set for March 5. Will the elections decide the question of Fascism, of power? Preposterous! The beginnings of that decision are being made right now on the streets of Germany. Hitler has no illusions about the possibilities of ruling by a constitutional 51 percent majority in the Reichstag. But he loses nothing by distracting attention from the decisive extra-parliamentary field and centering it upon the illusory parliamentary elections. On the contrary, by this procedure he gains valuable time in which to consolidate his positions.

Two: The Prussian Diet has been dissolved, and the elections also set for March 5. The arbitrariness of the dissolution is only a foretaste of bloody (Continued on page 4)

How We Plan «New Militant»

The decision to increase the frequency of appearance of the MILITANT to three times a week, is the biggest step forward yet taken by the Left Opposition in this country. That it is being taken at the moment when the situation in Germany—the key to the international situation—is reaching its most crucial stage, with long-lasting consequences for the whole revolutionary and labor movements, is of the utmost significance. The official Stalinist press is dealing with the latest development in Germany as if it were some chance episode, of no considerable importance to the proletariat in this country. The MILITANT intends to break down this despicable national narrow-mindedness, this blindness to the historical events passing right before our eyes, and to fulfill the role of the revolutionary newspaper by stimulating the internationalist spirit of the American working class.

Despite the enormous burden we are undertaking to carry, we feel confident that the response to our initiative will be broad enough to enable us to go through with the enterprise. We have made all the technical arrangements. And the first issue of the three-times-a-week MILITANT will appear on next Monday morning, February 13, 1933.

The MILITANT will continue with the same format, although the number of pages will be cut down from four to two. In addition, to improve the looks of the paper and increase the amount of material that is to go into each issue, we have decided to change the number of columns to the page from six, as at present, to seven.

Above all, we are determined to make the MILITANT available to every worker. Therefore, we are changing the price of each copy of the MILITANT.

From Five Cents to One Cent

We are so confident that a larger circulation will immediately be obtained for the new MILITANT during the period of the German crisis, that we calculate on the additional numbers sold covering the deficit involved in reducing the price of each copy so drastically.

The new MILITANT will go to press on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday nights, and appear for sale, at least in New York and vicinity, on MONDAY, WEDNESDAY AND FRIDAY MORNINGS!

To carry on during this period, we need two things above all. One: generous financial support—it is the German revolution and the world proletarian cause which is involved and we feel that we are in a position to make the most imperative demands for financial assistance from every militant worker and sympathizer.

Two: technical assistance in the office. We will have an enormous task of mailing and distributing to do, and every offer of help will be gratefully appreciated. Come immediately to the office in ask for the comrade in charge of this work, Martin Abern.

All comrades and friends—help put this historic drive over the top! Without your help, our difficulties multiply. With your cooperation, we are assured of a powerful advance!

Oehler Starts National Tour On Germany

In the campaign of the Communist League on the German crisis comrade Hugo Oehler will begin a speaking tour at Utica, New York on Friday, February 17. All energy must be concentrated to arrange big mass meetings on the occasion of comrade Oehler's visit. Action is the slogan of the hour. There is no time to rearrange dates. All readers take notice of the meetings in the various cities on the following schedule:

Utica, N. Y.—Feb. 17
Buffalo, N. Y.—Feb. 18
Pittsburgh, Pa.—Feb. 19
New Castle, Pa.—Feb. 20
Youngstown, O.—Feb. 21
Cleveland, O.—Feb. 22
Chicago, Ill.—Feb. 24, 25, 26
Davenport, Iowa—Feb. 27
Des Moines, Iowa—Feb. 28
Kansas City—March 1, 2, 3
St. Louis, Mo.—March 4, 5
Illinois Coal Fields—March 6

BRONX MASS MEETING

The CRISIS in GERMANY

SPEAKER:
James P. Cannon

Hollywood Gardens
836 PROSPECT AVE., Near 161st St.
SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1933, 3 P. M.
ADMISSION 15 Cents

Letters from Militants

Miners' Women on the March

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—

Dressed in white uniforms, ten thousand Illinois coal diggers' militant wives, mothers and sweethearts staged a colorful demonstration of working class power and solidarity through the state capitol's busy thoroughfare, voicing protest against the fourth year of the hunger era.

Mass delegations from fifty-one mine towns were prompt in their response to the call of their executives to assemble here January 28 to take up the fight of the Progressive Miners of America on four burning issues: Namely, unemployment insurance, increase in state aid, restoration of civil rights and against the sales tax.

Marching eight abreast in disciplined formation, the huge army of women stirred to ecstasy the thousands of coal miners who flanked the streets all along the road of march.

Five miners' bands led the mess of women in the one hour march from the State Arsenal to the Capitol.

Loyal rank and file miners from the fighting Springfield district, along with large committees from all over the state, were at hand to spur the women on to struggle against the intolerable conditions of unemployment.

At the head of the inspiring multitudes was Agnes Burns Wieck, commanding the organized from delegations through fifty-one branch presidents. Along side of her were Celine Burrell, Secretary-Treasurer, and Mrs. Leon Beson, Vice-President, of the Illinois Women's Auxiliary.

Preceding the state officers was the Gillespie-Bend-Wilsonville fifty piece band forming the vanguard of the white army of marching women. Next in line, faithfully trudging along, was "Mother" McKeever, unmindful of her 75 years. Then came the widows of the Mowesqua miners dressed in black mourning, further symbolizing the woes and tortures of that section of humanity that choke deep under in producing society's basic fuel. Broad smiling faces regained their seriousness and hats were removed as the bereaved women of Mowesqua marched solemnly by. Their heads were drooped in sadness and tears were visible.

Next in line came the families of the martyrs of the Progressive Miners of America, Mrs. Andrew Gynnes, Mrs. Joe Colbert and Albin Cumerlatto along with his daughters and son. Those who gave their loved ones for the cause were highly honored by the whole gathering of women fighters. Deeply written from one column of the march to the other were signs of worry and desperation steeled by a solid phalanx of organization.

The first delegation to lead the parade was the women of Springfield who were honored to first position because of the affair being held in their home city. Several hundred were numbered following a large banner proclaiming: "12 mines work under P. M. of A. contract and peace to Springfield. Why not Peabody?"

Next in line were the other auxiliaries from the Springfield district—Riverton, Virden, Dawson, Williamsville, Witt, Nokomis, Gerard Panama, Thayer, Divernon, Auburn, Pawnee—marching at a steady gait, headed by banners describing the names of their towns.

Then came the large Gillespie group followed by the Bend school band and their home town auxiliary. Bend with a large banner proclaimed: "Bend Women's Auxiliary of the Progressive Miners of America. 610 members strong." Next in line were the mass groups from Mt. Olive, Carleville, Stanton, Wilsonville, White City, Livingston and Williams.

The towns of Hillsboro, followed by the Tovey band, then Taylorville, Langleyville, Bulpitt, Stonington, Kincaid, Tovey, Panna and Decatur came next. The enthusiasm of the miners' women from the midland territory was visibly undiminished as they confidently marched behind their sisters from every nook and corner of the state.

The northern district with Peoria, Esat Peoria, Farmington, Galesburg, St. David, Cuba and Norris were also present, raising their banners high to the world that was out to watch them.

The Belleville territory with its numerous, sturdy German women were next in line. Banners on which were inscribed Belleville, O'Fallon, Marissa, Breese, Pocahtones, Coulterville. Tilden boomed over the heads of different groupings.

Last but not least were the courageous mining women of southern Illinois who braved threats and intimidations to join their sisters of the north. Du Quoin and Dowell, new allies of the Progressive Miners of America, were present. Then came groups of women representing auxiliaries from bloody Franklin county. It takes a man with a mighty heart to be an active Progressive down in that land of terror, but here we had delegations from West Frankfort, Ziegler, Buckner and Christopher. The writers are proud to belong to the great cause of the Progressive movement. A defiant smile gleams from their faces as they take their places side by side with the new champions of labor.

"We saw Edmondson peering from the side of an auto," said one Franklin county woman. "He looked like he was going to faint." Edmondson is the renegade of the rank and file movement who is employed as the leading terrorist of Franklin county by Walker and Lewis. It was a sorrowful day for the reactionary fakers of the old United Mine Workers of America.

The last column having passed the towering statue of Abraham Lincoln, the women began to break from their lines, filling the entrances of the state Capitol. The curious and interested masses that flanked the streets started to move towards the steps of the Capitol. Bands incessantly played their many stirring tunes.

After the singing and band concerts had abated, Agnes Wieck called her executive board together and along with the fifty-one branch presidents, the committee representing the Women's Auxiliary of the Progressive Miners of America, made their way through the immense crowd to present to the chief executive of Illinois, Governor Horner, the demands of their organization.

The reception room of the Governor was taxed to capacity. The hallways were jammed with miners' wives. State Highway Patrolmen, one with a tear gas gun, were standing in strategic positions. Plain clothes men were milling around somewhat uneasily. We later learned that the day previous a large delegation of unemployed workers had entered the state capitol to petition for unemployment relief and had been unmercifully clubbed by the police. Possibly this caused the uneasiness. A few representatives of the Progressive Miners of America who had remained at the side of the women's committee throughout the whole demonstration were eyed suspiciously. At Mrs. Wieck's suggestion, the Governor agreed to meet the entire delegation in the reception room.

The Governor was finally met by the women's committee. Mrs. Wieck then read to him their statement in behalf of the housewives of Illinois' mining fields—those who often must make "moss" solely from the flour that is labeled "American Red Cross". The statement was tersely written, it rang with the tone of resentment against impoverishment of the workers' dependant upon coal for an existence.

The following immediate demands were presented by the Auxiliary here:

1. For restoration of civil liberties in coal fields.
2. For increased and more equitable distribution of State Aid.
3. For unemployment insurance paid by industry and state.
4. For defeat of the State sales tax.

That night the members of the Women's Auxiliary, Progressive Miners of America, jammed the main floor and balconies of the huge state arsenal to listen to the report of their delegation.

The report on the conference with the Governor was made by Agnes Burns Wieck. Following the report, a grand ball was held celebrating the tremendous organizational success that the women marchers had made. Proceeds from this affair will go to the Mowesqua victims and the Springfield unemployed miners who are still on strike against the Peabody Coal Company.

Until early morning, tractions, buses, autos and trucks continued to roll, transporting the greatest gathering of working women in the history of the American labor movement. The precision, discipline and spirit of the women marchers was highly commendable. The militant members of the Women's Auxiliary gathered in Springfield to wage the struggle against hunger at the very doors of the representatives of the government. Success of their fight, however, will depend largely upon the degree of organization that will be exerted to change the evils responsible for starvation amidst plenty. Back to mine towns, through the Progressive Miners of America, through their own organized efforts, utilizing every possible economic and political instrument at their command, the Women's Auxiliary will be ultimately triumphant in the war to make labor safe from hunger.

—A MINER.

I.L.G.W.U. Leaders Seek to Corral Youth

At the call of the Dressmakers' Joint Board of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, a conference of "radical youth" groups was held in New York, February 3, to aid the union in its organizational drive. Representatives of the Young Peoples Socialist League, the Inter-Collegiate Student Council of the League for Industrial Democracy, the Lovestonette youth, the Young Circle League and the Vanguard (anarchist) group had a short while previously participated in a pre-conference to arrange for this conference. The Left Opposition youth—the Spartacus Youth Club—was not invited to either gathering. It had an observer at the conference.

After the chairman explained the purpose of the meeting, Max Bluestein, manager of the Joint Board, spoke in glowing terms of the history of the union and the need of the cooperation of the youth assembled to help the union organize the dressmakers. Following this, representatives of the youth groups present spoke.

The YPSL, LID and Young Circle League pledged their support and readiness "to take orders". The speaker for the Lovestonettes endorsed the campaign and spoke for a "clean, fighting, militant union" which would fight racketeering and organize the youth in the trade. The chairman, an official in the union, greeted this mild and meaningless speech. The spokesman of the Vanguard (anarchist) group launched into an attack upon the leaders of the A. F. of L. and the ILGWU, and their sell-out policies and agreements. He exposed by direct references, fake agreements made in the dress and cloak industry in New York by the ILGWU. He protested at the original refusal of the officials of the ILGWU to invite the youth of the CPLA and the Left Opposition to the conference. They had,

My Daughter's Suicide

Open Letter On Stalin's Role in the Death of Zinaida Volkov

TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE C. C. OF THE C. P. OF THE USSR.
TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE USSR.
TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE C. C. OF THE C. P. OF THE USSR.

I deem it necessary to inform you how and why my daughter committed suicide.

At the close of 1930, upon my request, you authorized my tubercular daughter, Zinaida Volkov, to come to Turkey temporarily with her five year old son Weeswood, for treatment. I did not suppose that behind this liberalism of Stalin lurked a mental reservation. My daughter arrived here in January 1931 with a pneumothorax in both lungs. After a ten months sojourn in Turkey we finally obtained—despite the constant resistance of the Soviet foreign representatives permission for her to go to Germany for treatment. The child remained temporarily with us in Turkey so as not to burden the invalid. After some time the German physicians thought it possible to remove the pneumothorax. The invalid began to recover and dreamed only of returning with her child to Russia where her daughter and her husband, who is a Bolshevik-Leninist held to exile by Stalin, remained.

On the twentieth of February 1932 you published a decree by which not only my wife, my son and I, but also my daughter Zinaida Volkov, was deprived of Soviet citizenship. In the foreign land where you gave her permission to go with a Soviet passport my daughter occupied herself only with her treatment. She did not, and because of her health, could not take any part in political life. She avoided anything that might throw the shade of a "suspicion" upon her. Depriving her of her citizenship was only a wretched and stupid act of vengeance against me. For her, this act of personal vengeance meant a break with her little daughter, her husband, her fiancée and all her customary life. Her mental condition, already disturbed without that by the death of her younger sister, by her own illness, received a fresh blow all the more atrocious as it was quite surprising and not provoked in any way by her. The psychiatrists unanimously declared that only a return to her normal environment, with her family, and her work could save her. But your decree of the twentieth of February of 1932 removed precisely this possibility of saving her. All other attempts, as you know, have remained in vain.

German physicians insisted that at least her son be brought to her as quickly as possible; in that they still saw the chance of restoring the moral equilibrium of the mother. But as the six-year old child was equally deprived of Soviet citizenship the difficulties of his departure from Constantinople to Berlin were multiplied. A half year passed in constant but fruitless efforts in several European countries. Only my unforeseen trip to Copenhagen gave us the opportunity to bring the child to Europe. With the greatest difficulty he made the trip to Berlin in six weeks. He was hardly near his mother for a week when Oen. Schleicher's police in collusion with the Stalinist agents decided to expel my daughter from Berlin. Where? To Turkey? To the Island of Prinkipo? But the child needed to attend school and my daughter needed continuous medical attention under conditions of family life bear this new blow. On the fifth of January she asphyxiated herself with gas. She was thirty years old.

In 1928 my younger daughter Nina, whose husband has been locked up in solitary prison by Stalin for five years, was bedridden and then taken to the hospital for a short time after my exile to Alma Ata. They found her with galloping consumption. A purely personal letter, without the least relation to politics, which was addressed to me, was held up by you for seventy days so that my answer did not find her alive. She died at the age of 26.

During my stay in Copenhagen, where my wife began a treatment for a serious illness and where I prepared myself to begin a treatment, Stalin, through Tass agency, issued the lying denunciation to the European police that a "Trotskyist conference" was meeting to Copenhagen! That was enough to have the Danish social-democratic government do Stalin the favor of expelling me with feverish haste, interrupting the necessary treatments for my wife. But in this case, as in many others, Stalin's unity with the capitalist police at least had a political aim. The persecution of my daughter was devoid of even a shade of political sense. Depriving her of Soviet citizenship—a loss of her only hope to return to a normal environment and to recovery—finally her expulsion from Berlin (a service indisputably rendered to Stalin by the German police), are acts without a political aim for miserable and stupid revenge and nothing else. My daughter was pretty clear about her position. She understood that she could receive no safety at the hands of the European police, persecuting her at the request of Stalin. Conscious of that, her death followed on the fifth of January. Such a death is called "voluntary". No, it was not voluntary. Stalin imposed this death upon her. I limit myself to this information without drawing conclusions. The time will come for this subject. The regenerated party will do it.

Prinkipo, January 11, 1933

—LEON TROTSKY.

LEON TROTSKY

STALIN'S DENIAL

I am not in possession of the "Bolshevik" with the denial of Stalin of the article "With Both Hands". The semi-official communication of the "Berliner Tageblatt", however, suffices to give one an adequate picture of this denial.

Stalin did not react to Campbell's book until the Left Opposition seized upon it. Didn't Stalin deem the book sufficiently important? Yet he did grant Campbell an interview which, according to the report of the American, lasted until the early hours of the morning and, according to Stalin's denial, lasted "no more" than two hours. Even two hours are enough to confirm the importance of this conversation. Campbell received the stenographic report of this interview: Stalin confirms this. Campbell is no journalist but an agrarian big bourgeoisie. Is it possible that Stalin took no notice of this man's book? Out of the question. The Press Bureau must have furnished him with the most important excerpts, especially those which concern Stalin himself, immediately after the appearance of the book. Nevertheless, Stalin was silent. The article in the "Bulletin of the Russian Opposition" first loosened his tongue. Therein is to be found the measure of value of Stalin's denial.

In 1925, when his policy aimed completely at the capitalist farmer, that is, at the Kulak, Stalin went so far as to have secret designs on the necessity of denationalizing the land. He arranged for himself an interview by Soviet journalists. One of the questions (dictated by Stalin himself) read, if it would not be advisable in the interest of peasant agriculture to hand over to every individual farmer the land tilled by him, for a period of ten years. Stalin's answer was: "Even for forty years." At the same time, the Georgian People's Commissar for Agriculture, after an interview with Stalin in the Caucasus, brought in a formal legislative project for the denationalization of the land. The Left Opposition unfolded a violent protest campaign against it. In this connection, it referred back to the already partially forgotten interview on the suspension of the nationalization of the land "for forty years". Stalin found it necessary to start the retreat. He simply declared that the journalists had "wrongly" understood him. But as to why he had remained silent about the, printed interview for several months, he could make no answer.

In 1928, Stalin prepared the entrance of the Russian trade unions into the Amsterdam International. In the new edition of the membership books of the Russian trade unions, the passage concerning adherence to the Red International of Labor Unions was simply stricken out. At the same time, Kaganovich delivered a speech in Kharkov, naturally in agreement with Stalin, in favor of entrance into the Amsterdam Trade Union International. The Left Opposition once more raised its voice in vigorous protest. Stalin retreated. The new text of the membership books was explained away as a "misunderstanding". Kaganovich declared that the stenographer in Kharkov had bungled the meaning of his speech. The Kharkov Oppositionists, however, established the fact that the stenographic report had been carefully corrected by Kaganovich himself.

Back in 1930, Stalin, in conversations

192 Pages

CLOTH 65c

PAPER 35c

Postage 6c Extra

PUBLISHERS

The Capitulation of Roman Well and Co.

The International Stalinist press (in this country, the Freiheit), is celebrating a new "victory". Messrs. Roman Well and his handful of followers in the Left Opposition in Germany have broken away from the organization and have started on the thorny path to Canossa to capitulate to the Stalinist bureaucracy. Seizing upon the article "With Both Hands", in which Stalin's treacherous interview with Mr. Thomas Campbell was so thoroughly exposed, the Well clique found a pretext for their renegacy from the International Left Opposition. It proceeded to issue a "special issue" of the organ of the German Opposition, "Die Permanente Revolution", which is a forgery from beginning to end. The regular edition of "Die Permanente Revolution" is still in the hands of the Left Opposition, as is the bulk of the membership which is repudiating the turncoats. The Well forgery is not only different in format and in masthead, but by its very contents, reveals that it could not possibly have been issued by the German Left Opposition. The latest issue of our German brother organ, which has just been received, confirms the obvious impression of a fraud created when the Well sheet first arrived here.

The rejoicing of the Freiheit, which announces gleefully that the "Trotskyist group to Germany has announced its own dissolution", is due to be short-lived, for it is based upon sheer falsehood.

Every edition of capitulationism thus far has sung the same song at the beginning. Zinoviev broke with the Opposition because "Trotsky had broken from the principles of the Opposition platform"; to defend the Opposition platform more ardently, Zinoviev rushed right into the arms of Stalin and Co. Radek, Smilga, and Preobrazhensky also found grace in the Stalinist bureaucracy by discovering that "Trotsky had broken from the principles of the Opposition platform". The third and most vulgar edition of the capitulators—Roman Well and his coterie—have crawled into the Stalinist camp under the same smoke screen: They, and not the International Left Opposition, are the true defenders of Bolshevism, the loyal supporters of the Comintern and the world revolution; therefore, capitulate to the Stalin faction!

In the declarations published in the confessions, launched the argument: "The Comintern represents nothing and it ekes out its existence only because of our support." But the moment when Lominadze, in struggle against Stalin, threw up to him the opinion he had vouchsafed, Stalin had no difficulty in repudiating his own words.

So it is not for the first time Stalin, under the attack of the Left Opposition, has resorted to a denial of his own affirmations. One can say that this procedure is part of the iron arsenal of his policy. At every new zig-zag, he moves cautiously, sends up trial balloons, frequently has others send them up, but holds open the possibility of a retreat as long as he can. To repudiate one of his own declarations has never offered him any difficulties.

Besides, the conversation with Emil Ludwig—published by Stalin himself—differs in no essential from the denied conversation with Campbell. And what is more important: the denial does not alter by one iota either the Kellogg Pact policy or the tactic of Stalin-Litvinov in Geneva. And this is what's important. Prinkipo, January 14, 1933.

—LEON TROTSKY.

forged edition of "Die Permanente Revolution", the turncoats complain that none of Trotsky's analyses of the situation in Russia, Spain or Germany have stood the test of events (Stalin's have, you see!). "National Socialism has received powerful blows, the Communist party has considerable successes to record. Nothing has remained of the perspective of the 'unconditional and immediate uprising of the National Socialists'. The conception was and is correct that Fascism to Germany cannot come to power until it has assured itself along the road of coalition of decisive positions in the state apparatus. Even if the Fascist danger is not yet (!) over with, one thing is plain, that in the given situation it is in decline and the revolutionary proletariat has come ahead."

Two days after this declaration was received in New York, Hitler was made Chancellor of the Republic and the Fascist bands started their reign of terror with renewed vigor and violence!

For the capitulators, the Stalin faction does not represent Centrism, because, you see, Lenin spoke of Centrism only in connection with the social democracy! For the capitulators, the united front with the social democracy is inadmissible, because, you see, the social democracy is led by traitors! For the capitulators, the Left Opposition has no right to existence, because, you see, it is a small group; the German Communist Party has gained votes in the last elections; the 12th Plenum of Manuilsky and Co., "put into the foreground with Bolshevik determination the mass work in all reformist organizations". Finally, there is no "internal democracy"—the faction of Stalinist bureaucracy!

The Left Opposition, neither in Germany nor internationally, does not capitulate. It leaves that role to miserable turncoats who cannot distinguish between revolutionary internationalism and national Communism, who mix up the Stalinist faction of bureaucratic degeneration with the Party and Comintern of Lenin and Trotsky, who identify the interests of the ruling clique in the Russian party with the interests of the Russian and world revolution; who cannot distinguish between the German worker-Communists and the corrupt Thaelmann regime; who wince under the pressure of the party bureaucracy, and, not having the intrinsigence, the steadfastness, the endurance, the fierce loyalty to the revolution and its principles that distinguish the Bolshevik from the camp-follower of the revolution—run to beg for mercy and a tiny place in the sun of that bureaucracy.

The Well capitulation is an episode in the life of the Bolshevik-Leninists, not the first and not the last in the long struggle for revolutionary victory. But nothing more than an episode. We move forward over the corpses of these political suicides.

Tenacity, tenacity, tenacity! Bolshevik-Leninists, forward!

UNEMPLOYMENT

and the

AMERICAN WORKING CLASS

by

ARNE SWARECK

24 PAGES

FIVE CENTS

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street,
New York, N. Y.

The Record Speaks!

Centrism Month by Month...

THE SAME BLOODHOUNDS

"We must show that the social Fascist Party Councils and functionaries in the factories are the agents of the blood-stained Noske-Severing-Zoergel policy... that they are just the same bloodhounds as the Noskes, Severings or Zoergels."

—Rote Fahne, end of 1929.

"MANY COMRADES..."

"Many comrades see nothing at all except social Fascism, even in things that have not the slightest to do with Fascism. For many comrades there are no longer any social democrats and any social democracy, but only social Fascists and social Fascism. Workers, ordinary workers, who have nothing more to do with Fascism than that they have voted social democratic, are designated as social Fascists."

—Remmele, Die Internationale, No. 5-6, 1930.

THE SLOGAN OF THE COMMUNIST YOUTH

"Drive the social Fascists out of the factories, out of the employment bureaus, out of the trade schools!"

—Junge Garde, end of 1929.

THE SLOGAN OF THE YOUNG PIONEERS

"Beat the smallest Zoergels out of the schools and playgrounds!"

—Die Trommel, end of 1929.

THE "RED" FACTORY COUNCILS ON PAPER

"The Factory Council elections in which the Communist Party of Germany came forward for the first time in the sharpest struggle against reformism as the bearer of the united front of the organized and unorganized, became a triumphal march in the most important industrial fields and large factories. The labor masses elected countless Red Factory Councils under the banner of the struggle against the state power, the employers and reformism."

—Wedding Congress, C. P. G., June 1929.

THE "RED" FACTORY COUNCILS IN REALITY

"As a result of the defective contacts of the Red Factory Councils with the workers of their factory, it was possible to eliminate a number of Red Factory Councils without any struggle or protest action of the plants... In many cases, Red Factory Councils did not stand their ground and capitulated before the sharpened pressure of the common enemy: employer, reformist bureaucracy and state apparatus. Their work was in no way distinguished from the policy of the reformists, or else they remained in complete passivity."

—Congress of the Trade Union

Opposition of the C. P. G., Nov. 1929.

MUEZENBERG ON THE UNITED FRONT

"A temporary, or even an alliance, or even a bloc joint operation in individual actions between the Communist party and the Social Democratic party in Germany against National Socialism, would forever discredit the Communist party among the broad masses of the workers, toiling peasants and middle strata, and draw it into decline."

—Willi Muezenberg, February 1, 1932.

A THOUSAND TIMES LESSER EVIL

"A social democratic coalition government, confronted with a non-combatant split-up, confused proletariat would be a thousand times greater evil than an open Fascist dictatorship, against which would appear a class conscious proletariat, resolved upon struggle, united in its mass."

Der Propagandist, September 1931.

THE "OFFENSIVE" BEGAN IN 1929

"The working masses, who a year ago still hesitantly set themselves in motion with dull, ponderous steps, are marching today under the blaring fanfare of the proletarian offensive against the capitalist system."

—Rote Fahne, May 1, 1929.

AGAIN: THE "OFFENSIVE" IN 1929!

"The relationship of forces between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat has changed fundamentally. The working class is striving forward from the defensive to the offensive... In the Berlin May struggles, broad masses stepped beyond the framework of bourgeois legality, offered resistance to the police action and opened up the political-revolutionary struggle against the bourgeois state power... The Berlin May struggles constitute a turning point in the political development in Germany."

—Theses, Wedding Congress, C. P. G., 1929.

ILLUSIONS ABOUT DISTINCTIONS

"On the basis of the social Fascist evolution of the lower cadres of the Social Democratic Party of Germany, the illusions of the working class are being destroyed in the belief that there is a distinction between the leadership of the SDPG and the lower cadre of functionaries of the SDPO."

—Theses of Wedding Congress, C. P. G., 1929.

FASCISM BROUGHT TO A STANDSTILL... IN 1930

"No wonder that all this affects the National Socialist worker elements like a cold douche. They are beginning to feel that they have gotten enough from Hugenberg and Lüttich... On the land, particularly where the agricultural proletariat found a resolute leader in the Communist party, the advance of the Swastika has been brought to a standstill in recent months."

—Rote Fahne, May 9, 1930.

(Two days later, the elections took place in Gotha (Thuringia) where the Nazis topped the Communists, and increased their December 1929 vote of 5,193 to 6,136.)

FASCIST RULE SET UP... IN 1930

"The well-fed, fat, the accused secretaries and functionaries of the social Fascist party apparatus, want the civil war and a bloodbath which will exceed all the preceding shameful deeds of Noske and Zoergel. This is no longer of preparation, but the beginning of Fascist rule in Germany, set up with the bloody hands of the Social Democratic Party."

—Rote Fahne, January 17, 1930.

LATER, HEINZ NEUMANN WAS THE SCAPOGAT

"Today the slogan of the people's revolution is a central, comprehensive propaganda slogan, the main strategic goal to which we are leading the masses along the line of our social and national emancipation program."

—Ernst Thaelmann, January 1931.

"The slogan of the people's revolution was a correct slogan and remains a necessary slogan."

—Thaelmann, Central Committee Plenum, February 1932.

WHO WAS GUILTY OF UNDERESTIMATION?

"We assert it openly: For a long time we underestimated the danger of the National Socialist movement. It is high time to catch up, to exterminate the weaknesses and to conclude the real fighting proletarian united front against Fascism, a front of all workers regardless of party under our relationship."

—Saechsische Arbeiter Zeitung (C. P. G.), June 23, 1930.

AFTER SOCIAL FASCISM—"BRUENING FASCISM"

"Hindenburg's black Chancellor yesterday declared the Fascist financial dictatorship with the aid of article 48."

—Rote Fahne, March 17, 1930.

MORE "BRUENING FASCISM"

Communist Deputy Neubauer in the Reichstag: "What is taking place in Germany now is nothing but the desire to heal the deep-seated wounds of capitalism with the methods of Fascism... This means nothing else than that the system of terroristic Fascism is to take the place of the so-called democratic system."

—Rote Fahne, July 15, 1930.

HITLER'S GREATEST DAY—IN 1930

"After the September 1930 elections: 'Last night was Herr Hitler's greatest day', but the so-called beginning of victory of the Nazis is the beginning of their end."

—Rote Fahne, September 15, 1930.

MORE BUREAUCRATIC OPTIMISM

"The 14th of September was the high point of the National Socialist movement in Germany. What comes after this can only be decline and fall."

—Rote Fahne, September 16, 1930.

FASCISM "AGAIN" AT A STANDSTILL (1931!)

"The party succeeded, by a resolute offensive, in bringing the desultory advance of National Fascism to a standstill."

—Communist Party of Germany, Political Bureau decision, September 24, 1931.

"LET THEM COME TO POWER"

"If they (the Nazis) once come into power, the united front of the proletariat will be established and sweep everything away... They will come to grief more speedily than any other government."

—Remmele in Reichstag, Rote Fahne, October 18, 1931.

THE GREAT LEADER SPEAKS...

"The fact that, for example, in our revolutionary trade union work, united front offers could be made from above to district trade union leaderships or other instances of the reformist bureaucracy (Ruhr district), also shows that our principled struggle against the social democracy was not conducted resolutely enough to make such mistakes impossible."

—Thaelmann, Die Internationale, No. 11-12, 1931.

VON FAPEN IS ALSO FASCISM...

"Before all, we must make it clear to the social democratic workers that what we have today is the Fascist dictatorship... The same holds for the illusion that the S. D. P. G. or the General German Trade Union Alliance are also organizations of the anti-Fascist struggle. Whoever would aim to build on the idea that by 'appeals' to the SDPG or other reformist organizations, a struggle would come about, would disarm the proletariat."

—Rote Fahne, July 26, 1932

Central Committee Statement.

DIVERTING ATTENTION FROM REAL FASCISM

"The Fascist overturn in Prussia on July 26 was possible only because the Fascist Papen government knew that the leaders of the trade unions would exert the full power of the apparatus to prevent the mass strike movement."

—Walter Ulbricht, Rote Fahne, August 25, 1932.

Sandino Passes...

The report that the petty bourgeois Nicaraguan general Augusto Sandino has made his peace with the puppet government of American imperialism, reconciling himself with the gang which was lifted into power by the bayonet of the U. S. Marine Corps, will come as a surprise only to those who attributed to the Central American general a revolutionary stature which he never attained, nor ever could have. From the beginning, his Stalinist Comintern bent all its energies to conduct an international advertising campaign for Sandino which was not one whit better or more justified than the campaign carried on by the Kuo Min Tern for Chiang Kai-Shek and company. Communists from Mexico and Central America were sent into Sandino's army, not to act like proletarian revolutionists, but as aides-de-camp to Sandino.

Sandino was touted everywhere by the official Communist apparatus. Like dozens of others of the same stripe, he was one of the big leaders and "attractions" in the Hippodromes conducted by Willi Muezenberg for the Comintern. Sandino was one of the "revolutionary leaders in the struggle against imperialism" at the Congresses and on the directing committees of the World League Against Imperialism. At the abominable massacre at Amsterdam recently, where adventurers, reformists, and pseudo-Communists gathered to "fight against war" and "defend the Soviet Union", Sandino was among the most prominent, even though he was absent. Just a few weeks before his open capitulation to the Nicaraguan agents of American imperialism, the Amsterdam Committee of Muezenberg, Stalin and Co. announced in its press releases that General Sandino had been selected to represent Nicaragua on the International Committee!

Like H. G. Wells, Sandino must again be denounced by the Stalinist press as a "traitor". Traitor he is indeed, but largely in the sense that he too has served to throw light on the wretched policy pursued by the Comintern which leads the proletariat from one surprise to another, from defeat to defeat, to confusion and demoralization. Sandino's passing tears with it another piece of the veil that still covers the nudity of the Stalinist faction.

International Workers School

AMERICAN LABOR LEADERS
The Movements and the Men
A Series of 8 Popular Lectures on American Labor History and Its Outstanding Personalities
by
JAMES F. CANNON
Single Lectures—15 Cents
One Dollar for the Course.
SUNDAY 8 P. M.
128 East 16th Street

THE MILITANT

Entered as second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.
Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition)
at 126 East 16th St., N. Y.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swaback

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1933
Vol. 6, No. 6 Whole No. 153

Stalinist Policies Throw Food Workers Union Into Serious Crisis

It is impossible to understand the present crisis in the Food Workers' Industrial Union and its effects upon the membership without tracing its causes to the past and bringing into the open the crimes and errors committed by the party and union leadership under the Lovestonite and present regimes.

The Hotel and Restaurant branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers was under party control for many years. Its main activities were confined exclusively to the hotels and restaurants. More than once the leadership rejected the proposal to undertake an organizational drive among the cafeteria workers on the grounds that the masses were to be found among the hotel workers. What happened in the spring of 1929 when these same people, without exception, were in favor of a general strike in the New York cafeterias, and at that, with no preparation at all? Did the leadership realize that their previous position was incorrect? No. Far from it. As we will prove, this sudden change was based upon the interests of its faction.

The Lovestonite faction was then in the leadership of the party and the union. A party convention was to take place during that time. Lovestone, in order to "strengthen" his prestige before the convention suddenly "discovered" the necessity for mass work. Secret meetings were immediately arranged by those members of the leading fraction who supported Lovestone. They decided to sell the union building located at 133 W. 15th St., and declare a general strike in the garment section. On the eve of March 18th, I was informed by a comrade that such a meeting was to take place. When I entered the meeting Bert Miller was reading the following decision of the District Executive Committee: the strike was to take place not later than April 4th; preparations were not necessary; it was sufficient merely to place pickets before the cafeterias; the needle trade workers will not patronize them and the bosses will thereby be compelled to settle with the union.

No arguments were strong enough to make them change their decision, for, as mentioned above the strike was to serve as a weapon for the Lovestonites in the convention. I immediately appealed to the Central Executive Committee against the District E. C. decision. I pointed out that "no matter how great the support of the needle trade workers it is entirely incorrect to declare a strike without the strikers. Such a decision will play into the hands of A. F. of L. bureaucracy, who, in order to cover up their treacherous role of serving as a scab agency against the strikers, will claim jurisdiction over this territory. In view of this it is urgent to propose a united front with the A. F. of L. unions. Particularly at this time when the masses are in revolt against their officials. By their refusal we will, to a large extent, be able to prevent them from playing the role of scab agents during the strike." (I am reminded that during this period, A. F. of L. locals No. 1 and 719 issued leaflets urging cafeteria workers to join the union.)

Comrade Foster, to whom I also gave a copy of my appeal, told me that my position was correct, but that at the present time, due to the situation in the party, it was impossible to change the decisions of the District E. C. in any way.

On March 16, the first leaflet was issued to the cafeteria workers, calling them out on strike. Eighteen days later, on April 14, the general strike was declared in the garment center. As a first step, "pulling committees" composed of party members and sympathizers were organized. The duties of these committees were to pull the workers from their jobs while picketing was being organized in front of the cafeterias. In several cases workers were actually forced to leave their jobs. Such actions are justifiable, in any case, against strike breakers, in any strike. But in this instance the workers were not even aware that a strike had been called. In spite of the lack of preparations for the strike hundreds of workers, driven by the unbearable and slavish conditions in the cafeterias, responded to the strike call.

Although we have described, in previous articles in the Militant, the heroism displayed by the workers in the 1929 cafeteria strike, it is not out of place to repeat that it will remain one of the greatest struggles in the history of the labor movement in New York City. Though hundreds of workers were arrested and jailed, time and again, their fighting spirit could not be broken. They courageously fought the brutal, vicious attacks of the gangsters and the police. Injunctions issued against them were torn up and thrown in the faces of the bosses and the police. Such was the prevailing spirit among the strikers during the first 5 or 6 weeks of the strike.

Without the knowledge of the leading fraction, not to speak of the general fraction, the officials of the union, together with Lifschitz, Lovestone's lieutenant, who was local secretary of the T. U. E. L. at the time, settled up some of the shops where all of the scabs remained on the job. They also agreed upon the ten hour instead of eight hour day. This was done in spite of the promises and guarantees made to the strikers every evening in the strike halls. In speeches at these meetings, they said, they would not settle with any shop until all the demands were met. The clandestine settlement of Lifschitz and Co. was enough to demoralize even the most militant strikers.

A few days later the majority of the striking workers left the organization in deep disgust. This event marked a decisive turn in the strike. Following that, only two workers, with the exception of a few militants, could be obtained for picketing. Attempts were made to dramatize the strike. Demonstrations were organized by party members and sympathizers together with the YCL and the Pioneers. An airplane was hired to spread leaflets all over the city. More than $65,000 was spent in a period of three months. But all was in vain. If a few more shops were later compelled to settle with the union it was on the same basis as mentioned above.

The situation became much worse because the union failed to protect those workers sent out as extras during rush hours. They were refused employment by the bosses because of their reputation as militant strikers. This helped to disrupt the unity of the employed and unemployed, which unfortunately, to this very day has not been corrected.

It is significant to point out the opportunist policies of the union during the feverish wave of the strike, with regard to injunctions. L. Oak, the publicity agent for the strike, reported to the capitalist press that the union defied and would continue to defy the injunctions issued by the capitalist courts. The officials of the union issued a statement to the press, pointing out that the report—that the union would defy injunctions—was not the position of the union; that this was written by the publicity agent without the knowledge of the leadership. For this deed the publicity agent was removed from his post. This statement by the union was demanded by the lawyer who claimed that it would give him better grounds in his fight against injunctions in the courts. This demand is, of course, in accord with a lawyer's business. But for a militant organization whose membership defies injunctions it is a ruinous and extremely opportunistic course. But this was not accidental for the leadership. It coincided fully with the general line pursued by them during that period.

—SEBASTIAN PAPPAS.

Boston Activities

BOSTON.—On January 13 comrade A. Konikov debated Louis Marcus of the Socialist party on the subject "Socialism versus Communism". Louis Marcus versus Communism! Louis Marcus was a comrade at the S. P. headquarters and is considered the local theoretician of the S. P. There were about seventy socialists and five sympathizers of the Left Opposition present. Each speaker had thirty minutes and then the floor was thrown open to general discussion and questions before a rebuttal of ten minutes by the speakers. The discussion period showed that comrade Konikov had done a good job. The younger workers particularly had it in for the socialist speaker. After the meeting some of these young militants invited comrade Konikov to go with them for coffee and there they discussed their problems with her very frankly.

The debate was a huge success from our point of view. Each sympathizer of the Left Opposition became a center of a group of S. P. members after the meeting. They wanted to know more about the Opposition. Many Militants were sold and given away. The big hugs of the S. P. were conspicuous by their absence, apparently not approving of this debate. However, the younger element wants another debate and this has been arranged for Thursday, February 2, at 8 P. M. at 6 Byron St. Glen Trimble will represent the Socialist position.

On January 22, comrade W. Konikov spoke before the Independent Workers' Circle, Branch 27 on What the Left Opposition Stands For. Thirty members and a few visitors were present. The question period showed that the majority of those present had a clear idea of the Left Opposition and are sympathetic. After the meeting one member discussed the possibility of joining the Opposition with comrade Konikov. Several copies of the Militant and Kampf were sold.

On January 24, comrade W. Konikov spoke in Lynn before the Lynn unemployed Council on the subject "A Doctor Looks at Unemployment." An audience of sixty members were present and asked many questions. Many of the comrades' wives were present and after the meeting arrangements were made for a lecture by comrade A. Konikov. Credit for these meetings must be given to comrade Cooperstein who alone represents the Opposition in Lynn.

In our last report we spoke of the Social Science Club (an organization for Marxian study which began with a course on Elements of Marxian Economics in November). The first quarterly meeting of the club was held on Jan. 10. About fifty members were present and comrade W. Konikov gave a lecture on "Communism versus Socialism." Following the meeting he was invited to give the same lecture for a Ypsel organization in one of the suburbs of Boston. Two classes were organized. One, on the "Three Internationals" by comrade A. Konikov meets in Tremont Temple, Room A, every Tuesday at 8 P. M. Visitors are welcome. Seventeen members have enrolled for this course and several visitors have attended the first two meetings. The other course is a repetition of Elements of Marxian Economics, this time given by comrade W. Konikov. Ten members are taking this course which includes a careful study of the first volume of Marx's "Capital". This course meets every Tuesday at 8:30 P. M. at 11 Keswick St.

—C. S.

Confusion Marks Stalinist Policy on Fight Against War

(Continued from previous issue)
We must ask, naturally, if the initiators of the congress feared presenting a Communist position of the question of war, prior to the congress, and even if it is true that pressure was put on them and that a majority of delegates were Communists, were they not afraid then of driving away the pacifists? What was the attitude of the Pacifists and Socialists? Both saw that the Communists were the overwhelming majority of the congress. The pacifists expressed themselves as follows: We want a practical program of work when we get back to the campus. We are not concerned with your resolutions since you will adopt them, anyway, notwithstanding what we say. Go ahead, we will wait for a practical resolution. The Socialists were similarly unconcerned. It is clear again, that you cannot play around with the question of program. The policy of playing hide and seek with pacifists and liberals and socialists is a fatal one and even more fatal is the one to attempt to unite on the basis of a liquidation of principle which the Communists came very near doing, completely. As such they maintained a minimum political correctness as expressed in the main resolution.

The congress was thrown into a crisis when a member of the YCL introduced a motion to condemn the betrayal of the 2nd International during the war. The Socialist delegation quite sharply objected and stated that they would leave the congress if this resolution carried. They were not opposed to condemning those leaders of the 2nd International who betrayed the working class during the war, but insisted that all those who betrayed the proletariat during the war be similarly condemned, and they specifically named Foster and Cochran. This motion was changed to conform to the proposal and attitude of the Socialists and carried. Upon the passage of another motion calling for support of the Amsterdam Congress in the form of the American Committee against War, the Socialists ceased to participate in the congress because, said they, the passage of this motion signified accepting the attacks against the 2nd International contained in the decisions of Amsterdam, which they as Socialists could not accept. The discussion was extremely heated and indicated a split situation.

The split situation became evident upon the election of an executive committee to carry through the decisions of the Congress. The Socialists declined to accept because of the passage of the above-mentioned resolution. The Pacifists would not accept unless the Socialists did. Pleas for unity came from all sides of the hall and upon those pleas a YCL member introduced a motion to rescind the motion upon which the socialists broke from the conference. In spite of the Opposition of Henderson and a large section of the delegates, this motion carried and the Socialists remained and were accepted on the Committee.

An amusing incident took place which indicated just how the Socialists and pacifists were actually fooled by the character of the congress. The pacifists declared that all tendencies must be represented on the Committee. If only NSL members were on the Committee with pacifists, that would mean that the committee would be primarily Communist with no other representation. They demanded that on this committee there must be socialists in addition to pacifists in order to make a united front committee that would consist of all three tendencies. In spite of the efforts of the leaders of the NSL, the Party and YCL, all through the pre-congress period, to hide and cover up their Communist color, the NSL in the congress was synonymous to Communism in the eyes of the pacifists and socialists, and they conducted themselves accordingly. When acceptances were taken up for the executive committee each delegate was to answer in addition to his school organization, his political affiliation. The YCL members of the NSL in accepting on the committee replied: member of the NSL; the socialists answered: League for Industrial Democracy and Socialist. The pacifist answer in reply declared himself member of the NSL and Communist. When this roll was taken again the YCL members continued to hide their identity which was clear to all. On this round comrade Galtman announced that he was a Left Oppositionist much to the dismay of the YCL.

Thus the congress ended. What did it actually accomplish? It gathered together a number of students from various parts of the country to decide upon holding meetings on the campus to declare against war and militarism, to fight against the ROTC, to propagate and agitate against war. It is now almost a month since the congress ended. For all practical purposes the congress might not have existed. The ripples caused by it, have like those of Amsterdam, settled into a dead calm. The criticisms that we made prior to the congress, and at the congress through the speeches of our comrades remain correct and real to this day. The weakness of the congress are to be sought in its political character. It was separated, in spite of everything from the working class. It was not based upon reality. There were no worker delegates to give character to the congress. The attempt to transform the political nature of the congress toward its close only brought confusion among the delegates. Those Communist delegates who argued so vehemently against the position of the Opposition had later to defend the main political contentions of the Opposition against the attacks of the pacifists and socialists. The congress itself vindicated every criticism that the Opposition made. It was false to hold such a conference before a working class movement on a united front basis existed, to fight on concrete issues. If such a proletarian organization had been in existence, it might have been possible to organize a student movement that would attach itself to such a workers' movement. As it is the congress remains suspended in mid-air trying to find a place for itself. That the congress changed many of its plans is true. But the original sin remains.

The responsibility for the whole affair falls upon the shoulders of the Party and the YCL. To be more precise upon the Communist International under the aegis of Stalinist revision of Communist policies. The Party was represented officially by Browder in the form of a speech. The YCL was absent, just as it was absent at the New York conference last summer. The criminal attempt made to hide the face of Communism resulted in confusion and error. The future of the committee elected by the congress is dubious. What shall be its mission? How will it carry through the struggle against war? Under the circumstances it can do nothing but disavow of itself.

—ALBERT GLOTZER.

Opposition at Gillespie

League's Views Triumph at Progressive Miners Conference

(Continued from page 1)

ance, trade union democracy, abolition of high wages for officials, class-struggle policies, relentless fight against labor leaders—all of these and similar demands, which are becoming the fighting program of insurgent workers in every section of the labor movement in all parts of the country, found their place also in the program of the Gillespie Conference. In this fact is to be seen the basis for the eventual fusion of the Illinois movement with similar movements in other parts of the country into a single national formation. For various reasons this necessary unification of the scattered insurgent elements on a national scale remains to be realized. An organization, or a group of organizations, with sufficient stability and influence to attract the other scattered movements around it is one of the elements still lacking for this national concentration. The Gillespie conference and the forces represented in it could not yet serve this purpose. But the dynamic potentialities of a great role are there. The developments of the Progressive Miners in Illinois in the coming months may have a decisive bearing, not only the mining situation but also upon the whole Left wing and progressive labor movement of the entire country.

The Progressive Miners Organization

The importance and significance of the Gillespie conference derives primarily from the participation of the Progressive Miners of America. Not only from the top but also from the bottom, from the local unions, the fighting Illinois miners came to rub shoulders with the delegates of other trades and take counsel with them. Here is a heartening sign, one of many signs, that the P. M. A. stands higher and sees farther than the previous district formation of insurgent miners. Still going through its own first birth pangs as a union, the P. M. A. already looks beyond the borders of its own industry and seeks alliance with the workers of other trades. And the participation of the rank and file, through delegates from the local unions, shows very clearly, the genuine mass impulse behind the movement.

But if the domination of the conference by the Progressive Miners was the strength of the conference, then, in another sense of the word, it was also its weakness. The other delegations came from the small local craft unions and central bodies in the Illinois mining towns, and from Left wing groups which are still in the stage of propaganda rather than stable union organization. Such a combination can and should work out a common program of agitation. But, on such a basis there can be no serious talk of a new labor federation.

The prospects of the new union represented at Gillespie are the prospects, first and foremost, of the Progressive Miners of America. If this new union survives the test of fire in the coming months, and consolidates its organization more firmly in the struggle against the operators and the UMW, it will by that fact lay a big section of the foundations of the new unionism. If the PMA goes down in the fight and loses its organization base the new union movement will receive the heaviest blow.

In other articles the specific tasks and problems of the PMA, and its prospects for expansion into a wider field will be considered. In our opinion the Progressive Miners' movement in Illinois occupies at the present movement the key position in the unfolding of a new progressive sweep in the labor movement on a national scale. For that reason it deserves the closest attention of all those elements and tendencies which strive, or pretend to strive, in one way or another, to break the labor movement out of the paralyzing grip of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats. And by the same token the worth of these various tendencies in the field of trade unionism can be judged most concretely by their attitude toward the activities and problems of the PMA, and especially by the answers they give to the questions which haven't been answered yet.

From this point of view it is interesting to note the position taken on the Gillespie Conference by the various political groups. The Socialists, the CP, the Lovestones, the Stalinists and the Left Opposition—all of them reacted to the Gillespie Conference. But the only group that gave a clear and definite answer beforehand, and had its position confirmed to the letter by the experience of the conference itself, was the Communist Left Opposition.

That wing of the S. P. which trails along with the Progressive Miners, and fattens itself parasitically on the blunders and crimes of the leadership of the official Communist party, had nothing to say, and no advice to offer, about the project of a new federation of labor before the conference. As with the formation of the PMA itself, these parasites wait to see what luck the miners have with their ventures. If a given undertaking fails they wash their hands of it; if it succeeds and sweeps a mass movement with it, they trail along and exploit it. And all the time they maintain a solidarity within one party with the Hillquits who support Lewis and all the other black reactionaries.

The CP, which recommends itself as the center and leader of the progressive labor movement, also showed the quality of its leadership in the matter of the Gillespie Conference. The recent issue of the Labor Age printed the call for the Gillespie Conference, with its announced intention of "formulating a new federation of labor," without saying definitely what it thought about the project. Were the Musteltes in favor of the proposal? Or against it? Or neutral—you will look in vain for a categorical answer in their publication before the event. And it is on just such questions that clear and categorical answers are required. The comment of the Labor Age implies a certain support for the idea of a new federation of labor to be formed at the Gillespie Conference. But the door is left open to face the other way, if things go wrong and the miners involve themselves in a serious mistake. In this attitude the Musteltes ran true to form. In all their dabbling with the Illinois miners situation, they have never failed to show this policy of half-wayness by which they blunt the sharp edge of all the issues and muddle up the progressive movement from within. It is in the highest degree thanks to them that the Farrington-Howat betrayal was put over on the miners and the liberation movement against the Lewis bureaucracy was so long arrested and disoriented. Let the Illinois miners who retain some confidence in these pseudo-progressives, after all their experience, ask themselves why the CP did not take a clear position and warn them against premature and dangerous experiments with a new federation of labor. By what right can they claim to be leaders if they can't answer such questions, and answer them at the right time?

The Stalinist Position

The position of the Stalinist delegates in the Gillespie Conference was indeed a spectacle for gods and men. A half a dozen or so delegates from TUUL groups in Chicago came to the Gillespie Conference and gave the miners another occasion to scratch their heads in wonderment at this queer mélange of contradiction and inconsistency, this combination of adventurous leaps and panicky retreats, which goes by the name of the trade union policy of Stalinism. The conduct of the Stalinist delegates at the conference was indeed a humiliating confession of bankruptcy, and a complete repudiation of everything that have done on the trade union field in the disastrous years of the "third period".

If the trade union policy of a political group is any good it should reveal its strength precisely on such an occasion as the Gillespie Conference where workers' organizations are seeking an answer to new questions. Isn't that a fair test? The Left Opposition thought so, and that is why its representatives at the conference expounded their trade union policy, not in a new edition but in the old one. Nothing that we said or did there stood in contradiction to the standpoint we have taken in the whole course of the development of the progressive labor movement in recent years. We are quite willing for the militant miners to judge the trade union policy of the Left Opposition not only in the light of what we said at the conference but also in the light of what we said before the conference.

The Stalinists came to the conference under a heavy handicap. The best militants in the miners' organization were antagonistic to them, and for good reasons. The Stalinists fought the opposition movement in the UMW which laid the ground for the formation of the P. M. A. They fought the PMA which represented a mass movement and set up against it the National Miners Union which did not exist in Illinois. They set the TUUL up as a new labor center in 1929 and since that time have been characterizing all unions that did not affiliate with it as "company unions". If these policies had been confirmed as correct by the development of the movement itself, the Gillespie Conference was just the place to defend them and to make further proposals along the same lines. But there was the rub. The policies had been completely discredited in life and did not in any way fit the problem of the hour.

How did the Stalinist delegates get out of this contradiction between the whole policy of the recent years and the concrete needs of the moment? Very simply. They made a complete right-about-face on everything. And they did this without previous announcement or warning in the Party press, without any acknowledgment of previous error; and they even kept, or tried to keep, straight faces through this bizarre performance. In the conference there were not a few conscious militants who follow all developments closely and take careful note of what each group and tendency stands for. But even these seasoned people, who were glad enough to see the old ruinous policies discarded bag and baggage, regarded the spectacle with a certain amount of amusement and incredulity, as one watches a circus performer going through flip-flops and wonders how he does it.

If the party stands for the formation of a new labor movement, and if the TUUL is in fact the new labor center, as they have maintained since 1929, then why not urge the Gillespie Conference to join the TUUL? That is certainly a logical conclusion—if the policy was a correct one. But the Stalinist delegates did not even mention the TUUL. More than that, they appeared there as the most vociferous opponents of any idea of the formation of a new general labor movement at the present time. They repeated all the arguments which the Left Opposition has been making on this question, the arguments which up till yesterday had been denounced as counter-revolutionary. They went further than that. In their disorderly retreat from the discredited policy of yesterday, they arrived at such a conservative position, they argued so passionately against the danger of premature splits in the A. F. of L. unions, that they found themselves a number of times in alliance with the extreme Right wing of the conference, with those who wanted only to let well enough alone and take no further progressive steps of any kind.

If the National Miners Union is the only organization of the progressive miners, and if the PMA is only an imitation of the Lewis union—as was maintained up till yesterday—then the Gillespie conference should have been made a forum for the advancement of this idea. But this policy had likewise gone to pieces on the rocks of reality. So... the National Miners Union was not mentioned by a single word. It is by such contradictions and zig-zags that the Stalinists have succeeded in discrediting the Communist party in the Illinois coal field and facilitating the revival of the socialist organization.

The Left Oppositionists who, by a consistently correct policy over a period of years, and by a loyal participation in the struggles, have gained a certain influence and prestige in the progressive miners movement of Illinois, have great and unique tasks before them. They have to lift up the banner of Communism which has been trampled in the mire and make the miners understand that the monstrous blunders and crimes of the recent years are not an expression of Communism but of the Stalinist perversion of it. In view of the annihilation of the Party organization in southern Illinois, they are obliged to fulfill the natural functions of the party; to conduct the direct struggle against the reformist elements for the decisive influence in the movement. They have to take upon themselves directly the initiative and the leading role in the organization of a strong Left wing which will steer the new movement firmly on the path of a class struggle policy. The destiny of the Progressive Miners movement of Illinois depends on this. And, conversely, the chances of an early revival of the Communist movement and organization among the miners, under the direct leadership of the Left Opposition, depends upon the complete identity of its own interests with the fundamental interests of the miners' movement. The Left Oppositionists at the Gillespie conference were animated by this fundamental conception and made it the starting point of new plans and new endeavors. Great things can follow.

—JAMES P. CANNON.

Shall the Revolutionary Students Be Organized Into Separate Movements

(Continued from last issue)

DISCUSSION ARTICLE

If there is any instance where only the Communists can lead effectively and correctly, it is in the struggle against capitalist militarism and imperialist war. Yet, witness the spectacle at the Barbusse Congress at Amsterdam when the Communist International abandoned its rightful role of leadership to the intellectuals! Comment here is superfluous; the Militant has dealt fully with this Congress and at the Student Conference Against War at Chicago, initiated by the NSL and the Communists, the Amsterdam spectacle was repeated in an even more grotesque manner. The YCL abandoned its field and the results of the Chicago Conference were—confusion, disorganization, perversion and misrepresentation of the revolutionary ways and means to combat imperialism war except as clarified by delegates and supporters of the Communist Left Opposition. (See the articles on the Chicago Student Conference in the Militant by Aderhabe and A. Glotzer for an analysis of this Conference). It was inevitable there, as at Amsterdam or wherever the same stunt is tried, that when the intellectuals or students took over the leadership in the anti-imperialist movement, the real basis of struggle against war was vitiated and the workers misled. The C. P. and YCL stood in the wings, behind the scenes, witnessing, approvingly, the spectacle and abandoned their leading role. Was the revolutionary student participating in such a conference doing his duty in attempting to lead this struggle against capitalist war? He thought so. But he was doomed to failure. Yet subordinate to, and a part of, the YCL, the revolutionary students could take a part, however small or large, in a united front movement against war on specific issues.

On other questions, the NSL has taken a position which on the one hand is correct and on the other, false. For instance, the "revolutionary" NSL endorsed the Communist party in the November elections: a correct action. But it motivated its support of the C. P., not on revolutionary class grounds, but on the fact that the C. P., of all political parties consulted, had alone taken a stand for the students on their specific problems of class fees, etc. How ridiculous for an organization presumably pivoting on a revolutionary axis! Why should any such confusion arise among revolutionary students? It shouldn't; the confusion is unnecessary and springs largely from the concept of an independent student role and the belief that revolutionary students should put forth more "palatable" or "adaptable" reasons for their revolutionary conclusions. This is the manner in which liberals and opportunists justify their stupidities or betrayals.

Yet, and this is another decisive factor, the Young Communist League, measured by its theoretical and organizational basis, is or should be a sufficiently tomorrow. Significant fact: in 1931, the Communist party criminally supported the Fascist popular referendum to dissolve the Prussian Diet, with its socialist-Centrist government, thus alienating the socialist workers from Communism and raising the prestige and strength of Fascism. Our violent condemnation of the policy of the so-called Red Referendum was met with the customary Stalinist abuse: the Trotskyists are agents of Braun and Brüning. In 1933, the same Prussian Diet is finally dissolved by the Fascists, not by referendum but by dictatorial decree. What position do the Stalinists take? If their policy in 1931 was good Bolshevism, and not a criminal adventure, it would be logical that this policy be crowned in 1933 by a vote in the Diet to dissolve it. But they acted in exactly the opposite way: the Communist fraction voted together with the social democrats and the Catholic Center against the dissolution of the Diet!

Germany: Why Is the Comintern Silent

(Continued from page 1)

Three: The most drastic decree yet issued has been put into effect by von Hindenburg on the control of the press and public meetings. Any public meetings, for which 48 hours advance notice must be given in any case, may be forbidden "when danger to the public security is to be apprehended." Are the Nazis a danger to the public security? Of course not! But the Communists and the socialists manifestly are, above all and primarily the former, against whom the decree is particularly aimed. Meetings and demonstrations may be dissolved for any one of a dozen reasons, which means they may be dissolved (i. e., violently dispersed) without any reason at all being given. Any paper may be confiscated or suppressed for "inviting disobedience of the government or its instruments, for inviting or glorifying violence, for proposing a general strike or a strike in some vitally necessary industry, for defending or holding up to contempt the organs or institutions or leading officials of the government," etc., etc. For second offenses, papers may be suspended for from six to twelve months! Even public collections for party purposes "may be restricted or forbidden." In a word, the activities by word or deed of any militant working class organization, of the Communist party in particular, are currently circumscribed to the point where it is forced into a straitjacket.

As is known, the Rote Fahne, organ of the Communist party, together with several other party organs, has already been hit hard by suppression and confiscation. The central organ of the social democrats, Vorwärts, as well as other socialist papers, have met with a similar fate. The central headquarters of the Communist party in Berlin have already been raided. Meetings of workers are being forbidden or dispersed by force. The same measures employed by Mussolini on the road to establishing the black shirts in power, are being started with a vengeance by the Hitler bandits in Germany today.

The civil war has started in all earnest. We take some excerpts from a single issue of the New York Times (February 6, 1933):

"At midnight tonight reports from all over the country give this additional record—undoubtedly incomplete for the day—of the evil results of the violence attending these demonstrations. In Chemnitz, in a clash between socialists and Nazis, one socialist was killed and twelve wounded, five perhaps fatally. At Weizlar twenty were wounded in a similar disturbance. At Bochum, in a conflict between Nazis and Communists, a Nazi leader was killed and there were thirty-one arrests. In Munich, in a Nazi-Communist clash, three Nazis, a Communist, two policemen and a Reichsbanner man were wounded. In Stuttgart, in a row between Nazi storm troops and socialist Reichsbanner men, a Nazi was badly wounded... Joachim Matthes, 17 years old, was held tonight in Sinsfurt on a charge of murdering Mayor Hermann Kasten. The Mayor, who was also a Socialist Deputy in the Prussian Diet and the father of a family, was shot from behind while opening his garden gate. He died in a hospital... In Düsseldorf eight men were injured during clashes in various parts of the city, after four busloads of Nazis had been shot at from windows. Munich, Leipzig and Danzig also reported bloodshed...."

Communists, Socialists and Fascists in Civil War

The civil war has started, but only started. The first bloody skirmishes already show what form it will take when it extends to the far vaster scale it must take on before the question: Fascism or Bolshevism, is definitely decided. The realities of the class struggle exclude the theories and practices of the Stalinists every day. If the theory of "social Fascism" was regarded with contempt and outraged feelings by the Italian socialist worker who remembered his Matteotti, it is now being cut to pieces by the Hitlerite knives sunk into the bodies of socialist workers in Germany. The murder of Mayor Kasten, the killing of dozens of other socialist proletarians and militants, these give also a death-blow in concrete to the theoretically untenable slogan of "social-Fascism". What is dissolved in Prussia, the social democracy does not call upon the workers to rise in protest, to act as a class. No, these contemptible Prussian democrats run to the Supreme Court at Leipzig to complain about Hindenburg's unconstitutional action!

More than that: the consoling theory is being seditiously spread in whispers in the ranks of the Communist party that, after all, it makes no difference to the proletariat whether it be Brüning or von Papen or von Schleicher or Hitler who is in power. For, you see, they all represent one and the same class, the bourgeoisie! This is a theory of cowards, criminals or confirmed idiots. How many party members have been taken in by this, by your leave, theory, cannot be estimated. Scores of them, however, have voiced it. We cannot conceive of a more signal service rendered to reaction than this theory. It is calculated to excuse the impotence of the Stalinists during the past period of the struggle, and also to justify the wretched passivity and bewilderment of the party chieftains in face of the crisis.

Is Fascism Different?

Is Fascism "different" from the "democratic" forms of bourgeois government?

Is it possible that a serious worker can even entertain such a question in the year 1933? Yes, both are the rule of the bourgeoisie. One by "democratic" means, by deception, by illusions, by "persuasive persuasion". The other, however, throws off all pretense and tolerates none of the bourgeois or proletarian democratic forms or institutions. Is the suppression of the socialist press only a little accidental joke of Hitler? Is the murdering of several socialist workers merely a regrettable mistake of the Fascists, or perhaps a Machiavellian plot to disprove the Stalinist theory of "social Fascism"? Has the history of Italian Fascism been forgotten already? Have we already forgotten these gruesome photographs, printed in their time in every labor paper, of workers massacred in Italian streets, of newspaper offices wrecked, of labor temples demolished, of every single institution and organization of the working class—reformist or revolutionary—destroyed with bestial ferocity? Of the trade unions smashed and the political parties driven underground and their leaders imprisoned and exiled and banished?

Whoever even hints to the working class that there is no real difference between the "democratic" rule of the bourgeoisie and the Fascist rule by torch and sword, that it is a matter of indifference to the proletariat, is playing the game to the best interests of Fascism! Whoever does not shout out loud to the workers of all groups and organizations that they must immediately form a powerful united front to crush Fascism before it is in a position to crush the working class completely, is not a leader of the working class but an impostor who should be kicked into the obscurity where he belongs.

Can Fascism still be smashed? Yes. It should and could have been smashed months ago, before Hitler became Chancellor. Invaluable, irreplaceable time has already been lost, but it is not yet too late. Once organized into a powerful, united army, the million-headed German proletariat can sweep the Fascist ecum out of power and into oblivion. But this demands struggle, and united struggle, and whoever stands in the way is giving aid to Hitlerism.

The Socialist Leaders

Do the social democratic leaders want to fight? Yes, if they could be guaranteed that the masses, once set into real motion, will stop where the leaders want them to—i. e., at another socialist or revisionist ministry, let us say—and not go further along the road to proletarian power—the logical goal of such a mass movement. But there is no such guarantee, and the socialist leaders, well aware of it, prefer to restrain, hold back, check, soothe and give false consolation to the masses who follow them. When the Diet is dissolved in Prussia, the social democracy does not call upon the workers to rise in protest, to act as a class. No, these contemptible Prussian democrats run to the Supreme Court at Leipzig to complain about Hindenburg's unconstitutional action!

But the Communists? You read the Daily Worker in vain for an elucidation of the strategy and tactics of the German Communist Party in the present situation. There are whole days when the Daily Worker simply doesn't mention the German situation, for what does it amount to when compared with a meeting of the Independent Barbers' Union of Greater New York? And when it does refer to Germany, it contains badly rewritten accounts from the capitalist press, or else cables from the International Press Correspondence which are a disgrace to the Communist movement? What is the line of policy of the German Communist? What are they doing? What do they plan to do? What has happened with the call issued on the morrow of Hitler's appointment for a national general strike? About all of these vital questions, not one single word in the columns of the Daily Worker.

Here you have the German situation poised on the tip of a needle. The way it falls will decide for the next period the fate of all Europe, and consequently of the world revolution. The central organ of the American Communist Party deals with the whole situation as though it were reporting a local strike of third-rate significance!

But let not the Daily Worker be made the scapegoat for the Comintern. For it is the Comintern, we repeat, that is responsible for the unprecedented silence concerning the German events. Why? Why is no explanation given to the Communist workers about this silence? What is the position of the responsible leadership of the Communist International on the decisive events which are unfolding in Germany? What horrible calamity is Stalinism preparing for the international proletariat?

Plain words! That is what we demand!

Speak up now! Not after the event, not as a sermon for the dead, but as a battle cry and a line of march for the living.

For the real, Leninist united front! For a bloc between the Communist party, the Social Democracy, the Trade Unions, the Red Front Fighters, and the Reichsbanner, to march separately but to strike unitedly, to bring the Iron Front of the German proletariat down upon the skull of the Fascist beast!

Proletarian Communists, militants, workers! The decisive word lies with you now. Speak up so that the whole movement may hear and act—before this whole movement has been drowned in its own blood.

Wed., Feb. 8.

—M. S.

broad organization to include within it not only young workers, but also the revolutionary-minded students. The Communist Youth organization does not demand that young workers or students who desire to join it, shall be full-fledged Communists when they make application. It requires, and properly so, that those joining it shall be willing to learn to be Communists, in theory and through participation in the struggles of the workers. We speak here not of the caricature that the YCL in the United States, and elsewhere, has become, but of the foundation upon which the Young Communist International was erected and the manner the YCLs were expected actually to function. For such students who join the NSL today because of its revolutionary program, we have to say that their place is directly in the ranks of the Communist youth organization.

It is a totally false conception of bridge organizations and their functions to accept the formation of an independent students' organization as a part of that schema. An ILD, which defends class war victims irrespective of their political or economic views, is one thing. An independent students' body with a political program and functions is an altogether different matter. An ILD has an obviously legitimate function to perform. An independent students' organization can, and already has done great harm to the immediate and historical interests of the workers. That which tends to and does usurp the role of a revolutionary political party or YCL becomes a perversion of Marxist theory on the role of a Communist party. When the Stalinists aid in the formation of such bodies as the National Student League, workers and peasants parties, Labor party, anti-imperialist Leagues, etc., they only further undermine the theoretical foundations of Marxism, and particularly the role of the C. P. and YCL. The NSL, in our opinion, is but another version or application of Stalinist theory, and as in the other cases it results only in additional blows delivered against the revolutionary movement. The Barbusse Conference and the American replicas of it are the demonstrations of how these blows are dealt.

But while the Left Opposition, hence, must stand opposed to the formation of independent students' organizations, and more so when they masquerade as "revolutionary" or "Communist", this by no means excludes work among the students. In whatever students' organizations exist, the Communist must build fractions, even as they do in trade unions and other mass organizations of the workers, and there seek to develop Communist influence and win the individual students to the revolutionary banner and organization. Even as anti-imperialist papers can be issued by the Communist without special anti-imperialist organizations, so can Communist student papers be issued to proclaim its cause for the workers and proletarian students.

Win Students on Communist Basis

Nor need there be any neglect of neutralizing or trying to win as allies to the proletarian cause the middle class or petty bourgeois students, in the same manner, relatively, as we seek to make allies of the poor and exploited farmers. But while we recognize the need to win such groups to accept the leadership of the proletariat and the Communists in the struggles against the bourgeoisie, yet it is not for us to aid in the creation of organizations of the petty bourgeoisie of various descriptions. Bigger and more important tasks remain for the Communists. Wherever any organization exists, however, which contains workers and other elements upon whom we can exert influence, the Communists enter, build fractions and conduct their work accordingly. But certainly Communists can never think of relinquishing the role of leadership, politically or organizationally, to such elements; for they are historically unqualified to do so; they cannot serve with their confused and false programs, the interests of the working class and the vast mass of exploited. Trotsky points out in connection with the building of the Red Army: "The petty bourgeois intelligentsia could give the army a considerable number of lower officers, as they had done under czarism, but they could not create a commanding corps in their own image, for they had no image of their own." Likewise, by analogy, the Communists nowhere must concede leading historical roles to forces incapable of "creating a commanding corps." Wherever Stalinism has permitted them—and, worse, justified it—there have resulted debacles: in China on a tremendous world stage; in Amsterdam (Barbusse Congress) on a lesser, but still important scale; and in Chicago (Youth War Conference) on an illusory and comic scale.

In short, the Left Communists must come to the conclusion, in the writer's opinion, for the liquidation of the National Student League and similar creations, and insist that the Communist party and YCL take over the duties and role that properly belongs to them.

—MARTIN ABERN.

Opposition Demands United Front At Second Jobless Conference

LEAGUE REPRESENTATIVE PROPOSES UNITED FRONT POLICY BE ADOPTED TOWARDS CONFERENCE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT ORGANIZED BY SOCIALIST LEADERS

The second meeting of the unemployed front conference on unemployment in New York City was held on Sunday, February 5 at Irving Plaza. Only about one-half of the delegates who attended the first conference two weeks before were present at Sunday's meeting. A sag in the movement which followed from the incorrect policy of the leadership was to be noted, and the difficulties have become further complicated by the action of the Socialist party in calling a rival conference of labor organizations for February 25 at the Rand School Auditorium. The attitude to be taken toward this disruptive maneuver of the Socialist leaders was the most important question of policy under consideration at the Sunday conference.

On this point the entire discussion centered around the proposal of the executive committee for a boycott of the S. P. conference and on the one side, and a counter-proposal made by comrade Cannon in the name of the Left Opposition. Here again, as in the first conference, the fundamental questions of united front policy came to the fore. The elementary ideas of the Lenin tactic were again elucidated by the Left Opposition and once more the objections to them, which were laughed out of the Communist International over ten years ago, were solemnly repeated by the Stalinist spokesmen, Hatcher, Winters, Nesson, and others. The resolution of comrade Cannon, designed to frustrate the splitting tactics of the Socialist leaders and to organize a unity movement within their own ranks, reads as follows:

RESOLUTION

"Whereas, The Socialist Party of New York City, through its Labor Committee, has called a conference of workers' organizations on Unemployment for February 23, and has specified in its conference call the demands of 'unemployment insurance, the 5-day and 30-hour week and further unemployment relief' and

"Whereas, This committee stands for the united struggle of all workers and workers' organizations for immediate demands along these lines, therefore be it

"Resolved, that this committee, while proceeding with its own activities as laid down by the first conference, shall extend a written invitation to the conference of the socialists and the workers' organizations responding to their call, to join forces with us in a common struggle; that a delegation be sent to the conference to make this proposal; and that affiliated organizations of our committee be urged to send delegates to the socialist conference to support our unity proposal from the floor."

In speaking for the resolution, comrade Cannon said that the calling of the S. P. conference was a deliberate move to disrupt and split the movement and was designed at the same time to cover up their own lack of activity in the struggle for the unemployed. On this point there was no disagreement with the executive committee.

"The differences," said comrade Cannon, "arise in the field of tactics; but to frustrate the disruptive maneuvers of the Socialist leaders. In everything we do, we must bear in mind that they are influencing workers and workers' organizations whom we wish to draw into a united movement with us and without whom our movement will lack the necessary united strength. The appeal to the socialist workers to boycott the conference of their own organization and to come to us is incorrect. They are not ready to break with their own organization and to follow our leadership. But the most of them realize the need for a united movement and will support it. They are not convinced of the treacherous role of the Socialist leaders and will not be convinced merely by our denunciation. For this it is necessary to prove in the most concrete manner that the Socialist leaders sabotage and reject our fair and realistic proposals for a united conference and to this end, instead of boycotting the conference—which only plays the game of the disrupters and facilitates their splitting maneuvers—we should not only be sat-

Seek Freedom For Angelo Herndon

YOUNG NEGRO COMMUNIST IS GIVEN 18 TO 20 YEARS IN GEORGIA; NO BAIL GRANTED

One of the most heinous crimes yet committed by the white bourgeois ruling class of the South has come to light in the case of Angelo Herndon.

Coming on the heels of the violent attacks upon the share croppers' meetings at Camp Hill, Angelo Herndon, a young Negro Communist, was picked up in the chain gang state of the union, Georgia, and sentenced to from 18 to 20 years on the chain gang for no other "crime" than that of possessing "Communist literature on his person." The literature, as the defense has already been able to point out, is permitted by federal authorities to pass through the mail.

This act of panicky terror is a glaring reflection of the fear that the rising militancy and consciousness of those most oppressed Negro workers and farmers, is pouring into the hearts of the southern ruling class. More than that, the numerous examples of solidarity between black and white workers against their common enemy, the bosses, have been of no little consequence in increasing the bourgeois' terror. As was to be expected, the Negro politicians and misleaders of the Negro toilers placed the cart before the horse in their criticism of the Angelo case. To them it was not the ruling class of Georgia that was the real villain in the piece, but the Communist party which sent a young Negro worker to the South to—as they put it—sure death.

But has been denied Angelo Herndon, according to latest reports. The Negro and labor baiting South will try its utmost to put through another lynch verdict. The southern capitalist hyenas have not yet had their fill with the Scottsboro boys, the share croppers, the Cliff Jameses and the innumerable others. Only the mighty voice and actions of the entire working class of America, Negro as well as white, can put a stop to the lynch terror whether "legal" or "illegal," that is the common method of the capitalist South. The workers must resist.

De Valera Harnesses Discontent

De Valera, leader of Flannery's party of the petty bourgeoisie, triumphed in the general elections held recently in Ireland. He now has a free hand to reduce the wages of civil employees—the issue which precipitated the elections. Formerly De Valera had to rely on the Irish Labor Party for the continuation of his regime. The Labor Party, however, if it was to exist as a party, could not openly, at this stage of development in Ireland, support this.

None the less the Labor party will continue to support De Valera, as it has no definite policy of its own. In many instances it wants De Valera to have a free hand; in the matter of his fight to abolish the oath of allegiance to the King of England; retention of the land grant; the development of national industries; his hints of a fight for an independent republic.

Where De Valera is going to find a market for the products of "Irish national industries" he has not explained. The total imports of the Irish Free State dropped from $201,821,000 in 1931 to $171,118,000 in 1932. Exports fell from $145,034,000 to $103,102,000. This drop, coupled with a rising army of unemployed, conservatively estimated

Lacroix and Nin Arrested

Andres Nin, former secretary of the Red International of Labor Unions and a prominent leader of the Spanish Left Opposition since his expulsion from the Soviet Union by the Stalinist apparatus, was arrested in Barcelona a few weeks ago in a police raid upon his home. On December 27, the police perpetrated the same thing upon comrade Henri Lacroix. After being held for three days in the headquarters of the Special Police, they were transferred to the prison where it was made known that they were at the disposal of the military authorities of Andalusia.

After seven days in prison, comrade Lacroix was transferred to Alcazarras at the disposal of the military judge; but comrade Nin is now in prison in Barcelona, without any reason being given nor anyone officially informed as to his condition.

More than eight months ago, our comrade Maximo Gorky was imprisoned in Barcelona without any information given on his legal situation. Our comrade Basilio has been confined in Hadojos prison for five months and comrade Llerena, together with other comrades, are incarcerated in other prisons. Unlike the Stalinists, the Spanish bourgeoisie does not know that the "Trotskyists are counter-revolutionists."

Writer Exposes Stalinist Censor

GORKY'S MEMOIRS OF LENIN
FALSIFIED TO SUIT NEED OF PARTY BUREAUCRACY

The latest instance of the rewriting of revolutionary history in the Soviet Union, is uncovered in the February 15, 1933 issue of the liberal journal "The New Republic," in a review by Edmund Wilson of "Days with Lenin" by Maxim Gorky. The English edition of the book has just been published by the Stalinist censor, International Publishers, and Wilson takes the petty forgery undertaken either by Gorky under pressure of the Stalinist censors, or by the censors themselves, for the purposes of the factional anti-Trotsky campaign which has been carrying on for a decade. That the latter is not in the least squeamish about resorting to forgery in this campaign is revealed by the following lengthy excerpt from the Wilson review:

"This memoir, first published in 1927, is a very much amplified and rewritten version of the magazine article published in 1924 at the time of Lenin's death. It is curious to see the passages which have been made in the change about Trotsky. Here is what Gorky in 1924 (translate from a French text):

"Yes, I have often heard him (Lenin) praise his comrades. And he knew how to do justice to the virtues of even those with whom I continued on page 2

Japan Rejects League 'Aid'

IMPERIALISTS JOCKEY FOR POSITION U. S. INVOLVED:
SOVIETS ARE THREATENED

Will Japan break with the League of Nations? Will the League go to the full extent of condemning Japan as the aggressor in Manchuria and recommending some form of action against Japanese imperialism? Or is this merely a sham fight to mislead the workers of the world into believing that the League is really an international organization for preserving peace and outlawing war?

The struggle among the robber imperialist powers is far from being a sham. In this period of capitalist decay, every capitalist country fights desperately to maintain and expand its markets and its economic power at the expense of every other country. Japan's profound disturbance of the imperialist world's balance of economic power in the Far East, its closing of the Manchurian frontiers to all but its own exploitation, arouses the greatest alarm among the rival imperialist bandits.

U. S. Takes Up Challenge

The direct threat to Yankee "influence" in China does not go unchallenged. The naval war maneuvers in the Pacific, the landing of troops in Hawaii, the charting for naval development of the Aleutian Islands with a view to attack Japan from the North to avoid her submarine bases, the discussions by U. S. army officers in technical magazines of the best methods of mobilizing and coordinating war industries—these are real enough moves towards war. U. S. pressure on the League applied by means of the lever of war debts, supplements the concern of the other great powers directly over their own exclusion from Manchuria, possibly from China in the near future, and also over the possibility of the breakdown of the League which would mean a threat to the Versailles Treaty and perhaps a new shuffle of the cards in Europe.

In this sense, dictated by a desire for self-preservation and for maintaining the status quo, the League is not a threat to the U. S. and Japan while the War breaks out whenever the ultimate, irrepressible economic causes find open and sufficient expression in immediate causes. The basic conflict of our epoch is that between the two economic systems, the capitalist and the Communist, systems of relations that cannot possibly continue indefinitely to exist side by side. The ultimate causes of war between the capitalist powers and the Soviet Union, came into existence at the very birth of the proletarian revolution. Hitler in power in Germany will unquestionably precipitate immediate causes for this war. Already the German policy has changed with relation to Japan, a natural ally of Hitler in an anti-Soviet crusade. Hitler wants Japan to remain in Manchuria to be ready for invasion of the USSR. Hence, the German representative, von Koller's proposal in the League to the opposition for a "neutral" body in Manchuria withdrawn to fix a time for withdrawal of Japanese troops, just as at Shanghai.

The ultimate causes of war between the imperialists find expression in every daily newspaper. It is doubtful, however, whether the ruling classes of the capitalist nations will lose sight of their interests as a whole, as expressed in the absolutely fundamental antagonism to the dictatorship of the proletariat, to enter into conflicts that inevitably are secondary and can wait. In any case, even if war broke out between the imperialist U. S. and Japan, their differences could be and would be patched up at once (for later solving) in the event of an attack on the Soviet Union. The greedy calculating moves for greater advantage of the powers would not stop even during such a "holy" war, but would not only be all the more intensified.

The League, as the international mart for imperialist bargaining, is demanding its "price" from Japan for Manchuria. That price includes two guarantees: namely, that Japan halt where she is now without adding North China to her conquest, and that the Japanese generals must no longer "stall" in their implied promise to start the world conflagration by attack the Soviet Union. In that case there will be no break between the League and Japan.

Debate—Anarchism vs. Communism—Sunday, February 23, 8 P. M. at 227 E. 12th St. Spartacist Youth Club vs. Vanguard (Anarchist) Group.

Militant Now 3 Times a Week

Here is the first issue of the "New Militant", which we are undertaking to publish three times a week during the critical days of the German situation. The conversion of the Militant from a weekly into a three-times-a-week, even if at a reduced size, involves a tremendous physical and financial strain. But the immense importance of the stirring drama of the class war which is reaching its highest point in Germany at the present moment, makes it imperative that the Militant be in position to speak at least every second day instead of every week. The independence of the Stalinists makes the active intervention of the Left Opposition even more essential. We are anxious to continue the three-times-a-week at least for the coming month. We need the most generous financial assistance to achieve it. Will you help immediately? Our expenses are increasing during this campaign, but the income from the Militant is lowered in correspondence with the fact that the price for the paper has been lowered to make it available to every worker. Give donations! Spread the Militant! Remember that the new price is

ONE CENT A COPY

German Bourgeoisie Calls Fascism To Solve Economic Crisis Its Way

The political development of the class struggle which has brought Germany to the present period of crucial decisions, has been dialectically interwoven with the development of the economic crisis. Both have progressed by a series of sharp turns which have been prepared for by the conditions of the previous period of weeks or months.

The displacement of Brüning by Papen in June of last year, under conditions of sharp intensification of the crisis, meant that the German bourgeoisie could no longer use a regime whose ability to attack the working class was limited by the necessity of a measure of consideration for its social democratic allies.

Slight Rise Under Papen

The Papen regime from June to December was marked by two sets of developments, apparently contradictory but in reality growing out of each other. In the first place, the ability of the bourgeoisie to gain ground in Germany and internationally at the expense of the working class was expressed in the beginning of an improvement in industrial activity during this period—temporary, precarious, uneven, but nevertheless an unmistakable breathing-space in the development of the crisis. Prices began to rise, unemployment declined, coal and steel production rose, railroad freight traffic rose, building activity, foreign trade, decline in bankruptcies, all the indices of economic life showed the effects of returning "confidence."

continued on page 2

Hitler Lays New Trap for Workers

Aims to Distract Attention from Mass Struggle of Labor
By Parliamentary Deception of March 5; Social Democrats Join in Dupery; Communists Still Tied Hand and Foot by Rejection of United Front

Adolf Hitler has made his aims clear beyond mistake in the first programmatic speech to be delivered for the national elections to be held in Germany on March 5. "A fight against class warfare and a fight against Marxism," to go hand in hand with the destruction of the "parliamentary-democratic system." If there could ever be any doubts before about the deceptive character of the March elections to the Reichstag, they are now entirely eliminated.

The idea that the present Cabinet combination of the Fascist, nationalist and monarchist reaction will attain a "legal" parliamentary majority in the coming elections of sufficient weight to enable it to rule with a constitutional Reichstag foundation, is scouted even by the bourgeois commentators in the press. Even if the "stay at home" vote is brought out in its entirety, there is the slimmest possibility chance that it will cast its vote so solidly as to make up the required millions for a Hitler-Hugenberg-von Papen majority. Yesterday's speech of the monarchist leader, Alfred Hugenberg, not only tacitly acknowledges the unholyhood of this eventuality, but in the words of the World-Tribune correspondent (February 12), has "let the cat out of the bag by revealing that the government of national concentration...intends to govern in the future by dictatorship, regardless of the will of the people."

The Election Trap

Leaving aside for the moment the vain Hugenbergian dream of governing together with the Fascists—in view of the fact that the Fascists aim at complete hegemony, of the open rule by rifle and bayonet—the speeches of Hitler and Hugenberg make it as plain as a pikestaff that the axis of the whole situation revolves not around the deliberate illusion of a sham parliamentary struggle, but on the extra-parliamentary battle of the class struggle.

That the social democratic leaders, who fear the unleashing of the militant class movement more than anything else, should seek to drive the workers into the trap, goes without saying. The present position of the social democracy of Germany is most crassly and stupidly stated by the yellow socialists of New York in the leading editorial of the Jewish Forward of February 3:

"Hitler's authority will help the Hitlerists' precocious little in this case, for everybody knows that Hitler has not become a Nazi. He designated Hitler as Chancellor because Hitler represents the largest party in the country. But he has not given him the slightest dictatorial power. On the contrary, Hitler has put into Hitler's cabinet a majority of ministers who are indeed reactionaries but at the same time bitter opponents of Hitler's program and he also secured himself against the rule for very long against the will of the Reichstag. What will happen further, nobody knows. Most likely, however, Hitler has not violated the Constitution. And Hitler is not yet a dictator." (Our emphasis.)

Everybody has his role. That of the social democracy is base treason.

What is C. P. Doing?

And the Communist party? A position of naive hopeless confusion, irresolution and hopelessness in the midst of a situation that cries out for clarity, determination and audacity, can hardly be imagined. The parliamentary elections as the axis of the struggle, constitute an enormous and treacherous swindle. What is the party doing to counteract it? There is only one thing that it can and must do: organize the genuine united front of all workers' organizations to launch the general strike, to mobilize the concerted strength of the German proletariat to crush Fascism. Is the party doing this? It has not even begun, for to begin it is imperative to throw overboard all the disastrous policies of yesterday which have rendered the party so impotent in the struggle. In the face of everything that has happened, the party still continues with its pernicious chatter about the "proletarian united front under the leadership of the Communist Party of Germany" (Inprecorr, No. 4), which is the old unitarist policy: Socialists workers, recognize our leadership in advance or else there will be no united front!

continued on page 2

Uprising Threatens Machado

Armed insurrection against "Butcher" Machado has again threatened to break out in Cuba and various guerrilla bands of workers, peasants, American adventurers and filibusters appear to have commenced operations in various parts of the island.

At last it appears that the comic opera "Tropical Mussolini" is on his last legs. Machado for eight years has done his best to advance the financial interests of Wall St. and himself through the most intensive exploitation of the Cuban labor movement and the amassing of an enormous personal fortune.

The Machado regime, by the most brutal repressive measures, carried through against all political and class opponents with little or no pretence of legality. Instead of playing his enemies against one another he has succeeded in uniting them all against his regime, depending for his support on a strong bureaucratic governmental apparatus, a pampered military and police force and American imperialism which, through ambassador Gruggenheim and in the interests of the sugar trust, he held the economic life-strings of the island. Now, however, even those Wall Street financial circles whose interests he has been so willing in his own brutal, blundering fashion, have withdrawn their support and thrown their weight into the scales against him.

Machado Position Untenable

Machado's position has become untenable with the whole social basis of his rule swept from under him. The brutal methods of violence and terror have been counter-balanced by the desperation of the masses suffering the effects of the sharpest economic crisis in the country's history. The Cuban working class, nourished by revolutionary and anti-imperialist traditions and led largely by Communists and syndicalists, has at no time abandoned its opposition to the regime and has managed, in spite of the murder, imprisonment and exile of its strongest cadres, to keep alive in the masses the spirit of proletarian struggle. The suppression of the workers' and students' movements, the indecision and cowardice of the petty-bourgeois oppositionists, and the ever-present threat of American intervention under the Platt Amendment are important factors that have served to prolong a situation that would not be otherwise possible.

The antecedents of the bourgeois revolutionary leaders indicate the road they are likely to follow. Wall Street financial circles whose interests he has been so willing in his own brutal, blundering fashion, have withdrawn their support and thrown their weight into the scales against him.

Catastrophe Threatens

The Fascists are already in power, but they have far from consolidated it. They have not yet even taken over the whole power. And this circumstance still gives the German proletariat time enough to act decisively enough to destroy the brown-shirted monster. The attainment of this end lies through the united front of the Communist party, the trade unions, the Social Democratic party, the Reichsbanner and the Red Front Fighters, which the former must immediately initiate.

Sunday, Feb. 12

—M. S.

B'KLYN MASS MEETING

The CRISIS in GERMANY

SPEAKERS:
James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman

Labor Lyceum
940 WILLOUGHBY AVE.,
BROOKLYN N. Y.
ADMISSION 15 Cents

Bourgeoisie Calls on Fascism

ANALYSIS SHOWS THAT ESTABLISHMENT OF HITLER REGIME IS FINAL EFFORT OF RULING CLASSES TO SETTLE ECONOMIC CRISIS IN ITS OWN WAY

continued from page 1

ness and self-assertiveness of the masses, and the appearance of signs of disintegration within its reserve troops, the Fascists. It is no longer disposed to gamble on the possibility of a return of profits and prosperity through those means of attack on the working class which are compatible with the existence of powerful mass organizations, parties, press and labor unions. The bourgeoisie is preparing to strike a decisive blow, and the present period of the Hitler-Papen regime gives its time for preparation.

A sharp revival of business activity and prosperity falling from Heaven might dispose it again to postpone the decisive conflict; but we see no evidence that this is likely. On the contrary, a renewed wave of sharpening of the economic crisis, breaking through the present stagnation spell, might well cause it to cut short its preliminaries and open the period of high tension of class war by a frontal Fascist attack on the organizations of the working class.

Bourgeoisie Forced to Change

The change of mask was executed in the first week of December. If the improvement in business had gone further and lifted German economy from the crisis into a depression period with a clear way out in prospect; if the reformist leaders of labor had shown their ability to hold the masses in line with the policy of the "social general"—Schneider might be in power yet.

But the improvement in business activity in Germany appears to have reached a stalemate. Tied hand and foot to the imperialism of America, England and France by bonds of financial dependence, unable to expand its foreign trade with the colonial countries and with Soviet Russia (on capitalist terms), thrown back on its impoverished internal market and on the collapse of European countries which are continually strangling foreign trade tighter and tighter, the temporary stabilization initiated by the limited recovery last year is unable to lift itself from an extremely low level. Car-loadings are declining again; the slight reported fall in unemployment is not enough to make up for the real increases in the number of unemployed who no longer are reported; the surpluses of exports over imports are barely enough to pay for interest on Germany's foreign loans.

At the same time, the reformist leaders are no longer able to deliver their working class following to the bourgeoisie, as promised. In spite of all the false tactics of the Stalinists, the "social Fascists", the refusal to propose a serious united front from organization to organization, the "united front from below"—the elementary movement of the working class of Germany to the banner of international Communism is undeniable. On the parliamentary field, in the elections to shop committees in the factories (where the Communist party has been outstandingly weak compared to its support among the unemployed), in the direction of strikes, the reformists have been losing ground.

The bourgeoisie has waited—and it has seen. It has seen the rising danger to its class domination from the growing aggressiveness and self-assertiveness of the masses, and the appearance of signs of disintegration within its reserve troops, the Fascists. It is no longer disposed to gamble on the possibility of a return of profits and prosperity through those means of attack on the working class which are compatible with the existence of powerful mass organizations, parties, press and labor unions. The bourgeoisie is preparing to strike a decisive blow, and the present period of the Hitler-Papen regime gives its time for preparation.

A sharp revival of business activity and prosperity falling from Heaven might dispose it again to postpone the decisive conflict; but we see no evidence that this is likely. On the contrary, a renewed wave of sharpening of the economic crisis, breaking through the present stagnation spell, might well cause it to cut short its preliminaries and open the period of high tension of class war by a frontal Fascist attack on the organizations of the working class.

—B. J. FIELD.

Writer Exposes Stalinist Censor

continued from page 1

he was supposed to be personally unsympathetic.

"Surprised by the flattering appreciation he showed for one of them, I remarked that a good many people might be amazed by it."

"Yes, yes, I know. They tell a lot of lies about my relations with him. Yes, they tell a lot of lies—and especially about me and Trotsky."

"Rounding on the table, he declared: 'Show me another man who could organize in a year an armed revolutionary army and win the respect of military experts besides. We've got that man. We've got everything. And so we'll do wonders.' 'Here is the later version, published after Trotsky had been banished:'

"Yes, he often praised the comrades in my hearing, even those with whom he was not personally in sympathy. Lenin knew how to appreciate their energy. I was very surprised at his high appreciation of L. D. Trotsky's organizing abilities. V. Ilyitch noticed my surprise."

"Yes, I know there are lying rumors about my attitude to him. But what is, is, and what isn't, isn't—I know also. He was able to get me to organize the military experts."

"After a pause, he added in a lower tone, and rather sadly: 'And yet he isn't one of us. With us, but not of us. He is ambitious. There is something of Lassalle in him, something which isn't good.'"

"It looks as if the Stalin censorship has here come into play. Either Gorky was moved to write what he had written of Lenin's appreciation of Trotsky or the censor made him cut it out. The paragraph about organizing the army looks in the second version as if it had been telescoped."—Edmund Wilson.

A Pen Picture by John Reed

C. G. RAKOVSKY

In the lexicon of the Stalinist press, comrade Christian G. Rakovsky, leader of the Russian Bolshevik-Leninists, Left Opposition, is a "counter-revolutionist". For several years now, this great revolutionary has been kept in exile in Siberia by the Stalinist machine, his health undermined and his life in danger. We reprint here from the old organ of the American Left wing, "Revolutionary Age" of January 26, 1919, an interesting pen picture of our great comrade, written by John Reed.

For two months in the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Government at Petrograd I worked side by side with Rakovsky. He was editing a daily paper in Rumanian, which was distributed not only in the ranks of the Rumanian army but also to the Transylvanian soldiers of the Austrian army. He made frequent trips to the south of Russia, where he secretly crossed the Rumanian lines and traveled incognito through his own country, spreading revolutionary doctrines at the risk of his life.

In December 1917, when the Soviet Government signed an armistice with Germany and Austria, Rumanian refused to participate. The Russian troops on the Rumanian front obeyed orders from Petrograd and entertained at headquarters a German and Austrian delegation. The Rumanian Government arrested this delegation, and upon the protest of the Russians, surrounded them with Rumanian troops and fired on them with artillery. The Russian soldiers had to cut their way by force through the Rumanian lines back to Russia, losing many men.

The consequences were swift. Trotsky ordered the immediate arrest of the Rumanian minister at Petrograd. The next day Allied and neutral ambassadors demanded his liberation. This was granted.

ed, but the Soviet government ordered that the Rumanian diplomatic mission should leave Russia within ten hours.

"That afternoon I was in the office of Zalkind, Assistant Commissaire of Foreign Affairs. In one corner were five or six red guards and sailors drinking tea around a battered samovar. At the side of the room Rakovsky sat at a table, writing furiously. Entered a veteran in the old-time resplendent livery of the czar. He has a card, it read: 'Mr. A. First secretary of the Rumanian Embassy to Russia.' 'Show him in,' said Zalkind. There appeared a dapper youth in frock coat, silk hat, gloves and stick. He surveyed the room with uneasiness mingled with contempt. Zalkind, wearing peasant boots and an old uniform without insignia, came forward to meet him. 'What can I do for you, sir?' he asked courteously. 'This is the Ministry of Foreign Affairs,' asked the secretary. 'We have received an order emanating from somewhere that the Rumanian Embassy must leave Russia within ten hours. We have a right to do. Our office is scattered to the winds. It will take at least three days—'Zalkind smiled in the friendliest way. 'With that, Mr. Secretary, I have nothing to do. You must address yourself to our Commissaire for Rumanian Affairs. Allow me, comrade Rakovsky.'"

Rakovsky, from his seat, dignified and suave. He bowed the Secretary went pale and dropped his gloves. "I am extremely sorry to be unable to accommodate you, Mr. Secretary," said Rakovsky very politely. "The last time I was officially in your country I was compelled to leave in two hours and a half. We give the ambassador an hour, and by that we recognize that he is four times as important as I. Good afternoon!"

—JOHN REED.

PUBLISHING FUND

TWO NEW PAMPHLETS

In a week to ten days two new pamphlets will be off the press. SOVIET ECONOMY IN DANGER AND THE EXPULSION OF ZINOVIEV

The first to go to press and the first to be ready will be comrade Trotsky's analysis of the situation in Soviet economy on the eve of the second five year plan; and the significance of the second expulsion of Zinoviev. It will be a seventy-two page pamphlet uniform in size with Unemployment and the American Working Class by comrade Swaback and will sell for ten cents. Postage will be one cent extra per copy.

IN DEFENSE OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

Following immediately upon the heels of the Soviet Economy pamphlet will be comrade Trotsky's speech to the social democratic students at Copenhagen. This will run to forty-eight pages and will be uniform in size with the others.

It will sell for five cents. Postage will be one cent extra per copy. The minimum number of copies per sale is five.

Orders for both pamphlets may be sent in now. In fact such orders will make easier the work of bringing them out.

THE PUBLISHING LOAN FUND

This stroke of publishing activities was made possible by the generosity of one sympathizer in New York who has made us a loan of thirty-five dollars for this purpose. That is how the loan fund ideas is catching on. Again we ask our friends and sympathizers to come forward, now more than ever, to help us spread the ideas of revolutionary internationalism by donating and lending us money to bring out this literature. Who will be the next to respond? Just as we go to press we are in receipt of a $3 donation from comrade Handy of Philadelphia for the publication of the defense of the October Revolution.

Capitalist Chain Gang Exposures

"I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" is a picture based on the book by Burns, the book itself, the publicity in the newspapers at the time of his struggle against extradition, the case of the fourteen year old New Jersey lad, and before these the publicity connected with the Florida sweat box torture-murder case, have aroused a widespread interest in the boss class weapon of persecution and exploitation—the chain gang.

But this should not be of fleeting interest to serious-minded workers, though indeed it is to the interests of the channels of information of the bourgeoisie, the theatres and newspapers to so handle it. So as to extract as much cash as possible from the theatre-goers they present the dramatic phases only, leaving out the social meaning of the chain gangs, the political uses the southern bourgeois make of it, and the historical roots of the chain gang penal institution.

What is outstandingly false in the whole "exposure" of the chain gang is the impression created by the bourgeoisie that they are for the abolition of the chain gang. Only a Communist party with organizational strength in the Southern states, too, building weapons of working class solidarity and wielding them against such boss class weapons of division, is capable of carrying on a fight for the abolition of the chain gang.

There is still another tremendously important criticism of the present chain gang propaganda of the bosses they leave out of it, as if there were no connection between them, the Negro question. Why, it was first initiated in the early part of the Reconstruction Period in the city of Raleigh, N. C. as a means of re-enslaving the freed slaves! Negroes were their first victims. And only a very few years ago before the Communists brought the Negro question to the forefront and when the bourgeois chain gang propaganda was put out for only sectional consumption in the Carolinian Chain Gang, appealing to a racial prejudice, apologized for the State's maintenance of this horrible institution by referring to "the presence of the Negro in large numbers."

In that same Southern state, in 1929, three-fourths of the convicts were white yet two-thirds of those in chain gangs were colored. I have no doubt that North Carolina has been and is quite representative of the Southern States as a whole in this respect.

It is when the chain gang is presented as a phase of the Negro question that one grasps its social significance. It is a boss class

Opposition at Jobless Meet

continued from page 1

Socialist conference with a direct request to bring the two conferences together into a single movement, it will provide the necessary platform for the delegates within the conference who really stand for unity. It will deprive the Socialist leaders of all plausible excuses to continue the disruption and the splitting of the movement. Under such conditions the conscientious Socialist workers who want unity in the fight for bread will see their leaders put to the test and will be able to judge them accordingly. There is every reason to count upon a strong support for our proposals in the Socialist conference if we proceed in this way. We must remember that we are in the fourth year of the crisis and the hungry masses are in no mood to tolerate those who stand in the way of a united struggle."

Stalinists Oppose United Front

The resolution of the Left Opposition was opposed by the Stalinists in the conference. Hathaway, bringing with the assurance and wisdom of a Lenin school graduate, explained that it would be wrong to strengthen the Socialist party by sending delegates to the conference. In precisely what manner a delegation committed to fight for unity in the S. P. conference would in any way "strengthen" the Socialist leaders in their splitting policy was not revealed by Hathaway. Nessin remarked that "Delegate Cannon's proposal to send our delegates to the S. P. conference is in reality a proposal to build up the S. P. conference and to become the tail-end of it." There is one thing to be said for the viewpoint of Hathaway and Nessin: It has been tried before. This idea motivated the boycott of "company unions" on the ground that we must not build them up. But what has been the result of this policy? Did it not prove to be the best of all possible schemes to secure the position of the reactionary bureaucrats?

In the voting on the resolution of the Left Opposition, twelve votes were recorded for it and twenty-eight against.

Another discussion arose over the motion to put the name of the

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin Abern James P. Cannon

Max Shachtman Maurice Spector

Arne Swaback

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1933

Vol. VI, No. 7 (Whole No. 154)

Single copy: one cent. Bundle rates on application.

weapon of persecution and exploitation wielded to help perpetuate racial antagonism in America, to foster working class division along racial lines which is a barrier to an organized working class in the South, to maintain a caste system. The present bourgeois propagandists who have stirred up an interest in the chain gang leave out these essential considerations simply because they are not interested in its abolition. They do a certain amount of exposing of the justice of their own class because the certain amount of exposing they do constitutes an opiate to put the workers to sleep.

More and more countries in the South are adopting the policy of having more road work done by convicts. Other than road work is being done by convicts—quarrying, mining, snow shoveling, cleaning of County courtyards, etc. The United States Department of Justice has adopted the policy and is carrying out the practice of working Federal prisoners in chain gangs in Army camps. And the North is moving in the direction of the South in this respect. The three so-called "cantonnments" for prisoners in New York State, established in 1930, resemble chain gangs to no small extent. Through the Middle and Southwest, prisoners are fined and forced to work out their fines on the county roads. The "Industrial Worker" a few months back reported an even closer resemblance to the regular Southern chain gang system having been put into practice in the state of Washington.

There is every reason to believe that unless the workers, as a class, struggle against this boss class weapon of oppression there will be no effective struggle carried on against it, for the chain gang has too many features that recommend it to the present ruling class. First of all, the work done by prisoners is worth something—not to the prisoners. Secondly, it does not impose upon the government the necessity of building so many jails when numerous thousands of workers are being pushed into crime because of growing unemployment and starvation. Thirdly, it punishes and gives authority to punish more severely than the punishment publicly announced by the Judge. In the chain gang the excuse that "he tried to escape" may be the only public indication of the actual death penalty, whereas the nominal sentence announced in the court and in the newspapers may have been "ten days on the road"—a fact that the bosses will keep in mind when it comes to able organizers and revolutionists.

—GEORGE J. SAUL.

Revolt Threatens Machado in Cuba

continued from page 1

ing the period of his presidency, Mario Menocal, the leader of the present revolt was a recognized collaborator and instrument of the sugar interests.

The workers, who have suffered most from the Machado tyranny, and by whose exertions combined with those of the bourgeois opposition and the sugar trust, the regime is now due to fall, must not be off their guard. At the very least, the legality of their organizations must be secured, together with the right to free assembly lifting of the censorship over the press and mails, and freedom for all class war and political prisoners. Should the workers' movement really gain in strength, circumstances will warrant the demand for nationalization of the sugar industry that constitutes the principal industry of the island. But an attempt at actual seizure of the sugar mills, which would inevitably entail an armed proletarian insurrection for the seizure of political power also, would be premature from both objective and subjective considerations of the present situation.

—ROSALIO NEGRETE.

Left Opposition Gives Estimate of Spanish Anarchist Putschism

Recent events have demonstrated anew that our labor movement is already directly confronted with the proletarian revolution, which until recently appeared remote. The attempts of the bourgeoisie to characterize these movements, as if they were completely distinct from the general evolution of the proletariat after the Republican experience, and as if they constituted the last manifestations of an attitude about to disappear, are futile. The bourgeoisie also sought to portray the insurrection of Figols in the same way. But it has been seen that as soon as the labor movement again commenced to show signs of life, after the Figols affair, it immediately entered into an insurrectionary act, which aside from being a calamitous abortion, demonstrated indubitably all the emptiness and absolute lack of revolutionary criticism of the anarchists. The proletarian revolution, which at the time of the advent of the republic, was believed postponable to the remote future, figures today on the agenda for the whole revolutionary working class camp.

But this evolution of the proletariat requires as a complement new arms and new instruments, which can assure an upward march and victory. The last insurrection has been added to the whole catastrophic series of anarchistic experiments which have cost the workers movement of our country so dearly. The anarchist insurrection was the wildest imaginable sort of an

FROM THE MILITANTS

In the Spirit of Stalin's Letter

CLEVELAND — Last Saturday night a liberal sympathizer of the USSR, Ella Winters (Mrs. Lincoln Steffens), spoke in the auditorium of the Women's City Club under the auspices of the "Friends of the Soviet Union". After the lecture there were many questions from the floor, a good number of them relating to Trotsky and to his status in the Soviet Union.

In reply to a question as to what the children are taught in the Soviet schools about the USSR, Ella Winters (Mrs. Lincoln Steffens) replied that Soviet textbooks do not even mention his role in the October insurrection or in the civil war. She had asked a Soviet professor if this were not... falsifying history (these are her own words). The gentleman in question replied: "True, it is falsifying history, but it is a means to an end. To teach the truth about Trotsky would revive dangerous sentiments for the leader of the Left Opposition and disturb the great work of socialist construction that is going on. In order not to obstruct this great end falsification is justified." And he assured Mrs. Steffens that in a few years, after socialism is secured, this will all be rectified and Trotsky will again be given his due place in Soviet history. The true facts, objectivity in the science of history has—so to speak—only been temporarily suspended, not eliminated. Of course, all for the good of the cause....

"And this, my friends," the worthy lady concluded with approval, "is the realistic way in which the Soviets approach the problem."

A comrade asked the speaker how such an explanation can be reconciled with the scientific, Marxian foundation of Soviet society—which requires at all times, objectivity and the truth—recalling that the central organ of the Bolshevik party itself bears the name "Pravda", that is, "Truth". The speaker replied that she could not answer that question. Besides, she did not wish to go into "inner-party politics".

This blunt explanation of Mrs. Steffens deserves an evaluation. Unless she lied, it is also the explanation of Soviet pedagogues. Of course the explanation is quite in line with the Stalin regime and is no doubt in the "spirit of comrade Stalin's letter", which, the Daily Worker cynically tells us, represents Marxism or Leninism of the present period, the one of completing the "first phase of Communism (socialism)". But why is falsification so readily endorsed by people who are associated here in America with muckraking liberalism and what does this endorsement mean?

That the American muckrakers were not to be taken very seriously became obvious during the last war, when the whole pack of them jumped on the Wilson bandwagon. Can these same people be trusted as "Friends of the Soviet Union"? These people always, or nearly always have good intentions. We will not dispute that. But will not these "good intentions" which paved their way to Wilsonian jingoism betray them also when the Soviet Union is really in danger, when more is required of them than uncritical and meaningless praise for the actual successes of socialist construction in the USSR? The light-minded endorsement of Mrs. Steffens of what she bluntly calls "falsification of history" cannot but make us sceptical with regard to the actual value of her role as a "Friend of the Soviet Union". What the Soviet Union, what the working class at the head of it, needs most and at all times, Lenin—following the scientific approach of Marxism—always stressed: is the truth, the objective facts. Support for the working class which is not based upon a sympathy with the actual facts, with a thorough examination of them, is extremely questionable, is superficial and because of this superficiality, unreliable when a real test of conviction has to be withstood, in times of crisis. And that is when real friends of the Soviet Union are actually needed. —GORDON.

Fight for United Front in Boston

BOSTON.—The Needle Trade Workers Industrial Union called a conference to protest against Governor Ely's attempt to abolish the labor laws of Mass.

Seventy delegates from thirty organizations, sixty-two branches were present. They consisted of four A. F. of L. locals, Workmen's Circle branches Communist League of America (Opp.); Communist party; Left wing clubs, schools, IWO, TUUL, a few shops, and the ILD.

It was supposed to be a united front conference of all labor organizations. The party representative talked a lot about unity but did not forget to make plain the kind of unity they mean—unity with the workers not with the leaders.

A resolution was adopted for a program of action: (1) A United Front State Conference to enforce the existing labor laws and improve them (2) A demonstration in front of the state house where a committee will present a list of demands adopted at the conference. A plan of action committee consisting of one delegate of each organization was elected. The delegate of the Communist League of America (Opp.), Jennie Chiplovitz, spoke on the resolution and made another proposal to call a real united front of all labor and political organizations not only of the individual workers and individual locals, but also the central bodies. She pointed out the importance of the conference and the necessity of including all the workers as long as these reactionary leaders have a following of thousands of workers who still believe in them. We must find a way of reaching them. We must see that the united front does not remain on paper, but is effective. Therefore we must call the leaders and the organizations as well as the individual workers.

There was applause by those workers that were not quite aware that they must not applaud a Trotskyist. No one attacked or spoke in favor of the proposal. The party spokesmen did not want to give the Opposition credit for the proposal; so they were silent. But unless they call a genuine united front conference, this one will have the same results as all the other abortive party conferences.

—JENNIE CHIPLOVITZ.

De Valera Forms Gov't.

continued from page 1

The Communist international has neglected the fight of the Irish workers and peasants. True, they have their Friends of the Soviet Union—but a revolutionary party to come before the Irish masses exposing De Valera and all other fakers they have failed to organize up till now. The Irish Workers Voice about a month ago announced that the C. I. was undertaking the formation of an Irish section in February. If this is not a rumor or paper revolution of the familiar Stalinist variety we will be among the first to greet the organized vanguard of the Irish toiling masses.

The active collaboration of the British party is absolutely necessary in carrying out this task. The interests of the Irish and British masses are historically and inseparably interwoven.—JACK CARMODY setback. The confusion and revolutionary hysteria of the anarchists negates all the possibilities of advance. The proletariat which in all other countries, has by now separated itself from anarchism still has this task before it in Spain. This is a question of life or death for the revolutionary movement. Anarchism is not, nor can it be, capable of leading the proletariat to victory.

What has been the attitude of the anarchists towards the Republic? When they had power in their hands, illudion with the regime, they permitted the bourgeoisie to wrest every position from them, giving it the possibility of establishing a repressive apparatus which today directs all its fire against the proletariat. When they became "disillusioned" with the Republic, the anarchists went into a revolutionary hysteria, and they now propose behind the backs of the working class to do what they did not know how to accomplish when they had power; seize the power from the bourgeoisie. The anarchists hope to accomplish by the bold stroke of a daring minority that which must be done by the united efforts of the great masses.

After this and former experiences can anarchism be an orientating and directing force for the proletariat? No. As far as we have advanced in the revolution, anarchism has not directed anything but has been a plaything of events. It is inevitable and unavoidable that the great exploited masses should suffer delusions when confronted with a bourgeois regime (because of its ability to deceive the masses in the world); but a vanguard of the proletariat cannot today harbor illusions about a bourgeois republic. And those who, like the anarchists, have suffered these delusions, which have cost the working class so dearly, are not the proletarian vanguard but the playthings of events. The anarchists of every tendency, have, during the change of regime, dedicated themselves to stupefying the proletarian consciousness, slipping into the most vulgar republicanism. The early republicanism of the anarchists, like their later impotent radicalism, are a necessary consequence of their nullity as a revolutionary tendency.

In our previous political resolution, published in Communismo (No. 19), we pointed out, on the one hand, the formidable strikes which were approaching, and on the other, the deplorable state of division within the trade union movement, and particularly of the National Confederation of Labor (C. N. T.). Consequently, we pointed out as the first step, the strengthening and unification of the trade union cadres, without which the prospect of strikes were bound to be a clamorous failure. The Iberian Anarchist Federation (F. A. I.) did not see the necessity of this; the more isolated anarchism was, the farther removed from "corrupting elements", so much farther off were the probabilities of victory for the revolution. In this manner, such a conflict as the railway strike, which stands definitely on the agenda, is saved from defeat by being prevented from taking place. The reformists betray the demands of the railroad workers; but the revolutionaries do not know how to organize the strike. The conflict has been in this state since 1930.

To be continued

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Published thrice weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1923 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879.

VOLUME VI, NO. 8 [WHOLE NO. 155]

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1933

PRICE 1 CENT

Hitler Is Consolidating the Power of Fascism In Germany! Whoever Blocks the Workers' United Front Is a Traitor!

Hitler has taken another big step in the consolidation of exclusive Fascist domination of Germany. The social democrats whose policy of toleration to Brüning and von Schleicher and outright support for Hindenburg paved the way to the triumph of Hitler, is being repaid by the latter with a brutal kick in the face. The Fascist Minister of the Interior for Prussia, Captain Goering, has just removed more than a score of officials, the majority of them social democrats. Among those who were dismissed are to be found three provincial government presidents, three vice-presidents and more than ten police chiefs. All of them have been replaced by members of the Fascist party.

Symbolic and significantly characteristic is the removal of the notorious social democrat Carl Zoergel, who became so odious to the working class of Berlin while police chief of that city; he has now been removed from office as police chief of Dortmund to which he was shifted from Berlin when the von Papen cabinet was established last year. Several days ago it will be remembered, the social democratic bloodhound, Gustav Noske, was removed as the administrative head of Hanover. Such key cities of Prussia as Cologne, Aix-la-Chapelle, Wiesbaden, Bochum, Halle, Hanover, Dortmund, Cassel and Frankfurt-am-Main were included in the sweeping Fascist clean-up. The social democrats now have not a single supreme government president or police chief in any part of Prussia. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Sun (2-14-1933) points out with an acumen which the Stalinists would do well to emulate that "Just as the Fascist party in Italy gradually took over the civil service and became undistinguishable from the Government itself, so the Nazis here hope slowly to undermine and eventually take over the entire government structure. . . . The Nazi move is especially notable in police circles."

A two-year old child should be able to understand Hitler's tactics.

Contrary to the infinitely stupid assertions of the Stalinists concerning the Fascist essence of social democracy—which do not improve by repetition in the face of obvious facts—there is a sharp antagonism between the social democracy and Fascism. Hitler is trying every single day to prove to the Stalinist blockheads that while the social democrats are the principal prop of the "democratic" form of bourgeois rule, it becomes not merely superfluous but a direct hindrance to the bourgeoisie when it seeks to abolish all democratic forms and institutions and to rule by naked force, by the sword and the torch, in a word, by Fascist dictatorship.

This is why the Fascists attack not only the revolutionary wing of the labor movement, the Communists, but also seek to annihilate the points of support of the social democracy. If the eloquent experience of Italian Fascism were not sufficient to make this clear, the first couple of weeks of Hitler as Chancellor should serve to enlighten even the most backward. But the Stalinist leaders of the Communist party continue with incredible obstinacy to prattle about "social fascism" and the "united front from below". In its leading editorial on Tuesday, the Daily Worker still advances the fantastic theory that Hitler is still weakening and that the Communist party is advancing all along the line. . . . because of its parliamentary successes. The parliamentary successes of the party do indeed show the willingness of the workers to fight Fascism; the spontaneous united actions of socialist and Communist workers show it still more clearly. But now less than ever are purely parliamentary successes a sound gauge. The crucial hour demands the extra-parliamentary mobilization of the whole German proletariat to crush Fascism before it entrenches itself too solidly. And this is just where the impotence of the official party and its leadership shows itself so strikingly. Where is the movement for the assembling of the factory councils and the unemployed on a national scale to prepare for the general strike of all the workers? Where is the organized movement of the workers to defend themselves against the growing encroachments of the brown-shirted bandits? To content oneself with the empty boasts about election victories of yesterday, is simply light-headed bureaucratic self-satisfaction or treachery!

The only road for the German working class at the present moment is the united front of all the working class organizations. The party bureaucracy stands in the way of the united front. It is sacrificing the interests of the German working class, of the world revolution, of the Communist International for the sake of preserving the theory of infallibility of the Stalinist leadership of preserving the bureaucratic, ultimatum formula of the "united front from below" which divides socialist from Communist workers instead of uniting them.

The Stalinist leaders write about

Germany in the Daily Worker as if there were years of preparation ahead of them. To read their contributions, one would imagine that the Communist party is going to continue winning over ten socialist workers here and ten there until the social democracy is dissolved, after which it will be the turn of the Fascists to feel the heat of the proletarian. What better service could be done to Fascism? It is not wasting a moment. It is taking advantage of the passivity of the Stalinists and the craven capitulation of the social democratic leaders, to strengthen its own position. It is laying hands upon every strategic post, especially upon those which control the armed forces.

We say openly: The refusal to mobilize the genuine united front of all the workers' organizations IMMEDIATELY, is downright treason to the German proletariat!

The revolting chatter of the Stalinists about their election successes and the "united front from below" will not help them to conceal this terrible fact. Now is the time! The Stalinists are playing with the situation! Tomorrow the individual workers who have been cut down by the Fascist thugs will be multiplied a thousand times, and under conditions not half so favorable to the workers of Germany as are the conditions of struggle at the present time.

The failure to organize the united front is only another way of capitulating to Fascism without a serious struggle. Hitler is well aware of this. Hitler knows his road and he follows it relentlessly. The working class must understand its own position and act resolutely too. It is all-powerful and invincible if it only unites its arms and strikes with determination. Those who stand in the way of this unity will hear a horrible responsibility for the impending catastrophe!

Let the Communist workers reflect—and act speedily. Let them demand an immediate reckoning from the self-satisfied bureaucrats who remain passive while the enemy prepares its death-blow! Tues., Feb. 14, 1933. —M. S.

Scottsboro Frame-Up Laid Bare

CHARGE OF "RAPE" PROVES TO BE UNFOUNDED; LETTER OF GIRL NOW PUBLISHED

A startling revelation which lays bare the whole rotten basis of the frame-up against the nine Scottsboro Negro lads convicted on a fraudulent charge of "rape" in a trial atmosphere charged with a lynching spirit, was made yesterday with the publication of a letter by Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims of the act. The letter was written over a year ago and fell into the hands of the police of Huntsville, Ala. Every effort of the attorneys for the International Labor Defense to get hold of the letter were unavailing during the trial, the prosecutors being well aware of the telling effect which the presentation of the letter would have. It was only a few days ago that an order for delivery of the letter was obtained in connection with the demand for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the release on bail of Roy Wright, 14-year old defendant whose hearing ended in a mistrial.

Text of Bates Letter
The full text of the letter by Ruby Bates to her sweetheart Earl Streetman, is as follows:

"January 5, 1932.
"Huntsville, Ala.
"215 Connelly Aty.

"Dearest Earl:
"I want to make a statement to you Mary Sanders is a goodam lie about those Negroes jassing me those policemen made me tell a lie that is my statement because I want to clear my self that is all too if you want to believe me ok, if not that is ok, you will be sorry some day if you had to stay in jail with 8 eight Negroes you would tell a lie two those Negroes did not touch me or those white Boys I hope you will believe me the law doot. I love you better than Mary does or any body else in the world that's why I am telling you of this thing I was drunk at the time and did not know what I was doing I know it was wrong too let those Negroes die on account of me I hope you will believe my statement because it is the gods truth I hope you will believe me I was jazed but those White Boys jazed me I wish those Negroes are not burnt on account of me it is those White Boys fault that is my statement and that is all I know I hope you tell the law hope you will answer.

"Jan. 5, 1932
"Huntsville, Ala.
"215 Connelly Aty.

"P. S. This is one time that I might tell a lie But it is the truth so god help me. Ruby Bates."

Continued on page 2

Hitler Threat to Soviet Union

ANALYSIS SHOWS THAT CONTRADICTIONS IN POLITICS OF HITLERISM DRIVES IT TO AN ALLIANCE WITH THE OTHER IMPERIALISTS FOR AN ASSAULT UPON SOVIET UNION

Hitler, unlike von Papen, has never made public his economic program. This alone is sufficient reason for thinking that it may not be "fit to print" before a movement of infuriated petty bourgeois. But his entire demagoguery has centered around a number of slogans based on the crushing of the German petty bourgeoisie by the forces of world economy. Among them figured: the smashing of the Versailles Treaty and unending hostility to France, the "hereditary foe"; the liberation of the Polish Corridor; the breaking of the "slavery of interest", meaning America and England, as the chief creditors. Nothing was said about Soviet Russia.

Yet it is clear that what he does say contradicts the economic fundamentals of the class which supports him, and what he does not say constitutes by itself a most important program.

A basic element in the relation of the heavy industry of the Ruhr in Germany, with France, is the fact that France has more iron ore than it needs and not enough coal, while Germany can export coal but needs iron ore. In the planned socialist economy of a future Soviet United States of Europe, this fact would have no more importance than the fact that in Soviet Russia the richest coal deposits are in the Don Basin and the richest ore in Siberia. But under a capitalist economy, this means that the heavy industry of Germany and that of France are forced to act together, sometimes locked in a deadly struggle, sometimes in diplomatic agreements and international cartels which are made by each party with the intention of cheating the other.

Before the war, there was the classic case of the two brothers, both armies since the war, the heret of Wendel and Francois de Wendel, one sitting in the German Reichstag, the other in the French Chambre de Deputes, realizing their own private united front of Franco-German capitalism during the war, the rich Briey ore basin of Lorraine was untouched by artillery from either side, on orders from the High Commands of both armies; since the war, the Loucheur-Rathenau agreements, the combination of German technology and French capital, the numerous cartel agreements to restrict production and raise prices in coal, steel, potash, glass, chemicals, cement and others, have shown how well German capitalism understands on which side its bread is buttered, no matter how it thunders against France in public. Hugenberg himself, a raging "Franzosenfresser" (Frenchman-eater) in his newspapers, is not above bringing his patriotic Ufa film company into an international agreement with the hated foe for dividing up territory, limiting production,

It is no accident that Papen addressed the Lausanne Conference in French, a conciliatory act that not even the apostles of internationalism such as Brüning or even Stresemann would have dared. Now Germany is looking toward France for a huge loan with which to finance its recovery and expansion program.

But if Germany, with or without Hitler, remains tied to France, it cannot attack Poland, or take any serious steps to end the international disgrace of the Polish Corridor which drives a wedge between two halves of East Prussia from Poland to the sea. It can subsidize inflammatory articles against Poland, it can sit around the green table of diplomacy with the Poles, but it cannot take a decisive step against France's great bulwark in the East.

Dependence on Foreign Bankers
Nor are things any better with the "breaking of the slavery of interest". At the very moment when Hitler was made Chancellor, a committee of foreign and notably American bankers, the forefront of the hated slavery, was quietly dickering with German bankers to how rapidly they could take their funds out of Germany, and in what form, so as further to weaken the financial and currency situation of Germany and increase its financial dependence on America, England and France.

Germany pays abroad about $250,000,000 a year in interest. This means that unless it obtains through its foreign trade, tourist traffic, etc., at least that much in return.

Continued on page 2

OPEN FORUM

"WHAT NEXT IN THE NEEDLE TRADES"

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN THE RIGHT AND LEFT UNION The Policy of the Left Opposition

Speaker:

J. P. CANNON

Friday, 8 P. M., FEBRUARY 17th

126 East 16th Street,

ADMISSION: 15c

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America (Opposition)

Oehler Tour this Week

Comrade Hugo Oehler, member of the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition) will open his National tour to arouse all class conscious workers to the danger of Fascism in Germany, in Utica on Friday, February 17. Comrade Oehler's tour of all the important cities must be met with big mass meetings to awaken and call to action every thinking worker. The

Nazis Murder 11 Workers

The assassin hands of the murderous Fascist counter-revolution have spilled the blood of more than a score of German workers leaving about as many dead in their wake, over the week-end. The Nazi lust for the blood of the "Marxists" knows no bounds. Their determination to exterminate the revolutionary working class is paralleled only by the savagery of their anti-semitic—the Huns.

In the cities of Hisleben, Bochum, Strassfurt, Dessau, Dortmund, Stuttgart, Breslau and, Bensheim innumerable individuals have gone to their graves—victims of Fascist gunplay. The Hitlerists have commenced a violent civil war. It will not terminate until either these brown shirted hordes eradicate the organizations of the German proletariat or they find themselves under the tombstone they are preparing for those who will not rest silent under their blows. The skirmishes cited above are only small harbingers of the gigantic battles and blood baths that are yet to come—in the not too distant future.

The same news reports apprise us of the fact that in the above mentioned city of Hisleben, which is 110 miles from Berlin, a fierce encounter occurred between Nazi's and Communists which was provoked by the former. They gave the cynical excuse for their premeditated attack—a Nazi troop was fired at from Communist headquarters. The Brown Shirts stormed the same building wrecking everything they could lay their hands on. A fight ensued, the Communists heroically protecting their headquarters. The result of this battle were three persons killed and fifteen injured. The capitalist press does not state whether they were Nazi's or Communists.

This first onslaught on Communist headquarters is symptomatic from two angles. First it demonstrates the cowardice of the Fascist hordes. Instead of attacking a party building in Berlin—they wouldn't get off so easily there—they choose a small city of some 25,000 for their murderous assault. Secondly, if we can judge by the Italian experience, discussed in another part of this issue, this incident in Hisleben is one of the beginnings of the German Fascists "march on Rome".

dates cannot be changed. Members and sympathizers please take note of the schedule:

Utica, N. Y.—Feb. 17
Ruffalo, N. Y.—Feb. 18
Pittsburgh, Pa.—Feb. 19
New Castle, Pa.—Feb. 20
Youngstown, Ohio—Feb. 21
Cleveland, Ohio—Feb. 22
Chicago, Ill.—Feb. 24, 25, 26
Davenport, Iowa—Feb. 27
Des Moines, Iowa—Feb. 27
Kansas City, Mo.—March 1, 2, 3
St. Louis, Mo.—March 4, 5
Illinois Coal Fields—March 6

Fascism: Italian and German

COMPARISON BETWEEN ITALIAN FASCISM OF 1920 AND THE HITLERITE MOVEMENT OF TODAY SHOWS POSSIBILITIES FOR SUCCESSFUL COUNTER-MOVEMENT OF PROLETARIAT

The naming of Hitler as Chancellor of the Reich cannot but call to mind the events which more than ten years ago led in Italy to the "March on Rome".

Between these two historic facts there are common features and striking analogies, which, altogether separated by a good decade and although products of countries very different from the point of view of their economic structures, their industrial development and in the specific gravity of the proletariat in relation to the other classes.

The first common characteristic is the Fascist movement itself. De-classed and shattered sections of the urban bourgeoisie, middle and petty; middle and small peasants; the backward proletariat; these are the Fascist masses whether in Italy or in Germany. The masses who protest, who revolt against the economic ruin of which they are the victims or which threatens them. The masses who by their social position "distrust" the proletariat and "hate" the bourgeoisie; who constantly dream of the creation of a society of "social justice" in which they hold the balance, but who in reality, follow either behind the proletariat or the bourgeoisie according to the relation of forces which obtain in favor of one or the other of the two fundamental classes in society.

The Fascist Supporters
The second common characteristic, in Italy as in Germany, is that the Fascist movement has been created, financed and groomed for the administration of affairs, at the head of the government by the big bourgeoisie and the big agrarians.

Despite its social demagoguery and its anti-proletarian philosophy, the Fascist movement does not come to power as a force opposed to the big bourgeoisie, to the plutocracy but as its representative, as its manager of the defense of the interests of same the bourgeoisie class.

The bourgeoisie is entirely conscious of this. Because of this the General Confederation of Italian Industry laid out 30 million lire for the financing of the preparation and the execution of the March on Rome only. And for the same reasons, the decisive sections of the German bourgeoisie placed Hitler at the head of the government. Hitler in the Chancellorship does not mean the installation in power of wild bands against the bourgeoisie, but signifies a different and extraordinarily more efficacious utilization of these hands by the bourgeoisie against the proletariat and against these very social layers which constitute the backbone of the Fascist movement. The whole policy of the Italian Fascist government for more than ten years proves it. It is also proved by the whole policy of the government presided over by Hitler.

As to the analogies of the situation ten years ago in Italy and the present situation in Germany, compare the tactic of the German Catholic Center with that of the Italian social democracy, the ephemeral cabinets of Von Papen with that of Facta and the fact that the Hitler Government, as well as that of Mussolini originates as an extra-parliamentary government, but also one comprising elements foreign to the Fascist party.

But if there are essential points of comparison and analogies there are also considerable differences.

These differences will unquestionably be utilized by the social democracy and by the Stalinist apparatus in order subsequently to beat the retreat without giving battle, basing themselves either upon the Tolstoyan illusion of weakening the enemy by refusing to fight or on that of "saving the party" legally by refusing to accept the "provocation".

But these differences can and should be utilized in another manner by the proletariat. For they are nearly all unfavorable to the bourgeoisie and favorable to revolutionary proletarian action.

Differences in Situations

The greatest difference, the essential difference between the two situations of the March on Rome and the elevation of Hitler to the Chancellorship is that in Germany the forces of the proletariat are almost intact. They are certainly weak, they are partly demoralized

Continued on page 2

Millions to Be Jobless Permanently

ARMY OF UNEMPLOYED WILL REMAIN, ADMITS HEAD OF A. F. OF L., WM. GREEN

All the capitalist bombast about an early economic revival has burst like a pricked balloon. Wm. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor has announced that the unemployment figures now stand at the appalling total of 12,000,000 and that between the months of December and January alone, more than 200,000 were laid off. And Bill Green is hardly given to exaggeration. On the contrary the number of jobless must far exceed his estimate.

The meaning of this statement is quite clear. More than 25 percent of those listed by the census as gainfully employed are now pounding the pavement and lining up at soup kitchens and breadlines. About as many workers do not receive more than part time employment. And if we add to these their wives and children there more than 50,000,000 human beings are standing on the brink of starvation in plentiful America. All of the employment schemes, all of the panaceas of the pot-bellied politicians all of the promises of the "captains of industry" have gone up in smoke. The working class is re-

Continued on page 2

Suspend 19 C.C.N.Y. Students

As the aftermath of a meeting of City College students held a few months ago in defiance of the instructions of school authorities, at which a protest was made against the despotic inroads made upon the rights of the students, nineteen of the latter have been suspended from the College by the Board of Higher Education.

At the beginning of the last semester, in September, the City College of New York dismissed from its faculty Oakley Johnson, an instructor in English. The expulsion aroused wide spread student protest. The issue transcended the expulsion of a professor. It followed in a long series of suppressions of academic freedom in the school. Consistently the college administration had clamped down upon the militants within the school. The dismissal of Johnson, known for his Communist sympathies, meant also the suppression of the Liberal Club, of which he was faculty advisor.

To demonstrate against this expulsion of Johnson, as well as against the many infractions of students' rights, a "trial" of Dr. Robinson, president of the college, and Dr. Linehan, director of the evening session—the division in which Johnson was an instructor—was held at the Central Opera House. Before the meeting the authorities, who were to be "indicted" on a number of counts, threatened any student with administrative action if he participated. Notwithstanding, several hundred students appeared to hear the testimony of other students and raise their voices in protest.

The news of the Board's act came during examinations at a time when students are most likely to be inactive. But this will soon be remedied. For now, with the opening of the new school semester, a movement against the suppressions is already in progress. Once before, a mass student protest reinstated suspended students (most recently, nine who had participated in the Johnson fight). This may well happen again. The outcome in large measure depends upon the policy of the National Student League. If it properly organizes a united front of student organizations and does not offend against a bloc with the socialist League for Industrial Democracy, success is to a great extent assured.

—M.

B'KLYN MASS MEETING

«The CRISIS IN GERMANY»

Take B. M. T. Broadway-Brooklyn line to Myrtle Ave. Station, Hall is 949 Willoughby Avenue.

SPEAKERS:
James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman
Chairman, Martin Abern

Labor Lyceum
WEDNESDAY, FEB. 15, at 8 p. m.
949 WILLOUGHBY AVE.,
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
ADMISSION 15 Cents

Hitler Threat o Soviet Union

ANALYSIS SHOWS THAT CONTRADICTIONS IN POLITICS OF HITLERISM DRIVES IT TO AN ALLIANCE WITH THE OTHER IMPERIALISTS FOR AN ASSAULT UPON SOVIET UNION

continued from page 1

gold every year, it will either have to stop paying interest abroad, or for a short time dip into its gold reserves until they are exhausted. Until the world crisis, this problem was not seriously faced in Germany. They were borrowing money freely, and it imports were more than exports they would pay the difference, as well as reparations, with new loans. But when new loans were unobtainable as the crisis came on, they had to choose—stop paying interest or force exports up and imports down, until a surplus of exports was created out of which interest could be met.

The patriotic German ruling classes have not hesitated an instant. They have squeezed wages down and kept prices up through a series of devices—high tariffs, quota restrictions on imports, etc. The standard of living of the German working class has been cut and cut again, its power to buy foreign foodstuffs and materials has been slashed, but German exports have been kept up. Wheat costs 2-1/2 to 3 times as much as in Berlin as in Chicago, but the feudal landlords who support Hitler clamor for still more protection.

And what does Hitler say? "We must be self-sufficient; we must grow enough food to feed ourselves." In other words, we must support the German feudal landowner at the expense of the belly of the German worker. And at the same time we must keep up German exports so as to obtain enough gold from foreign countries to meet the demands of foreign and principally American creditors.

Danger to Soviets

But if Hitler cannot get the support of France, England and America except by continuing their imperialist exploitation of Germany, there is another field on which he can offer them a tempting prize for joint exploitation—the imperialist conquest of Russia. The whole logic of his position—the inability to solve internal problems, the necessity of leaning on foreign imperialism while demagogically pretending to expose it—forces him toward war on the Soviet Union.

And the Soviet Union itself? Durand reports in the New York Times, without contradiction, that the Soviets feel that Hitler's coming to power will not interfere with the Five Year Plan. This is based on the hope that Hitler will prefer the peaceful and limited profits of trade with the Soviet foreign trade monopoly to the desperate gamble of war. But the hope is vain and illusory. Hitler has no way out except the steady mobilization of his forces, morally sanctioned and materially financed by international imperialism, for a military assault upon the Soviet Union. It is from German Fascism that emanates the most acute danger to the Soviet Union.

The defense of the German working class against Hitler is the immediate task in the defense of the Soviet Union. To the international aid of the imperialists to Fascism must be opposed the international solidarity of the proletariat to the German working class.

—B. J. FIELD.

Fascism: Italian and German

continued from page 1

by the treason of the social democracy and by the pernicious Stalinist policy which is leading to treason. But the forces of the proletariat, in their entirety, are not played out.

In Italy, Fascism made its "March on Rome" after two years of civil war in the interior of the country. The buildings of the workers' organizations were plundered, razed, demolished in the course of the punitive expeditions, the local and district leaders were banished or shot by the Fascist detachments. The resistance of the workers, the agricultural laborers and the small "red" peasants was broken in the course of two years of devastation, arson and massacre.

In October 1922, the Italian proletariat which two years previously had occupied the factories, was powerless before the combination of the legal and extra-legal repression, after having resisted the thousands of assaults of the Fascist bands, arms in hand and after having inscribed the days of Trieste, Bari, Parma, Rome and other cities on its banner.

The German proletariat has not suffered all that. It is still strong; it lacks only a leadership able to utilize this force to defend itself and wipe out the enemy. The German proletariat is five times as numerous as the Italian proletariat. Its Communist party groups the majority of votes in this predominantly workers' Berlin where the Hitler regime, unlike that of Mussolini in bureaucratic Rome, gives the impression of a beleaguered government.

The false policy of the Centrist faction in the leadership of the Comintern and the Communist Party of Germany has brought the party to a state of impotence and to a capitulation before the foe. On the 20th of July the party capitulated before the coup d'état of Von Papen in Prussia; the party was unable to utilize the respite given it by the internal dissensions of the bourgeoisie which manifested itself by its trampling upon Hitler since the summer, the party capitulated before the "provocation" of a Fascist demonstration in Buelowplatz, and it is capitulating today in face of the constitution of the Hitler cabinet. And everywhere and always it has capitulated without being able to engage in struggle. This is the balance-sheet of the Stalinist policy in Germany. An end to this policy and the struggle, the victorious struggle of the proletariat against Fascism is still possible.

Two years after being installed in power, Italian Fascism found itself at the brink of the abyss, after the assassination of Matteotti. The roots of German Fascism in the people, that is to say, in the ranks of the proletariat are no deeper than those of Italian Fascism. But to sever these roots, to defeat Fascism is not possible without returning to the policy which the Left Opposition has advocated for years under the ridicule and the threats of the Stalinist faction, super-revolutionary in times of calm, and forced by its policy to capitulate at the decisive turns of the revolution!

Jobless Army to Be Permanent

continued from page 1

duced to beggary, extending its hands for alms to the charity institutions of the country. Such is the balance sheet of four years of capitalist crisis. Such is the privation into which capitalism drives the masses.

But if millions are idle and hungry, if millions still working have their wages cut to the bone, the prospect for future employment is slim. The black scene of permanent joblessness has become a grim reality. Bill Green says in the same article that "hundreds of thousands of jobs have been completely eliminated during the depression." And further that if the work week were universally shortened to 30 hours, we could put class black and white alike. The conferences, however, are not adequate, for in the past they have been confined largely to the Left wing elements and their immediate supporters. With the impetus which the campaign should gain from the recent exposure, the field is wide open for the establishment of the broadest united front movement to force the freedom of the Scottsboro victims of lynching justice. As in the case with the Mooney movement as conceived by Tom Mooney himself, the Scottsboro movement must be built upon the support of every working class organization in the country which can now be rallied to break down the walls and bars which keep these innocent Negro boys imprisoned and in danger of their lives.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
WEDNESDAY, February 15, 1933
Vol. VI, No. 8 (Whole No. 155)
Single copy: one cent. Bundle rates on application.

A Letter from Shanghai

SHANGHAI.—During the last four years, betrayals have been the order of the day in the Chinese party. Many of our comrades have been arrested and murdered by Chiang Kai-Shek. In nine cases out of ten they have been betrayed by our own members. For example: in the Stalinist faction, Yang Pai, the most famous leader of the Chinese peasant movement; Yang Yung, one of the leaders of the Canton insurrection; Shian Tsong Pa, secretary of the Central Committee of the party for many years; these, and many other of our leaders have been arrested and assassinated. In the Left Opposition, we have had three betrayals on the part of our own members. The first time was in 1931, when eight of our Central Committee members were imprisoned; the most recent occasion was last in October at which time the lives of Chen Du-Hsiu and nine other comrades were placed at the mercy of the butchers of the Chinese proletariat.

Most of the traitors are ranks and file members of the Chinese Communist Party but some of them are from the leading cadres, who have spent years in revolutionary struggle under the banner of Communism and were distinguished for their heroism and trustworthiness. Many of them are petty bourgeois intellectuals who had or had not been trained in Moscow, some are lumpen-proletarians who hid in the party for many years under the guise of workers, while yet others are true industrial workers, such as Siu Si Gang who recently capitulated to the Kuo Min Tang.

Siu Si Gang whom I knew well was a cotton mill worker of Shanghai, who early joined the Communist movement. As a delegate he attended the Sixth Congress of the Chinese C. P. and the Sixth Congress of the Comintern, he has been a member of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and of the party's political bureau; secretary of the Provincial Executive Committee for Kiang-Su, (in which Shanghai is located), and secretary of the Chinese Trade Union Federation. He was valiant and personally honest but recently capitulated to the Kuo Min Tang. Whether or not he was responsible for the arrest of any of the comrades in the Stalinist faction, I do not know, but he published in the bourgeois newspaper Ta-Kung-Pao, an article entitled "To all the Comrades of the Communist Party." In this article he described how the "Red Army" movement murdered peasants, destroyed villages and caused painful sufferings to the peasantry, how the slogan "For a General Strike!" and "For the armed insurrection in the cities!" issued by the Stalinists, killed thousands of good comrades in the urban centers. He further described how the conflicts among the Stalinists developed: how Li Li San by unfair methods excluded him from the Provincial Executive Committee of Kiang-Su) how Miff ordered Chen Shio Yu and his other agents to work 6,600,000 of the unemployed. In other words even this optimistic calculation would leave approximately five and a half million workers permanently without jobs. How can the bankruptcy of this system be more glaringly exposed than by the fact that it has cast millions of willing and able-bodied slaves on the scrap heap. Their freedom to starve is now complete.

What is to be done about it? What action shall the proletariat take to ameliorate its wretched conditions? Green proposes the six hour day—five days a week. Yes, that is one of the objects the labor movement must strive and struggle for. But, certainly, Green's advocacy of it does not bring this change one step nearer. For him it is merely a plausible theory which he was forced to accept at the insistence and discontent of the rank and file. And in spite of his bold threats this labor scare and his cohorts will never spur the ranks of labor into action—and it is only by struggle that it can be obtained. They are too closely bound up with capitalism to think of striking it such a heavy blow. We must advance towards these demands: the thirty hour week; unemployment insurance; credits to Soviet Russia, in active combat against the capitalist class and all their agents in the ranks of labor.

But the curse of unemployment, which has come to stay can never be obliterated until the system that produces it is banished from the face of the earth. According to Green, in 1929—boom times, mind you—there were over two millions out of work. After this crisis has spent itself on the backs of the workers there will be nearly 6,000,000 out of jobs. When will this end? It will end when the American proletarian revolution buries capitalism into the limbo of history.

—CLARKE.

A bill is pending before Congress empowering the President to declare an embargo on arms shipments to foreign countries. The liberal Nation welcomes this move as a safeguard for peace. We have no such illusions. It will be used only in order to foster the interests of American imperialism. And then—we opine—as the first step towards war.

THE EMBARGO OF ARMS

A bill is pending before Congress empowering the President to declare an embargo on arms shipments to foreign countries. The liberal Nation welcomes this move as a safeguard for peace. We have no such illusions. It will be used only in order to foster the interests of American imperialism. And then—we opine—as the first step towards war.

Stalinist Confusion

«Daily Worker» on the German Crisis

In its issue of February 6 under the caption "What's Happening in Germany?" (first page next to masthead), the Daily Worker states: "You won't know if you read the lies dished out by the capitalist press. Only the Daily Worker gives a true picture of the stirring events in Germany and rallies the American workers to support the German workers' fight against Fascist dictatorship. Support the Daily Worker's drive for funds! In that same issue there is but one paragraph on the German events!"

Two days later, the Daily began the publication of an article from the Communist International on "The Communist Party of Germany Takes the Offensive." This article written during the regime of von Papen, is a glaring exposure of the false course of the German party in the past period.

Fascism is an accomplished fact, according to its analyses. "The Fascist dictatorship, which was established after July 20th, (that is by Von Papen's coup d'état) is attempting to rally the forces of the counter revolution." According to these "theoreticians" writing several months ago, "we now see an unceasing wave of economic struggles, the extreme political sharpening of the economic struggle of the proletariat, the defeat of Fascism and social democracy, and the big success of the Communist party in the new parliamentary election." (Our emphasis). Such was the optimistic prattle propounded by the Stalinists! And the Daily repeats it several days after Hitler's coming to power!

But more. After falsely characterizing the Von Papen regime as a Fascist dictatorship, just as the Rote Fahne called the Brüning government, Fascist—thus confusing the German workers as to the specific task of Von Papen—the article states: "The task of the Communist Party of Germany is to smash Li Li San's domination, taking over the control himself. He then finished with the questions: 'Is the Chinese party really a political party of the proletariat or for gathering rubles? Who cares for the wives and children of the murdered comrades? After being imprisoned or living their lives the shameless fellows, linked the names of these martyrs to all sorts of atrocious crimes. What traitors and reactionaries! Is there really any utility in striving unto death for such a cruel, criminal Communist party?'"

Under the constant and cruel pressure of the Kuo Min Tang's white terror, the petty bourgeois elements lose their revolutionary patience; personal financial difficulties weaken their powers of resistance to bourgeois temptations. The worker-comrades, painfully demoralized by the internal conflict of the Stalinist faction, again and again deceived and disappointed by the blind and hypocritical policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy, are unable to find the way to the correct policy. The seemingly endless counter-revolutionary period and the opportunist policy of the Stalinists are the reasons why betrayals are so prevalent in the Chinese party. The Stalinists have organized a gun squad to fight against it but to no avail. The only remedy is for the Stalinists to give up their opportunist policy and follow the policies that comrade Trotsky points out to us and which truly teach the worker and non-worker comrades to understand present conditions and future developments.

Shanghai C. C. C.

FROM TINKER TO EVERS TO CHANCE

"The 12th Plenum of our Party clearly established that the resolution of the 14th Plenum of the Party remains the basic guide for examining the work of the Party in carrying out the line of the 12th Plenum of the E. C. C. I. The 16th Plenum of the Party established that since the 15th Plenum, the Party has begun to understand the line of the 14th Plenum resolution, and established that earnest beginnings have been made to carry it out in life" (Daily Worker, 2-13-33). Following the party and Comintern Plenums is like hunting for a way out of a maze; they run like the famous ball—from Tinker to Evers to Chance!

Left Opposition Gives Estimate of Spanish Anarchist Putschism

(Continued from last issue)

Instead of conducting a campaign for drawing closer to the railway workers of the General Union of Workers (U. G. T.)—who are the majority—for "taking advantage of the discontent produced by the monstrously cynical policy of the socialists, the C. N. T. makes impossible all reconciliation by proposing to go on strike under the slogan of the establishment of libertarian Communism. If the socialist workers could be mobilized under this slogan they would not be in the U. G. T. Without the support of the workers of the U. G. T., no railway strike nor any other great strike is possible. The railway strike (like any other) must be organized on the basis of the concrete demands of the railway workers. The anarchists wanted to throw themselves into this adventure while the organization was in straits.

But if anarchism—and this too must be stated—has reached such a state of development in this period, in spite of its historic failures in the Spanish workers movement, it is because the proletariat has found, so to speak, the doorway to Communism closed. This responsibility rests entirely upon the Communist party. The palpable sympathy with which the proletariat regarded the Communists, even within the net of anarchism, in the C. N. T., was transformed into hatred as soon as the party led by an irresponsible bureaucracy entered upon the scene. The crimes of the trade union policy, dividing the movement at a time when it was most necessary to unite it; unprecedented defamation and frantic speculation, widened the breach between the party and the masses in the Confederation, even more so, if such were possible, than from the socialist masses. On the eve of the latest events, the C. P., instead of acting as an orientating force and as the proletarian vanguard, dedicated itself to the sad role of a third party in the discord, stimulating putschism. The pretended "betrayals of the anarchist leaders" which were daily proclaimed in the party press could only produce an effect contrary to that desired, if they had any effect at all. And all this, in order to bring forth the proposition of "united front from below", inviting the Confederationists and the socialists to unite with the party "over the heads" of their respective organizations.

The revolutionary workers movement, situated, on the one hand, in the midst of syndicalist reformism (which in practice is no better than the vile reformism of the socialists), and on the other hand faced with an opportunist and irresponsible Communist party, could only react in a growth of anarchism the latter at least expressed the revolutionary spirit of rebellion.

The crisis of the Communist movement could not but inevitably reflect itself upon the backwardness of the labor movement, during the course of the revolution in our country. Events are demonstrating that the Spanish proletariat is again falling into its most deplorable errors, because, due to the internal crisis, the Communist,

GERMAN CAMPAIGN

500 Gather for Bronx Meeting

Five hundred workers packed the Hollywood Gardens in the Bronx to the "standing room only" point to hear the speakers of the Left Opposition present its point of view on the present situation in Germany and remained until after midnight to hear our rebuttal of the Stalinist standpoint presented in the discussion. The meeting was not only significant from the point of view of the gratifying large attendance at the first indoor meeting ever held by us in the Bronx, but also by the fact that for the first time to our knowledge, the more than 100 party members present requested that an official representative of the party be given the floor to speak on the party point of view.

Max Shachtman and James P. Cannon, under the chairmanship of Murty Abern, gave a rounded presentation of our standpoint, tracing the development of Fascism in Germany, exposing the treacherous complicity of the social democracy and the criminal blundering of the Stalinists. The scores of Communist party workers were deeply impressed with the irrefutable facts which were hammered home by the Opposition speakers. In the discussion, the chair gladly gave the floor to the official representative of the party, comrade Louis Sass, organizer of the Bronx section of the party, and Jorga, member of the Section Executive Committee.

"The party speakers sought to defend the Daily Worker's neglect of the German situation by pointing to the importance of the rent strikes, as well as to defend the Stalinist theory of the united front from below. In the rebuttal, Shachtman showed how the Communist workers were thereby being forced to play the old opportunist game of counterposing the daily questions of immediate struggle to the fundamental principle questions of the revolution to the detriment of the latter. For almost an hour he spoke on the traditional standpoint of the Comintern under Lenin and Trotsky on the question of the united front and repeated the alarm which the International Left Opposition is raising on the crisis in Germany.

Not only was a good collection taken and a large amount of literature sold, but numerous contacts with party members were established on the occasion of this first presentation of the Bronx by the Opposition, the party felt itself compelled to "counteract the influence of the Trotskyists" by issuing a leaflet announcing that the noted Stalinist theoretician, Sam Don, would speak the following week for the party in the Bronx—not on the German situation but on the "decomposition" of the Trotskyists! The fraudulent accounts about the "dissolution" of the German Opposition were, incidentally, thoroughly exposed on the platform by Shachtman, who produced the German Opposition organ to show that the Stalinist-financed sheet of the capitalists, Roman Well and Co., was a forgery.

Another mass meeting in the Bronx was announced on the spot for Sunday, February 26, 1933 on What Does the Left Opposition Stand For? The intense interest of the workers who listened carefully for several hours indicates that the Opposition is gaining a solid foothold in the Bronx which is making the Stalinist bureaucrats—who are so demoralized at the present moment—increasingly uncomfortable.

Successful German Meet in Philly

The Philadelphia Branch reacted quickly to the ascension of Hitler to power in Germany. It arranged a meeting on "What Next in Germany" with comrade Cannon as the main speaker on Thursday, February 9th at Grand Fraternity Hall. It marked the biggest meeting ever held by the Left Opposition in Philly. An audience of over 75 people, predominately Communist workers, crowded the room. They enthusiastically followed our speakers analysis until midnight.

The audience showed its sympathy and support with the decisive program of action of the Left Opposition by making a generous contribution ($11.00) for the tri-weekly Militant and purchases of Trotsky's "What Next" and other Communist literature. Many questions pertinent to the subject were asked, indicating the intense interest of the audience.

"The greatest horror was expressed not only by the socialists present, but by Communist workers and Party members at the idea of the revolutionary internationalist role of the Red Army. They conceived of it not as an organ of the international working class but rather as a national Russian body. What a demoralizing effect the years of Stalinist miseducation has had on the ranks. Give full credit for it to the reactionary utopian idea of a classless society in one country.

If after comrade Cannon's main delivery, Stalin could still get a round of applause when a questioner preferred the former's leadership to that of comrade Trotsky; there was surely very little left of it after the speakers answer to the questions and discussions. Comrade Cannon gave a definite program of action to defeat German Fascism, whose function and counter-revolutionary perspective he analyzed. The responsibility of the treacherous social democracy and the stupid policies of Stalinism for the rise of Fascism and the weakening of the proletariat before Hitler was clearly depicted.

The meeting made a deep impression upon all present. Announcement of our meeting, the rousing propaganda of the Militant and the League, our stinging criticism is having its effect. It has led to a demand for a discussion on the German crisis in the Party units and I. L. D. branches. And more, the Philadelphia district of the Communist party is arranging a protest meeting on next Monday night, February 13 at Grand Manor Hall, 911 W. Gerard Ave. It is miserably inadequate. But support it comrades, workers and friends. Demand what the situation demands of us—mass united front demonstrations against German Fascism. Party members, comrades—you must raise your voices against the false orientation of Stalin and for the tactic of Lenin, the united working class front. Support the German masses in their revolutionary struggles.

—L. GOODMAN.

"NEW MILITANT" SELLS WELL

The first issue of the "New Militant" to be issued three times a week at one cent a copy, gained an exceptionally enthusiastic response from the New York militants (we have not yet heard from out of town, of course). In a couple of hours, comrades Jim Carr and Herbert Capella sold some two hundred copies on 14th Street in New York, near the headquarters. Other centers were also covered. Let us hear reports from everywhere—brief and to the point.

party has not yet been able to point the way out. The course of the revolution depends upon whether or not the crisis within the Communist movement is surmounted. The results of the anarchist policy cannot come as a surprise to any Communist, because we cannot entertain illusions concerning the role of anarchism. The Communists must derive as the most important lesson that the disastrous Stalinist policy shares in the responsibility for this situation. A united Communist party capable of fulfilling its role is the necessary condition for the rectification of past errors and the opening of a new perspective for the labor movement. Our reintegration into the party would be the most important step on the road to unification on the basis of the Communist International. No principled unity of heterogeneous groups is possible. Only on the basis of the C. L. can unity be achieved. The struggle to change the policy of the party must be linked with the struggle for unification which will bring to an end the paralyzing and brutalizing reign of bureaucratism.

The last insurrection, which should logically mark the death of anarchism, opens to the Communists the possibility of rectifying their past errors and of carrying out the policy which they should have pursued from the beginning; a policy of trade union unity, strengthening the C. N. T., the problem of converting the C. N. T. into the great revolutionary trade union center, which the proletariat needs, forces itself relentlessly to the fore.

Of late the C. N. T. being under the control of the F. A. I., not only the unions influenced by the Communists, but also those influenced by the reformist syndicalism of the group of "the thirty" were excluded. The C. N. T. is, then, in a complete state of division and reorganization is necessary. If the Communist party continues the same policy of division and remains on the outskirts, the change which is due to take place in the C. N. T. will redound to the benefit of the reformists. Then one will be able to say that the latest events have represented a serious retrogression. The decadence of anarchism which will inevitably take place, should be accompanied by a growth of Communism and a strengthening of the trade union cadres. If such is not the case the possibility will remain always open for the recuperation of anarchism and will signify, for the moment, an important advance for the bourgeoisie.

The Law of Associations of the 8th of April, which the government has been unable to enforce, but whose repeal, on the other hand, has not been possible, is awaiting the moment when weakness of the proletariat will permit it to become effective. The convocation of a national congress of the C. N. T. at which the excluded unions, the autonomous unions or unions belonging to another center may attend, is the only means of terminating the anarchist hegemony in the C. N. T., of fortifying the revolutionary trade union movement and of presenting a front to reaction.

Long experience with confusion and adventures has again confirmed that without a class party no revolution is possible; that the proletariat can only triumph with audacity and caution.

Against repression and reaction! For a national congress of the C. N. T. For Communist unity!

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE SPANISH COMMUNIST LEFT.

Scottsboro Frame-Up Is Uncovered

continued from page 1

This letter alone blows up the whole base frame-up. The contention of the prosecutor was that Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, who were hobnobing their way in freights through the South dressed in men's clothes and in the company of a group of white boys, had been attacked by the nine Negro boys who were subsequently taken from the train by the authorities. The letter of the Bates girl proves that nothing of the sort was done by any of the Negro boys, who were simply picked up by the police and sent to trial on the bourgeois southern theory that Negroes are congenital rapists for whom even a mock trial is a waste of time.

United Movement Imperative

It is now clear beyond even the shadow of a doubt that the militant fight undertaken for the 9 victims by the Communists and the International Labor Defense stood on a solid foundation. The special conferences now being called by the latter organization deserve the widest support of every action of the labor movement for the cause of the Scottsboro boys is the cause of the whole working

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Published thrice weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class matter, November 25, 1923 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879.
VOLUME VI, NO. 9 [WHOLE NO. 156] NEW YORK, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1933 PRICE 1 CENT

Fascists In Complete Control of Police

Smash Hitler

German Left Opposition Appeals for United Proletarian Resistance

HITLER IS CHANCELLOR!

Workers, do you know what that means? It means complete starvation and loss of all rights, it means the destruction of all the active elements of the proletariat! After the speeches of the Nazi leader, there can be no doubt of this. Hitler's program is the complete smashing of all the political and trade-union organizations of the working class, to clear the way for a still more monstrous impoverishment of the working class. The aim of his foreign policy is war with Soviet Russia. If Hitler succeeds in carrying through his aims this would mean an unprecedented defeat for the international proletariat, "for Germany is not only Germany, but the heart of Europe."

Do not console yourselves with the nonsense that Hitler will soon be played out. No understanding this clearly—now is the time to tackle him!

Either Hitler will now establish his power, or the proletariat will overthrow him and clear the road for the dictatorship of the working class.

At this time, to wait any longer, as the Social Democratic party proposes, is lunacy. It is a crime. It means to let Hitler establish himself in his new official positions, it means to play the very last cards into his hand, and with that, to lead directly to the defeat of the working class.

Hitler must be overthrown, Fascism must be struck down. The Fascist government of civil war can be overthrown, however, not by parliamentary votes of "no confidence," but only by the extra-parliamentary mass struggle.

The General Strike

But how can we achieve this action? We must create the prerequisites—the closing of the ranks. It is not enough to call for the general strike, as the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany has done up to now. The situation demands today of the Communist party an open offer to the leaders of the Social Democratic party and the General German Trade Union Federation. A concrete program of struggle must be proposed, the leadership of the Social Democratic party and of the General German Trade Union Federation must be called upon to negotiate in the open before the workers, in order—maintaining the political independence of the participating organizations—without delay to on a National and Local Scale and throw into the fight the concentrated forces of the proletariat.

Create Common Organs of Struggle

The goal of the struggle is:
Overthrow the Hitler Government!
Disarm the brown murder bands!
Defend all working-class organizations and their property!
Defend the democratic rights of the proletariat!

The means of struggle is the general strike, but this can lead to victory only if the leadership of the struggle and the proletariat are fully aware than the fight against the brown murder bands must be carried with even "harder weapons."

We must not wait, we must hit out!

Comrades of the Social Democratic party! Protest, compel the immediate acceptance of the struggle, break the sabotage of your leaders! Comrades of the Communist party! For two and a half years we "Trotskyists" have been proposing a Leninist united front policy to smash Fascism, whose perspectives we have correctly drawn. Through the fault of the Stalinist leadership, the Central Committee, much time has been lost. Even now reformism has its determining influence on the decisive part of the German working class. It is still possible, at the eleventh hour, to organize resistance through a Leninist united front policy and lead the proletariat to victory. The proletariat still has its organizations! In its hands are the levers of economic life. The others have only bayonets. The Bolsheviks, too, defeated Kornilov at the last minute!

All forces together! No weariness, no hesitation!

A solid front of all workers' organizations for the united front organs of the working class!

A general strike till the overthrow of the dictatorship of hunger, war, of the murder of workers!

For the defense of the political rights of the working class!

For the defense of party and trade-union buildings and of the workers' press!

For the defense of the Communist Party of Germany!

Against the waning of the people's substance on the corrupt barons of the Eastern Relief and the boxes of heavy industry!

For workers' control of production!

For a decent wage!

The Left Opposition of the Communist Party of Germany

Governor Strikes at Ill. Miners

ILLUSIONS ABOUT HORNER SHATTERED BY MEMORANDUM AIMED AT P. M. OF A.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Many Illinois miners and among them quite a few of the Progressive Miners of America leaders thought that they would get "justice" when they voted and helped to elect Henry Horner of the Democratic party as Governor of Illinois. But this ancient, myopic, self-hypnotism is fast fading as the miners see in action the true role of Horner in their struggle against the Lewis Walker-Peabody Coal Co. machine. Gov. Horner, the Democrat, like the late Gov. Emmerson, the Republican, is taking all steps possible to prevent the miners from building the Progressive Miners of America and improving their conditions.

Gov. Horner is developing a strong policy—that is, a crushing policy against the P. M. A. With the breaking off of negotiations between the P. M. A. and the U. M. W. A. officials and the coal operators which Gov. Horner called and after admitting that he was unable to compel the P. M. A. officials to accept "arbitration," Gov. Horner made the following stipulation in his "memorandum" to the miners of Illinois:

"That each of the two unions having contracts with the operators should be permitted without interference by the other to continue work under these contracts until at least April 1, 1933. In other words, where one local union has a contract with an operator of a certain mine in this State, the officials and members of the rival organization refrain from any effort to cause a cessation of work at that mine, or to prevent the fulfillment of that contract."

This is word for word what the Lewis-Walker machine, the agents of the Peabody Coal Co. asked for in their letter of proposals under date of January 26 to Gov. Horner. The Progressive Miners of America demanded that a referendum vote be taken to decide which organization the miners of Illinois wished to recognize. But this would be self-determination! The Illinois miners, like the Philippine miners, are not yet ready for self-determination, maybe twelve years from today, etc., thus the State Government, acting in its true role as the executive committee of the employing class, through its mouthpiece Gov. Horner, spiritualizes.

The "memorandum" further states:

"No non-residents of the county who seek to enter the county for the purpose of agitating the present controversy will be permitted to do so. Inflammatory agitation will be considered improper and in violation of the public peace."

Every eight year old child of the Illinois miners knows what this means. It is to prevent the P. M. A. from carrying on its relief work, holding demonstrations and

continued on page 2

Party Must Act Now!

Hitler Acts with Ruthless Determination to Crush Labor Movement; Stalinists Persist in Opposition to United Front

The work of establishing the complete domination of Fascism in Germany is being carried out at a speed which leaves even the bourgeois press gasping. The proposed elections on March 5 are assuming an increasingly deceptive and ludicrous character in face of the fact that the Hitlerites are concentrating every instrument of force and violence in their own hands so that regardless of the balloting, the power will remain in their hands.

The press reports the following highly significant facts:

1. All political demonstrations and even ordinary meetings are to be "policed" by Nazi storm troops and members of the Stahlhelm, the regular police being merely held in reserve. Not even Mussolini was able to attain such a measure before he took over the power completely.

Red Meetings Forbidden

2. All meetings at which constructive work of the government is to be dissolved on the spot.

3. "Communist demonstrations," according to the Berlin correspondent of the Times (2-16-33), "are to be forbidden altogether, and even the meetings of disguised Marxists—evidently meaning Socialists—are to be prevented. On the other hand, arrangements must be made to facilitate Nazi demonstrations in Communist districts."

4. "The Nationalist Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung," continues the correspondent, "published an obviously inspired statement to the effect that a general arming of Nazi storm troops was not under consideration, but that 'in an emergency' there might be afforded legal means whereby these and the Stahlhelm men might be called on to relieve the police by the extension of auxiliary services. Further confirmation is scarcely necessary."

5. "Under the new German regime the police force itself is being transformed. Following up the removals of the von Papen regime, the acting Prussian Ministry today cleaned out the very last Socialist police heads in the State and replaced them with National Socialists or Nationalists. The entire police administration is now in the hands of the Hitlerites and supporters of Dr. Alfred Hugenberg."

"As for the newspapers, which the Tagesspiegel's evening publication, and the Socialist Vorwaerts were both suppressed today on the allegation that they had criticized the police in connection with Sunday's rioting in the Saxon mining town of Eiselen, where several hundred unemployed Nazis wrecked a Communist bookshop and gymnasium...."

In these measures are to be found the first earnest beginnings of the extermination of every working class organization, every democratic and working class right achieved in the course of decades of struggle. Where Mussolini waited many long months after seizing power before he was ready to make the Communist party illegal, Hitler, confronted with a stronger working class and the necessity of acting with dispatch is compelled to proceed with far greater speed and violence. The dismemberment and demolition of the working class and its movements is Hitler's prerequisite to the consolidation of Fascist power.

Trotsky's Forecast

"He wants to lure his antagonists with the long-run perspective of the parliamentary growth of the Nazis in order to catch them napping and to deal them a death blow at the right moment," wrote Leon Trotsky more than 15 months ago. "It is quite possible that Hitler's courtesies to democratic parliamentarism may, moreover, help to set up some sort of coalition in the immediate future in which the Fascists will obtain the most important posts and employ them in turn for their coup d'Etat."

This strikingly confirmed forecast of comrade Trotsky is now corroborated all over again by the events of the last few days. "It can now be stated on the best of authority," the Berlin correspondent of the London Times declares, "that the Nazi parties in the present Nazi Nationalist alliance are avowedly working to establish the nationalistic State—by which their followers certainly understand the 'Hitler State'—prospective of opposition, and expect to realize their ambition in the immediate future. They are prepared, and readily admit this, to employ all the means which the possession of power gives them. The result of the elections March 5 and the prospect of Parliamentary opposition play no deterrent part in their calculations."

From the pen of the bourgeois correspondent we thus have a confirmation of the warning we issued last Monday: "The parliamentary elections as the axis of the struggle, constitute an enormous and treacherous swindle."

In this swindle which is leading the German working class blindfolded and hands bound to be slaughtered by the Fascist henchmen, the German social democracy is playing its traditionally promising part. To employ the classic expression of the Ilipio Turati, the late leader of the Italian socialist party, the German social democracy "have the courage to be cowards."

The million-headed masses which follow behind the banner of the social democratic party and the trade unions, are not being mobilized to strike down the Fascist beast with their mighty fists. They are being drugged with the fatal illusion that the field of battle is the ballot box of March 5. But that is precisely wherein lies the role of the social democratic leaders: To unleash a genuine mass movement of militant struggle against Fascism—they realize—may set into motion such a powerful force as the Weelses, Stumpfers and Hilderfings will not be able to check "at the right moment," which will exceed the narrow boundaries of the fight to preserve the democratic rights and institutions of the German proletariat and pass over to the struggle for the dictatorship of the working class.

All the more reason, therefore, why the Communists must take the initiative in establishing a genuine united front movement of all the workers and their organizations, which will sweep out of power not merely the Fascist form of capitalist rule in Germany but, forging ahead, will smash the last obstacle on the road to a Soviet Germany. The opportunities offered the Communists by the present situation are matchless in their possibilities. But are they taking advantage of them? Not in the least! They continue to repeat the old, worn-out, discredited and bankrupt formulae which have brought about the present impotence of the official Communist party in Germany.

For the first week and more after Hitler was named Chancellor, the official party press in this country was as silent as the tomb. It confined itself to a few news dispatches culled from the capitalist press or sent by the imprecator. Commentary on the program or tactics of the German Communists was not to be found. And this for the simple reason that the Stalinists were taken altogether by surprise by the event. They were completely bewildered and dumb-founded and impotent.

Stalinist Silence "Broken"

"The hammer blows of the Militant and the Left Opposition finally made a breach in this silence. For the past few days the Daily Worker has been forced to speak about the German situation at some length. But it still remains bewildered and bankrupt. It can do little more than repeat the dull and empty twaddle about the 'united front from below' and 'social fascism' and—now that the well-known 'friend of the Soviet Union' Robert Minor has been made editor—to overflow with bile and impotent fury against the 'Trotskyists'."

To attack our absolutely unassailable position, the Stalinist scribbles must resort to the most puerile falsehoods and misrepresentations. They quote with approval

continued on page 2

Japs Plan to Extend Conquest

MANCHURIAN INVASION TO BE EXTENDED FURTHER SPITE OTHER POWERS

The Japanese generals refuse to be checked by the League of Nations. The goal of their ambitious for many a long time, is too close to their grasp to allow it to be snatched away again. Far from giving up Manchuria, the Japanese imperials plan to extend their conquest and "regulate" it by improving the mercenary Manchukuo, Henry Fu Li, former boy emperor of China. He will make a bid for the throne of North China at Peking, the Japs supplying the necessary bayonets. Let too League summarize, set the U. S. marriage—it is now or never for the hand of the Far East.

The Imperial Diet at Tokyo has given its blessing to the pathos undertaking "pacifying" Japan by conquering China, the League of Nations, and a quarter million yen, and approved in order to finance an other year of aggression in Asia. Direct outflows of 30 percent of this swollen sum are made to the army and navy. The fact that this sum of money cannot be collected in taxation and therefore that the fiscal policy means inevitably greater inflation of the currency than has already occurred, does not disturb the running class, for the devastating effects of such inflation will be shifted on to the backs of the workers and peasants. Financing the war in China can be accomplished only by intensifying exploitation at home.

If the capitalists have any misgivings as to the ultimate outcome of a break with Europe and America, they will have to keep mum for the present, the generals are in the saddle. Nevertheless the Tokyo stock market registers the fears of the less blood-thirsty section of finance imperialism. Stocks and bonds have tumbled, revealing the Achilles heel of Japanese economy, the lack of adequate finances, one of the first blows to be delivered by the League and the U. S. at Japan, if the imminent clamping down on loans. It remains to be seen, even then, whether France will abide by such a decision.

"The Japanese threaten to shut the door of Manchurian trade for the rest of the world if further pressure for their withdrawal is applied. The imperialist powers have had too much experience with their own method of handling conquered territory, for them to waste any feeling over this threat. Manchuria has been closed to all but Japan since its occupation. American business has reconciled itself to this fact and has turned to the Yangtze Valley for its future Chinese market."

Meanwhile the U. S. government, the political committee of American finance capital, does not sit twiddling its thumbs. It is utilizing the debt tangle to the utmost as may be witnessed by the activities of the League, and particularly of England. It is intriguing with its dollars in China, goading the treacherous Kuo Min Tang on to some semblance of resistance to further Japanese encroachment.

By the irony of history, it may come about that the League of Nations, which at its very inception sent invading armies into Soviet Russia to help suppress the revolution, will be split asunder by its own internal imperialist contradictions before accomplishing its major objective, the isolation and suppression of the Soviets. It seems almost fantastic that the U. S. should grant recognition to the Soviet Union because of "common interests" against Japan. And yet this is taking place before our eyes. That this recognition should result, as Radak planned, in an alliance against Japan of the most reactionary and the most advanced countries, that is, however, still unthinkable. Not so long as the Soviets still represent the dictatorship of the proletariat. The Scott Hearings who predict such an event, are merely predicting with-out realizing it, the downfall of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

—J. W.

The Dollar Props Up Hitler America and the Fascist Danger

The sharpening class relations in Germany have reached the point of civil war. This is posing in the most acute fashion the analyses and programs of the factions of the Communist International. This analysis must flow from the fact that the weight of the contradictions of world capitalism finds their most difficult relationship in Germany, revealing it as the weakest link in the world capitalist chain.

Our victory over Fascism in this situation depends upon the ability and action of the Communists in presenting the correct program for the situation in Germany.

The gigantic antagonisms between imperialism, which have been intensified since the last world war, finds their deepest expression in Germany. The interests of the world imperialists are bound up with the interests of the German bourgeoisie in their struggle against the proletariat. If American and other imperialists leave Germany to her own fate in the German extension of the October revolution, the door would be left open for the deepening of internal difficulties and convulsions at home. Across this contradiction between the imperialist powers themselves runs the contradiction between world imperialism and the Soviet Union. These contradictions are tied up in one knot in the present German situation.

To untie this knot, means to answer the burning question of class relations in the interest of the working class. Hitler and Fascism answers this question in the most clear cut fashion for the bourgeoisie, even though they show great signs of weakness and confusion. For this Fascist shortcoming, the errors of Stalinism have more than compensated. Fascism has already one foot over the threshold of state power and the Stalinist straitjacket is hindering the free action of the vanguard of the working class. Hitler undoes the Reichstag, the Prussian Diet and Nazi parties in the present Nazi see to it now and elections he will see that the Communists and all other workers' organizations are not able to participate according to their parliamentary strength and thereby insure a "legal" victory of Fascism.

Social Democracy has not outlived its usefulness for the ruling class, it cannot adequately serve the interest of the capitalists in the immediate acute situation but it can and does constitute an active reserve force ready to serve its master as a moment's notice. Social democracy can only be shattered by a proper united front tactics in order to win the worker socialist from the leaders, thereby the base upon which the social chauvinist and "Iron Front" fighters rest can be torn away.

One force that is at present in the background, but which has weight of first magnitude in Germany, is American imperialism. During and since the last world war and since the last war it has been the stabilizing center of world capitalism against the revolutionary struggles for power of the proletariat. A working agreement between German Fascism and American imperialism is necessary for capitalism to utilize the Fascist hordes against the working class and the Soviet Union.

America's participation in the last world war on the side of the imperialist rivals of Germany was of decisive importance in the defeat of Germany. It was second in importance only to the effects of the October revolution upon the German working class in the 1918 revolution which overthrew the Kaiser. American capital, in the form of war loans and war equipment, gave the necessary impetus to the tired and shattered armies fighting Germany. American post-war loans continued this necessary prop in deciding European foreign markets for American production.

—HUGO OEHLEH.

War on for Control of Leticia

Open warfare has at last broken out between Peru and Colombia for control of the small Amazon port of Leticia. It is possible that this conflict together with that between Paraguay and Bolivia for possession of the Gran Chaco, may develop into a continent-wide war, with British and American imperialism supporting the opposing sides.

The official Communist party press in its estimation of the situation assumes that there are already two clearly defined blocs of Latin American lackey governments service to the interests of British and American imperialism respectively. It is however pure light-mindedness to jump at conclusions after the fashion of the Daily Worker experts who analyze every Latin American problem regardless of its complexity, according to the magic formula wherein British imperialism unconditionally supports one side while Wall Street has all its stakes on the other.

there is very deep social and political unrest in Peru. One of Sanchez Cerro's reasons for the present war, was to utilize an appeal to national patriotism as a counterbalance to the forces and tendencies aimed at the overthrow of his regime. But the Peruvian dictatorship is playing with fire; anything short of a quick decisive victory, and that is unlikely, certainly a revolutionary overturn in the near future. The petty bourgeois A. P. R. A. which opposed Sanchez Cerro in the last elections, and which together with the Communist party, was recently involved in a series of minor uprisings which culminated in the "putsch" at Trujillo last fall have already convened a number of protest demonstrations against the war, resulting in clashes between the workers and the armed forces of the government and in numerous arrests.

—ROSALIO NEGRETTE.

OPEN FORUM

"WHAT NEXT IN THE NEEOLE TRADES"

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN THE RIGHT AND LEFT UNION

The Policy of the Left Opposition
Speaker:
J. P. CANNON
Friday, 8 P. M., FEBRUARY 17th
126 East 16th Street,
ADMISSION: 15c

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America (Opposition)

Oehler Tour this Week

We have already announced the tour of comrade Hugo Oehler on the present situation in Germany and the program of the Left Opposition on this vital question confronting the international proletariat. Below is specific information on the dates and places of the meetings:

UTICA, N. Y.
Friday, Feb. 17
LABOR LYCEUM
131 Washington St.
Buffalo, N. Y.—Feb. 18
PITTSBURGH, PA.
Sunday, Feb. 19—8 P. M.
IRENE KAUFMAN SETTLEMENT
1530 Center Ave.
New Castle, Pa.—Feb. 20
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
Tuesday, Feb. 21—8 P. M.
CENTRAL AUDITORIUM
225 W. Boardman St.
CLEVELAND, OHIO
Wednesday, Feb. 22
PAINTERS HALL
3030 Euclid Ave.
Chicago, Ill.—Feb. 24, 25, 26
Dayton, Iowa—Feb. 27
Des Moines, Iowa—Feb. 27
Kansas City, Mo.—March 1, 2, 3
St. Louis, Mo.—March 4, 5

Unrest in Peru
While an insane war hysteria appears at the moment to dominate the mass psychology in Colombia,

Homeless Youth to be Militarised

$20,000,000 APPROPRIATED TO SEND YOUNG WORKERS INTO MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS

The U. S. Senate has decided to militarize the homeless youth of the nation. By its bill, passed Monday by a unanimous vote, it has placed the destitute and hungry youth, who total more than 400,000, on the basis of forced conscription to military training camps. The minimum service required in these camps is six months.

Thus the impotent Senate has reacted to one of the most vital and desperate problems created by American capitalism. These young workers, whose life is one of hunted wandering, whose head is a box car and whose food consists of the miserable slop handed out in salubrious army joints, and who are a prey to sexual degeneracy and petty thievery of all description—they are the grist of the mill of capitalist civilization. Thrown to the surface by four years of capitalist crisis, they reflect the profound derangement, the wretched conditions thrust upon the proletariat home by continued unemployment and dependence upon the handouts of charity institutions. The bourgeois sycophants are caught in their own mesh. They howled about Communism "breaking up the family" and never before has such a wholesale disruption of family life been evident as in the "paradise" of American capitalism. They gloated over the "despotic" rule in Soviet Russia. But the workers state has eradicated this left-over of the civil war, by absorbing them into the industry and life of the nation. In America, where there has been no civil war they swarm the countryside in hundreds of thousands.

And what do the solons of bourgeois law and order propose to do about the problem? Do they intend to give these young workers jobs, to give them unemployment insurance, to place them in trade schools so they can later be absorbed in industry? It could hardly be expected. The boss class wants these jobless youth for its industrial reserve army. It wants these unemployed youth to constitute a threat at the factory gates so that wages may be constantly dragged down. It wants them to serve as scabs in the great strike battles that are yet to come. It wants these youngsters to augment its militia for use against the internal enemy—the starving working class and to provide cannon fodder for its "foreign" wars that impend. Above all it fears the danger these discontented youths constitute to their personal pocketbooks, in the way of petty larceny on a wholesale scale and the organization of a section of them into a militant youth movement which will strike not at the pocketbooks but at the source of capitalist income—the expropriation of the mines the mills, and the factories.

THE GREAT BETRAYAL

FIRST PART OF THE HISTORY OF SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC TREACHERY IN GERMANY TAKEN FROM ITS OWN AUTHENTIC RECORDS, WRITINGS, SPEECHES, NEWSPAPERS, WHICH SHOW HOW IT SOLD PROLETARIAT TO BOURGEOISIE

THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATS AND THE WAR

"On July 31, at 8 p. m., the War Ministry issued in No. 64 gAI the following communication to the General Command, etc.: According to a reliable report the Social Democratic Party has the firm intention of conducting itself in a manner as befits every German under the present conditions. I consider it my duty to call attention to this so that the military commanders may take it into consideration when adopting measures."

Report of Count Montgelas in the First Investigation Committee, Volume 2, page 74.

ALL FOR THE FATHERLAND

"For our people and its free future, much if not everything is at stake in a victory of Russian despotism which is stained with the blood of the best among its own people. It is necessary to ward off this danger, to guarantee the culture and the independence of our country. In the hour of danger we do not leave our own fate to the mercy of the enemy. We feel ourselves to be in harmony with the International which has at all times recognized the right of every people to national independence and self defense, just as we condemn in agreement with every war of conquest. Guided by these principles, we approve the required war credits."

Declaration of the Social Democratic Reichstag Fraction on August 4, 1914.

SOCIAL DEMOCRACY AND MONARCHY

"As soon as the monarchy fulfills the wishes of the people, the ground is removed from under all Republican agitation. The question: monarchy or republic? would then be much less of a theme for discussion than it is at present. And every probability indicates that this is what is coming. Even if there are still difficulties to overcome, they will be—presumably in the shortest period of time—overcome without a trace of a violent upheaval and without the overthrow of the monarchy."

—Vorwarts, April 3, 1917.

NEVER AGAINST THE MONARCHY

"An anti-monarchist propaganda, a positive republican activity, was never conducted by the social democracy, because this question appeared to us up to a certain time to be secondary. The imputation that the social democracy wanted or prepared the November revolution."

...social democratic leaders. Those who stand in the road of the German proletariat's struggle to smash Fascism—must be swept aside!"

Thursday, Feb. 16, 1933. —M. S.

100 at B'klyn Meet

The third meeting in its campaign on the German situation was held by the N. Y. branch of the Left Opposition in the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, Williamsburg. About 100 workers came for the first time to listen to the call to action of the Left Opposition on the menace of Hitlerism in Germany. The speakers of the evening, comrades Shachtman and Cannon gave a lucid explanation of the situation in Germany and the grave dangers that threaten the Communist movement of the whole world.

This rally in Williamsburg marks the first meeting the Left Opposition has held in that district.

The Relief March in Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS.—The leadership of the Communist party in Dist. 9 is carrying out the "circular" instructions for "state relief marches." Cripple as it is with the Stalin line and its consequences in the past struggles the party stumbles and fails into creating a movement that resembles Loveston's and Pat Devine's "genuine labor party." Rather than come out in its own name and call upon the trade unions, the Socialist party, the Farmer-Labor party, the co-operators for a minimum class program, the party crawls into the shelter of its own "third period" auxiliaries, and through them calls a state relief march for the unemployed of the former Minneapolis Building Trades "Left wing" with a few innovations from the program of its own unemployed and farmers' organization. A real movement for a Leninist united front to meet the dire need of the unemployed in the bankrupt cities and counties would get a popular response from the masses regardless of the attitude of the reformist leaders.

The movement is called the Workers and Farmers Relief Committee. No pretense is made to define its united front character. The Left Opposition delegates to the Minneapolis conference for this movement were not sent because they are "counter-revolutionary." A typical A. F. of L. bureaucrats' "tag rule" was administered by a blushing workers chairman to prevent discussion on the motion to unseat the Communist League delegation. The narrow basis for the march is supplemented by the widest, loosest and most meaningless form of representation of the workers. The appeal says "call mass meetings in your towns and elect delegates." In the Minneapolis conference there was one trade union and the party membership and its closest sympathizers represented eleven times over (through auxiliaries). The name, the structure, the content of the movement is nothing but the forces of the official party, with its own workers' and farmers' organization. The party, the leader of the working class, should boldly carry out its task of discrediting and unmasking the whole fallacy of the theory of two-class parties instead of competing with the F. L. P. with its own two-class party. Behind the sham of the Farmer Labor Party lurk a multitude of opportunist misleaders of the working class. We must expose and not compete with them.

Despite the crudity of organization and shortcomings in policy, the movement and march will have a considerable following on the day of the march. The workers will come, look on and go away. It is the only action of a militant class character for the unemployed this winter. The Left Opposition supports the movement and shall participate in it. It will criticize its errors and wrong orientation as we do in this article. We sound the call for the worker Communists to take stock of the wrong policy of their leadership and organize with the Left Opposition to correct it.

—CLEM FORSEN.

tion, is a ridiculous, stupid life of our opponents for agitational purposes."

—Philip Scheidemann, Berlin, June 1922.

(On December 5, 1922, in the trial against his assassins, Scheidemann declared that he requested from Prince Max von Baden the retirement of Wilhelm II "in order to save the monarchy.")

WAR TO THE LAST MINUTE

"So long as the peace negotiations have not yet begun and hostilities continue, the defense force of the German people must be unfolded to the highest conceivable degree. The transition from a war to a peace footing is also from a military standpoint a psychologically dangerous moment. We go to the people which stacks its arms five minutes too early! The unfolding of the national defense force also demands, however, the preservation of order in the interior."

—Vorwarts, October 3, 1918.

THE MONARCHY MUST REMAIN

"Had we at that time seen the possibility of transforming Germany into a republic, we should not have delayed for an instant to unfurl the republican banner and to enter into struggle for it. But up to this time we have not seen this possibility and we do not see it today. But this demands first of all the preservation of the present state form, the monarchy."

—Mannheimer Volksstimme, Nov. 8, 1918.

THE PACT WITH THE CAPITALISTS

"In the Right socialist trade union leaders, the Legiens, Leiparts, Schlickes and consorts, the employers found allies to save capital from the threatening revolution. On November 15, 1918, six days after the 9th of November, after the day of the revolution, the labor collaboration between the employers and the Right socialist trade union leaders was concluded. Thus the Christian leaders once allied themselves with the mighty in Rome jointly to suppress the betrayed people."

—Arthur Crispin, Chairman of the Independent S. D. P., July 20, 1919.

KAUTSKY AND HAASE ON RUSSIA

"Continuation of the discussion on Germany's attitude to the Soviet Republic: Haase advises to proceed dilatorily. Kautsky joins in with Haase; the decision must be postponed. The Soviet government will not last very much longer but will be liquidated in a few weeks."

—Minutes of Session of Council of People's Commissioners, Nov. 19, 1918.

THE JUDAS ROLE OF THE SOCIALISTS

"The massacres of revolutionary workers in Berlin, Munich, Bremen, the Ruhr district and Upper Silesia, in hundreds of other German cities will be an everlasting monument of shame to the Right wing socialist-bourgeois overlords."

—Arthur Crispin, Freiheit, November 1919.

NOSKE THE BLOODHOUND

"I attacked even though I knew that I would be dragged through the revolutionary history of Germany as a bloodhound. I carried out this bloody work out of serious consciousness of duty. At that time I said to myself: somebody must do the job, and it is clear to me that this means for me that I shall have to run through the German revolution like a bloodhound."

—Gustav Noske, Weimar Congress of S. D. P., Minutes, page 202.

INCITEMENT TO MURDER ROSA AND KARL

"Hundreds of corpses in a row. 'Proletarians!' 'Karl, Rosa, Radek and Co.' 'Not one of them is there!' 'Proletarians!'" —Zickler in the Vorwarts, January 13, 1919.

(The next day, Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg were murdered.)

NOSKE'S TWO GREAT DEEDS

"I have accomplished two great deeds which I am proud of, and they are the liberation of the country from Bolshevism and the keeping of Hanover in Prussia."

—Noske, Hanover Parliament, May 1924.

FRENCH SOCIALISTS ON NOSKE-GALLIFET

"Noske directed the bloody suppression in Berlin and Bernhard carried it out: Theris and Gallifet, or still better: two Gallifets. Noske remains to this day a member of the Second International. To restore the unity of the great family of labor the violator of its name must be driven out."

—Ligue, central organ of the S. P. of France, Sept. 25, 1919.

Governor Strikes Blow at Ill. Miners

continued from page 1

meetings, carrying on organizational work and building their union, in a word, it denies the P. M. A. members their rights as workers. Further the "memorandum" states: "No private citizens in the county should be allowed to carry arms, or should have them under their control." Who are the private citizens, say for instance in Christian county? Mostly the striking coal-miners. On the one hand while all the private citizens have had their homes raided and disarmed by the State Militia; on the other hand, the Peabody gunmen and strikebreakers have free excess to all the guns that they need. The striking miners are not even to be allowed the right to protect their homes from the attacks of drunken imported strikebreakers.

Then as a further onslaught on the P. M. A. the State senate last week appropriated $100,000 for the use of the State Militia in Christian County for their continued stay. Already over $150,000 have been exhausted by the State Militia that is stationed in Christian Co. for the purpose of clubbing, gassing, murdering and starving the striking miners back to work under the company union of Lewis and Co. When the Unemployed Councils held their State convention in Springfield and they sent a delegation to Gov. Hornor instead of giving the P. M. A. a referendum vote that they asked for is going to have a State Legislature commission from the house and senate investigate the conditions in Franklin county. In the language of the miners, Hornor is going to put on a "white-wash-squad" to white-wash everything and make everything rosy for the Lewis-Walker-Peabody machine. But the miners, too, are realizing that real progress can be made only in a struggle against the whole capitalist system.

—JOS. ANGELO.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 23, 1923, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin Abern James P. Cannon Max Shachtman Maurice Spector Arne Swabeck

Friday, February 17, 1933

Vol. VI, No. 9 (Whole No. 156)

Single copy: one cent. Bundle rates on application.

BUILD THE MILITANT

This is the time to do it, comrades! Every shoulder to the wheel! The Militant plays a great historical role. It was never needed more than now, in these fateful days. Now is the time to spread it, to build up its circulation.

We are glad to record gratifying results for the last couple of weeks. Since the drive started we received about two hundred new subs through the Club Plan and the prepaid sub-cards. At the same time new subscriptions are on the increase at the regular subscription rate.

Looking over the record by cities we see Pittsburgh, Montreal and Toronto rushing to the front. Of course, New York stands at the head of the list but at the rate some of our branches are progressing, its place of honor will be seriously contested in the near future. Toronto just made its immediate goal fifty new subs. And the way it is rushing ahead, that goal will be reached soon.

As to the individual record, comrade Capelis felt quite sure to remain in first place. Well, comrade Capelis, look at the column and better get busy with renewed vigor. A number of comrades begin to press you.

THE RECORD BY CITIES:

New York	84
Chicago	40
Minneapolis	22
Pittsburgh	20
Toronto	18
Montreal	16

Philadelphia	15
Yonkers	10
Boston	10
New Castle	8
Lynn, Mass.	6
South Bend	6
Davenport	4
St. Louis	4
Des Moines	4

THE BUILDERS:

II. Capelis	16
II. Nash	13
P. Vomyas	12
M. Koehler	8
B. Morgenstern	8
V. R. Dunne	8
A. Joss	7
J. Weber	7
W. Krehm	6
A. Joel	6
P. Shulman	6
C. Ingram	6
A. Friend	5
L. Basky	5
B. Borsook	4
Toronto Group	4
J. Hamilton	4
J. Hinch	4
H. Milton	4
R. Spiegel	4
H. A.	4
M. Indson	4
F. Rayburn	4
M. Gottlieb	4
J. Hamilton	4
W. Konikow	4
O. Coover	4
S. Lessin	4
J. Sifakis	4
E. McMillen	4
A. Miller	4
G. Drucker	4
J. Hitz	4
J. Ruby	4

Super-Exploitation in So. Illinois Drives Miners to A Militant Revolt

Why did the revolt of the militants among the soft coal miners take on clear-cut organizational features in Illinois, and particularly in Southern Illinois? What are the objective features of the situation in that territory, with which revolutionary labor policy will have to reckon?

Analysis of the statistics published by the government leads to the following conclusions:

1. In Illinois, capitalist exploitation of the coal miner has gone further in many respects than in any other state in the union, and this is particularly true of the Southern Illinois field.

2. The concentration of capital is proportionately greater in Illinois, and the necessity of concentration of the workers' forces is correspondingly most urgent.

3. The increased efficiency of exploitation in Illinois has led to shorter working time and lower earning power for the miners. The effect on wages will be discussed separately.

Man Production High

We use as the index of exploitation of mine labor, the production of coal in tons per man per day. For the United States as a whole this averages about 5 tons; for the State of Illinois, 6.42 tons. The Southern Illinois counties run above the average for the state—Macoupin County (in which Gillespie is located) reported 7.01 tons, Montgomery County 6.73, Christian County 7.74 (in which the fighting centering around Taylorville took place).

These figures represent not only super-exploitation of labor but also the presence of large aggregations of capital able to conduct a powerful and vicious attack against the miners. Class 1A mines, (producing over half a billion tons a year each), produce a larger part of the total output in Illinois than in any other state—33.3 percent against an average for the United States of 27.7 percent.

Within the state of Illinois, the concentration is shown by the following comparison: The whole state has 506 mines, of which 113 are in the southern district. The total production of the state in 1930 was 53,000,000 tons, of which 24,000,000 were produced in the Southern district. In other words, 22 percent of the state's mines produced 45 percent of the state's coal.

That the process of concentration of capital and mechanization has gone further in Illinois than anywhere else in the country is shown by the fact that in 1930, a total of 22,803,000 tons of coal was produced in Illinois by loading machines, or handled on pit-car loaders and conveyors. The nearest state to it in mechanization, Pennsylvania, produced only 7,035,000 tons by these methods, and the entire mechanized output of the country amounted to 46,824,000 tons.

In Illinois, 48 percent of the coal mined is loaded mechanically, against 10 percent for the entire country.

Modern Machinery Used

Illinois also leads the country in strip-coal mining, that is, the extraction of coal by steam or electric shovels from an open cut after stripping off the overlying earth. This method of mining, using shovels that cost half-a-million dollars apiece, leads to the greatest concentration of capital, as in the United Electric Coal Co.'s operation in Duquoin County in Southern Illinois, and at the same time to the most intense exploitation of labor with production running 14 tons per man per day.

Strip-mined coal in Illinois in 1930 amounted to 6,116,415 tons, or 31 percent of all the strip-mined coal of the United States. In Illinois each shovel averaged 105,000 tons a year, against 58,000 for the whole country.

But all this concentration of capital, mechanization, and rationalization has improved the efficiency of utilization of capital, not of labor. On the contrary, the coal miner in Illinois has had more irregular employment than the miner in any of the other big coal-mining states.

West Virginia, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Illinois produce among them 80 percent of the country's total soft coal output. In West Virginia, the average number of days worked in 1930 per mine was 201, in Kentucky 187, in Pennsylvania (soft coal) 198—in Illinois it was 156 days in the year.

In Illinois, 97 percent of the miners work eight hours a day; the average for the whole country is less than 90 percent.

Yet in spite of this fact, the production per man per day in Illinois is among the highest in the whole country.

Evidently the tactics of the mine operators are to drive the men as hard as possible for the day's pay, while giving them fewer days of work in the year than any other big coal producing state.

No wonder one of the major grievances of the Illinois miners has been the killing pace of mechanization, as carried out by the capitalists for the benefit of the big corporations who control coal mining in the State of Illinois.

The struggle of the coal miners for a decent living wage and decent working conditions is carried on in Illinois on a higher plane of technical and economic exploitation, and against a more concentrated and powerful class opponent than in the rest of the United States.

The class organizations of the workers on the economic front, the trade unions, face the problems of organization and struggle on a higher plane and with greater sharpness, and their mass basis must become both broader and deeper to enable them to fulfill their urgent tasks.

—B. J. FIELD.

Strike at Foltis Fisher

The workers in three of the Foltis-Fisher cafeterias have been locked out by the slave-driving bosses for refusing to invest a part of their money, slashed to the company's stock. This is just another trick to cut wages by disguising it under another name. The workers have responded by militant picketing of these cafeterias under the leadership of the Food Workers Industrial Union. The lock-out, which has been converted into a strike, is meeting with warm sympathy among the workers of the other Foltis-Fisher cafeterias. There is a great probability that the strike will extend its scope. More power to the movement! The Left Opposition will stand solidly behind it.

Our comrade, James Gordon is chairman of the strike committee and is taking a very active part in all the work of the strike. But we can say at the outset that the strike will be hampered if it limits its supporters to those who stand in the good graces of the Stalinist faction. We refer to the case of comrade Petrus, a well known food worker militant, who was barred from participation in the strike because he is a "Trotskyite." Such methods, copied from the A. F. of L. fakery, will not help the strike. On the contrary, the road to victory for the strike lies in broadening its basis to all workers regardless of political affiliation.

TOM MANN FREED

"Tom Mann, veteran leader of the British revolutionary movement, has been released from prison. He was jailed by the MacDonald government for his activities in leading the unemployed movement against the cut in the dole.

1 CENT
A COPY

THE MILITANT

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Published three weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 10 [WHOLE NO. 157] NEW YORK, MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1933 PRICE 1 CENT

To Delay Anti-Nazi United Front Is Fatal

How Can Fascism Be Smashed in Germany

By Leon Trotsky

We reprint here a section from "The Workers' United Front Against Fascism" which, although written on December 8, 1931, is of intense importance right now.

The thousands upon thousands of Noskes, Welses and Hilferdings prefer, in the last analysis, Fascism to Communism. But for that they must once and for all tear themselves loose from the workers. Today this is not yet the case. Today the social democracy as a whole, with all its internal antagonisms, is forced into sharp conflict with the Fascists. It is our task to take advantage of this conflict and not to unite the antagonists against us.

The front must be directed against Fascism. And this common front of direct struggle against Fascism, embracing the entire proletariat, must be utilized in the struggle against the social democracy directed as a flank attack but no less effective for that.

It is necessary to show by deeds a complete readiness to make a bloc with the social democrats against the Fascists in all cases in which they will accept a bloc. To say to the social democratic workers: "Cast your leaders aside and join our 'non-party' united front," means to add just one more hollow phrase to a thousand others. We must understand how to tear the workers away from their leaders in reality. But reality today is the struggle against Fascism.

There are ample doubts as to whether the social democratic workers who are prepared to fight hand in hand with the Communist workers against the Fascists, regardless of the desires or even against the desires of the social democratic organizations. With such progressive elements it is obviously necessary to establish the closest possible contact. At the present time, however, they are not great in number. The German worker has been raised in the spirit of organization and of discipline. This has its strong as well as its weak sides. The overwhelming majority of the social democratic workers will fight against the Fascists, but—for the present at least—only together with their organizations. This stage cannot be skipped. We must help the social democratic workers in action—in this new and extraordinary situation—to test the value of their organizations and leaders at this time, when it is a matter of life and death for the working class.

We Must Force the Social Democracy into a Bloc Against the Fascists

The trouble is that in the Central Committee of the Communist party there are many frightened opportunists. They have heard that opportunism consists of a love for blocs, and that is why they are against blocs. They do not understand the difference between, let us say, a parliamentary agreement and an ever-so-modest agreement for struggle in a strike or in defense of workers' printshops against Fascist bands.

Election agreements, parliamentary compromises concluded between the revolutionary party and the social democracy serve, as a rule, to the advantage of the social democracy. Practical agreements for mass action, for purposes of struggle are always useful to the revolutionary party. The Anglo-Russian Committee was an impermissible type of bloc of two leaderships on one common political platform, vague, deceptive, binding no one to any action at all. The maintenance of this bloc at the time of the General Strike, when the General Council assumed the role of strike-breaker, signified, on the part of the Stalinists, a policy of betrayal.

No common platform with the social democracy, or with the leaders of the German trade unions, no common publications, banners, placards! March separately, but strike unitedly! Agree only how to strike, whom to strike, and when to strike! Such an agreement can be concluded even with the devil himself, with his grandmother and even with Noske and Grzesinsky. On one condition, not to bind one's own hands.

It is necessary, without any delay, finally to elaborate a practical system of measures—not with the aim of merely "exposing" the social democracy (before the Communists), but with the aim of actual struggle against Fascism. The question of factory defense organizations, of unhampered activity on the part of the factory councils, the inviolability of the workers' organizations and institutions, the question of arsenals that may be seized by the Fascists, the question of measures in the case of an emergency, that is, of the coordination of the actions of the Communist and the social democratic divisions in the struggle, etc., etc., must be dealt with in this program.

In the struggle against Fascism, the factory councils occupy a tremendously important position. Here a particularly precise program of action is necessary. Every factory must become an anti-Fascist bulwark, with its own commandants and its own battalions. It is necessary to have a map of the Fascist barracks and all other Fascist strongholds, in every city and in every district. The Fascists are attempting to encircle the revolutionary strongholds. The encirclers must be encircled. On this basis,

(Continued on Page 2)

Hesitation at This Time Is a Crime!

The most urgent need in Germany today is clarity. Half-way measures, confusion, ambiguity, twistings and turnings—these are fatal to the proletarian movement which needs a clear line of action, clearly expressed and clearly followed through.

The only road to the smashing of Fascism is the united front of the German working class. Everybody now acknowledges this in words—the Communists. The Left Opposition differs from the Stalinists not only by the fact that the latter have a wrong position on the question of the united front, but that they introduce a maximum of confusion into the minds of the working class precisely at the moment when a maximum of clarity is imperative if the German proletariat is not to be delivered to the Fascist butchers bound hand and foot.

Opposition's Stand

What does the Left Opposition advocate? Nothing more or less than the policy jointly advocated by Lenin and Trotsky in the early years of the Comintern, applied to the present German situation. The proletariat is divided into two main camps: reformism (social democratic) and revolution (Communist). Each of these camps is organized into distinct parties, with millions of followers. Fascism threatens to exterminate both of them, the revolutionary section first and the reformist section after it—at times the order of annihilation is not even separated and both suffer from the same blows at the same time. The whole working class is imbued with a deep, irreconcilable hatred of Fascism. It wants to fight it, regardless of which camp in the labor movement it is attached to at the moment. The Communists have no interests separate and apart from the interests of the working class as a whole; they are only its most advanced section. It devolves upon them, therefore, to take the initiative in mobilizing the whole class for a struggle to the bitter end to crush Fascism.

The socialist workers do not yet believe in the need of the dictatorship of the proletariat; that is essentially why they are still in the social democracy (we leave aside for the moment the fact that Stalinist blunders help to keep them there) and are not yet prepared to fight for a Bolshevik revolution. They are prepared to go along even with the Bolsheviks to fight the common enemy of Fascism. The Communists must make it possible for them to ally themselves with the Communist workers in the fight. This can be done at the present time by an alliance between the Communist party and the Social Democratic party to which the socialist workers are still attached. The latter will be broken away from their treacherous leaders in the course of this joint struggle, for we proceed from the theory that the socialist leaders will try to curb the movement, to emasculate it, to make rotten compromises with the enemy—in short, to render the movement ineffective and to stop it half way along the road. The socialist workers do not yet realize fully the role of their leaders. They will realize it in the process of the struggle—by their own experience. We proceed further from the idea that the Communists are so superior not only in their strategic goal but also in their tactics for the every day and immediate questions, that by experience the workers will realize further that the Communists are their only true and effective leaders.

Providing that the Communists retain their independence, their own banners, their right to free criticism of their temporary allies—they have nothing to fear from the alliance (i. e., from the united front) with the social democracy. Those who have a secret fear that the social democratic leaders are somehow superior, are opposed to such a united front. But the true Communists have nothing in the world to fear from a counterposing of their policy and leadership in the united front to those of the social democracy. They know which will triumph. They have confidence in themselves and in the sound class consciousness of the masses.

The Stalinist Position

What do the Stalinists advocate? The "united front from below" under "revolutionary leadership". This is a recruiting campaign for the party, but not the united front.

(Continued on Page 2)

League Obeys U.S.A. In Move Against Japan

The League's voluminous report on Japanese aggression in China gives the clearest evidence of America's dominating world position. In no single respect does the League's position differ from the one enunciated by Secretary Stimson on several occasions. It can be said that the interests of the great powers, in this instance, coincide with the interests of U. S. imperialism and are in opposition to those of Japan. This is true but does not negate American dominance.

The League demands Chinese sovereignty over Manchuria, but also requires that China grant autonomy to the three provinces. The report gives recognition also to Japan's special interests in Manchuria. Thus the League grants to Japan its right to a "sphere of influence" in North China but it is not ready to see this sphere turned into an outright colony. Diplomacy works only through quid pro quo—through concessions or payments made for services rendered. At the moment, America has more to offer the League than Japan. The price demanded from Japan—at least on the Soviet Union—has been deferred too long to suit the League. Furthermore instead of marching further North, Japan has set her face South in China, much to the League's chagrin. Thus the report states: "Early in January, 1933, occurred the serious incidents at Shanhai-kwan, situated at the extremity of the Great Wall, half-way between Peking and Mukden. This city has always been regarded as of great strategic importance. It is on the route followed by invaders who, coming from Manchuria, wish to penetrate into what is now the province of Hopei. Moreover, from Hopei is the easiest route into Jehol..."

"International Cooperation"

The League, in short, cannot possibly allow vast sections of China to become Japanese colonies. It proposes international cooperation in Chinese reconstruction—since the present position in Shanghai in China is an obstacle to friendship with Japan and an anxiety to the rest of the world (as the maintenance of peace in the Far East is a matter of international concern) and since the conditions enumerated above cannot be fulfilled without a strong central government in China, the final requisite for a satisfactory solution is temporary cooperation in the internal reconstruction of China, as suggested by the late Dr. Sun Yat Sen. Last there we are due as to the League's great altruism in desiring its hegemony rather than Japan's in the "maintenance of peace" (no doubt by gunboat practice on the shores of the Yangtze) we are given the spectacle of the strengthening of the Chinese central government by the extension of the rights of extraterritoriality for three years to England, the U. S. and France. Naming announced the abrogation of these rights in January 1930, and again in January 1931. But under cover of the present situation the powers (not the League, but the "powers" in the League!) have forced this concession as part payment for their stand against Japan.

The reason why Japan never formally declared war on China is that no "strong central government" in fact no government at all, exists in China, according to the Japanese generals whose sole desire is, of course, the maintenance of law and order so that civilization may survive. "All the Chinese soldiers are bandits," say the official Japanese spokesmen. One wonders whether Washington is capable of wincing at the indecent use of American diplomatic language. The League is in full accord with Japan's views on China, but prefers, strangely enough, its own methods and interests for carving China to suit the powers.

BULLETIN

Germany, official organ of the Catholic Center Party and personal organ of Heinrich Brüning during his Chancellorship (which the Stalinists announced in its time as the "Fascist dictatorship"), has just been suppressed by the Hitler regime for printing its own election manifesto. The 300 other Prussian organs of the Center party are similarly threatened. The terror regime of the Nazis now extends over a wide front. Fascism cannot really triumph without crushing even the most innocuous bourgeois "democratic" institutions.

A class on the history and principles of the International Left Opposition will begin this Wednesday evening, February 22, 1933, at the International Workers' School, 126 East 16th Street, at 8 P. M. The class will run for eight sessions, every Wednesday evening, with Max Shachtman, editor of the Militant, as lecturer. Admission to each session is fifteen cents; the full course is $1.00.

Quits "Anti-War" Group

GEITMAN DENOUNCES BARBUSSE MASQUERADE IMPOSED UPON LEFT STUDENTS AT CHICAGO CONFERENCE ON WAR PROBLEM; DEMANDS DISSOLUTION OF THE COMMITTEE

In a signed statement presented to the permanent committee formed at the so-called united front anti-war conference of the students in Chicago, Manny Geitman, member of the Communist League of America (Opposition) who was elected to the committee at the conference, presented his resignation, declining to allow the name of the Left Opposition to be used as a cover for the Stalin-Barbusse masquerade.

We give here some excerpts taken from the statement which he presented to the committee:

At the Chicago Students' Congress against War I was accepted in permanent continuations committee. This however I did not do on the basis of the program there adopted. My purpose was to present and defend the Communist position, more particularly the proposals made by the Communist League of America (Opposition) in statement and resolution at the conference, I find it necessary to resign from the Committee for the following reasons:

From its very inception the congress could promise nothing so far as the proper position on the struggle against war was concerned. That is, it could promise nothing but confusion. Repeating the fiasco at Amsterdam last summer the call, instigated by the National Student League as the other had been by the Communist International, went out in the name of a series of individuals, teachers and students, who represented no one but themselves. Thus no organized bodies which could pledge their support in the carrying out of the conference decisions assured the conference of success in its achievements.

Several other errors were manifested in the formation, deliberations and consequences of the congress. Most notably, a misunderstanding of the united front tactic was shown. Though the conference in its resolutions does somewhere state that it is a united front of action, the distinction was not at any time clearly marked. In fact the entire affair was oriented to the contrary, to a united front on propaganda; that is, to agitate against imperialism in general, rather than to jointly conduct specific activities. Consequently...

OPEN FORUM

BONAPARTISM AND THERMIDOR
THE CRISIS IN THE SOVIET UNION

Speaker:
MAX SHACHTMAN
Friday, February 24, 8 P. M.

126 East 16th Street,
ADMISSION: 15c

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America (Opposition)

Appeal for Aid to Readers

The following appeal was issued today by the national office of the Communist League of America (Opposition) to all the readers of THE MILITANT:

German Meetings

Oehler Tour:
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
Tuesday, Feb. 21—8 P. M.
CENTRAL AUDITORIUM
225 W. Boardman St.
CLEVELAND, OHIO
Wednesday, Feb. 22
PAINTER'S HALL
2080 Euclid Ave.
Chicago, Ill.—Feb. 24, 25, 26
Davenport, Iowa—Feb. 27

MINNEAPOLIS MASS MEETING

The Minneapolis branch of the Communist League of America has organized a mass meeting to be held Thursday, February 23, 1933 on the crisis in Germany and the standpoint of the Left Opposition. The meeting is to be held in the Mayor's reception room, Court House, and the speakers are Carl Skoglund and Vincent R. Dunne. Nyles B. Dunne will act as chairman. Admission is free and all workers are cordially invited.

ABERN TO SPEAK IN BOSTON

Martin Abern, member of the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition) is scheduled to speak at a number of meetings now being arranged by the Boston branch of the Opposition on the significance of the crisis in Germany. Comrade Abern will speak in Boston, Peabody and in all probability one more locality. The meetings will be held on March 3, 4, and 5, 1933. Further details will appear in the coming issues of the Militant.

Boston I.L.D. Expels Two

I. L. D. BUREAUCRATS EXPEL TWO ACTIVE MILITANTS ON FRAME-UP CHARGE OF "STEALING MAILING LIST"; REAL REASON SHOWN TO BE THAT THEY ARE OPPOSITIONISTS

The I. L. D. is proceeding well in its work of unification. As a step in this direction it has expelled two of the most active members of the Boston district of its organization. Comrades Charlotte Shecht and William Konikov, whose activities for the I. L. D. are well known to all the members of their branch, were thrown out in typically Stalinist manner—on trumped-up charges. The local bureaucracy of the Boston section fearing the criticism of these comrades and fearing the spread of those Communist ideas which would build the I. L. D. as a real mass organization and thereby expose the true character of these self-appointed "leaders" excluded comrades Shecht and Konikov on flagrantly falsified grounds so as to cover up the splinter's character of their action.

The District Executive Committee of the New England District in its statement on the expulsion of the two comrades makes the following charges:

"This investigation and the meetings brought out that Shecht and Konikov had stolen the membership list and records of the Sacco-Vanzetti Branch (Boston) and used this list to circulate the branch membership with the Trotskyite paper, the Militant. The actions of Shecht for the last few months have been to disrupt the work of the I. L. D. constantly trying to cause dissatisfaction among I. L. D. members with the I. L. D., trying to substitute educational work for mass activity, utilizing I. L. D. meetings and conferences for securing contacts and in an attempt to pit members of the I. L. D. against decisions and against the I. L. D. National and District leadership. Konikov joined the branch only recently. Konikov's action consisted according to his own statement: 'I am sending out these things (The Militant and notices of meetings), ... etc., etc., ad nauseum. From the nature of these charges, on the basis of past experience, it is not difficult to see into this very apparent frame-up. The statement of the expelled comrades confirms our suspicion. Their statement is a smashing reply to the lies of the I. L. D. bureaucrats. Concerning the alleged theft of the mailing list the prosecutors were forced to

(Continued on Page 2)

Lynching Campaign Against Zangara

The jackal press has let loose a veritable furor against the would-be-killer of Franklin D. Roosevelt. This same ruling class to which the death of hundreds of workers and their families by starvation is just a daily event, which murders workers on the picket without an afterthought, which sent millions of young workers to the slaughter house of the world war with equanimity sets up a lynching howl against Zangara—a product of the international proletarian movement, it is the Left Opposition alone that sounds the alarm, explains and interprets the events and shows the Communist workers the way to their international duty. Every dollar that is contributed to support the three-week publication of the Militant is a weight in the scale for the German working class. Your contribution now, at this critical moment, is of a hundred-fold greater importance than at ordinary times.

We ask you to give a special contribution to the Militant. Your help is desperately needed and will be especially appreciated now.

Yours fraternally,
J. P. Cannon
Secretary.

USE THIS BLANK

The Militant
126 East 16th Street
Enclosed herewith is $..... as a special contribution to help publish the Militant three times a week during the German crisis.

Name

Address

City

Undoubtedly, the master class will try to utilize this event to stir up an "anti-red" hysteria or some sort of a drive against the foreign-born revolutionary workers. But our position is clear. The capitalist class cannot mask the private into which it has driven the masses by a "red herring" of this kind. Our fight will go on to the end.

—G. C.

2 Expelled From I.L.D.

(Continued from Page 1)

admit that out of the 100 names only 15 were circulated with the Militant and that these lists were stolen in November. The reply of the comrades things the accusation into the teeth of the deprived Stalinists. (1) How does it happen that out of the 100 names only 15 were circulated? (2) That in the same month sixty-five Militants were circulated? (3) Of these 65 names about two-thirds were scattered as far as New Hampshire (The I. L. D. branch list included only Boston names). (4) These 65 names received the Militant beginning with August, three months before the alleged theft. (5) Comrade Konikoff offered the Executive the privilege of examining his mailing lists. Naturally they did nothing about it. The facts speak for themselves. But what is the real reason for the expulsion? We quote their statement:

"They had let us into the I. L. D. as known members of the Opposition. We had done everything that the officialdom let us do to support I.L.D. activities. Comrade Schechet, particularly had put so much energy into the I.L.D. work that the comrades were talking about it."

She was active in canvassing in the Negro section; in obtaining support of A. F. of L. and I. W. O. locals for the I.L.D. The John Reed Branch elected her to its Executive Committee. And this comrade is called a disrupter and an enemy of the working class! The statement continues further: "The real immediate reason for our expulsion can be traced to a recent visit of comrade Biedenkapp when he spoke at the District Conference. He depicted the sad condition of the I.L.D. and of course like all bureaucrats blamed it on the membership."

At a meeting of the bureau of the Moscow Committee they decided to construct an "ice-house" on the Red Square. They called in about thirty experts for this subject. After lengthy examination they decided to build it. The experts left, they went on to the second point on the agenda. Suddenly Kaganovich came (always late). He interrupted the speaker and asked what they had decided on the first point. Having learned that they had decided to build, Kaganovich answered: "This is foolishness," and proposed not to build the ice-house. The proposal was unanimously accepted, even though they had previously (after three hours of discussion) accepted the opposite proposal.

Unfortunately, one must say, that despite the grave dangers threatening the proletarian state, the Stalinist bureaucracy has remained true to itself. The last plenum of the C. C. and the new expulsions from the Party (Zinoviev, Kamenev, etc.) demonstrates that they have decided to persevere in their ignorance. The plenum confirmed the absolute correctness of the line of the leadership. The cause of the cracks in the execution of the economic plan, the disorganization of monetary circulation and all the colossal difficulties which threaten, these are, according to them, bad execution of the instructions and of the plan. The executives are responsible for it, the workers, and not the false line. On the necessity of a change of regime, under which even a good idea, a correct instruction takes on an astonishing malformation in its realization, under which party thought is completely strangled—not a word on this. The answer to the growing discontent of the ranks of the Party and the "middle" section of the apparatus is more expulsions from the party, more arrests, more exiling of Bolsheviks.

—TANOV.
Moscow—Early October, 1932.

CHARLOTTE SCHECHET,
WILLIAM M. KONIKOV.

GOOD SALES IN BOSTON
The Boston comrades write: "We sold yesterday 20 Militants at a Forum where Mause spoke and we gave 30 away free. We are delighted with the good work done in New York."

German Opposition Overwhelmingly Against the Handful of Capitulators

BERLIN.—The Stalinist assertion that the German Left Opposition has disintegrated, supported by the forgery of an issue of the "Permanent Revolution", the organ of the German Left Opposition, is refuted by the action of the branches of the German Opposition with respect to the handful of capitulators who made the forgery possible.

The following branches, in resolutions addressed to the German National Committee, have either demanded the exclusion of the capitulators, R. Well, Senin, etc., or expressed their solidarity with the decisions of the National Committee:

Koenigsberg, Benliten, Bautzen, Dresden, Bruchsal, Karlsruhe, Kaiserslautern, Mainz, Neustadt a. H., Mannheim, Frankfurt, Cologne, Gelsenkirchen, Essen, Solingen, Erkenschwick, Remscheid, I. I. I., Berlin, Orlanburg, Birkenwerder, Magdeburg, Halberstadt, Bielefeld.

For reasons that will be readily understood we do not enumerate the inner-party fractions.

In Leipzig, where the capitulators were able to gather only 26 signatures, the most inactive part of the organization capitulated. Two-thirds of the group stands with us.

Bruchsal of which the capitulators wrote that it would "probably" join them, and which alone has more members than the capitulators are able to show "signatures", stands unanimously with the National Committee. Not a vote was

A Letter from the U.S.S.R.

We hear the name of Trotsky more and more often. They fear to speak of him, only a remark is thrown out, then passing quickly to another subject they return to it. Among the old party cadres no one believes in "this counter-revolutionary character." They remember Trotsky's ability to speak, to explain. They recall the civil war, where and how Trotsky spoke. In these same circles, they speak of Rakovsky with respect. "Unfortunately, he is in Siberia!" They inquire, "What is Trotsky doing, what has he written, has he an organization?" There is very little information on the work of the Left Opposition abroad.

An old party member said: "Surely Lenin would not be angry with me if I take off Stalin's portrait which is hung near his place in its stead Trotsky's. We need Hlych (this is very frequent). One often hears from an average functionary: 'It will be better if Trotsky returns.' Others add with fright: 'If he returns they will shoot us by the thousands.'"

If the old party cadres conduct themselves towards Trotsky and Rakovsky in this manner, it is quite another matter among the youth. They know only Stalin.

Piatnitsky recently spoke at the "Society of Old Bolsheviks". In his speech he sounded a strongly epistolary note to Fascism. Fascism is vanquished. But the center is Poland. The revolution is closer there than anywhere else. This epistolary note displeased many. They have no perspective. The C. I. is subordinated to the interests of the Foreign Affairs Department.

At a meeting of the bureau of the Moscow Committee they decided to construct an "ice-house" on the Red Square. They called in about thirty experts for this subject. After lengthy examination they decided to build it. The experts left, they went on to the second point on the agenda. Suddenly Kaganovich came (always late). He interrupted the speaker and asked what they had decided on the first point. Having learned that they had decided to build, Kaganovich answered: "This is foolishness," and proposed not to build the ice-house. The proposal was unanimously accepted, even though they had previously (after three hours of discussion) accepted the opposite proposal.

Unfortunately, one must say, that despite the grave dangers threatening the proletarian state, the Stalinist bureaucracy has remained true to itself. The last plenum of the C. C. and the new expulsions from the Party (Zinoviev, Kamenev, etc.) demonstrates that they have decided to persevere in their ignorance. The plenum confirmed the absolute correctness of the line of the leadership. The cause of the cracks in the execution of the economic plan, the disorganization of monetary circulation and all the colossal difficulties which threaten, these are, according to them, bad execution of the instructions and of the plan. The executives are responsible for it, the workers, and not the false line. On the necessity of a change of regime, under which even a good idea, a correct instruction takes on an astonishing malformation in its realization, under which party thought is completely strangled—not a word on this. The answer to the growing discontent of the ranks of the Party and the "middle" section of the apparatus is more expulsions from the party, more arrests, more exiling of Bolsheviks.

—TANOV.
Moscow—Early October, 1932.

CHARLOTTE SCHECHET,
WILLIAM M. KONIKOV.

given there for Well and Co. In Ilamburg only the daughter of Fritz Buchner (Leipzig) voted for the "program" of the capitulators. Well and Senin fled in obtaining ten telegraphic signatures. It is a swindle to say that Well, Senin, etc., constituted the majority of the National Committee. Of twelve members of the National Committee only three stood on the side of Well.

It is also a swindle to say that they had a majority for their platform on the editorial staff of the "Permanent Revolution".

Lovestone and the Capitulators

The current number of the Lovestone paper, which appeared after our exposure of the forged issue of "The Permanent Revolution", published by the Well group of capitulators which makes the exposure of "ignorance" untenable—unsmilingly reports that "the group 'Die Permanente Revolution' has capitulated and gone back to the official C.P.G. The last issue of its organ contained a full page appeal for unconditional return to the party!" This leaves the "International Left Opposition" without a sign in Germany." Even if the American left wing (which Lovestone also unsmilingly reports to have 900 members) can only publish its paper once a month, this is hardly a reason why deliberate falsehoods should be repeated.

The Right wing is not "without a group in Germany," as we know; that is, it has remaining in its ranks those who have not yet joined an agreement with the social democratic and trade union organizations is not only permissible, but a duty. To reject this for reasons of "principle" (in reality because of bureaucratic stupidity, or what is still worse, because of cowardice) is to give direct and immediate aid to Fascism.

How Can Fascism Be Smashed?

(Continued from Page 1)

A practical program of agreements with the social democratic workers was proposed by us as far back as September 1930. (The Turn in the Comintern and the Situation in Germany, published by The Militant), that is, a year and a quarter ago. What has the leadership undertaken in this direction. Next to nothing. The Central Committee of the Communist party has taken up everything except that which constitutes its direct task. How much valuable, irrefragable time has been lost! As a matter of fact, not much time is left. The program of action must be strictly practical, strictly objective, to the point, without any of those artificial "claims" without any reservations, so that every average social democratic worker can say to himself: What the Communists propose is completely indispensable for the struggle against Fascism. On this basis, we must pull the social democratic workers along with us by our example, and criticize their leaders who will inevitably serve as a check and a brake. Only in this way is victory possible.

A Good Quotation from Lenin

The present day epigones, that is, the thoroughly bad disciples of Lenin, like to cover up their shortcomings on every occasion that offers itself with quotations—often entirely irrelevant. For Marxists, the question is not decided by a quotation but by means of the correct method. If one is guided by correct methods, it is not hard also to find suitable quotations. After I had drawn the above analogy with the Kornilov insurrection, I said to myself: We can probably find a theoretical elucidation of our bloc with the capitulators in the struggle against Kornilov, in Lenin. And here is what I actually found in the second part of Vol. XIV of the Russian edition, in a letter of Lenin to the Central Committee, written at the beginning of September, 1917:

"Even at the present time, we are not duty-bound to support the Kerensky government. That would be unprincipled. It is asked: then we are not to fight against Kornilov? Of course we are. But that is not one and the same thing. There is a limit to this; it is being transgressed by many Bolsheviks who fall into 'conciliationism' and allow themselves to be driven by the current of events."

"We shall fight, we are fighting against Kornilov, but we do not support Kerensky, but we are uncovering his weaknesses. The distinction is rather delicate, but highly important, and must not be forgotten."

"What does the change of our tactics consist of after the Kornilov insurrection?"

"In this, that we are varying the forms of struggle against Kerensky. Without diminishing our hostility to him even by one single note, without taking back one word from what we have said against him, without giving up the task of overwhelming Kerensky, we say: We must calculate the moment, we will not overthrow Kerensky at present. We approach the question of the struggle against him differently: by explaining the weaknesses and vacillations of Kerensky to the people (who are fighting against Kornilov)."

We are proposing nothing different. Complete independence of the Communist organization and press, complete freedom of Communist criticism, the same for the social democracy and the trade unions. Only contemptible opportunists can allow the freedom of the Communist party to be limited (for example, like entrance into the Kuo Min Tang). We are not of their number."

No retraction of our criticism of the social democracy. No forgetting of all that has been. The whole historical reckoning, including the reckoning for Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, will be presented at the proper time, just as the Russian Bolsheviks finally presented a general reckoning to the Mensheviks and Social-Revolutionists for the baiting, calumny, imprisonment and murder of workers, soldiers and peasants.

But we presented our general reckoning to them two months after we had utilized the partial reckoning between Kerensky and Kornilov, between the "democrats" and the Fascists—in order to drive back the Fascists all the more certainly. Only thanks to this circumstance were we victorious.

When the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany adopts the position expressed in the quotation from Lenin cited above, the entire approach to the social democratic masses and the trade union organizations will change at once: instead of the articles and speeches which are convincing only to those people who are already convinced without them, the agitators will find a common language with new hundreds of thousands and millions of workers.

The differentiation within the social democracy will proceed at an increased pace. The Fascists will soon feel that their task does not at all consist merely of defeating Bruening, Braun and Wels, but of taking up the open struggle against the whole working class. On this plane, a profound differentiation will inevitably be produced within Fascism. Only by this road is victory possible.

But it is necessary to desire this victory. In the meantime, there are among the Communist officials not a few cowardly careerists and fakers whose little posts, whose incomes and more than that,—whose hides, are dear to them. These creatures are very much inclined to spout ultra-right phrases beneath which is concealed a wretched and contemptible fatalism. "Without a victory over the social democracy, we cannot battle against Fascism!" say such terrible revisionists, and for this reason... they get their passports ready.

Worker-Communists, you are hundreds of thousands, millions; you cannot leave for any place; there are not enough passports for you. Should Fascism come to power, it will rule over your skills and spines like a terrible tank. Your salvation lies in merciless struggle. And only a fighting unity with the social democratic workers can bring victory. Make haste, worker-Communists, you have very little time left!

December 8, 1931.

—L. TROTSKY.

To Delay the Anti-Nazi United Front Is Fatal

(Continued from Page 1)

It is precisely because the socialist masses are not yet ready to accept in advance the leadership of the Communist party that they have till now remained with the social democracy. The problem is how to win them away from the petty bourgeois socialist camp. The Stalinist slogan assumes that this problem has already been solved!

The "united front from below" is postulated on the theory of "social Fascism" which dissolves the sharp distinction between the extreme

"democratic" wing of the bourgeois and the extreme Fascist anti-democratic wing at the other extreme. What this theory has in common with Marxism, or even with the simple and known facts of the class struggle, remains undiscovered to the present day. At all events, on the basis of this theory the Stalinists refuse to make a bloc with the social democratic party, or to approach it officially with a concrete proposal for temporary united front on concrete questions. Those who like ourselves even propose such a united front, automatically become, according to the Stalinists, social Fascists, or better yet, the counter-revolutionary vanguard of social Fascism.

This can be read any day in the week in the Daily Worker, in the Communist International, and so forth.

At the recently concluded 12th

Plenum of the Executive Commitee of the Comintern, the leader of the German party Thaelmann, fulminated for hours against the proposal for a united front with the social democracy to smash

Hitlerism. "Our party leadership set its face severely against the attitude which found its expression in an article entitled 'Change of System'.... The tactical conclusions which have been drawn from the false estimation of the role of the

S. P. D. in the above-mentioned article, are substantially on a par with the proposals of the Berlin district leadership—proposals which were made to the Social Democratic Party with a view to the holding of joint demonstrations, and which were rightly rejected by the Central Committee of our party, and corrected in the case of Berlin.

"The article contains among other things the following passage:

... But above all, the demand of the Berlin-Brandenburg district leadership to the 'Iron Front' movement to hold a joint demonstration against Fascism, is most appropriate here."

"In this we see the continuation of the false judgment of the role of the S. P. D. The proposal made by the leaders of the Berlin District of the Social Democratic Party but who are quite ready to join the Stalin faction on the "proper terms".

In Czechoslovakia, too, the Right wing is not "without a group,"

only its group is now part of the Czech social democracy. As for Lovestone, as is known, his fierce attachment to principle would never permit him to capitulate to the Stalinists. Really—just try him and see. Just try him. Or, ask Gtlow....

of the Social Democratic Party but who are quite ready to join the

Stalin faction on the "proper terms".

In Czechoslovakia, too, the Right wing is not "without a group,"

only its group is now part of the Czech social democracy. As for ing between Kerensky and Kornilov, between the "democrats" and the Fascists—in order to drive back the Fascists all the more certainly. Only thanks to this circumstance were we victorious.

When the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany adopts the position expressed in the quotation from Lenin cited above, the entire approach to the social democratic masses and the trade union organizations will change at once: instead of the articles and speeches which are convincing only to those people who are already convinced without them, the agitators will find a common language with new hundreds of thousands and millions of workers. The differentiation within the social democracy will proceed at an increased pace. The Fascists will soon feel that their task does not at all consist merely of defeating Bruening, Braun and Wels, but of taking up the open struggle against the whole working class. On this plane, a profound differentiation will inevitably be produced within Fascism. Only by this road is victory possible.

But it is necessary to desire this victory. In the meantime, there are among the Communist officials not a few cowardly careerists and fakers whose little posts, whose incomes and more than that,—whose hides, are dear to them. These creatures are very much inclined to spout ultra-right phrases beneath which is concealed a wretched and contemptible fatalism. "Without a victory over the social democracy, we cannot battle against Fascism!" say such terrible revisionists, and for this reason

... they get their passports ready.

Worker-Communists, you are hundreds of thousands, millions;

you cannot leave for any place;

there are not enough passports for you. Should Fascism come to power, it will rule over your skills and spines like a terrible tank.

Your salvation lies in merciless struggle. And only a fighting unity with the social democratic workers can bring victory. Make haste, worker-Communists, you have very little time left!

December 8, 1931.

—L. TROTSKY.

of the Social Democratic Party but who are quite ready to join the

SPEAKERS:
James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman

Hollywood Gardens
896 Prospect Ave.
Sunday, February 26, at 2:30 P. M.
ADMISSION: 15 CENTS

Revolution Only Way

(Continued from Page 1)

ment raised its taxes again and again, and used the money to "relieve" capitalists who wanted to unload their stocks or to engage in a profitable bankruptcy. The North German Lloyd, Darmstädter Bank, Disconto Bank, Nordwille and a host of other financial scandals were "solved" by having the German government compensate the capitalists who were threatened with loss. The big German steel trust, the Vereinigte Stahlwerke, is now about 30 percent owned by the government because Brüning's finance Minister bought them at three times the market price from a petrole industrialist who threatened to sell them to France if his terms were not accepted.

In all these ways the German people have been plundered for the benefit of their own capitalists and also for that of their new foreign masters. The accumulation and combination of the two burdens has brought forth the sharpest class of class interests.

The big bourgeoisie, in addition to fighting for its own privileges, will also struggle to keep intact its alliance with foreign capital at the cost of the German masses, supporting itself on the power of foreign imperialism while at the same time frantically pounding the nationalist drum. The situation has a certain analogy with that of the Russian capitalists before the revolution, in respect to their leaning on foreign capital, although this was even more true of Russia.

Role of Petty Bourgeoisie
The petty bourgeoisie, on the other hand, tries to make a distinction between its domestic oppressors and its foreign ones. It is not convinced that its future lies with the proletariat, because of the lack of a clear-cut program and the powerful, united and growing proletarian force in Germany. It therefore turns to its domestic bourgeoisie, and under the pressure of its chauvinistic prejudices and narrowness, brought to a white heat by the bellows of Fascist propaganda, it turns its hate against "foreign", including Jewish, capital, in the first instance, and is content with vague demagogic promises as to what Fascism will do to its fellow-German capitalists.

The working class, on the other hand, cannot make any distinction between the two. In 1917 the Bolsheviks struggled both against the influence of foreign capital and reflected in the alliance of Russia with England and France in the imperialist war, and against their "own" capitalism in the civil war. Only through putting itself at the head of the nation, through settling accounts with its own capitalism, through installing the dictatorship of the proletariat, will the German working class impose its own class interests, which will also be those of the Socialist nation, on the foreign imperialist powers. To submerge its own class interests in those of the nation, to pose the struggle for the dictatorship and for the ultimate Socialist State as a struggle for "national liberation", is in effect to capitulate to the ideology of the petty bourgeoisie, with its creation of supposed "national" interests which stand above the tasks of the proletariat as a separate class. The Bolsheviks settled their accounts with their own capitalism and installed the dictatorship of the proletariat in October, three months later they broke the financial bonds of Anglo-French imperialism through the repudiation of the Czarist debt and in another two months, through the peace of Brest-Litovsk, achieved the real liberation of Russia from foreign imperialism and its war.

—B. J. FIELD.

Nearing Breaking Point in China

(Continued from Page 1)

paper adds: "Japan today is the third naval power in the world. She is, perhaps, the second military power. In combined naval and military force she is second to none. It is impossible to attain such a position in the world without being regarded with a certain amount of awe and apprehension."

American Apprehensions
The apprehension of their American business rivals has indeed been aroused. Hence, the U. S. government gives tacit encouragement to American citizens not to buy Japanese silks. Mrs. Hoover ostentatiously takes to wearing cotton gowns. American merchants call in their credits from Japan. American banks refrain from granting loans to Japanese applicants, etc. Is it a shrewd guess to interpret the flurry in the Japanese stock market recently as the dumping of Japanese stocks and bonds by American holders? But these measures are not the major ones. The main steps are pressure applied through American influence and power in Europe, and—transfer for an indefinite period of the American navy to the Pacific.

The Balkanization of Manchuria goes on apace nevertheless, with Japan throwing its armies into Jehol. The League promulgates a verbose document of inanities whose meaning, as given by the diplomats themselves, amounts to informing China that she has the League's permission to fight back the Japanese invasion. But Japan is insured how to taking "advice" from the League on Manchuria. Her big navy is proof against such "advice!" —J. W.

Comrade James Gordon is a member of the central strike committee and is active participating in the Politz-Fisher strike. He is not the chairman of the strike committee as was erroneously reported in a recent issue of the Militant. An article on the strike and the situation in the Food Workers Union will appear in the next issue of the Militant.

America's Role in Germany

The Threat of Imperialist War

A Fascist victory and the defeat of the German proletariat would lay the basis for ironing out the most pressing contradictions standing in the way of the imperialist war on the Soviet Union. Fascist Germany and American capital, with the other imperialists, would transform their economic war into a military war against the Soviet Union, using Fascism as the spearhead of attack. In the post-war period, defeated Germany stood in the way of a well organized international operation and direct attack upon the Soviet Union. A Fascist Germany eliminates the sharpest expression of this contradiction. This does not mean that a social democracy is just that many degrees better when it rules. It means that the position of class relations is to that degree different. The position of the working class and its party is different. Social democracy drugs the proletariat. Fascism annihilates its organizations.

Italian Fascism has the most agreeable relationship with American imperialism. Italian Fascism does not rest upon the same economic base that a victorious German Fascism would have. The White Terror government of Hungary after the Hungarian revolution, as well as other White Terror governments of the Balkans, have the best of relations with the American imperialists. But Fascist Italy and all of these White Terror Governments cannot disorganize the world working class to the same degree that German Fascism in the event of victory, could. The economic base below these forces is different.

The Stalinists consider Mussolini in Italy or Pilsudsky in Poland as just another form of bourgeois rule, and then conclude that Fascism in Germany would be similar. Such governments are indeed a form of bourgeois rule.

But from the class point of view there is a vast difference between social democracy and Fascism. And one must add to this, that with the Fascist variety of bourgeois rule there are differences and more pressing dangers. Fascism in Germany would make Fascism in Italy look like child's play. Because WORLD CAPITALISM is in a more critical situation, Fascism

Program of Action Against Fascism Proposed Year Ago by German Left

(The consistency of the policy of the international Left Opposition for the situation in Germany, as well as the fact that its policy has been confirmed with striking accuracy by events, is shown by our reprint below of the open letter sent by our German comrades to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany more than a year ago. It was the Left Opposition which at that time—and for some time before that—sounded the alarm signal against the Fascist danger and called upon the party to initiate the united front movement against the Nazis. The failure of the Communist Party leaders to adopt this course finally resulted in the present dangerous position into which the party and the working class have been forced. In essence, the proposals made below not only continue to hold good today, but are an imperatively necessary prerequisite to the launching of the movement that will exterminate the burlesque of Hitlerism.—Ed.)

To the Central Committee of the C. P. G.
Dear comrades:
Victory is possible, victory is probable, everything must be done to assure it. Only in this manner can revolutionists pose the question in the present situation.

The question of the victory over Fascism in Germany is also the question of the fate of the U. S. S. R., regardless of whether it is considered from the economic, the political or the purely military point of view. But that means that so as to be able to assure the future of socialist economy in the U. S. S. R., the Soviet Union must stake all of its forces on the victory over Fascism of the European revolution, with which it is inseparably linked. This alone can be the strategic line of the Communist party.

The C. P. must adopt a position of departure that rests upon irreconciliable and ruthless struggle against Fascism, for the purpose of destroying Fascism in the inevitable, open struggle and for the conquest of power.

The united revolutionary class action of the proletariat must be organized against the victory of Fascism.

This can be realized only when all revolutionary forces, no matter in what camp they stand at the moment, unite for this common action which stands on the order of the day. We know full well that the premises for such an action are highly unfavorable. But in spite of this, the C. P. G., as the historically chosen organization must in view of the seriousness of the situation make the attempt to realize a genuine fighting unity of the working class.

To this end we submit the following proposals:

The C. P. G. is immediately to approach all political groups, trade unions and workers' organizations who declare themselves prepared to fight against Fascism with the aim of a common appeal for the formation of a Joint Council of Action against Fascism. This appeal must contain:

1. The creation of Committees of Action consisting of representatives of factories, trade unions, political groups and other workers' organizations. It is of the greatest importance, that all the existing tendencies in the revolutionary working class of each locality be represented in the Committees of Action.
2. The Joint Council of Action is to be constituted at a congress of delegates from these Committees of Action in the entire country, which is to meet in the shortest possible time. This congress is to represent the proletariat concentrated against the concentration of the reactionaries.
3. The congress must be organized in advance as the proletarian counter-parliament in the event of a Fascist Reichstag, or against an extra-parliamentary or parliamentary Fascist government.

4. The congress must solve three tasks:

- (a) the preparation of the general strike to prevent the seizure of power by Hitler and his henchmen;
- (b) the formation of one common non-party workers' defense corps;
- (c) the elaboration of a common minimum program with regard to the next steps to be taken by the Committees of Action.

Under a correct leadership, such a defense action contains all the necessary elements with which to lead the proletariat, in view of the objective possibilities described above, not only against Fascism, but to the overthrow of the bourgeoisie as a whole.

Such a policy is possible only after a radical change in the course of the party. The experiences of the French Communist Party speak an unequivocal language. Despite the "third period", despite the ultra-Left trade union tactic, despite "social Fascism" and similar slogans, the party has been forced by the pressure of objective conditions and partly also on the basis of sound proposals made by the Left Opposition to change its course radically. (See the proposal to the Socialist Party of France for common action on the second ballot, the Preliminary Congress for the establishment of trade union unity.)

It is high time to draw the consequences in Germany and to reestablish the unity of all genuine Communists.
We declare emphatically that, despite profound differences in a whole series of questions, we will support with our innermost convictions, every step undertaken by the party in this direction with all our strength and that we are completely and entirely at the service of the party in any instance whatsoever.

The Left Opposition of the C. P. G. (Bolshevik-Leninists)
The National Committee.

Fascists Command Police: Shoot the Reds

(Continued from Page 1)

the masses and prevent them from really fighting Fascism. How does it retain this hold? Precisely by means of its sham, verbal, opposition. How can this hold over the socialist masses be broken by the Communists in the shortest possible time—and time is just what is decisive in Germany now? By forcing these socialist leaders to reveal in action that their opposition is a sham. How is this to be done? By demanding of their leaders that they translate their verbosity into deeds, that they show what their words are worth by joining with the Communist party in a united front on a concrete program of action to smash Fascism.

The socialist masses say to themselves: My leaders, my organization has taken a stand against Fascism. They speak against it. They call for struggle against it. The Communist party must say to the Social Democratic party: You say you want to fight Fascism. We do, also. It is not a matter of mutual confidence, for we haven't a particle of it where you are concerned. But the masses want a united fight against Fascism. We are ready. We demand that you join us in this fight. Then let the masses judge who really is fighting in their interests. We will march with our own banners (directed against the Fascists, and also against yourselves!), retain our independence and our criticisms. Talk is cheap; let us—and the workers who still follow you—see what your deeds are.

The socialist workers will then say: The Communists really want a united fight against Fascism. It is a proletarian question with them and not merely a purely party question. We will demand that our leaders accept the Communist proposal for a united front. If our leaders refuse, we shall know that the Communists were not mistaken in their appraisal of the role of Wels and Hitlering. If our leaders accept, we will see in the course of the united front struggle whether or not the Communists are right in their assertions that Wels and the other leaders will play the role of a brake on the movement and will betray us at the crucial moment.

We Have All to Gain
The Communists will say to themselves: We have nothing to fear. Once a mass movement is really set in motion, we have confidence that our leadership and policies are superior to those of the social democracy. In the course of the fight, the workers will see with their own eyes. They will be able to compare the two and judge for themselves. We will gain in the end, which means the working class and the proletarian revolution will gain. For by retaining our independence and not relenting an iota in our criticism of the social democracy, we will not be helping perpetuate the illusions spread by the socialist leaders. On the contrary, by a firm, clear policy, we will be helping to destroy these illusions in the minds of the million-headed socialist masses. With united efforts we will smash Fascism, our main foe. But such a movement will be set in motion that—providing we are not stupid—we shall be able to push it further along the correct road, to the formation of Soviets as the organs of the proletarian dictatorship, to the final settlement of accounts with the murderers of Liebknecht and Luxemburg whom we know (the socialist masses do not yet know it, or not with sufficient clarity) will try to stab the movement in the back when it becomes dangerous to them.

These simple ideas, which Lenin and Trotsky tried to hammer into the heads of the opportunists and ultra-Leftists in 1921 and 1922, must become the policy of the party. The vapors of all the "specialists" and "theoreticians" of the Stalinist cut lead only to impotence and confusion. It is high time to call them to a halt!

Tuesday, Feb. 21, 1933. —M. S.

Opposition in Davenport

Davenport, Iowa.—The branch of the Left Opposition in Davenport is making very substantial headway. We have had to increase our Forum to every week as the response among the workers has been tremendous. It takes place every Wednesday. We get anywhere from 60 to 80 workers depending on the kind of a speaker that we have.

Our class on the fundamentals of Communism has been progressing very well and is about finished. We will begin a new class soon. A class will start the first Monday in March on elementary Marxian economics and will take place every first and third Monday of each month. Our class on fundamentals of Communism meets every Friday.

Wednesday, February 8 the Left Opposition opened its headquarters and book store, class room combined. In spite of the zero weather (22 degree below zero) that evening we had forty-five to fifty present.

February 15 the open forum was turned over to the unemployed and a Union of Unemployed was organized, due to the fact that the Unemployed Council in this city is ill defined and isolated. Without any leaders or advertising fifty workers showed up at the meeting. Forty-three organized and joined the Union of Unemployed.

In the last couple of months six new members joined the Left Opposition, which makes this branch now a total membership of ten.

Comrade Brady of Chicago lectured here on Elementary Marxian for three consecutive days and we had an attendance of about an average of twelve regularly attending each day. We are holding aside from our regular forums special meetings such as this.

On February 17 Gerry Allard of

GERMAN CAMPAIGN

Chicago Advances With Campaign

Chicago.—Chicago's reaction to the German campaign of the Left Opposition was immediate. The meeting to organize the campaign was held last night with members of Spartacus Youth Club, Unser Kampf Club (Left Opposition) and a few party comrades in attendance. The enthusiasm of the comrades was manifest throughout the meeting. Many speakers took the floor with suggestions on how best to carry on the campaign in Chicago.

The most important point on the agenda was the assignment of comrades to sell the new three-week Militant before workers' organizations and meetings. Practically the whole city will be covered in the next few weeks with the message of the Left Opposition to the German events. The Chicago workers that have already been contacted through our German campaign are applauding the efforts of the Communist Left to raise the German Communist Party from its Stalinist political stupor.

In the meantime the effects of the campaign are making themselves felt within the ranks of the party itself. The frightened party bureaucrats have not organized any mass meetings on Germany yet. The Chicago organization of the Left Opposition however, is holding a mass meeting in the "Loop" at Redder Hall, Sunday, the 19th, another the following Sunday, Feb. 26, 3 P. M. at Division and Western (Mirror Hall) with comrade Hugo Oehler as main speaker. Our South Side group will organize a meeting on the South Side very shortly.

—J. GIGANTI.

200 SOLD IN FEW HOURS
In a few hours, comrade Jim Carr of the New York branch sold 200 copies of the "New Militant" at a cent a copy in the 14th Street vicinity. Other comrades have sold from 50 to 150 copies in a few hours. The absorbing interest with which the militants are following our paper in these crucial hours is a guarantee of the advance of the Left Opposition.

HUNDREDS SOLD IN N. Y.
Nat Levine, Left Opposition sympathizer in New York, sold 117 copies of the Militant on the preceding Friday and 200 copies on the following Sunday in front of the Labor Temple. He reports wide interest in the three-times-a-week Militant and its efforts to present thoroughly the situation in Germany. Mac Cudde, another sympathizer, has also been active in the sale of the Militant and in the securing of subscriptions.

—S. G.

S.L.P. Treachery In Springfield

Springfield, Ill.—The Socialist Labor Party of Springfield, "like the Poles Leaders of old have become a strategic post of peculiar strength for the pariticate and of mischief for the proletariat... the work of enslaving and slowly degrading the working class"—to quote Daniel DeLeon.

The issue in the Illinois miners struggle is clear. On the one side, you have the whole machinery of the capitalist class; on the other side you have the working-class, and it is the duty of all class-conscious workers to give the keenest support and to stand on the side of the workers whenever a strike or any other conflict for improved conditions of labor occurs either as a spontaneous action of the workers or as a result of action taken by a labor organization. And by doing this the class conscious workers do not for a minute lose sight of the revolutionary goal.

But the Socialist Labor Party of Springfield at its recent meeting by a majority vote decided to become scabs, to help the Lewis-Peabody machine defeat the Progressive Miners of America and to force the miners back under the conditions of the coal operators.

And so, with the exception of two rank and file members who tore up their party cards in the face of these labor-fakers, Fred Koch, Lawrence Lamb, A. J. DeWitt, Fritoff and Joe Brown, these staunch S. L. P. members went back to scab in a body under the Lewis-Peabody company union. And this isn't all. Fred Koch, former national organizer and the apex of the S. L. P. in the state of Illinois, takes his young son and this youth is introduced and initiated to all the chicanery in the art of being a professional strikebreaker by his SLP father as his first job.

Lawrence Lamb, another old "DeLeonite", like a good flunkie, turns over to the Lewis gang all the material property which belonged to over six hundred rank and file members who broke away from the Lewis machine and joined the Progressive Miners of America.

A. J. DeWitt, the secretary of the Springfield branch of the SLP wrote to his two brothers in Harco, Illinois, to come to Springfield and help break the P. M. A. His two brothers came to Springfield and got jobs as strikebreakers at one of the Peabody mines. Then one night after a so-called union meeting of the UMWA which was held in the wash-house at the mine and which was presided over by the mine superintendent and at which there was plenty of booze, the two brothers started out for their hotel in an automobile and on the hard road got into a wreck and both were killed. Truly, the Springfield SLP has become an gut filled full of a lot of excretion.

Pledge Solidarity at Cleveland Meet

Cleveland.—At a big demonstration called by the Unemployed Council on Market Square (West Side) today, workers protesting against Mayor Miller's "plan" for forced labor and demanding cash relief from the city-controlled Associated Charities, also echoed the cry for solidarity with the German proletariat faced with the attempt of the Fascist Hitler regime to exterminate their organizations, to suppress their military and to prepare Germany for a spearhead position in an imperialist aggression against the workers' fatherland—the USSR.

On the march to the Square and at the demonstration, prominent banners were displayed linking the struggle of the unemployed with the fight against German Fascism, with such slogans as: "In Cleveland Miller wants Forced Labor, in Germany Hitler!" "Long Live the International Solidarity of the German and American Workers against Forced Labor, against Hitler and Fascism!"

On the Square, after speeches by unemployed militants and party members, comrade Sam Gordon of the Left Opposition was asked by party workers and sympathizers to address the crowd. In a short, but impassioned speech, the comrade from the Left Opposition sounded the call for active support of the German proletariat in their desperate struggle against the Hitler hordes. He showed the relation between the struggle of the American unemployed and the German workers, pointing out the meaning of Hitler's coming into power, showing the danger of a Fascist German attack against the Soviet Union. Exposing the role of the yellow German social democracy in paving the road for Fascism he continued with an explanation of the need for the immediate establishment of a united front against the Hitler hordes which the Communist party alone can do by directly challenging the social democratic fakers to join in the fight, in this way showing the way out to the socialist workers and arousing their pressure against the leadership. He called upon the workers present to demand that the Communist party take this course and ended up with a cheer for the International solidarity of the working class in the struggle against hunger, war and Hitlerism. The speech was greeted with a good round of applause.

A march followed to the headquarters of the Associated Charities at which a Committee of unemployed presented demands.

—S. G.

All this recalls an incident. About a month before the recent national presidential election, the SLP called a mass meeting in Springfield. The members of the Left Opposition present at that meeting exposed these labor fakers as agents of the bosses. These same SLP fakers threatened to throw the members of the Left Opposition out of the meeting hall, because they insisted on their right to defend Communism. But the SLPers were prevented from doing this because of the militancy of the workers present. Since that meeting and this latest betrayal, the workers that were present at that meeting have become fully convinced that the position that the Left Opposition took against these labor fakers is correct.

—JOSEPH ANGELO.

ABERN AT BOSTON MEET

A mass meeting at which the German situation today will be analyzed and the reasons given for the Left Opposition demand for a united front to smash Hitler, is to be held in Boston on Sunday night, March 5, 1933, 8 P. M. at Belmont Hall, 150 Humbolt Ave., Roxbury, Mass. The meeting, under the auspices of the Boston branch of the League, will be addressed by Martin Abern, member of the National Committee of the organization, and by comrade Antoinette F. Komkow. All workers are urgently invited to attend the meeting and hear the standpoint of the Opposition.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabeck

Vol. VI, No. 11 (Whole No. 158)
Wednesday, February 22, 1933
Subscription rate: $2.00 per year,
Foreign $2.50. One cent a copy.

What Next
Vital Questions for the German Proletariat
by LEON TROTSKY
A penetrating Marxist analysis of the class dynamics and forces at work in the present situation. A burning indictment of the treacheries of the social democracy and the criminal blunders of the Stalinists. A work no Left wing worker and Communist can afford to neglect. One of the texts of the future.
192 Pages Cloth .65 Paper .35
Postage: .06 per copy extra

Works by Leon Trotsky

What Next?—Vital Questions for the German Proletariat Paper .35
Cloth .65
Communism and Syndicalism—On the Trade Union Question
Paper .15
Problems of the Development of the U. S. S. R. .15
The Spanish Revolution in Danger .15
PIONEER PUBLISHERS

Problems of the Chinese Revolution
450 pages Paper 1.00
Cloth 1.50
The Permanent Revolution
Paper .50
Cloth 1.00
Strategy of the World Revolution .25
Whither England? .75
Postage 1c extra per copy
84 East 10th Street, N. Y.

1 CENT
A COPY

THE MILITANT

Published 3 times a week, Monday,
Wednesday and Friday

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Workers of the World,
Unite!Published three weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1925 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879.
VOLUME VI, NO. 12 [WHOLE NO. 159] NEW YORK, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1933 PRICE 1 CENT

Leon Trotsky Analyzes German Situation

The Camp of Counter-Revolution

The shifts in government since Brüning's time show how rapid and hollow is the universal philosophy of Fascism (but and dried Fascism, national Fascism, social Fascism, Left social Fascism) which the Stalinists slap over everything and everybody, excepting themselves only. The upper crust of the possessors is much too small in numbers and much too hated by the people to be able to rule in their own name. They require a screen—the traditional monarchic ("Will of God"); the liberal-parliamentarian ("Sovereignty of the People"); the Bonapartist ("The Impartial Arbitrator"); or, finally, the Fascist ("The Anger of the People"). War and revolution have taken the monarchs from them. Thanks to the reformists, they have maintained themselves on the crutches of democracy, for fourteen years. When, under the pressure of class contradictions, the parliament split asunder, they attempted to hide behind the President's back. There came the chapter of Bonapartism, i. e., the bureaucratic-police government which is raised over society and which maintains itself on the relative equilibrium between the two opposing camps.

Passing through the transitional governments of Brüning and Papen, Bonapartism assumed its purest form in the person of General Schleicher—but only in order to disclose in him its insolvency. Hostile, doubtful, or alarmed, all classes viewed this enigmatical political figure that resembled nothing so much as a question mark with the epaulettes of a general. But the chief cause for Schleicher's failure, and, incidentally, for his preceding successes as well, lay not within himself; Bonapartism cannot attain stability so long as the camp of revolution and the camp of counter-revolution have not measured their forces in battle. Concurrently, the frightful industrial and agrarian crisis that hangs over the country like a nightmare does not facilitate Bonapartism tight-rope balancing. True, at first sight, the passivity of the proletariat facilitated in the highest degree the tasks of "The Social General". But, it turned out otherwise; precisely this passivity weakened the hoop of fear that binds together the possessing classes, bringing out into the open the antagonisms that tear their apart.

Economically, German rural economy leads a parasitic existence, and it is a heavy ball and chain on the feet of industry. But the concentrated social basis of the industrial bourgeoisie turns into political necessity the preservation of "national" agriculture, i. e., the class of junkers and rich farmers along with all the strata that are dependent on them for this policy. Bismarck laid the foundation, finally binding the agrarians and the industrialists together by military victories, gold indemnity, high profits and the fear of the proletariat. But Bismarck's time have passed into eternity. Present-day Germany spends from victories but from defeat. France pays her no indemnity but she pays France. Decaying capitalism supplies no profits opens up no perspectives. Nothing cements together the possessing classes except their fear of the workers. However, the German proletariat—for which its leadership is entirely to blame—remained paralyzed in the most critical period—and the antagonisms between the possessing classes broke out into the open. With the Left camp eventually passive the "Social General" fell under the blows from the Right.

When this happened, the upper crust of the possessing class took its governmental balance: on the debit side—a split in their own rank; among the assets—an octogenarian Field Marshall. What more remained? Nothing, except for Hugenberg. Whereas Schleicher personified the unadulterated idea of Bonapartism, Hugenberg personifies in himself the chemically pure idea of property. The General was coy, refusing to reply to the question which is better, Capitalism or Socialism; Hugenberg makes no bones about announcing that there is nothing better than an East Prussian Junker on the throne. The most rooted, the most ponderous, and the most entrenched form of property is private ownership of land. If economically, German agriculture is the kept whore of industry, then it is most proper that no other than Hugenberg himself should be at the head of the political struggle of the possessors against the people. Thus the regime of the supreme judge of arbitration, who was raised above all classes and parties, has been brought smack up to the supremacy of the German Nationalist Party, the most self-seeking and greedy clique of proprietors. Hugenberg's government represents the quintessence of social parasitism. But just because of this, when it came, necessary, in its pure state, it became impossible. Hugenberg requires a screen. As yet today, he cannot hide behind the mantle of a Kaiser, and he is forced to resort to the brown shirt of the Nazi. If one cannot obtain the sanction of the highest heavenly powers

German Class Struggle and Collaboration with U.S.S.R.

What is to be Germany's road out of the crisis? To this fundamental question every party representing the leadership of a distinct class must be prepared with its own answer. Since the contradiction between the isolated proletarian state, the Soviet Union, and the capitalist world is the outstanding contradiction of the present stage of decadent capitalism, the attitude of the German parties to Soviet Russia is an integral part of their position as answers to the basic questions of German economy.

The attitude of the big bourgeoisie is clear. It wants to reduce Soviet Russia to the state of a colony, through the usual processes of imperialist conquest and exploitation. They want to continue the line of the pre-war Hohenzollern regime, which led to colonial expansion in Africa and China, and to hardly less concealed subjugation of Turkey and part of the Balkans. Since Germany reached its first working agreement with the Soviet Union at Rapallo in 1922, the big bourgeoisie has been steadily pushing forward the idea that Germany must compensate itself in Russia for the losses of its pre-war colonies, and the expulsion of German capital from Turkey.

Preparing for War

This means war—of this there can be no doubt. Therefore the German big bourgeoisie is preparing to break up all organizations and forces within Germany which would be capable of resisting a war of imperialist aggression. The social democracy can no longer be counted upon to carry the working masses with it as it did in 1914. Not that the leadership of the social democracy is any better now than it was then. The existence of the Communist party, its mass following, and the enormous organization, at present which it would exert upon the social democratic masses in the event of war, make it unsafe for the big bourgeoisie to count too much on the support of the social democracy. It must crush social democracy as well as Communism if it is to prepare for the next war.

For this reason the big bourgeoisie is being forced to form a close alliance with Fascism, representing the mass organization of the petty bourgeoisie against the proletariat. Not only must it form an alliance, but also put itself at the head of it, and in practice carry through its program as that of Fascism.

The petty bourgeoisie in imperialist conquest, its own program,

First Article After Hitler's Appointment as Chancellor
By Leon Trotsky

through the monarchy for the property owners, there remains the sanction of the reactionary and unbridled rabble.

The investiture of Hitler with power served a two-fold purpose: first, to decorate the camarilla of property owners with the leaders of "national movement"; and secondly, to place the fighting forces of Fascism at the direct disposal of the proprietors.

It was not with a light heart that the high and mighty clique made a deal with the madolous Fascists. There are too many, all too many fists behind the unbridled upstarts; and therein lies the dangerous side of the brown allies, but in that very same thing is also their fundamental, more exactly, their only advantage. And this is the advantage that decides, for such are the times now that there is no guaranteeing property except with fists. There is no way of getting around without the Nazis. But it is likewise impossible to give over to them the actual power; today, the threat on the part of the proletariat is not so laette that the higher-ups should consciously provoke a civil war with problematic outcome. It is to this new stage in the development of the social crisis in Germany that the new governmental combination corresponds, in which the military and economic posts remain in the hands of the masters, while the pious are assigned decorative or second rate posts. The unofficial but all the more actual function of the Fascist ministers is to bind the revolution with terror. However, the oppression and annihilation of the proletariat vanguard the Fascists must achieve not otherwise than within the limits set by the representatives of the agrarians and the industrialists. Such is the plan. But how will its execution turn out?

The government of Hugenberg-Hitler includes within itself a complex system of contradictions; between the traditional representatives of large capital, on the one side, and the patented representatives of the reactionary petty bourgeoisie, on the other. The combination is extremely unstable. In its present form it will not long endure. What will come in its place in the event of its collapse? In view of the fact that the chief instruments of power are not in Hitler's hands, and since the latter has simply demonstrated that alongside with the hatred to the proletariat there is deeply ingrained in his bone the awe before the possessing classes and their institutions, it is impossible to exclude absolutely the possibility that the social tops, in case of a break with the Nazis, will attempt once again to take to the road of presidential Bonapartism. However, the probability of such a variation, which, theretofore, could have only an episodic character, is extremely slight. Incommensurably much more probable is the further development of the crisis to the side of Fascism. Hitler, in the character of Chancellor, is such a direct and open challenge addressed to the proletariat that a mass reaction, in the worst instance, a series of disparate reactions, is absolutely inevitable. And this will suffice to push the Fascists into the foremost places, displacing their much too corrupt mentors. But on one condition: if the Fascists themselves remain on their feet.

The assumption of power by Hitler is undoubtedly a fearful blow for the working class. But this is still not a decisive or an irrevocable defeat. The enemy, who might have been crushed while he was only striving upwards, has occupied today an entire series of commanding posts. This allows his side a great advantage, but there has been no battle as yet. The occupation of advantageous positions decides nothing by itself, what do decide are the living forces.

The Reichswehr and the police, the Steel Helmets, and the storm troops of the Nazis represent in themselves three independent "armies" in the service of the possessing classes. But from the very meaning of the present governmental combination these armies are not united within a single hand. The Reichswehr, to say nothing of the Steel Helmets, is not in Hitler's hands. His own armed forces represent a problematic quality which is still to be verified. His millions of reserves are human rubbish. In order to conquer complete power Hitler must provoke a semblance of civil war (he, himself, is afraid of an out and out civil war). His substantial colleagues in the ministry at whose disposal are the Reichswehr and the Steel Helmets would prefer to strangle the proletariat by "peaceful" measures. They are much less inclined to provoke a minor civil war for fear of a big one. In this manner there remains no short distance from the ministry headed by the Fascist Chancellor to the complete victory of Fascism. This means that there is still time at the disposal of the "revolutionary" camp. How much? It cannot be computed beforehand. Battles alone can measure its duration.

The Camp of the Proletariat

When the official Communist party states that the social democracy is the most improved prop of bourgeois domination, it repeats only that idea which served as the point of departure for the organization of the Third International. When the bourgeoisie invites it to lower, the social democracy casts its vote for the capitalist regime. The social democracy tolerates (suffers) any bourgeois government but tolerates the social democracy, but even when completely discarded from power, the social democracy continues to support bourgeois society, recommending to the workers that they conserve their forces for battles, for which it is prepared never to issue a call. By paralyzing the revolutionary energy of the proletariat, the social democracy provides bourgeois society with an opportunity to remain alive under conditions of living, thus turning Fascism into a political necessity. The very call of Hitler to power emanates from the Hohenzollern Field Marshal who had been elected by the votes of social democratic workers! The political chain that leads from Weis to Hitler has quite a personal character which can be gathered from inspection. There can be no two views upon this score among Marxists. But what's in question is not how to expand the political situation but how to transform it in a revolutionary manner.

The guilt of the Stalinist bureaucracy is not in that it is "irreconcilable" is politically impotent. From the fact that Bolshevism under the leadership of Lenin proved victorious in Russia, the Stalinist bureaucracy deduces that it is the " duty " of the German proletariat to rally around Thaelmann. Its ultimatum reads,—"unless the German workers accept beforehand, a priori, and without reservations, the Communist leadership they must not so much as dare think of serious battles. The Stalinists express it differently. But all oratorical tricks, restrictions, and crumpled tricks exchange nothing in the fundamental character of bureaucratic ultimatum, which helped the social democracy to bribe Germany to Hitler.

The history of the German working class from 1914 represents the most tragic page of modern history. What shocking betrayals by its historical party, the social democracy! What ineptitude and what impotence of its revolutionary wing! But there is no need for going so far back. For the past two or three years of the Fascist upsurge, the policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy represented in itself nothing else but a chain of crimes which literally saved reformism, and thereby prepared for the subsequent successes of Fascism. At this moment, when the enemy has

(Continued on Page 2)

OPEN FORUM

CRISIS IN MANCHURIA DANGER OF A NEW WORLD WAR

Speaker:

JACK WEBER

Friday, February 24, 8 P. M.

126 East 16th Street,

ADMISSION: 15c

N. Y. Br. Communist League of America (Opposition)

Japan Defies Other Imperialist Powers in China

If the world had any illusions that Japanese imperialism had actually relinquished its twenty-one demands forced on China in 1915 those illusions are by now completely dispelled. Japan is staking out on subjugating China before that nation can be unified, whether under bourgeois or proletarian hegemony. If the bourgeoisie succeeded in unifying China with the aid of American dollars it would mean the ultimate "peaceful penetration" of U. S. finance-capital and the ousting of both England and Japan from the Chinese market.

English capitalism, badly damaged by the war and no longer dominant on the international market, is not averse to seeing America become involved in war with Japan. Hence the attitude of the English government, reflected in the London Times, that the League has "done its part" and now countries with interests in the Far East (read America) "must themselves decide what policy is most likely to conduce to the early restoration of peaceful conditions," etc. However the English press is likely to change its tune as soon as British interests in China are themselves directly threatened.

This threat to the other imperialist powers will not be long in the making. For the Japanese generals, following a schedule prepared long in advance, have given due notice of their next move; namely, an advance on Peiping and Tientsin. Of course, this new invasion is purely "defensive"; to oust Chang Hsueh-liang from North China so that his armies cannot attack the Japanese, and also to protect Japanese nationals from the reeling Jehol armies. As the comments on the League's Report made public by the Japanese diplomats state: "Japan is responsible for the maintenance of peace and order in the Far East" and she "intends to deal with China with the utmost good-will and forbearance!"

Meantime Jehol is being "mopped up" with Manchuria completely in the hands of the Japanese army, perhaps the profits of the South Manchuria Railroad will be once more restored. Those profits began to decline alarmingly when the Chinese, with the aid of British and American capital, particularly the latter, began to build a unified network of railroads running North and South through Manchuria from Aigun on the Amur to Huiyao. This city on the sea coast south of Dairen, was intended by the Chinese to compete with that Japanese terminal of the South Manchuria Railroad. Although the Chinese network was never completed, it had already begun to divert traffic from the Japanese-controlled road. The Japanese protested at this outrageous violation of "treaties" with China in which the latter had promised not to build parallel, competing railroads to the South Manchurian. This was one of the more immediate causes of the present campaign. The Japanese generals made it their first objective to gain the important strategic railroads on the Chinese territory. Thus they have just occupied Peipiao, a railroad in the Jehol coal mining region. Huiyao will divert no more trade from Dairen if the Japanese can help it.

But the Japanese army will not stop even in Peiping and Tientsin it all goes well. The twenty-one demands attempted to set up four spheres of influence: Shantung, Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, Liaoning leased territory, and the Yangtze iron region. The campaign may yet develop along the Yangtze River.

But a campaign South of the great wall will inevitably involve international "incidents". Just as the murder of Captain Nakamura gave the Japs a pretext in 1931, so some similar occurrence may precipitate the world war that is brewing. For Japan this will not come unexpectedly. Having asked on the frontispiece of a new book "The Army Manual", under a picture of the yawning muzzle of a great American field-piece, "Which way is this pointed?" Japanese imperialism answers by laying in supplies of cotton and iron for a long war. With Manchuria to supply food and ore the generals say they can "face the world".

—J. W.

BRONX MASS What the Left Opposition Stands For MEETING

Sponsor: Communist League of America (Opposition)

SPEAKERS:
James P. Cannon
Max ShachtmanHollywood Gardens
896 Prospect Ave.
Sunday, February 26, at 2:30 P. M.
ADMISSION: 15c

Leon Trotsky Analyzes the Hitler Regime

(Continued from Page 1)

already occupied important commanding posts, the question inevitably arises. Is it not too late to call for a regrouping of forces in order to repel the enemy? But first we must answer here another question, what does "too late" mean in the given instance? Must this be understood to mean that even the boldest turn about face on the road of revolutionary policy is no longer capable of radically changing the correlation of hope of achieving the necessary turn? These are two different questions.

Is It Too Late to Act?

We have in effect given an answer to the first already in what was said above. Even under the most favorable conditions for Hitler, he requires a long number of months—and what critical months!—in order to establish the hegemony of Fascism. If one takes into consideration the sharpness of the economic and political situation, the ominous character of the danger the proletariat is right up against, the frightful alarm of the workers, their numerousness, their exasperation, the presence of experienced fighting elements in their ranks, and the incomparable capacity of the German workers for organization and discipline, then the answer is clear: during those months which are needed by the Fascists to break down internal and external barriers and to entrench their dictatorship, the proletariat under correct leadership can come to power two and three times over again.

Two and a half years ago the Left Opposition insistently proposed that all the institutions and organizations of the Communist party from the Central Executive Committee to the smallest provincial nucleus should immediately turn to the parallel social democratic organizations with the concrete proposal for mutual action against the impending suppression of proletarian democracy. Had a struggle against the Nazis been built on this basis Hitler would not be Chancellor today and the Communist party would be occupying the leading place within the working class. But there is no return to the past. The consequences of the mistakes that have been perpetrated have succeeded in becoming political facts and compose at present a part of the objective background. The situation must be taken as it has been composed. It never need have been as bad as it is. But it is not hopeless. A political turn about face—but a real one, a bold one, an open one, one that is thought out from all sides—can completely save the situation and open up the road to victory.

Hitler needs time. A revival of trade and industry, should such become a fact, would not at all signify the strengthening of Fascism against the proletariat. Under the least betterment of the conjuncture, capital, which has been famished for profits, will feel the acute need for peace in the factories, and this will at once shift the correlation of forces in favor of the workers. In order that the economic struggle should from the very first steps merge with the political struggle, it is urgent that the Communists be at their posts, i. e., in the factories and within the trade unions. The social democratic leaders have announced that they desire an accord with Communist workers. Very well. Let the 300,000 workers who belong to the Red Trade Union Organization catch up the reforms on their own words and turn to the General German Trade Union Federation with the proposal to enter immediately into the free trade unions, as a fraction. One such step will bring a change into the self-esteem of the workers, and therefore into the entire political background.

Turn Depends On Party

However, is the turn itself possible? That is what the task reduces itself to at the present moment. The vulgarizers of Marx, gravitating towards fatalism, observe as a rule nothing on the political arena save objective causes. But, in effect, the more acute the class struggle becomes, the closer it draws to a catastrophe, the more it draws the key to the entire situation is entrusted to a given party and its leadership. At this moment the question is posed in this manner: if in its time the Stalinist bureaucracy has kept hard fast on the road of dullylitted ultimatum, despite the pressure of, say, ten political atmospheres, will it be capable of withstanding a pressure ten times greater, of one hundred atmospheres?

But maybe the masses will go into action of themselves, overturning the barriers of the apparatus after the manner in which the transport strike broke out in Berlin in November 1932? There is no ground, of course, for considering the spontaneous movement of the masses as being excluded. In order to become effective it must on this occasion surpass the Berlin strike, a hundred or two hundred-fold in scope. The German proletariat is sufficiently powerful in order to sweep into such a movement even if hindered from above. But spontaneous movements are precisely so called because they originate without leadership. Whereas, our question touches the problem of what the party should do in order to give impetus to the mass movement, in order to help it attain its sweep, in order to take its place at the head and guarantee it victory.

Today's telegrams have brought news of a general strike in Luebeck in answer to the arrest of a social democratic official. This fact, if true, does not in the least rehabilitate the social democratic bureaucracy. But it inevitably condemns the Stalinists along with their theory of social Fascism. Only the development and the sharpening of the antagonism between the National Socialists and the social democrats can bring the Communists, after all the mistakes that were made, from out of isolation and open the road to revolution. But one must not hinder but assist this process which is ingrained in the logic of the relations themselves. The road to this lies through the bold policy of a united front.

Elections Can Decide

Nothing. The March elections, at which the social democracy will clutch in order to paralyze the energy of the workers will in themselves resolve nothing, of course. If no major events occur up to the elections, which will transfer the question to another plane, then the Communist party should automatically receive an increase in votes. It will be incomprehensibly greater if the Communist party will this very day take upon itself the initiative for a defensive united front. Yes, today the matters deal with defense! But the Communist party can ruin it.

self, if, in the wake of the social democracy, even though in different terms, it turns its electioneering agitation into a purely parliamentary hullabaloo. Into a means of distracting the attention of the masses from their present impotence and from their preparing for the defense. The bold policy of the united front is at this moment the only correct basis for the election campaign as well.

Again, are there enough forces in the Communist party for the turn? Will the Communist workers have enough energy and resolution to help the pressure of one hundred atmospheric skulls? No matter how offensive such an acknowledgment may be, that is precisely how the question is posed at present.

The above lines were written when we learned, after the inevitable delay, from the German newspapers, that Moscow at last has given the signal for alarm to the C. R. C. of the German Communist Party: the time has come for an accord with the social democracy. No confirmation of this news is at hand but it smacks of the truth: ever, the Stalinist bureaucracy commands a turn about face only after the events deal the working class (in the U. S. S. R. in China, in England, in Germany) a blow on the head. When the Fascist Chancellor trains his machine guns at the temples of the proletariat bound hand and foot, then and only then is the presidium of the Comintern struck with an inspiration: the time has come to untie the ropes.

Party Democracy and the Turn

It goes without saying that the Left Opposition will take its stand with both feet on the ground of this belated acknowledgment and will try to squeeze from it everything that is possible for the victory of the proletariat. But while so doing, the Left Opposition will not for a moment forget that the turn of the Comintern is a purely empirical zigzag, performed in the due course of panic. The individuals who equated social democracy with Fascism are capable in the process of struggle with Fascism, of going over into idealization of the social democracy. We must vigilantly keep watch to preserve the complete political independence of Communism; to coordinate the blows organizationally, but not to mix the banners; to maintain absolute loyalty in our relations with our ally but to keep an eye on him, as our enemy of tomorrow.

Should the Stalinist faction really put in effect the turn that is dictated by every phase of the situation, the Left Opposition, of course, will take its place in the common ranks of battle. But the confidence of the masses in this turn will be all the greater the more democratically it is achieved. The Stalinist speeches or manifestos of the Central Executive Committee are much too little for the present sweep of events. What is needed is the voice of the party. There is no other way of returning the confidence of the party in itself, and of deepening the confidence of the workers in the party! The Congress must take place within two or three weeks, not later than the opening of the Reichstag (if the Reichstag will be convened at all).

The program of action is clear and simple: Immediate proposal to all social democratic organizations from top to bottom of a united defensive front.

Immediate proposal to the General German Trade Union Federation to admit the Red Trade Union Organization into the trade unions.

Immediate preparation for an emergency party congress.

What is at stake is the head of the working class, the head of the Communist International and let us not forget it—the head of the Soviet Republic! In the light of recent events and against the background of the tragic mistakes of the Stalinists, the anecdote of the capitalization of Well and others is comparable to the appearance of clowns in Shakespeare's tragedies. These gentlemen announced yesterday that (a) the danger of Fascism is liquidated, thanks to the correct policy of the party; (b) the policy of the united front, permissible in the past, from now on is become counter-revolutionary. On the day after these confessions Hitler assumed power and Stalin announced that the policy of the united front, counter-revolutionary in the past, from now on becomes necessary.

Prinkipo, February 5, 1933.

—L. TROTSKY.

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Oppositionist Beaten In Cleveland

Cleveland.—The readers of the Militant will recall the activity of the Left Opposition in Cleveland on the German situation and the speech comrade Sam Gordon made at the party demonstration in that city on the danger of German Fascism to the American workers. This has struck fear into the hearts of the local bureaucrats who have replied in their well known educational manner—by slugging Gordon.

Since the Left Opposition German campaign began Gordon has been active in spreading his ideas, massing contacts with party members and distributing Militants and recently leading advertising comrade Hugo Oehler's meeting in Cleveland. The bureaucrats began to take alarm. Gordon was spotted by the bureaucrats at the City Central Council of the Unemployed on Saturday. All regular procedure was broken off and a sudden attack was launched against the Left Opposition organizer. Misquotations from the Militant, personal attacks and all the rest of the Stalinist rignarole were bandied about in order to expel comrade Gordon from the meeting. He was not given the chance to defend himself on the pretext that he would be given the opportunity to do so, at the black committee, where he is a member. The motion for excluding Gordon from the meeting passed. About five comrades the only ones who knew (Gordon, abstained from voting. Anna (Indiana local bureaucrat, and Leonard Patterson, Negro organizer from N. Y. led this railroad action.

On Monday, February 20, the black committee met. The meeting was crowded with strange faces—obviously called down by the Stalinists. A functionary, Berndt, started the meeting by attacking Gordon without any delay. First the usual boka about the "counter-revolutionary Trotskyists" then Gordon is not "just a rank and file Trotskyist". Finally the real reason for the bureaucrats' venom—Gordon had raised the German issue and had spoiled (how?) their pure and simple Hitler demonstration, raised the workers out of the rut of Stalinist opportunism and awakened them to international consciousness.

Gordon was given no chance to defend himself. Upon a signal from the party bureaucrat (Berndt), a young careerist by the name of Fred Dell pounced upon him, unleashing a premeditated attack from all sides. Comrade Gordon was absolutely alone in the affray. His nose was battered and his eye blacked. In this manner are the Cleveland bureaucrats educating the proletariat.

This great apprehension on the part of the party bureaucrats indicates the great interest of the party members in Germany and the platform of the Left Opposition on this question. A good crowd is expected for comrade Oehler's meeting.

—C. G.

Youngstown Proposes United Front

Youngstown.—The following self-explanatory letter has been sent by the local branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) to the Communist party organization:

Section Committee, Communist Party of the U. S. A., Youngstown Section.

Dear comrades: The party press has recently come out with news of a turn toward a broader united front in the unemployed movement. The Daily Worker of January 11 writes: "The need for united action of all workers of all shades of opinion and of whatever organization is desperate." Everyone of us will agree with this. The especially poor showing that we all made when the hospitalization question on the budget came up before the City Council shows that this turn is even more desperately needed in Youngstown. We welcome this turn as a great step forward for the party and the whole working class movement and hope to see it carried through successfully here as well.

Since the Unemployed Councils in this city are in particularly poor shape, it becomes first of all necessary to rebuild these. We know that the party forces are small and as yet inadequate for the great amount of work at hand. We know that every available force is needed for the work. To this end we offer every one of our small group to carry out any task assigned to us in this desperately needed united action of the unemployed, in a disciplined manner. Of course, we reserve for ourselves the right of criticism, but we declare ourselves always ready to come to an agreement with you as to the time and place of criticism.

Every hand is needed. That is clear to all. We of the Left Opposition are only a small group in this town, to be sure. But we want to be and can be of aid to the party in this important turn. It is up to you to decide.

Hoping that you will give this letter the serious attention it requires.

With Communist greetings,

Youngstown Branch, Communist League of America

(Opposition)

Secretary,

WHY IS THE COMINTERN STILL SILENT ABOUT THE ACUTE CRISIS IN GERMANY?

Musteites Exclude Oppositionists

Youngstown.—Recent Youngstown papers reported that efforts were being made to unite the Austintown and Smith Township Unemployment Leagues with the local Independent Club as the first step in a movement to create a large city-county unemployed organization. A meeting to consider these plans was to be held at the Independent Club on Sunday afternoon. But newspaper publicity had apparently frightened some of the I. C. members, for whoever possessed the keys to the club headquarters did not appear.

The few members of the I. C. present were invited to attend a discussion meeting at the home of one of the League officers, Perkins. The latter had failed to answer an inquiry of mine dated November 21, so I knew that if possible he and other followers of Muste would endeavor to exclude me from this meeting as Musteites have done with other Communists in St. Louis and other cities. But I managed to go to Perkins' home with a militant worker from the I. C. Before entering, Perkins asked my name. I gave it to him and he immediately seemed perplexed and said, "A Communist?" Before I had more than answered him the militant worker asked, "What's your name?" "What's wrong? Are you afraid of Communists?" They are just like other workers." "No," Perkins replied. "But I don't like the dirty lies they tell in the Daily Worker!" So we followed him into his home.

While we were finding places Perkins must have put the leading League members wise to my identity. For the meeting had no more than started with a roll call of those present than the chairman asked me pointedly, "And whom do you represent?" "The Communist League of America and a group of sympathetic unemployed workers," I replied. He grunted, cleared his throat and announced, "You men know our attitude in regard to Communists. What shall we do?" And then followed one of the emptiest discussions I have ever heard as to why I should be excluded from the meeting. The Daily Worker told lies; Communists vilified Muste. They couldn't work with Communists, and besides this was a "secret" meeting and they didn't want a word of it to get in the Communist press.

I tried to point out the general difference between a Stalinist C. P. member and a Left Oppositionist, and refused to be held responsible for the mistakes of the Party. As a worker interested in the building of a united unemployed council I asked to be permitted to remain. Some fool grabbed on to the word "council" and exclaimed, "You want to build a Council and we want to build a League! We can't agree!" The discussion proceeded fruitlessly; they were determined to get me out at all costs. So I proposed that a vote be taken as to whether or not I could remain without voice or vote. I was told that I couldn't make a motion and some one moved that I be invited to attend an open meeting of the Austintown League on Wednesday night. This passed, and a motion to evict me was made and voted upon. The members of the I. C. were bewildered, but two sturdy workers both voted and spoke in favor of my remaining even though I was a Communist. The League functionaries all voted against it and succeeded in getting a few rank-and-file inexperienced members of the I. C. to vote with them. Perkins and his clique wouldn't permit me to leave the house until I had given up a list of names which I had copied down during the roll call.

But we will get in contact with the workers in the Leagues and the I. C. in spite of such nonsensical intrigues and obstructions! We will help to build a united local unemployed organization that will function with workers' democracy and not according to the whims of bureaucrats. FOR A UNITED FRONT OF ALL UNEMPLOYED WORKERS! —N.

ABERN SPEAKS AT WILKES-BARRE MEETING

Martin Abern, member of the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition) will speak under the auspices of the League at Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, on Sunday, February 26, 1933, 2 P. M. on the crisis in Germany and the standpoint of the Left Opposition. Admission to the meeting is free and all miners and other workers are cordially invited to attend. The meeting will be held at the Workers' Circle Hall, 69 S. Hancock Street.

Oehler Tour:

Davenport, Iowa—Feb. 27
Des Moines, Iowa—Feb. 27
Kansas City, Mo.—March 1, 2, 3
St. Louis, Mo.—March 4, 5
Illinois Coal Fields—March 6, etc.

ABERN AT BOSTON MEET

A mass meeting at which the German situation today will be analyzed and the reasons given for the Left Opposition demand for a united front to smash Hitler, is to be held in Boston on Sunday night, March 5, 1933, 8 P. M. at Belmont Hall, 150 Humbolt Ave., Roxbury, Mass. The meeting under the auspices of the Boston branch of the League, will be addressed by Martin Abern, member of the National Committee of the organization, and by comrade Antoinette F. Konikow. All workers are urged to attend the meeting and hear the standpoint of the Opposition.

Militant Correspondent Reports On Events After Hitler Took Power

(Continued from Page 1)

ocrats, Reichs-banner people and trade unionists instinctively unite and fight shoulder to shoulder. Numerous are the accounts brought by our comrades of workers everywhere asking: "Why do we not build the united front?" Liberal bourgeois papers reprint letters from workers posing this question. But—and that is the crucial question—the leaders, Stalinists, Socialists and trade union bureaucrats refuse to realize the united front from organization to organization.

The workers are still sadly bewildered. But it is not so in the ranks of the bourgeoisie. The present situation found them quite well prepared. The forces on that side of the barricade were not taken by surprise. They decided quickly for the Fascists precisely out of fear of the growing misery and discontent of the working masses. Economic developments within the Reich continued to present their protracted black picture. Unemployment was on the increase. The official figures of January 15, 1933 gives the numbers of 5,985,000. This accounts only for those officially registered who receive unemployment insurance, but not of those not registered or the part time workers. In reality the total figure is much higher. The emergency decrees had already helped to reduce further the working class level and increase its discontent. The Communists had gained in the last elections. The Schleicher government, evidently despite its good intentions, could not consolidate the Bonapartist regime. Its prospects of maintaining capitalist rule and avoid civil war diminished. The bourgeoisie called upon its last reserve—the Fascist hordes.

Against the dangers of a growing working class threat the capitalist solidarity extends beyond the national boundaries, not even taking cognizance of such distinctions as former "mortal enemies." And so also in this case, the change in Germany produced its echo in France. The "Paris Solr" of Jan. 31 commented: "Hitler in power! This news would a few months ago have produced the effects of a bombshell. Today it reverberates but there is not much detonation." This bourgeois paper is fully conscious that the imperialist road now leads through the Fascist regime toward a united front against the growing threat of the German revolutionary workers. True, there is the Versailles Treaty standing a little in the way. But such matters can be adjusted to enable the German and the French bourgeoisie to work hand in hand, in this manner the first steps toward forging the spearhead of the army of intervention against the U. S. S. R. are being taken. That is the very heart of the question of a possible final conquest of power in Germany by the Fascist bandits. Finally that much at least seems to have dawned upon l'Humanite (the French party daily). It did mention that danger in one of its recent issues. But in face of that recognition it demonstrates its utter helplessness, its paralysis.

Stunned by the false concepts of Stalinism it cannot show the way, it can only repeat what in view of the concrete needs of the situation becomes a mere abstract commonplace. It repeats the slogans of downing Fascism and of the united front from below.

The Issue is Now to Be Settled by the Means of Civil War

The Fascist government does not at all hide its objectives. Hitler's very first ministerial address to the public declared: "The greatest actual danger is the danger of Communism... Bolshevism would spell disaster not only to Germany but to the entire world. The national government is determined to defend Germany against Bolshevism, against anarchy and against the scourge of the class struggle." That the C. P. is the vanguard of the working class the Fascist leaders fully understand. But the full scope of their objectives became further clarified by Hitler's election campaign address of February 8. He declared in his usual bravado style, but now with a more sinister suaveness: "I shall not resign my function until I am fully convinced that my mission is accomplished. That within less than ten years Marxism shall no longer exist in Germany." Such are the threats of extermination of every section of every vestige of the working class movement, for in their usage of the term Marxism the Fascists include the Social Democrats and even the reformist trade unions. Yes, precisely that is the mission of Fascism. German capitalism, the weakest link in the imperialist chain, in the throes of the decay of the system as a whole, has decided to settle the issue by civil war in the hope of thereby accomplishing the destruction of the working class movement in order to maintain itself in power. For that aim Fascism is the instrument.

Quick in its actions—one has followed the other in rapid succession—in the attempt it is making to consolidate its position, the Reichstag was dissolved without even being permitted the opportunity to convene. The new elections will take place, not after the usual sixty days, but within one month, on March 5. The important positions under the ministry of the interior, particularly those of chiefs of police, are being filled by Fascists. Several issues of the Rote Fahne have been seized. A press censorship decree is issued giving the chief of police the authority to prohibit any paper which advocates a general strike, or strikes of any kind, or prints what is called "deliberate misinformation." All city councils (German municipalities) throughout Prussia are dissolved and new elections set for March 12. The Prussian state government, the Braun cabinet, which had only a shadow existence, is unconcernedly and completely dissolved, prepare the road for dissolution of the Landtag despite its majority opposition. Even bourgeois democracy due to its flexibility, still has a certain usefulness—Dissolve by decrees, get new elections with all the machinery of suppression in readiness so as to obtain a voting strength which can furnish a mask of authority. That is to be preparatory to the final coup d'Etat. These are parts of the immediate strategy of the Fascist government. (To be continued)

—ARNE SVABECK.

CHICAGO COMPLAINS!

Rebecca Sacherow of the Chicago branch writes: "Our German campaign is going over big here. The Militants are eagerly awaited by all of us here and all our sympathizers are offering to help distribute them where they will do the most good. Last night we had a general membership meeting of all our sympathetic organizations and everyone volunteered to do his share. One party member was present and he took a bundle of the papers for distribution within the party." "We were," adds Sacherow, "short of our requirements; Chicago is complaining that it doesn't receive enough copies of the 'new Militant' to go around!"

Pose Problem of Germany-U.S.S.R.

(Continued from Page 1)

United States. The foreign trade interests of the agrarian-capitalist bloc are, in a limited way, being subordinated to its interest in protecting the productivity of domestic capitalist agriculture.

Line of Big Bourgeoisie

But this policy can be carried through only in a limited way; the broad policy runs in the exactly opposite direction. The whole line of the big bourgeoisie since the crisis has been to stimulate foreign trade at the expense of the internal market. The methods of high prices and low wages, of dumping in export market, of liberal credits backed up by the Reichsbank and in the last analysis by the taxing power of the government—these have resulted in a surplus of exports over imports since the crisis, while during the period of stabilization German imports were higher than its exports. In other words, German capitalism has looked for the way out of the crisis abroad, while decrying the petty bourgeois masses with the Fascist slogan of self-sufficiency. Foreign markets are being closed tighter by tariff walls and other restrictions. The last unspoken plank in its platform is the imperialist subjugation and exploitation of Russia.

The social democracy attempts to hold on the bourgeois "internationalism" of the manufacturer and banker-liberals. The removal of restrictions on foreign trade, development of markets abroad without political interference, unhampered movement of capital over national boundaries—the typical

New York Courses Start

AMERICAN LABOR LEADERS—THE MOVEMENTS AND THE MEN

On Sunday, February 26, comrade Cannon will give the first of his series of eight popular lectures for workers. The title of the first lecture is Terence V. Powderly, the "Grand Master Workman" of the Knights of Labor. The following lectures will take place on successive Sundays. Lectures may be taken singly if comrades are unable to take the series. The course is $1. Single lectures are $15.

HISTORY AND PRINCIPLES OF THE LEFT OPPOSITION

On Wednesday, March 1, comrade Schachtman will give the second lecture in the series on the History and Principles of the L. O. The title of this lecture is "The German October and the Fifth Congress of the Comintern". These lectures also may be taken singly by those who missed the first lecture. Single lectures are 15 cents.

—B. J. FIELD

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swaback
Vol. VI, No. 12 (Whole No. 159)
Friday, February 24, 1933
Subscription rate: $2.00 per year, Foreign $2.50. One cent a copy.

Works by Leon Trotsky

What Next—Vital Questions for the German Proletariat	Problems of the Chinese Revolution
Paper .35	450 pages Paper 1.00
Cloth .65	Cloth 1.50
Communism and Syndicalism—On the Trade Union Question	The Permanent Revolution
.15	Paper .50
Problems of the Development of the U. S. S. R.	Strategy of the World Revolution
.15	Cloth 1.00
The Spanish Revolution in Danger	Whither England?
.15	.75
	Postage 1c extra per copy
	94 East 10th Street, N. Y.

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

OFF THE PRESS!

Two New Pamphlets By

LEON TROTSKY

Soviet Economy In Danger

In Defense of the Russian Revolution

72 Pages 10 cents 48 Pages 5 cents
3 for twenty-five cents Minimum number per order 5
Postage 1c extra per copy
PIONEER PUBLISHERS
84 East 10th Street, New York

1 CENT
A COPY

THE MILITANT

Published 3 times a week, Monday,
Wednesday and Friday

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Workers of the World,
Unite!Published three weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 13 [WHOLE NO. 160] NEW YORK, MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1933 PRICE 1 CENTHitlerites Shut Down Headquarters of The Communist Party
Why Does the Communist International Continue Its Silence About Germany?

Differing from their Italian prototypes only in the greater speed with which they are succeeding in consolidating their power, the Nazi gangs in Germany have now additional measures to insure execution of their murder program against the working class. After having instructed the police to suppress all anti-Fascist meetings with the aid of the brown-shirts and Steel Helmets, a new order has been issued by Captain Goering, the Prussian Minister of the Interior, commanding the arming of the Nazi storm troops and the members of the Steel Helmets for use as "auxiliary police." The training of the latter has already begun and they have already been officially reviewed by government authorities as part of the government's forces. The suppression of meetings of Communists and social democrats is being carried out without the slightest camouflage. In Berlin, the social democratic Reichsbanner has been forbidden to hold a demonstration "on the ground that it would collide with Nazi arrangements." In Altona, the Nazi storm troops are to parade openly in the streets, this time not merely with the official approval of the authorities, and under police protection, but the formal announcement that the most rigorous measures will be adopted to suppress any counter-demonstration. At Cologne—a socialist meetings "are to be permitted only if no Communists happen to be present." In this Fascist order is contained an acknowledgement of the fear experienced by the Nazis when faced with the prospect of united demonstrations and action of the German working class, both of the Communist and social democratic camp.

In addition, the radio, a government monopoly from which the Communists were excluded in the past, has now been allocated entirely for the use of the Nazis and the Nationalists, so that not only the Communists and the social democrats are to be deprived of its use, but even the Catholic Center party and the People's party are headed by the deceased Dr. Stresemann.

Party Quarters Raided
To top this record of a couple of days of intensive Fascist activity in Germany, it is to be noted the fact that not only was the huge Communist party meeting in Berlin broken up by the police, but the headquarters of the Communist party, the famous Karl Liebknecht House, was broken into by squads of police, literature and other party property confiscated, and a police-guard left in charge of the building. One day later (Saturday), the police announced the discovery "of subterranean vaults containing tons of treasonable printed matter and labyrinths of underground passages providing secret exits." One of the first moves following this raid, has been the government order forbidding the Communist party to collect money publicly. All these moves are only the flank attacks, the preliminary skirmishes, in the plan of battle of the Fascists to harass and weaken the party sufficiently to be able to give it the final blow that will drive it out of existence.

It is not to these events, however, that the center of attention should be directed. What the Fascists are now doing and what they intend to do tomorrow—that we were able to forecast without difficulty and we did forecast it. Far exceeding this aspect of the German situation in importance, remains the state of paralysis of the proletariat which makes possible the murderous advance of the Nazis. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Times, Mr. Frederick T. H. H. H., an observer who reveals an unusually lucid understanding of what is happening, makes the following comment on the government order to arm the Fascists to help the police against the Left wing: "The growing excesses of the Left radicals are purely mythical. Neither the Communists nor any other radicals of the Left have dared to make the slightest demonstration for weeks. Virtually all 'excesses' and disturbances have originated from Nazi sources."

In a word, the Fascists are not merely very much on the offensive, but the working class has not yet even organized its defensive!

ities are encountering at the present time less resistance than did Mussolini's Black Shirts either before their march on Rome or after the installation of the Fascists in power!

The working class, which is showing such an unmistakable desire to initiate its own movement to crush the Nazis, is being kept in a state of impotence from two sides. The social democracy, at a moment when the proletariat should be aroused and every instrument of struggle put into its hands, is dragging the working class just at the time when the Fascist knife is descending upon its body.

Stampfer's Interview
In the interview with the press, the editor of the central organ of the social democracy, Herr Friedrich Stampfer declared, according to the Heald-Tribune (2-24-1933), that his party was not very much worried about the possibilities enjoyed by the Fascists or remaining long in power. From his interview, we extract the following items, characteristically significant!

"The German working class is not very strong as an attacking force, but put it on the defensive and it is unconquerable. . . . On July 20 last, when the Braun government was deposed in Prussia, the Communists urged us to call a general strike. We were convinced, however, that a general strike would lead inevitably to a conflict which could only end to the disadvantage of the workers. . . . We socialists cannot be revolutionary, or militant, at the present time, as many for-ign observers seem to expect. The time may come, indeed, and that before long, when things will come to a head and the trade unions will cease to put up passively with political developments, as they have for two generations, but the socialists will not accelerate such a development. . . . The endeavors of the socialist leaders to organize even a temporary tactical alliance with the Communists have failed completely ification due to the march of history, this is still the doctrine of the League. It must be recalled further that the first League Peace Conference was initiated by another 'czar, Nicholas II, in 1908; that finally, the League was constituted by the most reactionary imperialist diplomats after a robbers' world war. China is still in the throes of revolution, halted but for a moment. The League and the Japanese call this intense and profound movement of the Chinese masses that is forcing the submerged workers and peasants out to the stage of history, nothing but "chaos" and "anarchy." In reality this places China outside the pale of the League. And that is the complete tenor of Matsukawa's speech of withdrawal from the League. That speech is the declaration, if it still needed any declaration, that it is "open season" for the robber imperialists in China. "That (lack of unity) is one reason why China is unable to defend itself today, unable to rid itself as it desires, of foreign military forces stationed in and about the treaty ports and of foreign vessels that ply the Yangtze River. These forces are not only Japanese. They are British, American, French, Italian and others. . . . Less than five years ago a portion of these forces, British and American, had to go into action at Nanking." In short, says Japan, let us make no bones about the matter, we are doing precisely what you would like to do, but we are doing it first.

The attitude of British capitalism at this juncture is superbly stated by Winston Churchill who tells America that she will have to pull her own chestnuts out of the fire. "Even if foreign countries engaged in a war there is no reason why a wise, honorable foreign policy should not enable us to stand aside." That is to say let the U. S.

Militant Sales In Sharp Rise

The sales of the Militant in New York are mounting with unusual speed. The campaign of the Left Opposition on the German situation has encountered the greatest interest and support of any movement yet set on foot by us in this country. The previous issue of the Militant, containing the article on the German situation by comrade Trotsky, was sold on the streets, like the issues before it, by members and sympathizers of the League. In New York, we sold one thousand copies of this issue in one day, in addition to the copies which go regularly to subscribers and those which are bought on the newsstands. Comrade Spithals sold 181 copies; Sammy Sold 179; comrade Levine, a sympathizer, sold 170 copies and Jim Carr sold upwards of a hundred. In addition fifty copies of the latest pamphlet by Leon Trotsky, containing his Copenhagen speech in defense of the Russian Revolution, were also sold on the streets in one day at five cents a copy. The whole New York branch of the League is enthusiastically and successfully engaged in the drive, with every comrade at his post.

Two Negroes Lynched In South

White women in the South are not protected against those who "prey on women," such as the famous "Lone Wolf" who operated in New Orleans the same as he did in New York, any more than women are protected anywhere else under capitalism. They are forced into prostitution with low wages, unemployment, general economic uncertainty even more than in many other places. Certainly their outlook for "happy marriages" is very slim. The truth is that the evil of the South is a thin cloak that covers not only the bosses' excuses for lynching Negroes, but also the worst kind of degeneration of women in the Southern States.

Not only are Negro women outside the pale of Southern chivalry; they are often the victims of this weapon the bosses wield, and one inquires of those who maintain this sex angle, if lynching is to protect white women from being raped by Negroes, why are Negro women also the victims of this weapon? In 1710 there were 50,000 Negroes in the country; 220,000 in 1750; 740,000 at the time of the Revolutionary War, of which 700,000 were

Japan Widens Attack On North China

The hypocrisy of the imperialist League of Nations in its attitude towards China stands recorded in every speech of the "statesmen." The League was founded for the maintenance of a robbers' status quo and for the crushing of the Soviet Union, these two aims going necessarily hand in hand. It is worth recalling for a moment the historic antecedents of the present League.

Its prototype was the Holy Alliance initiated by Czar Alexander. The clearest expression of that alliance was given in the Protocol of Troppau in 1820. The advance of "democracy" had not yet made mandatory care in the wording of documents. That protocol stated, "If owing to such (revolutions), immediate danger threatens other states, the Powers bind themselves by peaceful means, or if need be by arms, to bring back the guilty state to the bosom of the Great Alliance." With the necessary modification due to the march of history, this is still the doctrine of the League. It must be recalled further that the first League Peace Conference was initiated by another 'czar, Nicholas II, in 1908; that finally, the League was constituted by the most reactionary imperialist diplomats after a robbers' world war. China is still in the throes of revolution, halted but for a moment. The League and the Japanese call this intense and profound movement of the Chinese masses that is forcing the submerged workers and peasants out to the stage of history, nothing but "chaos" and "anarchy." In reality this places China outside the pale of the League. And that is the complete tenor of Matsukawa's speech of withdrawal from the League. That speech is the declaration, if it still needed any declaration, that it is "open season" for the robber imperialists in China. "That (lack of unity) is one reason why China is unable to defend itself today, unable to rid itself as it desires, of foreign military forces stationed in and about the treaty ports and of foreign vessels that ply the Yangtze River. These forces are not only Japanese. They are British, American, French, Italian and others. . . . Less than five years ago a portion of these forces, British and American, had to go into action at Nanking." In short, says Japan, let us make no bones about the matter, we are doing precisely what you would like to do, but we are doing it first.

The attitude of British capitalism at this juncture is superbly stated by Winston Churchill who tells America that she will have to pull her own chestnuts out of the fire. "Even if foreign countries engaged in a war there is no reason why a wise, honorable foreign policy should not enable us to stand aside." That is to say let the U. S.

Militant Sales In Sharp Rise

The sales of the Militant in New York are mounting with unusual speed. The campaign of the Left Opposition on the German situation has encountered the greatest interest and support of any movement yet set on foot by us in this country. The previous issue of the Militant, containing the article on the German situation by comrade Trotsky, was sold on the streets, like the issues before it, by members and sympathizers of the League. In New York, we sold one thousand copies of this issue in one day, in addition to the copies which go regularly to subscribers and those which are bought on the newsstands. Comrade Spithals sold 181 copies; Sammy Sold 179; comrade Levine, a sympathizer, sold 170 copies and Jim Carr sold upwards of a hundred. In addition fifty copies of the latest pamphlet by Leon Trotsky, containing his Copenhagen speech in defense of the Russian Revolution, were also sold on the streets in one day at five cents a copy. The whole New York branch of the League is enthusiastically and successfully engaged in the drive, with every comrade at his post.

Two Negroes Lynched In South

White women in the South are not protected against those who "prey on women," such as the famous "Lone Wolf" who operated in New Orleans the same as he did in New York, any more than women are protected anywhere else under capitalism. They are forced into prostitution with low wages, unemployment, general economic uncertainty even more than in many other places. Certainly their outlook for "happy marriages" is very slim. The truth is that the evil of the South is a thin cloak that covers not only the bosses' excuses for lynching Negroes, but also the worst kind of degeneration of women in the Southern States.

Not only are Negro women outside the pale of Southern chivalry; they are often the victims of this weapon the bosses wield, and one inquires of those who maintain this sex angle, if lynching is to protect white women from being raped by Negroes, why are Negro women also the victims of this weapon? In 1710 there were 50,000 Negroes in the country; 220,000 in 1750; 740,000 at the time of the Revolutionary War, of which 700,000 were and Japan ruin each other while we keep the arena from becoming a free-for-all. Churchill goes on, after stating that the League cannot force England into a war: "The first duty of British statesmen is to make sure we are not drawn into any war, and it is only their second (!) duty to try to prevent others from fighting or to try to end their quarrels. . . . We do not want to throw away our old friendship with Japan." Churchill tells Japan plainly that she has a perfectly free hand in China so far as England is concerned. In fact he compares directly what Japan is doing in China with what England herself is engaged in carrying out in India. And indeed the comparison is most apt!

Japan Widens Attack On North China

Meantime the League begins a new tune on the arms embargo. Such an embargo would hardly be worth the paper to record it. No

(Continued on Page 2)

Intensive Exploitation of the German Workers is Prospect Under Hitler

The present situation in German economy presents new contradictions every day. Unemployment has been increasing, and the export surplus has fallen to the lowest figure in three years; yet prices of commodities and securities keep advancing. The latter fact is especially interesting as it shows the opinion which the German bourgeoisie itself has, and is willing to back with money, in the speculative markets, of its immediate future.

The contradictions reflect the fact that Germany is now in a critical position, in which the next few weeks or months may impress their character on years to come. If Hitler wins full power, he will open a period of the most intensive exploitation of German labor with a view to squeezing out the maximum profits possible under the situation of the general world crisis of capitalism intensified by a cyclical crisis of unheard-of intensity. If an effective united front between Communist and reformist workers through their organizations is formed, it may well not only defeat Hitler and reestablish the rights of the workers under the bourgeois democracy of the Weimar republic, but sweep on beyond these limits and open a period of revolutionary crisis on the way to the seizure of power.

In such a transitional stage as the present in Germany, economic life reflects not only echoes of the immediately preceding past but anticipations of the new. The increase in unemployment reflects the

... We socialists realize that we have a formidable task ahead of us, but we do not view the situation in any spirit of depression or fatalism. Fascism stands no chance or gaining a foothold in a nation like Germany that has a certain level of political culture, owing to the resistance that will be forthcoming from the workers."

"That the socialist leaders 'cannot be revolutionary, or militant', and will not go, goes without saying. Exceeding even their fear of fascism, as their rear that the masses may unfold such a movement as will lead to the revolutionary victory of the proletariat, that the socialists have endeavored to make an alliance with the Communists, is just as much of a naïveté as is the contention of the socialists that they stand for the 'united front from below' with the workers, but not with the organizations. The social democrats have indeed demanded a 'united front' with the Communists, but on the little condition that the Communists dissolve themselves! What else is the meaning of the socialist demand that in this 'united front' the Communists refrain from criticism of the policies and conduct of the social democratic leaders?"

The current issue of the American socialist New Leader boasts that

(Continued on Page 2)

Intensive Exploitation of the German Workers is Prospect Under Hitler

The present situation in German economy presents new contradictions every day. Unemployment has been increasing, and the export surplus has fallen to the lowest figure in three years; yet prices of commodities and securities keep advancing. The latter fact is especially interesting as it shows the opinion which the German bourgeoisie itself has, and is willing to back with money, in the speculative markets, of its immediate future.

The contradictions reflect the fact that Germany is now in a critical position, in which the next few weeks or months may impress their character on years to come. If Hitler wins full power, he will open a period of the most intensive exploitation of German labor with a view to squeezing out the maximum profits possible under the situation of the general world crisis of capitalism intensified by a cyclical crisis of unheard-of intensity. If an effective united front between Communist and reformist workers through their organizations is formed, it may well not only defeat Hitler and reestablish the rights of the workers under the bourgeois democracy of the Weimar republic, but sweep on beyond these limits and open a period of revolutionary crisis on the way to the seizure of power.

In such a transitional stage as the present in Germany, economic life reflects not only echoes of the immediately preceding past but anticipations of the new. The increase in unemployment reflects the

7 Wounded In New Mine Battle

The State Senatorial Committee investigating conditions in the mines of southern Illinois received a new dose of the class struggle in a battle that occurred in a Peabody mine in Springfield which they were "investigating." Two members of the Progressive Miners Union, three scabs and two deputy sheriffs were injured in the skirmish that occurred at the Woodside and Capital mines when the labor-hating Peabody trust attempted to operate them with scab labor.

More than 1,000 miners of the P. M. A. were on hand at each mine when the strikebreakers were getting ready to leave for the day. The 100 scabs (according to the N. Y. Times report) were protected by a mob of company gunmen who immediately opened fire on the pickets. The miners who could not be subdued even by this murderous fusillade, retaliated by hurling chunks of coal and stone at the thugs and scabs. According to this same news report the miners, overwhelmed by these armed representatives of "law and order", withdrew their lines.

This is just another instance where the Peabody gang is making an attempt to circumvent the only

"the Communist masses are actually beginning to work with the socialists." Stampfer-Breitscheid words have thus taken a rear out of the book of Stalin-Leninism-Bolshevism. While the situation cries out for a united front from organization to organization, even the social democratic leaders and the socialist outcasts could not utter a word about the "united front from below."

Stampfer consoles the working class with the luxury that Germany is too cultured a land to allow Fascism to "gain a foothold" in it. The Italian social democrats more than 10 years ago also disarmed the masses by assuring them that in their country, the "cradle of modern civilization," the Fascist barbarians could not hope to "gain a foothold." And why not? Because the socialists will "resist." How? The joint manifesto of the social democratic party and German fraction gives us an idea of what this resistance will look like. While the latter are proceeding with their violent regime of terrorism, with fire and sword, with the utmost brutality and cynical unconcern for all the niceties of parliamentarism so cherished by the social democrats, the latter announce:

"We shall wage our struggle upon the basis of the Constitution. We shall defend the political and social rights of the people, established by the Constitution and by law." (New Leader, 2-25-1933.)

The program of the social democracy has the merit of clarity. We know what it is driving at; it aims to keep its record of treachery unimpaired. To talk about "struggle on the basis of the Constitution" at a time like this, is deliberately to surrender the German working class, bound and gagged, to the butchers of Fascism.

But if the social democracy has at least this merit, the same cannot be said about the Communist party. What is the party doing to mobilize the working class at this crucial, desperate hour? Nobody knows, least of all the Stalinist leaders! The official party press continues to report an incident here and another elsewhere about clashes between Communists and Fascists, but nobody can discern just what the policy of the party looks like. The hollow repetition of the slogan for the "united front from below"—signifies less than nothing. The Fascists are moving with seven league boots—the Communists, who should be in the vanguard of the movement to initiate the united front, are bewildered, confused and impotent. The observations of the bourgeois correspondent referred to above are, sadly enough, close to the terrible truth.

Stalinist Silence

The proletariat has not yet struck back at Fascism, and for this the Stalinists bear the main burden of responsibility. The program of the Left Opposition—for a united front of the Communist party with the social democracy and the trade unions—the former has rejected out of hand. Are they waiting until the German proletariat has been cut to pieces before they decide to act? That is the question and that is how it must be put.

And above everything else, we repeat our question:

WHY IS THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL SILENT ABOUT THE EVENTS IN GERMANY? WHY DOESN'T THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL DO ITS ELEMENTARY DUTY AND SPEAK OUT? WHY DOESN'T IT GIVE COUNSEL TO THE GERMAN PROLETARIAT AT THIS DESPERATE MOMENT OF CRISIS? WHY DOESN'T IT CALL UPON THE INTERNATIONAL WORKING CLASS FOR PROLETARIAN SOLIDARITY WITH THE GERMAN MASSES?

For the Communist International, the "general staff of the world revolution", to persist in its silence now—IS A CRIME!

For the Communist worker to be quiet while such a crime is being committed—IS TO MAKE HIMSELF AN ACCOMPLICE TO IT!

Louder and louder must rise the cry: The Communist International must speak out! It must demand the united front of the German working class! It must set in motion the machinery that will crush Hitlerism! It must stop talking about "defending the Soviet Union", and actually defend it on its most threatened front: Germany.

—G. C. Sunday, Feb. 26, 1933. —M. S.

BROWNSVILLE
MASS MEETING

«The CRISIS IN GERMANY»

Sponsored by Communist League of America (Opposition)

Speaker:
MAX SHACHTMAN
Editor of The MilitantLabor Lyceum
SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 2 P. M.
219 SACKMAN ST., Bklyn N. Y.
ADMISSION 15 Cents

Tardy Acknowledgement

In the Izvestia, official Soviet government organ, of April 10, 1932, Karl Radek wrote an article proposing an alliance with American imperialism against Japan. Two days later, the statement of the Daily Worker, in enthusiastic salute to Radek's proposal, defined the columns of this Communist paper with a rather chauvinistic editorial. "This proposal," it said, "means a new step in the peace policy of the Soviet Union." In the Militant of April 16, 1932, we wrote that the editorial, "completely devoid of a breath of proletarian revolutionism, is one of the most disgraceful pieces of cynical flattery with chauvinism that has ever appeared in the Communist movement." The Daily Worker, entirely consistent with the theory of socialism in one country, which means in practice the abandonment of every revolutionary principle in the alleged interests of defending the Soviet Union from military attack, picks up the Radek thread with all its implications elaborated upon even more shamelessly. Taking Radek's cue, the editorial writer proceeds to address himself to the American ruling class in order to show it that its best imperialist interests lie in a break with Japan and an alliance with the Soviets. "Now the party's demand for the expulsion of all Japanese diplomatic representatives from the U. S. becomes entirely clear."

For these sharp but entirely justified strictures upon the Stalinist politicians, we were at that time subjected to the vilest abuse. The ritualistic abjuration—"counter-revolutionists, enemies of the Soviet Union, social-fascists, renegades"—were spat out at us from every party tribune. Even the little Lovestone sect came rushing out of obscurity to give the Stalinists a "theoretical" foundation for their policy, equipped with all the trappings of a few Lenin quotations violently divorced from their context.

Ten months have passed since that dispute and we are now in a position to cast a balance—and what a balance! In the Draft Resolution for the Eighth Convention of the American party (Daily Worker, 2-1-1933) we learn with considerable astonishment and not a little gratification that:

"Extremely grave errors were committed by the Party when the robber attack of the Japanese imperialist armies in Manchuria placed the question of war before the American Party in a sharper and more real form than ever before. . . . While the Party correctly perceived that the contradictions between rival imperialisms must be utilized to the utmost by the revolutionary party, yet an inexcusably incorrect application of the correct principle was made in adopting for a period a conciliatory attitude towards the speculations of the bourgeois correspondents (What do you mean 'bourgeois correspondents'? And Radek?—) about a possible 'alliance' between the U. S. and USSR, against Japan" (Daily Worker, April 12), and by failure to distinguish between the correct Leninist utilization of antagonisms by a proletariat in possession of State power and the different forms such utilization by Communist parties in capitalist countries must take. . . . The incorrect application of the utilization of the contradictions between the imperialist powers tended to weaken our struggle against American imperialism. The campaign suffered further from a certain narrowing down of the mass movement because the Party mistakenly adopted as Party slogans those which were not the slogans of the conscious vanguard of the proletarian masses, but rather the slogans which express the unripe-revolutionary moods of the masses that are only now growing toward revolutionary consciousness. (False!) They were and are, right now, the slogans of the military chauvinist wing of the American bourgeoisie. . . . slogans to which the Party must give conditional support but not put forward in its own name ('Expel the Japanese imperialist representatives,' etc.)."

Confused and unprincipled as is even this piece of "self-criticism" (and the least of its aims is to cover up the traces for the Moscow Stalinists), it is nevertheless a shameless acknowledgment that the criticism leveled against the Stalinists by the Militant was more than a little justified. We have no doubt that now, in view of the fact that we have been proved correct beyond dispute, the Stalinists will make up for it by multiplying their violent attacks upon the Left Opposition.—S.

The Jap Attack

(Continued from Page 1)

government that wished to do so (and the munitions makers of all countries are most eager to get going) would be prevented from winking at slight "irregularities" that meant good business. Right now both England and France are supplying munitions to Japan at top speed. Nor do we will the American Guggenheims hesitate for one moment in shipping vast quantities of nitrates from Chile—enough for a prolonged war with America if that war breaks out. An arms embargo would be merely another scrap of paper.

Opinions have been freely expressed that Japan will shortly find herself in dire financial straits. This is not true in the immediate sense stated. So long as France has vast hoards of unused gold, Japan will secure all the financing it needs from the great money-lender of Europe. Particularly is this true because France furnishes as much as does Japan the main part of the ultimate source of the reactionary French from Annam and South China. The rub will come for Japan when the debts fall due, when its internal shakiness becomes accentuated by desperate efforts at more intense exploitation of its workers and peasants. The cost of living rises to stupendous heights in Japan while real wages fall. The strict Japanese censorship screens out the news of peasant riots and workers' strikes that are surface indications of the seething below. In the end it is the inescapable internal contradictions of Japanese economy that spell the doom of her imperialism. —J. W.

Opposition at St. Louis Meet

(Continued from Page 1)

position) and after some negative discussion by one or two Stalinists our program was unanimously adopted for consideration by the conference. In the floor discussion that followed all the points were carried unanimously. Briefly they were as follows:

1. United Front Program
2. Immediate Relief—concretized by the Unemployed Council's suggestions.
3. Unemployment Insurance at the expense of the employers and state government.
4. For the 6 hour day and the 5 day week with no reduction in pay.
5. For trade relations with and the extension of credits to the Soviet Union, as a means of unemployment relief for American workers and for drawing the American and Russian workers into closer relationship. For the recognition of the Soviet Union by the U. S. government.
6. The formation of a United Front Unemployment Conference committee consisting of one delegate from each organization which shall carry out the following instructions:

1. To mobilize the membership of all the organizations for a joint demonstration for immediate relief at the Citizens Committee on March 4.
2. To issue a call immediately for the second conference inviting all working class organizations to participate.
3. To organize the sending of speakers to the various organizations to urge the acceptance of the invitation and to explain the aims of the united front movement.
4. To issue a minimum of 20,000 leaflets to popularize the conference and its projected program.
5. To call upon each organization represented to hold a public meeting in support of the conference under its own auspices.
6. To organize a joint mass meeting of all organizations participating in the conference with representative speakers from each tendency.

The fight of the Opposition was completely victorious—and as the Worker-delegates went home our

Abern Speaks at Boston

A mass meeting at which the German situation today will be analyzed and the reasons given for the Left Opposition demand for a united front to smash Hitler, is to be held in Boston on Sunday night, March 5, 1933, 8 P. M. at Belmont Hall, 150 Humbolt Ave., Roxbury, Mass. The meeting, under the auspices of the Boston branch of the League, will be addressed by Martin Abern, member of the National Committee of the organization, and by comrade Antoinette F. Konikow. All workers are urgently invited to attend the meeting and hear the standpoint of the Opposition.

Lynch 2 Negroes

(Continued from Page 1)

centered on isolated plantations of the South; and 1,500,000 in 1920. During all these two centuries charges of rape against Negroes were unknown although there were ample opportunity for commission of such crimes. ("Rope & Ragot" by Walter White)

With the few exceptions of Abolitionists and those Negro slaves who were intelligent and courageous enough to seek freedom through influencing others, lynchings were out of the question, when the victims represented a cash value, when the worker was the property of his master, when chattel slavery was not an institution. It was only when lynchings could be used to subject Negroes for the purpose of extracting profits for the new masters that lynching became an institution, that is to say, lynching is a capitalist institution used by the capitalists to protect their interests, their profits, their social order.

The aim of Nash, if the lynchings got the man they were after, was to get money. He took the hunkier to the bank for that purpose. How often the bankers steal thousands and millions of dollars from the workers! George Jeter of Alkon likewise was after appropriating property. —GEO. SAUL.

300 Hear Opposition in Toronto

Toronto.—The great interest of the workers in the position of the Left Opposition in the German crisis was shown in the meeting held in Toronto.

Although no leaflet was issued and only the meagerest form of advertisement appeared less than two days before the meeting due to the difficult conditions that exist about 800 workers packed literally every inch of sitting and standing accommodation, workers stood outside in the hallway to listen while many had to be turned away, so great was the attraction and interest of the workers in the German situation.

A real international spirit pervaded the meeting despite the silly interruptions from a small number of Y. C. Lers who insisted on making a public exhibition of their political bankruptcy. Most of the Y. C. Lers responded sympathetically to our viewpoint by listening attentively to the speakers and after the meeting purchased the Militant and fraternized with our comrades.

Comrades J. MacDonald and M. Spector were the principal speakers. Comrade MacDonald gave the workers an opportunity to compare the position taken by the Communist in the German revolution when Lenin was alive with the position of the present international under the Stalin leadership. Comrade Spector traced the German events and the revolutionary possibilities which had opened up after the collapse of the monarchy to the present day.

Both speakers pointed out the significance of the present German events for the world revolutionary movement and for the Soviet Union. Although Fascism is in power it has not consolidated its position yet; the German proletariat is not yet defeated and the adoption by the Communist and its German section of the Leninist united front tactics will smash Fascism to smithereens. Rounds of applause greeted the remarks of the speakers. A resolution was then presented from the meeting demanding the repeal of Section 98 and the unconditional release of the eight Communist leaders and all other political prisoners. At this point the aforementioned small group began making interjections. Amidst the applause of the crowd the chairman announced all those in favor of the resolution stand up and the whole audience stood up on their feet.

The question period further exposed the shameful political education of the new Y. C. L. cadres. Every question under the sun except those that dealt with the most significant events in the international today was asked by this "group." When comrade Spector, in replying to the questions, asked why Stalin is silent on the German situation, the Stalinist "spokesman" replied amidst protest and laughter that "the (Stalin) was too busy building socialism in Russia."

In the discussion only one YCLer took the floor to reiterate the old demagoguery of the Stalinists. In the course of his ten minute speech he mentioned that the Left Opposition was afraid to give them the opportunity to reply to our arguments. The comrades of the Spartacus Youth Club immediately challenged the Y. C. L. "spokesman" to a public debate. This he promptly declined with the worn-out excuse that the question of "Trotskyism" had been liquidated and Y. C. L. was not a discussion circle. The fact of the matter is that at this very moment, under pressure of the Left Opposition, the question of "Trotskyism" has been reopened in all the Stalinist groups throughout greater Toronto. —Q

Scottsboro Conference Rejects United Front

Boston.—The long-delayed Mooney-Scottsboro conference was held in Boston on Sunday, February 19. The credentials committee reported representation from sixty organizations.

While brief reports were being given on the cases in question, the resolutions committee of nine, including one of the delegates from the Boston branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition), comrade Scherbet, was in session. After the "general" resolution was adopted a further resolution for a genuine united front conference is to be called at once was introduced by comrade Scherbet. It is noteworthy that although this resolution was defeated, it received the support of four of the nine delegates serving on the committee.

The discussion from the floor revealed how little the Stalinists have learned from the past and despite the many failures through their incorrect position on the united front, they are unwilling to make the necessary turn. A party member who is also a member of an A. F. of L. local brought out the point that in the attempt to invite A. F. of L. locals the call of the I.L.D. very often did not even reach the membership. This proved to his mind the correctness of further stressing the "united front from below." The official party representatives had nothing to say. Eva Weiner, pointed out in her report from the Left Opposition, comrade marks the incorrectness of the theory of a united front "from below" and showed that precisely because the call of the I. L. D. in the past did not reach the bulk of the membership under the reformist leadership, we must make a complete turn and invite the central bodies of all workers' organizations, thus putting the leadership to the wall. She showed clearly that the failure of the I. L. D. to organize the broadest united front in the Mooney case resulted in Mooney's latest call for the coming Chicago convention through the Molders' Committee. It was at this point that the party spokesman announced himself and after a typically Stalinist line of denunciation of the "agents interested in uniting with the misleaders of labor," called for an "honest united front from below."

Comrade Scherbet then spoke again briefly on the united front, explaining that while it is clear enough to the sixty delegates at this conference that the role of the reformist leadership means betrayal of the workers, we must not overlook the fact that thousands upon thousands of the workers still have confidence in their leaders, together with their following, and prove in action to the masses of workers who it is that sincerely represents their interests. Comrade Scherbet thereupon moved that the conference immediately call a second conference inviting the central bodies of all working class organizations, Socialist party, A. F. of L., Workmen's Circle, all Negro organizations, etc., etc., to unite with us in the struggle for freedom of the Scottsboro boys, Mooney and all other class war prisoners. And that leaflets be printed to this effect and widely distributed among the workers in order that mass pressure may be brought to bear on their leaders.

Conveniently enough, a substitute motion was made to proceed with the election of an action committee which shall decide on all further work.

It must be said in conclusion that this action committee must not work most seriously and at once. Realizing that mass pressure is the strongest weapon which will gain freedom from the nine Scottsboro boys and all other class war prisoners, the committee must stop making empty gestures about an "honest" united front "from below." This mass pressure can be brought about only through the broadest united front as outlined by the Left Opposition. In this work the Boston branch of the League pledges its entire and most energetic support. —C. S.

Mine Situation Told in Davenport

Davenport, Iowa.—A lecture was held Feb. 18, at Hibernal Hall, where about seventy-five workers attended to hear Gerry Allard, the leader of the coal miners in southern Illinois, describe the conditions of the miners and the reason for their fight against the Peabody Coal Company and the betrayers of the coal miners, John L. Lewis and his henchmen.

Allard gave a very enthusiastic picture of the heroic fight that the miners are putting up in southern Illinois. Comrade Allard showed conclusively that the miners knew what they had to face in the struggle. A discussion took place at which the leader of the local Stalinists made an attack on comrade Allard and his co-workers in southern Illinois. But comrade Allard in a very few words was able to annihilate the slanders attacks of the present party leadership amidst the enthusiastic applause of the audience.

Seventy-five workers attended this lecture despite the fact that there was three other big meetings in the city. The A. F. of L. particularly gave a special blow-out with free entertainment at the Grand Theater, though they knew that comrade Allard was to speak in the city.

After the meeting a party was held by our branch of the Left Opposition for comrade Allard with twenty to twenty-five workers present who stayed until after midnight. Everybody was enthusiastic about comrade Allard's visit.

The enthusiasm of comrade Allard was catching by the workers in spite of the small crowd. Many of the workers expressed their desire to form a relief committee to help the striking miners in spite of the unemployment here.

Greeks Rallied On German Crisis

On February 7 and 19 our Greek Workers Club "Protomagia" gave two lectures at the hall of the Amalgamated Food Workers Union 687-8th Ave., on the united front and the Fascist danger in Germany by comrades Pappas and Caidis.

At the first lecture the managing editor of the Emporos attempted with the assistance of 15-20 other Stalinists to stop the workers from entering the Hall. Seeing that their efforts were fruitless they decided to come in and listen themselves to the speaker. The hall was packed with more than 75 workers present. When the floor was thrown open for discussion comrade Caidis as chairman suggested that the floor be taken primarily by the opponents. The editor was forced to get up and speak for at least 10 minutes while our comrades appealed to the chair to extend his time for half an hour. This the chairman accepted and remarked that even half an hour is not enough for the presentation of the opponents' views and suggested to the Stalinists present to accept our challenge and debate with us any day and at any time. Many workers appealed for the unification of the clubs, "Spartacus" and "Protomagia," and they stated that a debate will be very useful for their enlightenment on the views of the Opposition and those of the Stalinists. The Stalinists preferred silence to an answer as to the debate. Following the 35 minutes of poor and unconvincing talk of the editor, other Stalinists spoke for an hour to prove to the workers their backwardness and their degeneration by making fun of comrade Caidis who after all did not suffer while in prison for 19 months but "came out of jail quite fat." Comrade Pappas answered to the point the weak arguments of the Stalinists, and concluded by also appealing for a debate. While the chairman was adjourning the meeting the Stalinist editor asked the floor to answer the demands of the workers for a debate, and when he took it instead of accepting or refusing it he hurled some epithets and run down to the street.

February 12th

The following Sunday we postponed our next lecture on Germany on account of the call for a united front by the party for the unemployed. Protomagia participated with 3 delegates, comrades Cornilias, James Gordon and Caidis. Comrade Gordon was unable to attend the conference because he was meeting at the same time with the Central Strike Committee of Politis-Fischer's. The Conference conducted its business in the same steam-rolling fashion as the other Stalinist conferences. Our delegates protested against this procedure and demanded that at least a minimum time be given to the delegates to discuss the resolutions that were submitted for ratification prior to their voting. They went ahead and passed it any way. Finally the floor was given for only five minutes to comrade Caidis who protested against the steam-rolling and pointed out that the six-hour day and five-day week must be included in the resolutions and also the long term credits to the Soviet Union and explained the necessity for the agitation of these demands. The chairman didn't allow him to proceed any further.

Then the Stalinists (they were the only ones present besides us that took the floor) forgot all about the united front for the unemployed Greek workers and began their usual slanders against the Opposition. The floor was refused to comrade Cornilias who was anxious to refute the Stalinists about the composition of our club Protomagia. Anyway, when the collection was taken, they didn't refuse the donation of Protomagia and the wild applause of the delegates considerably annoyed the Stalinists. They were forced to accept in the committee a member of Protomagia. But at the last meeting seeing that our club members began to penetrate the ranks of the unemployed, especially at the soup kitchen of St. Barbara where three of our comrades were elected as their delegates, decided to appeal to the Central Committee of the Unemployed Councils for their approval to removing our club from the united front.

Many misguided workers begin to see clearly that our warnings about the danger of the Right wing policies of the Stalinists were correct, because they are already serving to strengthen the prestige of the bankrupt clergy.

All these activities of Protomagia and those of the Greek Opposition annoy considerably the nerves of the Stalinists. For the last three weeks the Emporos carries a campaign of lies and slanders in a fashion that far exceeds that of the tabloids. But all these instead of serving their purposes reveal on the contrary to every thinking worker the depth of their degeneration. They especially complain about the wide distribution among the Greek workers of New York, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh, of Militants, Pali ton Taxodon, and Communistes, because they realize that once a large numbers of misinformed workers get a hold of our publications, it will open their eyes and will impose upon the Stalinists the discontinuation of their petty-bourgeois opportunism which they themselves, when forced to the wall, from time to time try to present to the workers as insignificant errors on their part.

—A. C.

Report Shows Fate of Germany Hangs In Balance; United Front Is Urgent

(Continued from last issue)

There need be no doubt that the millions of German workers who have definitely expressed their sympathy and support either for the Communist party or for the Socialist party instinctively feel that Fascism represents the Sword of Damocles hanging over their heads, threatening their organizations with destruction, threatening their even now miserable standard of living and threatening their very lives. There are examples every day of such an instinctive feeling. But compared to the immensity of the needs of the situation there is passivity. A dead hand of paralysis still holds the working class in its grasp. Its organizations are either unable or their leaders unwilling to act. At times it seems as if the paralysis and the passivity is breaking. Last Sunday the social-democrats called a demonstration at the Lustgarten in Berlin. It became a monster turnout. Otto Wels, after many radical phrases declared for a "non-aggression pact" with the Communists. It was only a further step to sabotage the genuine united front; but that declaration alone nevertheless expresses the increasing pressure for unity of action which these leaders feel upon them from their own mass following. Again yesterday afternoon, February 10, a gigantic funeral procession wound its way through Berlin to the cemetery of Friedrichsfelde in honor of the three class victims Berner, Kullatsh and Schultz, who were murdered by the brown shirted bandits. Despite the police prohibition over 100,000 workers marched through the streets. Without a united front being formally established the S. P., the Y. S. P., the Reichsbanner and the C. P. officials participated. The Reichsbanner spokesman appealed to the workers to join the Communist workers and for a united front of action. The Y. S. P. spokesman admonished his followers to make all possible sacrifice for the establishment of a fighting united front. Comrade Pieck, in the name of the C. P., called upon all the workers to join the united front. Yet the party fails to act, fails to organize the united front.

There are radiant rays of hope when one feels the throbs of such mighty marching columns. The broad shoulders of these husky German proletarians, within each row, almost touched one another, their faces were solemn but showed distinct determination. What a splendid picture of class solidarity. Power is expressed in these heavy footsteps.

Why Are the Strong Hands Paralyzed?

But the defeat of Fascism in Germany is an enormous task. Even such powerful demonstrations can only be the small beginnings. Why then are these strong hands paralyzed? That is the question of the position of the parties, of policy and of leadership. Never before has the treacherous role of the Socialist party bureaucracy been so clearly revealed as at this moment. Since their betrayal of the revolution in 1918 and their murder of the best working class fighters they have made a parliamentary shambles even out of their own party's social democratic aims in order to fully re-establish capitalism. Thus they prepared the road for Fascism. And in the development of this brown shirted menace they deliberately fostered the illusions that this would be only another affair to be conquered by ballots and to be conquered by the forces of the "iron front" including all the supporters of Hindenburg. They still speak in the name of this "iron front." As a matter of fact the social democrats are now all that is left of it. But, and that is important, millions of workers still follow these traitors, who only out of fear for their own hides simultaneously give lip service to the slogans of struggle against Fascism. Yet that is precisely the reason why the formation of the united front of the entire working class becomes the key to the situation which the Communist forces must take hold of. It is the means to defeat Fascism, it is the means to finally unmask the traitors. This the Left Opposition has demanded since the beginning of the Fascist menace. In this our small forces have attempted to show the way.

The Balance Sheet of Stalinism

The Communist workers, however, were also unprepared. They were lulled into a false underestimation of the sinister menace, into the false security that "We come after the Fascists." They were misdirected by the slogans of "national liberation" and of a "people's revolution." They were sharply divided from their class brothers by the false concepts of "social Fascism." They were split away in small sections from the mass organizations by the criminal policy of independent revolutionary trade unions. The position of the party leadership to date has represented a criminal capitulation in face of the existing menace. When Hitler received his nomination, it threw out the slogan of the general strike in a sort of bit or miss fashion and naturally the response was almost nil. The party leadership set up phantom united front organs. For example in Berlin on the fateful night of Jan. 30, a conference attended by more than 2,000 delegates convened to take measures against the Fascist danger. It listened to much oratory, decided to meet the next day to organize the general strike and collapsed. It represented in reality nobody outside of the party. The general strategy of these Stalinist leaders has since sunk to the level of isolated demonstrations, mass meetings, demonstrative strikes of one hour or two hours, one day in one smaller factory or small town, another day in another and in some places merely economic strikes against certain special measures. This strategy, or lack of strategy to be more exact, could only demonstrate the frightful weakness of the party position and particularly its separation from the workers in the industries. The party's own membership composition is about 80 percent unemployed. The party's inability to lead and to mobilize masses became sadly revealed. Such is the balance sheet to date of the party Stalinist leadership.

To be continued

—ARNE SWABECK.

Dark Prospect Under Hitler Rule

(Continued from Page 1)

force will attempt to carry through a third alternative; the still further forcing down of German wages to produce still lower costs and prices on its exported goods, which will make possible larger export surpluses. But the workers have already begun to resist in spite of the handicap of reformist domination. Wages cannot be cut materially further without smashing both social democratic and Communist organizations, political, trade union, and other; and only Fascism can do this job. On the other hand, effective resistance even on the economic arena means the nullification of the trade union organizations with the least possible delay; the revolutionary Red Trade Union Organization must merge with the reformist General German Trade Union Federation and the "free" organizations.

The Fascist-Bonapartist alliance showing its results in the new tariff legislation, which means that practically what we earn, hard of meat products, can enter the country. For the first time since the present crisis began, prices of farm products have advanced steeply, and have forced the general index of prices up. This means the alliance between the agrarians and the industrial capitalists.

The latter have been able, in the face of the crisis, to put through an increase of 22 percent in the price of export steel during the past month, in the expectation of closing arrangements for an international cartel including France, Belgium and Luxembourg as well as Germany. In this way the industrialists of the Rhine, Ruhr and Silesia expect, in collusion with "bated foreigners", to be able to carve out a bigger slice of the export market on the one hand, while striking down the resistance of the German worker to wage-cuts with the other, and enforcing a regime of super-exploitation based on political domination by naked brute force through Hitler's hands and the army, the police, and the Steel Helmet nationalist troops.

The German bourgeoisie is betting on its supporters. Stocks of iron, steel and coal companies have been making new high prices lately on the Berlin Stock Exchange. These companies will be among the first to benefit not only from war, but also from the re-armament of Germany which both Nazis and nationalists have inscribed on their program.

The fact that a boom is taking place in German stocks while the major world security markets are declining proves that what the speculators are betting on is not a general recovery in world economy, in which German because of its financial weakness would not be among the first to share. Their calculations are rather based on a special development within Germany, and that is the coming into power of Hitler.

Torn between fear, as the accumulated contradictions of the crisis continue to crush down upon it and the spectacular economic gamble of Papen's program collapses, and hope, that the still bigger gamble on Hitler will after all succeed, the German bourgeoisie has reached a point where only desperate measures will suffice it. It is willing to extend an unlimited credit in confidence and in resources to Hitler and his murderous rabble.

Only one thing can stop them—the closing-up of the ranks of labor and its steady march forward from immediate demands toward ultimate goal. No petty considerations of factional prestige must be permitted to interfere with the adoption of the sound and tested line which the Left Opposition has been advocating for years; and least of all at a time when the immediate economic situation, as well as the political regrouping of forces, show that Germany is balancing on the edge of the knife.

—B. J. FIELD.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabek

Monday, February 27, 1933
Vol. VI, No. 13 (Whole No. 160)
Subscription rate: $2.00 per year, Foreign $2.50. One cent a copy.

OFF THE PRESS!

Two New Pamphlets By

LEON TROTSKY

Soviet Economy

In Danger

72 Pages 10 cents

3 for twenty-five cents

In Defense of the Russian Revolution

48 Pages 5 cents

Minimum number per order 5

Postage 1c extra per copy

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York

1 CENT
A COPY

THE MILITANT

Published 3 times a week, Monday,
Wednesday and Friday

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Workers of the World,
Unite!

Published three weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 18th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879.

VOLUME VI, 14 [WHOLE NO. 161]

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1933

PRICE 1 CENT

Fascists Frame-Up The Communist Party

The Life and Death Question: Leninist United Front In Germany or Disaster!

"White terror and Red panic began in Germany today."

This is the way the astute capitalist correspondent of the New York Evening Post, H. R. Knickerbocker, begins his Berlin dispatch of February 28. Berlin is an armed camp, with armored cars and 13,000 rifle-armed police concentrated heavily in the working class quarters. A new decree has been issued providing for heavy penalties against those "who give false information for foreign publications," as well as against those who print such "false" information in the German press. The Rote Fahne, central organ of the German Communist Party, which appeared for one day after its previous suspension, has had its printing plant confiscated and, in addition, has been suspended by the government until April 15. An edition of the paper printed in Leipzig was confiscated, together with the truck that carried the copies to Berlin. All the socialist papers in East Prussia have been suppressed. Even liberal journals have been ordered suspended. A mass meeting of the social democratic party to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the death of Karl Marx, was dispersed by the police.

All these measures are part of a monstrous frame-up concocted by the Fascist butchers in control of the government. A fire of incendiary origin in the Reichstag building is being used as the pretext for delivering a mortal blow to the Communist party. Anybody who is even superficially acquainted with the theories and practices of the Communist party is sufficiently aware that arson is not in its program. That is a method of fighting practised almost exclusively by the Fascists. In the present instance, the frame-up is so flagrant that even the American correspondents in Berlin have not failed to comment adversely upon Hitler's crude attempt to crush the Communist party as a result of it.

"Why Communists should desire to burn down the empty Reichstag building on the eve of an election that their opponents declare to be unimportant in that it will not affect their retention of power," cables Birchall of the New York Times, "is one of the mysteries of the present situation." The press reports Knickerbocker, "will not be able even to point out ironically that the Nazis planned weeks ago to lay before President von Hindenburg evidence that the Reds were planning an uprising and that the burning of the Reichstag came on railroad schedule time for their

Another Complaint

"...We can put the campaign over in a big way but our hands are tied by insufficient papers.... Chicago is no village, you know. Our comrades are lined up to speak and debate in various organizations at the rate of one per week for the next week and this will require papers. In fact, we could easily dispose of 200 copies over our quota, but we must at least get our quota (535 copies). I think the campaign is going over much bigger than we expected and this has found us short. I mean as to the quantity of Militant per issue you are printing.... Why not print a larger number of the Militant and satisfy everybody, including the late literature agent of Chicago?... I got a severe headache when I took of the meetings we've had to pass up in the last week due to lack of papers."

—REBECCA SACHEROV.

The comrades in Toronto also write that the Militant sale and distribution is going over big, and ask that their bundle order be substantially increased.

CHICAGO MEETING

HITLER IN POWER!

International connections are now so strong that conditions and policies jump national boundaries. Reaction in Germany means the stimulation of reaction everywhere.

HEAR AN ANALYSIS OF THE RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN GERMANY FROM THE MARXIAN STANDPOINT

SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 3:00 P. M.
HOPKINS HALL, 426 West 63rd St.

Speakers:
Albert Grotzer, Communist League of America
ADMISSION 15c UNEMPLOYED FREE
Auspices, Militant Workers Club

BROWNSVILLE
MASS MEETING

«The CRISIS IN GERMANY»

Auspices: Communist League of America (Opposition)

Speaker:
MAX SHACHTMAN
Editor of The Militant

Labor Lyceum
SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 2 P. M.
219 SACRAMENT ST., Bldg. N. Y.
ADMISSION 15 Cents

purposes.... An eye-witness of the arrival of Chancellor Hitler at the burning Reichstag building last night reports his first exclamation to have been, "God grant this is the work of Communists."

An Agent Provocateur
The alleged incendiary, a certain Marinus van der Lubbe or Van der Ling, is supposed to be a member of the United Communist Party. The police "found" a membership card in his pocket when he was arrested. If there were nothing else to prove how crude is the frame-up, this fact would suffice. But in addition, the Communist Party of Holland has issued a statement showing that Van der Lubbe was expelled from the party 10 years ago as "a spy and an agent provocateur and that since then he has been a notorious anti-Communist agent."

However that may be, his "confession," which "implicated" not only Communists but Socialists (!) has become the pretext of the Nazis—who never needed much of a pretext—to order the arrest of every single Communist deputy of the Reichstag, one hundred of them. In this manner, they hope to deprive the party of every one of its leaders. At the same time, all Communist publications, placards and election material have been suppressed for four weeks, and all socialist publications and propaganda for two weeks—that is, until the wretched farce of the March 5 elections have long been passed.

The additional announcement that "the entire police force of Prussia has been mobilized. All furloughs have been recalled and for the first time Captain Goering has brought into action his recently created Nazi 'assistant police,' recruited from the storm troops"—is of tremendous significance. Hitler is leaving nothing to chance.

Students Strike in Protest

THOUSANDS OF STUDENTS DEMAND RESTORATION OF ACADEMIC RIGHTS

A total of 1500 students participated in strikes at City College, day and evening. At the same time half of the student body in New York University, about 2000, left classes in demonstrative protest against the suppression of their daily paper. Both strike movements were the results of a basic issue, that of academic freedom.

The strike at City grew out of the suspension of nineteen students, reported in a recent issue of the Militant. Early in the morning a group of fifty students gathered to carry out the demonstration, signal in the history of the college. During the course of the day, the number swelled to a thousand, many students joining the strikers as they paraded around the school building at 138th Street and Amsterdam Ave., and assembled around the school flag pole. A good number of those in the protesting ranks were students of other schools who had come down to show their solidarity with the striking militants.

A band of hoodlums, "defenders of the people," sought with disruptive "Americanism" to break the lines of the strikers around the

(Continued on Page 2)

He has already proclaimed his intention of maintaining the rule of Fascism regardless of the outcome of the March 5 elections. The Communist party, and to almost the same extent the social democracy, have had the maximum restrictions decreed against them so as to render their participation in the elections equivalent to no participation at all. On March 5, according to all indications, Hitler will not only openly declare arbitrary Fascist dictatorship without foundation in the Reichstag, but will have his police, augmented by the storm troops and armed to the teeth, concentrated in Berlin for armed defense of the coup d'Etat, and for smashing any resistance that may be offered by the Communists. In this connection, it should be remembered that right on the eve of Hitler's appointment, the Nazis mobilized in front of the Communist party headquarters—offering a sort of test of strength with the Reds. The party proved impotent to accept the challenge. The virtual suppression of the Communist party now is a second offer of a test of strength, preliminary to the next step to be taken by Hitler to consolidate the position of Fascism and to proceed with the extermination of the proletarian movement.

Will the Communist party take up the challenge? It would be criminal to conceal the fact that with its present policy, the party has wavered in the face of Hitler's murderous advance. The working class has not been mobilized either directly under its banner or under the banner of a united front movement initiated by the Communists. It is a fact, which we repeat here:

In his march to power in Italy, Mussolini encountered a far more energetic, militant, sanguinary resistance on the part of the proletariat—than Hitler has thus far encountered in Germany, where the working class movement is far stronger than it ever was in Italy, where the working class does not play its role on the background of a defeat, as in Italy, and where the Communist party is ten times as strong as it was in Italy in 1922.

To this fact should be added the following:

As we go to press, dispatches from Berlin declare:
More than eighty prisoners have been taken by the Fascists in Berlin alone, in connection with the new reign of terror launched by Hitler against the Communists. "Most of them were leaders of the Communist party."

In Hanover, one hundred and forty Communists have been arrested.
Similar reports are received from other parts of the country. The Socialist Vorwaerts has been raided, its morning edition confiscated, and its editors put under surveillance.
All Communist and socialist placards are being removed from the billboards, in accordance with the decree to suppress all Communist and socialist election propaganda for four and two weeks respectively.

The treacherous leadership of the social democracy, true to its role, has telegraphed to a very much amused Captain Goering, "deploring the emergency decrees and emphatically denying any complicity in the plot." The social democrats are still "fighting on the basis of the Constitution," while workers are being murdered and every Constitutional "guarantee" is being suspended.

Among the Communist prisoners, is the deputy, comrade Hermann Remmel, leader of the party and one of its most prominent spokesmen. Ernst Thaelmann, the outstanding party leader, is another of these reported arrested by the Fascists. Wilhelm Pieck, leader of the Berlin organization of the party and head of its faction in the dissolved Prussian Diet, is arrested, as is Ernst Torgler, Communist whip in the dissolved Reichstag.

Scores of less prominent leaders of the party are reported among those seized in the net by the Hitlerite thugs. All, or at least most of the prisoners, are being held incommunicado.
The Fascist have moved with lightning speed. Before formally suppressing the Communist party—which is their goal—the Fascists have suspended every Communist publication. That blow they dealt Monday. In addition, they aim to decapitate the party by imprisoning every one of its prominent leaders. That is the blow they have dealt today, Tuesday. Tomorrow, they intend to exterminate the whole party. The day after comes the whole working class and its every single one of its proletarian institutions and conquests.

The stage is set for the last act. Who will prevail? Hitler has the upper hand. The party is paralyzed—no other term can express its failure to arouse a genuine mass movement of resistance to Fascism.

We ask—we demand: For what is the party waiting before it acts? Why are the party leaders being allowed to play so light-heartedly with the life and death of the German proletariat? When will the call be issued for the united front of the working class?

Are the Stalinists waiting until the streets of Germany run red with the blood of an unprepared, disunited, demoralized working class? Are the Stalinists preparing to retreat without giving battle? Are they planning to organize the masses for struggle only after all the levers and weapons of power are completely in the hands of Hitler and his mercenaries?

In the eyes of every revolutionist, of every class conscious worker, the social democracy has been forever branded with the stigma of Cain. Its treachery is written in the blood of the workers it sent to fight in the World War for German imperialism, in the blood of the Spartacists, in the blood of the victims of Noske, Eisinger and Zaerichel. We do not look for leadership from those who have sold the proletariat for a mess of pottage in office. But to the Communist party and its captains, the proletariat has the right to demand leadership, bold and intelligent and timely. A terrific historical responsibility rests now on the shoulders of the leadership of the Communist International and the German Communist party. For whatever happens in the next period in Germany, the proletariat and its vanguard will hold this leadership directly responsible.

We speak solemnly and issue a solemn warning! Unless the party leadership, at this crucial hour, issues the call for the real united front, for the mobilization of the masses, the Fascists will march to power over the dead bodies of the militant German proletariat!

But if the program for the united front demanded by the Left Opposition is now adopted and put into effect immediately, the German proletariat will not only march in invincible ranks against the monster of Fascism, but in the battle to annihilate it, it will enter upon the high road to working class victory, to the triumph of the dictatorship of the proletariat!

Choose now! Now—and not tomorrow!

Unemployed Council then challenged the delegates of the L. O. to take the floor and defend their resolution. One of our delegates took the floor and pointed out that of all the speakers and all the resolutions no mention was made of the recognition of the Soviet Union. He also outlined our disagreement with the tactic of the "united front from below" also pointed out on the point of the recognition of the Soviet Union that the unemployed situation cannot be considered as an isolated problem and apart from general working class problems. Its objectives must be general working class objectives; its struggles part of the general working class struggles for the revolution.

Frankford, secretary of the Unemployed Councils came out for a united front with all workingmen's organizations. Johnstone, D. O. of the party, contradicted him and spoke in favor of a united front from below and used the term "social Fascism".

These gentlemen ruled the conference and in order to "save time" for their own propaganda the spokesmen of the committee appointed a certain Mr. Beardsley out of their midst as chairman. Our demand that all delegates from workers and political organizations be seated on the same grounds as the delegation from the S. P. and all our protest and proposals that the chairman should be elected from the floor were of no avail. Three of the protesting delegates were beaten up and forcibly put out of the hall. The floor then was given to Gerber followed by Algeron Lee and Finken, who between them with numerous interruptions entertained us for almost two hours. Gerber was the main speaker and pointed out the great evils the workers had to suffer in their struggle. He said even votes were stolen on them in the last election. He "forgot" all about what has happened in other countries such as Germany and England, where the Socialists got all their votes ever since 1918. Yet the betrayals of workers are not comparable with those in this country.

(Continued on Page 2)

Defend Opposition Stand In Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh. — The Unemployed Council of Allegheny County issued a call for a "united front" conference on Feb. 12 at Walton Hall. Our branch elected two delegates who were present at the conference. The hall was crowded to capacity. From the names that the credentials committee read, of the organizations delegated, one could see that as long as the Communist party leaders do not give up their slogan of the "united front from below" they will fail to rally the working class into mass action. The names mentioned were organizations such as the unemployed councils from each district in the city, outside the city, from surrounding towns, the Communist party, the ILL branches, NSL Pen and Hammer club and some fraternal organizations. These organizations would be present at such a conference without the call for a "united front" because they are already under the influence of the party. None of the AFL unions or socialist organizations was present. From listening to the speakers it could be seen that the majority of the leaders are still under the impression of the slogan of "social Fascism" and that is as much as you can expect from half truths.

Our resolution, mimeographed in a number of copies, was distributed to the delegates present. A copy of our resolution was given to the resolutions committee. The chairman of this committee, in his report, read the resolution adopted by the committee and also read our resolution which he proposed he rejected because all the points in it were already adopted by their resolution. The secretary of the

In the first year after Mussolini established the Fascist dictatorship in 1922, the Italian proletariat fought on a far wider scale, with much more energy and direction, with much greater success than the German proletariat is now fighting against Fascism before it has consolidated its power!

The reasons for this anomalous, intolerable situation are not far to seek. The social democracy is being allowed to play its treacherous role of delivering the working class bound hand and foot to the sacrificial altar of the Nazis. Those who are directly responsible for allowing the social democratic leadership to retain control over the party leaders who continue to reject the only means whereby the German masses can be mobilized for successful struggle!

The twilight hour has been reached. The next stroke of the clock can still be controlled by the masses: Either it will strike the doom of the working class for a decade or more to come or it will strike the beginning of the end of Fascism!

The whole world situation hinges around the outcome of the terrible drama now being enacted before our eyes. The fate of the German proletariat hangs in the balance. With it is involved the fate of the whole Communist International. While it is also involved the fate of the workers' fatherland, the Soviet Union.

And in face of this, the "leader of the world's proletariat", the Communist International, is as silent as a tombstone! In face of the situation, the "best discipline of Lenin", Joseph Stalin, is as silent as a tombstone! In face of the dreadful catastrophe which threatens, the party leaders continue to babble philosophically about the "progress of the united front from below" as if they had months and years at their disposal in which to mobilize the German proletariat for the decisive battle which is impending.

Fascism has put the noose around the neck of the Communist party. It has aimed its knife at the heart of the German working class. Whoever is silent at a time like this, whoever relegates the decisive German situation to the background of second and third rate consequence, is dragging the proletariat and helping to prepare it for the slaughter! Whoever stands in the way of the genuine united front, from organization to organization—Communist party, social democracy, trade unions, Reichsbanner, Red Front—is betraying the working class!

Communist workers, militants everywhere! It is not yet too late. The masses await only the signal for action. The Communist party must give this signal. It must be aroused out of its awful lethargy and impotence. It must put a stop to the self-deceptive jabbering about the "united front from below!"

As a delegate from Carpenters' Local Union 2090 to the Socialist Party Conference for unemployment insurance, I was in a position to witness all the proceedings. A group of semi-business men, such as real estate dealers, ex-judges, jewelers, and dentists occupied the platform. The front rows of seats were taken up by all kinds of fat-bellied men, some of them with canes and derby hats who appeared to be retired and landlards of the shyster boss type. At any rate, all of them so far mentioned showed no sign of need for immediate relief, unless some of them were interested in their tenants so that they may be able to pay them the rent.

These gentlemen ruled the conference and in order to "save time" for their own propaganda the spokesmen of the committee appointed a certain Mr. Beardsley out of their midst as chairman. Our demand that all delegates from workers and political organizations be seated on the same grounds as the delegation from the S. P. and all our protest and proposals that the chairman should be elected from the floor were of no avail. Three of the protesting delegates were beaten up and forcibly put out of the hall. The floor then was given to Gerber followed by Algeron Lee and Finken, who between them with numerous interruptions entertained us for almost two hours. Gerber was the main speaker and pointed out the great evils the workers had to suffer in their struggle. He said even votes were stolen on them in the last election. He "forgot" all about what has happened in other countries such as Germany and England, where the Socialists got all their votes ever since 1918. Yet the betrayals of workers are not comparable with those in this country.

(Continued on Page 2)

These gentlemen ruled the conference and in order to "save time" for their own propaganda the spokesmen of the committee appointed a certain Mr. Beardsley out of their midst as chairman. Our demand that all delegates from workers and political organizations be seated on the same grounds as the delegation from the S. P. and all our protest and proposals that the chairman should be elected from the floor were of no avail. Three of the protesting delegates were beaten up and forcibly put out of the hall. The floor then was given to Gerber followed by Algeron Lee and Finken, who between them with numerous interruptions entertained us for almost two hours. Gerber was the main speaker and pointed out the great evils the workers had to suffer in their struggle. He said even votes were stolen on them in the last election. He "forgot" all about what has happened in other countries such as Germany and England, where the Socialists got all their votes ever since 1918. Yet the betrayals of workers are not comparable with those in this country.

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

The whole world situation hinges around the outcome of the terrible drama now being enacted before our eyes. The fate of the German proletariat hangs in the balance. With it is involved the fate of the whole Communist International. While it is also involved the fate of the workers' fatherland, the Soviet Union.

And in face of this, the "leader of the world's proletariat", the Communist International, is as silent as a tombstone! In face of the situation, the "best discipline of Lenin", Joseph Stalin, is as silent as a tombstone! In face of the dreadful catastrophe which threatens, the party leaders continue to babble philosophically about the "progress of the united front from below" as if they had months and years at their disposal in which to mobilize the German proletariat for the decisive battle which is impending.

Fascism has put the noose around the neck of the Communist party. It has aimed its knife at the heart of the German working class. Whoever is silent at a time like this, whoever relegates the decisive German situation to the background of second and third rate consequence, is dragging the proletariat and helping to prepare it for the slaughter! Whoever stands in the way of the genuine united front, from organization to organization—Communist party, social democracy, trade unions, Reichsbanner, Red Front—is betraying the working class!

Communist workers, militants everywhere! It is not yet too late. The masses await only the signal for action. The Communist party must give this signal. It must be aroused out of its awful lethargy and impotence. It must put a stop to the self-deceptive jabbering about the "united front from below!"

We speak solemnly and issue a solemn warning! Unless the party leadership, at this crucial hour, issues the call for the real united front, for the mobilization of the masses, the Fascists will march to power over the dead bodies of the militant German proletariat!

But if the program for the united front demanded by the Left Opposition is now adopted and put into effect immediately, the German proletariat will not only march in invincible ranks against the monster of Fascism, but in the battle to annihilate it, it will enter upon the high road to working class victory, to the triumph of the dictatorship of the proletariat!

Choose now! Now—and not tomorrow!

Unemployed Council then challenged the delegates of the L. O. to take the floor and defend their resolution. One of our delegates took the floor and pointed out that of all the speakers and all the resolutions no mention was made of the recognition of the Soviet Union. He also outlined our disagreement with the tactic of the "united front from below" also pointed out on the point of the recognition of the Soviet Union that the unemployed situation cannot be considered as an isolated problem and apart from general working class problems. Its objectives must be general working class objectives; its struggles part of the general working class struggles for the revolution.

Frankford, secretary of the Unemployed Councils came out for a united front with all workingmen's organizations. Johnstone, D. O. of the party, contradicted him and spoke in favor of a united front from below and used the term "social Fascism".

These gentlemen ruled the conference and in order to "save time" for their own propaganda the spokesmen of the committee appointed a certain Mr. Beardsley out of their midst as chairman. Our demand that all delegates from workers and political organizations be seated on the same grounds as the delegation from the S. P. and all our protest and proposals that the chairman should be elected from the floor were of no avail. Three of the protesting delegates were beaten up and forcibly put out of the hall. The floor then was given to Gerber followed by Algeron Lee and Finken, who between them with numerous interruptions entertained us for almost two hours. Gerber was the main speaker and pointed out the great evils the workers had to suffer in their struggle. He said even votes were stolen on them in the last election. He "forgot" all about what has happened in other countries such as Germany and England, where the Socialists got all their votes ever since 1918. Yet the betrayals of workers are not comparable with those in this country.

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

(Continued on Page 2)

below" which "unites" only the Communists and their supporters, and set in motion the Leninist united front of all the workers to decimate the Fascist hydra.

Tomorrow? Tomorrow may see the materialization of Hitler's demand that "heads roll in the dirt". Then the miserable "self-criticism" practised by Stalinism after each defeat, will be of little avail. It is today, today, today that the party must change its disastrous course. It is now that it must strike for the united front which, in turn, will strike the dagger from the hands of Fascism and Fascism from the seats of power.

Tuesday, Feb. 28, 1933. —M. S.

The Socialist Record

PRESIDENTIAL GOVERNMENT ONLY POSSIBILITY

"As against a Reichstag which abandons its state tasks the so-called 'Presidential government' is the only actual possibility left."

—Vorwaerts, August 7, 1932.

DEFEAT HITLER BY VOTING HINDENBURG

"Hitler is defeated. The victory which Fascism thought was already in its hands, has been snatched from it. Now the basis can once more be levelled for political and economic construction."

—Appeal of S. P. G., March 17, 1932.

"On March 13, the Fascist general assault upon the libertarian rights of the German people collapsed. April 10 must bring about the election of Hindenburg the collapse of the National Socialist movement."

—Appeal of "Iron Front", April 2, 1932.

LET HITLER COME TO POWER!

If National Socialism demonstrates in deed that it is capable of doing fruitful work the Social Democratic Party of Germany will not refuse it recognition."

—Severing, Nienburg speech, July 3, 1932.

"The Social Democracy will greet a Brüning-Hitler government because it will thereby be free from the government policy and the Center will in any case prevent the worst stupidities of the National Socialists."

—Breitscheid, Emden Speech, November 4, 1931.

"Were there the certainty that the National Socialists would also respect the rules of the game of democracy if they are in power, then we would all be ready to let them into the government today rather than tomorrow."

—Vorwaerts, December 3, 1931.

NO LONGER A DANGER

"Is there still anybody today who can have any doubts that thanks to our skillful tactics the Fascist dictatorship will not come...? The time when Fascism was a deadly danger for the proletariat and for freedom, has passed away since the November battle."

—Heilmann, Kottbus S. P. G. convention, January 15, 1933

THE PARTY DEFENDS NOSKE
"Noske belongs to the party with all his feelings and thoughts, he has not ceased to be a socialist and a democrat by a hair's breadth."

—Decision of Berlin officials of S. P. G., September 28, 1931.

BOSTON MEET

THE CRISIS IN GERMANY WHO WILL PREVAIL: HITLER OR THE PROLETARIAT?

Hear the Viewpoint of the Left Opposition on SUNDAY, MARCH 5th, 8 P. M.

Belmont Hall, 150 Humboldt Ave.

ROXBURY MASS.
Speakers:
Martin Abern, of New York
Antonette Konkow, of Boston.

THE LEAGUE IN ACTION

Cleveland Workers Hear Oehler

Cleveland.—A highly gratifying mass meeting of the Left Opposition was held here last Wednesday night at Painters Hall. More than 130 workers were present, more than half of them party members or members of party mass organizations. Comrades Hugo Oehler and Sam Gordon presented the point of view of the Communist League on the German crisis, with Comrade John Brantlin in the chair. A good collection was taken and numerous militants were sold.

This marks the largest and first successful meeting of the Left Opposition in this city. All previous meetings took place under organized attacks from the Stalinists. The previous intense and widespread activities of the local group with regard to the German Fascist danger—participation in demonstrations and meetings, extensive distribution of leaflets, etc.—had aroused great interest in the German meeting of the Left Opposition and the official party leadership saw itself forced to refrain from the well-known physical arguments at this time and actually to send down a representative to take the floor in their name.

After the presentation of the views of our organization the chairman, comrade Brantlin, asked if the party representative wanted the floor for 15 minutes. Comrade Leonard Patterson, in the name of the party, did his best in the course of twenty minutes to defend the indefensible position of Stalinism in Germany. After a great deal of confusion and stammering, he finally concluded with that poor trump card of the bureaucracy—the swindle about the "dislocation" of the German Left Opposition.

Comrade Oehler replied for the Communist League and with firm, but comradely arguments tore the bottom out of the contentions of the party representative, exposing in an even more convincing and concrete way the inadequacy and faltering, criminal stupidity of the Stalinist position in Germany. Many questions, testifying to the intense interest in the subject, were asked by the audience, to which our comrade gave the proper revolutionary answer. After comrade Oehler's summary, the meeting adjourned amid continued private discussions outside the hall.

All in all, this represents a great step forward for the Left Opposition in Cleveland. Not only the excellent attendance, but even more the comradely and sane spirit of the discussion is bound to have a profound effect on the local Communist workers, but those who constituted the majority of the audience as well as those who will come in contact with them. For the first time in their experience, they saw how deep principle disputes among Communists can be conducted in a Bolshevik manner, in a manner aimed to bring about genuine clarification in the proletarian ranks. That this will show them the futility and shamefulness of the Stalinist methods of physical terror in settling disputes with the Left Opposition cannot be doubted.

—S. G.

400 at Minneapolis Meeting

Minneapolis.—Last Thursday evening four hundred Communist, trade-union, and Left wing workers packed the Mayor's Reception Hall in the Court House to hear comrades Dunne and Skoglund expound the position of the Left Opposition on the German Crisis. This was the first large meeting protesting the assault of Hitler upon the German working class organizations. A small neighborhood meeting was held earlier in the week on the North-side by the Left Opposition. Seeing the laxity of the Stalinists upon this vital question the League advertised its meeting primarily through distribution of handbills at the party-led State Relief Demonstration, the trade union, and organized unemployed headquarters. This resulted in bringing to our meeting hundreds of Communists and party followers and numerous trade unionists and Left wing workers.

A profound effect was made upon this audience by the speakers' argumentation for unity in the Communist ranks, for a correct united front policy in mass work, for a Marxian estimation of the German crisis and the tasks of the C. P. The local district leaders of the official party were not present, but sent a group of lower functionaries to observe, take notes, and ask questions. One of these, Minor, who had participated actively to bar the Left Opposition from a recent unemployment conference, prompted a party member to ask why the Communist League doesn't participate in the unemployment struggle. Comrade Dunne in answering was able to state our repeated attempts to support the unemployed "united front", our position on the struggles, and exposed the lies, slanders and bureaucratic intrigues used by the party leadership to bar our organization from direct participation in their movement. Similarly when this comrade asked about the well "split" in the German Opposition, the speaker was able to drive home more lessons to the hundreds of new rank and file comrades in the hall, on Communist leadership and the miserable distortions of it that Stalinism imposed upon the party.

About one hundred militants were sold and every worker present was given past issues. Despite the general poverty, ten copies of "What Next?" and additional literature by Trotsky were sold. New recruits with advanced workers were made.

An active functionary of the Stalinist party was present and spoke in discussion. Apologetically he evaded the Weimar Constitution and Germany by saying that everything is not bad in the S. P., that in Vienna the S. P. "is returned year after year with ever increasing majorities..." Defensively he pleaded for "less criticism of the S. P. in order better to effect a united front with it." Three workers answered him. The speaker pointed out to him the necessity of the working class to unite its organizations to defend itself against Fascism, that in such a united front each organization must stand on its own before the class, that workers' democracy in the united front allows criticism and reevaluation of every party's program as it pertains to the immediate action and problem before the class.

The meeting lasted well-nigh to midnight. It demonstrated the powerfulness of the ideas of the Left Opposition, when applied to great problems thrown up by crucial turns in the proletarian revolution. We plan to duplicate this meeting in St. Paul.

—C. FORSEN.

Nearing, Stalin Apologist, on Germany

In Chicago

Chicago.—The lecture that Scott Nearing delivered here a few weeks ago under the auspices of the Chicago Forum, on "What Next in Germany?", was an additional illustration of his ignorance of the dynamics of the class struggle. Coming just a few days before Hindenburg chose the leader of the Fascist butchers to the chancellorship, one had the right to expect of Nearing an analysis that would cover at least the fundamental questions relating to the present civil war period in Germany.

He gave a historical picture of the post-war period of Germany and, coming closer to the present situation, measured the relative strength of the political parties by their votes. In Nearing's schematic set-up, the Communist party is overwhelmed by heavy odds. These heavy odds preclude the possibility of a struggle for power by the Communist party. To Nearing, there are no differentiations to be sought in Von Papen, Von Schleicher, Hitler, Hugenberg, and the social democrats. They are all lumped together as if they make up an integral whole. On the basis of such a consideration Nearing concludes that these forces are too strong a combination for the Communists to attempt to struggle against. The likely variant according to Nearing, was the establishment of a coalition between all these groups.

It would be a good thing if some of the social democrats could be won to the support of the Communists, including too, some elements of the middle class. Then perhaps the revolutionists might make a struggle for power. And here one expects, that Nearing would take up the question of the united front to show how and in what manner the Communists could wage a victorious struggle. But apparently he has heard nothing of this tactic. It was not mentioned once in his lecture. Is it any wonder then that in his summary Nearing declared: "Unless the revolutionary movement (I wins to its side some elements, either the social democratic elements or some of the middle class elements, they are whipped before they start, because the round-up of the class forces with the middle class and ruling class and the aristocracy of labor on one side of the round-up is unbeatable. That is the position of the German Communist Party and I believe it must be dismissed as an improbable way out of the difficulty." (My emphasis—A. G.)

Having dismissed the possibility of a victory and rejected the need for a struggle, Nearing concludes that the possible result of this seeming blind alley of German politics, would be a coalition of Von Schleicher, Von Papen, Hugenberg, Hitler and the social democrats, under the charge of the first. Thus a few days before the Fascist chief took over the chancellorship and his legions spread a reign of blood over Germany, Nearing dismissed the idea of a Fascist assumption of power.

Some days later, after Hitler's assumption to power, Nearing again spoke on Germany. Added to the confusion of his first lecture, was hopelessness and despair. Nothing could be done now. It was too late! As in his first lecture, the fundamental questions of the situation were left out entirely. If one expected to receive from Nearing a way out, he was greatly disappointed. It was not for nothing

Wilkes-Barre Miners Hear Opposition

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.—An audience of 50 people, nearly all anthracite coal miners, turned out at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., despite the very cold weather, to hear Martin Abern, member of the National Committee, Communist League of America (Opposition), speak on the Menace of Fascism in Germany. Comrade Abern reviewed at length the role of the social democracy of Germany since the World War up to now; the program and activities of the Communist Party of Germany and the Communist International, as conceived by the Stalinist-Thaelmann leadership, and the policy and united front program of action put forward by L. D. Trotsky and the International Left Opposition to meet the German crisis. There was an intense interest among the audience, as is attested by the 30 questions put by them after the conclusion of the opening talk by comrade Abern. Members of the Communist party and the Young Communist League were among those present who asked numerous questions and participated in the general discussion that followed. Italian and Lithuanian comrades were responsible for the organization of this meeting, which was the first meeting held in Wilkes-Barre on the present situation in Germany. A good-sized bundle of each issue of the Militant is well distributed among interested workers.

A check-up of the audience revealed that only seven workers, of all present, were at present employed. It was a graphic illustration of the ravages of the economic crisis upon the anthracite miners. Workers who spoke, also brought out the treacherous role which the John L. Lewis leadership of America was playing in helping to lower still further the living and working standards of the anthracite coal miners.

In Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, On Saturday, Feb. 11, Professor Scott Nearing lectured before the "Friends of the Soviet Union" on the "Second Five Year Plan". After a long speech on the achievements of "planned economy", many questions were asked among them was "Why was comrade Trotsky expelled?" To the surprise and astonishment of all present he answered like one who has just returned from Russia where he attended the Stalin school of falsifications, that Trotsky was expelled because he was a "counter-revolutionist". Among other questions was "Can Socialism be completed in Russia alone?" His answer was that when a revolution breaks out in China or Japan it could be completed in Russia (quite smart!).

Three of our comrades were standing outside the hall and distributing the Militant to the crowd as they left the meeting. A Stalinist gorilla grabbed the handle of papers out of the hands of one of our comrades and walked away with them. This is not by accident. More than once the Stalinists have stolen display cards placed in restaurant windows by the Pittsburgh branch of the Left Opposition. They have torn down leaflets we paste up. Yet they have the nerve to say that if the workers had any brains at all they would not listen to the teachings of the L. O. but to the "teachings of Stalin!"

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.

Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin Abern James P. Cannon Max Shachtman Maurice Spector Arne Swaback

Wednesday, March 1, 1933 Vol. VI, No. 14 (Whole No. 161) Subscription price: $2.00 per year, Foreign $2.50. One cent a copy.

Unemployment and the American Working Class

by Arne Swaback

A popular, Marxist explanation for workers. Excellent for propaganda and distribution. 24 pages 5 cents

Postage 1c extra per copy Minimum quantity per order 5 that the reaction of the Communist workers who listened to him speak, was utter disgust.

PIONEER PUBLISHERS 84 East 10th Street, N. Y. C.

Nearing is not a member of the Communist party and therefore does not speak in its name. But he has been a member of the party and is sufficiently close to it now, to give his speeches a semi-official character. He is looked upon as representative of Communism. His lectures, up until this date, were the only ones to be held, in addition to those by the Left Opposition in Chicago. The party here, has as yet not moved a finger on the German situation.

—A. GLOTZER.

The Flower of Bourbon Civilization

Negro Lynchings in the South

Lynching in the South is a phenomenon that must be explained historically if lynching is to be correctly understood. Put into effect on a tremendous scale by the Ku Klux Klan during the Reconstruction Period, it claimed far less victims during the 80's of the last century. In the last decade of the last century its use became far more frequent again, there having been 1789 known lynchings between 1880 and 1900. With the beginning of the present century the number of its victims again decreased until during the present economic crisis the Southern bournons more frequently wield this awful weapon.

The above are cycles, but certainly not just business cycles. They are cycles or periods of great social change. The first or Ku Klux Klan-Reconstruction period when the northern capitalists by means of military dictatorship over the South were uprooting the system of chattel slavery so as to unite the country on the basis of capitalism, was undoubtedly noticeable for its terrorism against the Negro race and the vast number of lynchings that took place, but at the same time it was a far deeper break with the past that immediately preceded it than was the 1880-1900 period. That period, though awful to recollect when one recalls it, considering the great number of deaths through lynchings, was the period of sharp political struggle that was a part of the social change from competitive capitalism to monopolist or imperialist capitalism. In the present period of decaying capitalism it is again true that the increased number of lynchings during the present economic crisis in America reflects the fact that here too the great social change that is shaking the world at large is affecting the social structure in our midst.

But many are falsely informed by the Southern Commission on the Study of Lynching that the Communists, the banner bearers of the new society, are responsible for these lynchings and many are wondering if lynchings will not continue in the South in the society of the future. A far greater number, not conversant with the forces making for social change nor realizing that capitalism is in decay, figure that lynching in America will become a thing of the past under capitalism.

To get at the truth one must deal with the nature of lynching as a capitalist institution. It is indeed a weapon for suppression of the Negro race, used by the forces of reaction and useful only for such forces. When capitalism was young and progressive it was the weapon of political agents of the ex-slave holders, that is, the side of reaction. When capitalism underwent a qualitative change that created possibilities for the Negro's escape from the degradation of the rural South it was used to keep him in that degradation, "in his place". When capitalism is old and decaying, adapting to itself every outgrown form—even slavery, it is again a weapon on the dark side of reaction.

But let no one underestimate the far reaching nature of the social change that is taking place at the present time, nor on the other hand, overestimate the consequences of lynching because this is a part of a deepening and far reaching social change. It is not just a mathematical proposition. It is a political one. The nature of this period of change is such that though far greater in historical importance than even the Civil War-Reconstruction-Ku Klux Klan period, far less lynchings should be expected to accompany the fight against this change, not because the enemy is better or more civilized, but because Communists fight against lynchings politically, by mass action, and can and will forestall many lynchings.

And while we are thinking politically instead of mathematically let us not fall into that other rut of the George Milton's that says that with the exception of the present crisis the twentieth century has witnessed a progressive decrease in lynchings, that the situation is getting better and better, and that under capitalism, we are outgrowing the封建ism of lynching. He disregards entirely the fact that the most resolute working class section which responds in danger of further isolation and destruction. To speak of a general strike without the social democratic and average trade union workers is criminal light-mindedness, and it is not yet possible to mobilize these workers for such action against their leaders and less so by counterposing Communist leaders to the Communist party. To reach such a stage further preparation is necessary.

A general strike purely under social reformist leadership without control by the masses through their own established organs of struggle can have prospects only of further sell-outs and betrayals. But the social democratic workers are threatened by the scourge of Fascism as are the Communist workers. Even these very S. P. and trade union bureaucrats are being forced to bare the wall, but pressed only from the one side from this menace. They feel this pressure and fear it. Now they must be pressed also from the other side, from the revolutionary workers. They must be put to the test and exposed at this crucial moment before the eyes of the work-

—GEO. J. SAUL.

Barbusse-Stalinist Capitulation

San Francisco.—The Feb. 27 issue of the Western Worker prints a report of the Students Anti-War Conference in Los Angeles. It complains that the conference in which the Communists and Y. C. L. "played the leading role...in political guidance" capitulated to the pacifists. In heavy type it states that "The United Front in Los Angeles was essentially a capitulation to the pacifist elements."

The article points out that the main reason for this consisted in the fact that the members of the Young Communist League understood the tactics of the united front as giving up the right to criticize the action of the other parties in the conference. That, the article claims, deprived them "of the right to present our Communist position." As if a Communist position could be expected from people who came to revision of the "third period" tactics through the swindle of the Amsterdam Peace Conference. And besides, where is the guarantee that the party itself in its revision of the yesterday tactics of the "third period" and "social Fascism" would not come to the very same "day-before-yesterday" tactics with Chiang Kai-Shek and the Anglo-Russian committee, for which it criticizes the Los Angeles Conference.

Especially vociferous in its criticism is that part of the article which is directed against one of the paragraphs of a leaflet, issued with the help of Y. C. L. and which demands "the enforcement in each spirit and letter of the Kellogg peace pact". Poor lads! Knowing that the Soviet Union signed that pact, they believe with all their heart that pact should be enforced. And think of their bewilderment when the righteous elders of the Western Worker with solemn mien enlighten them: "The Kellogg peace pact is an imperialist document, a means of strengthening imperialism's hold on the vast colonial areas and against the Soviet Union."

We would like to know who would not get "lizzy" in these circumstances?

—L. GREEN.

OFF THE PRESS!

Two New Pamphlets By

LEON TROTSKY

Soviet Economy

In Danger

72 Pages

3 for twenty-five cents

In Defense of the Russian Revolution

48 Pages

Minimum number per order 5

Postage 1c extra per copy

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York

Report Shows Fate of Germany Hangs In Balance; United Front Is Urgent

Continued from last issue

But that is only one side of the picture. On the other hand the politically corrupted Stalinist bureaucracy did not hesitate to engage in light-minded maneuvering in the moments of fateful decision. It published and broadcast leaflets in which the Socialist party and the trade unions were called upon to form a united front with the Communist party for a general strike. It did not address its proposals directly to these organizations officially as organizations. It did not make any proposals for formation of united front organs. It did not make any concrete proposals for the conduct or the objectives of the general strike. It did not prepare its own membership and followers to fight for the realization of the united front, because it was not meant seriously. It was only a maneuver so that the bureaucrats could say to the Communists workers: "There you are. We offered them the united front, but they did not accept it."

Only the United Front Can Mobilize Workers Power

The general strike, now that the establishment of a Fascist government has become a fact, will, of course, be a very important first step in the struggle of the working class against the menace of Fascism. But it can be only a first step and even this first step cannot be realized at all without the most complete working class unity. The C. P. alone cannot mobilize the working masses for a general strike. That is already conclusively proven. Its method of continually hurrying the slogan without proposing concretely how and when, by what means of organization, at what point and around which issues, can only lead to discredit of the slogan and to demoralization, not to mention the fact that the most resolute working class section which responds in danger of further isolation and destruction. To speak of a general strike without the social democratic and average trade union workers is criminal light-mindedness, and it is not yet possible to mobilize these workers for such action against their leaders and less so by counterposing Communist leaders to the Communist party. To reach such a stage further preparation is necessary.

A general strike purely under social reformist leadership without control by the masses through their own established organs of struggle can have prospects only of further sell-outs and betrayals. But the social democratic workers are threatened by the scourge of Fascism as are the Communist workers. Even these very S. P. and trade union bureaucrats are being forced to bare the wall, but pressed only from the one side from this menace. They feel this pressure and fear it. Now they must be pressed also from the other side, from the revolutionary workers. They must be put to the test and exposed at this crucial moment before the eyes of the working class and particularly before the eyes of their own following. Failure to do that spells failure to fight the traitors. The means with which to do that is the united front policy. The key to the situation is still the united front. Nay, it is more, it is a matter of life or death.

The Left Opposition Conference Appeals to Comintern

In this fateful situation, in this hour of mortal danger, no guidance, no assistance, in fact not a word is heard from the Communist International. What woful neglect. What criminal failure. What has become of Lenin's world party? It too is paralyzed, gagged and bound by the dilatory bureaucratic Stalinist regime.

In the midst of these developments the Left Opposition held its preliminary international conference in Paris, participated in by delegates of 13 countries. Our conference dispatched an urgent appeal to the Comintern for immediate convocation of its Seventh Congress, with the Left Opposition to participate in its deliberations. We proposed that the main point on the agenda be the Comintern initiative for a conference of the Second International, the Amsterdam International of trade unions and the Communist International to establish a united front in defense of the German working class against the Fascist menace.

Fascism has not yet conquered Germany. But it has its hands on the instrument of power. It is in the government together with elements of the attempted Bonapartist regime. Even an election victory for this combination will not finally settle the issue. There will still be a stage of differentiation with the Hugenberg and von Papen forces. However, these are not fundamental and are entirely subordinated to the issue of civil war.

For the working class there is yet time, but every day, every hour is precious. The fate of the events of the immediate future are in the hands of the Communist forces. Of these the Left Opposition is a part. Our ranks in Germany have grown appreciably in the recent period; but numerically we are still small when compared to the party. Our strength lies in our Marxian program and the Left Opposition in Germany will do its duty. We commenced a long time ago a determined fight for the working class united front. Today it is the only way out; a united front from organization to organization, Communist, Social Democrats and trade unions and the establishment of definite united front organs of these organizations to function as the centrally directing force in the struggle for defense against the Fascist enemy. Within these organs, within this united front, the Communist solution will be proposed and fought for. That is the road to the Soviets. That is the only road.

—ARNOLD SWABECK.

February 11, 1933

S. P. Conference Student's Strike

(Continued from Page 1)

Again the spokesman appeared on the platform and now with the report of the Credentials Committee he announced that the original committee of ten had enlarged itself to the number of 30. At this point a delegate from Carpenters' L. U. 2717 and I protested against such procedure, but surrounded by strong arm men we were quickly shoved back in our seats. The spokesman also announced that because of the lack of time, the resolution on unemployment insurance as well as all other resolutions handed in by various delegates would have to be taken under consideration at some time by the committee of 30, and that the committee would also arrange for a conference at Albany. The conference endorsed the Cincinnati A. F. L. insurance bill.

Again I stood up and this time was recognized by the chairman. I asked that all resolutions be read off before the delegates and be voted on. I reported that the resolution from my local union contained an appeal to the delegates to this conference to merge with the provisional A. F. L. committee for unemployment relief at 730 Broadway. I also pointed out how useless the aims of this conference were when they seek to co-operate with such discredited types as Comerford, Broun, Green and Co., who for years were checking the workers in every progressive step, but before I was able to finish I was pulled and pushed back in my seat again. The delegate from Carpenters' L. U. 2717 who proposed "that at least one building trade worker be on the resolution committee because of special problem of demanding public works as part of relief" was treated in the same manner. In summing up this conference I can not see why my L. U. was invited to participate in this conference, and this applies to all other delegates. There was no discussion on a single point of the question. Not a single proposal heard of by any of the delegates. No one of the delegates was elected on the committee and I may add the whole affair, therefore was of no concern to most of the delegates—except for a bunch of tricky politicians and job seekers.

—W. H. HERRMANN.

Oehler Tour:

St. Louis, Mo.—March 4, 5
Illinois Coal Fields—March 6, etc.

(Continued from Page 1)

flag pole. With howls and physical attacks they attempted to tear the banners, in which they succeeded in part and prevented the speakers from addressing the students on the campus.

Unfortunately the strike at City College was not very well prepared. Called scarcely with more than a day's preparation the strike could not take on the broad character and forceful effect it might otherwise have had. The strike committees were poorly organized if at all, and did not show a clear understanding of what move to make next. Not enough students had been reached in advance to, firstly, sound out their response, and, secondly, to ascertain their support. Furthermore by more carefully detailed plans much of the hectic features which detracted from the serious nature of the events could have been avoided. However the strike will remain a memorable event in the light of the City students, as well as those at other institutions, for recognition of their rights. The evening strike, which suffered from the same faults, gathered about 500 demonstrators.

The strike at N. Y. U. was obviously better prepared aside from certain factors that made it easier to call. Here the students were insisting on the right of the editor of the Daily News, school paper, to freely express his opinion and to take his stand in favor of the student body. The Daily had made accusations against the athletic committee for mismanagement of injured athletes. To this the school authorities responded with suspension of the paper. Before the strike had been called the proper preparation had taken place. Consequently greater numbers of student were involved.

That in a "liberal" school like N. Y. U. the students are pressed to take strike action, and that they stand ready to pursue such action, as they were in Columbia University last year, another "liberal" school with upper class enrollment, is a healthy sign. Even in the city owned colleges where academic freedom is so much more suppressed, it is unusual for students to leave classes. It is to be hoped that taking measures which are the natural instruments of the working class in its resistance to capitalist exploitation, will help to identify more closely the students with the struggle of the proletariat. In that alone rests the full value of the action taken by the City College and N. Y. U. students.

CHICAGO Civil War In Ill. Coal Fields

Lecture by GERRY ALLARD Editor of "The Progressive Miner" and Illinois Miners Leader on FRIDAY, MARCH 3, 8 P. M. MIRROR HALL 1138 N. Western Ave. (Near Division St.) Questions and Discussions from Floor

1 CENT
A COPY

THE MILITANT

Published 3 times a week, Monday,
Wednesday and Friday

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Workers of the World,
Unite!Published three weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 23, 1923 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 15 [WHOLE NO. 162] NEW YORK, FRIDAY, MARCH 3, 1933 PRICE 1 CENT

No Retreat! Struggle or Annihilation!

Every day brings the report of a new blow dealt the German working class movement by the Hitler regime. No half-sane person above the age of six has put the slightest credence in the fascist charge that the Communists set fire to the Reichstag building. The American bourgeois press has, almost unanimously, expressed its skepticism. "France," the Paris correspondent of the New York Times (3-2-1933) informs his paper, judging by today's press, even seems distinctly inclined to blame the Nazis themselves for the fire that wrecked the Reichstag building, and sees in it simply a crude excuse on Herr Hitler's part to crush the Opposition just before the elections.

From the conservative London Times to the Laborite Herald, the British press is similarly unambiguous about the despicable fraud of the Austrian adventurer. But while nobody takes the charge seriously, it has sufficed the Nazis to launch their reign of terror and to extend it more widely with the passage of every day. The Times reports that "Communist arrests included the entire executive committee of the party in Berlin and Reichstag deputies and party executives elsewhere." In Berlin alone there are more than 300 Communists held, 120 in raids for the apprehension of Communist militants and officials are now the order of the day. The Communist and socialist press—more than one hundred papers in all—remains suppressed and the fascist swastika still waves from the Karl Liebknecht House. New decrees signed by "comrade" von Hindenburg, erstwhile presidential candidate of the Social Democracy, provide for the most rigorous penalties against revolutionary or militant working class activity.

In addition, the Hitler regime has struck the first overt blow at the Soviet Union. The man who aims to be the "super-wrangler" of world imperialism ordered an insolent raid upon the suburban Berlin school for the children of Soviet citizens, where literature was seized; a raid upon a Soviet citizens' boarding house, from which two employees of the Soviet trade delegation were arrested and later released; and a raid upon the quarters of the Berlin correspondent of the central Soviet organ, Izvestia, which was carried out not by the police but by armed Nazi storm troops.

But the protest immediately deposited with the foreign minister by the official Soviet representatives far from exhausts the question of the relationships between the Soviet Union and the fascist regime in Germany. There is an unlimited side to this question upon which considerable light needs to be shed.

The silence of the Communist International on the German situation, its criminal failure to speak out plainly, has become a notorious international scandal of dreadful significance. The world movement of the proletariat is at stake in Germany; the fate of the Soviet Union is involved. Between Fascism in Germany and the workers' State there can exist only an irreconcilable antagonism which, in the long run, will be settled only by force of arms. This antagonism must not only not be concealed—it must be openly proclaimed to the workers of the world so that they may know how the situation stands and what the attitude of the Soviet Union really is. Instead of such a clear proclamation, we see disgusting signs of the contrary. Walter Duranty, the Moscow correspondent of the New York Times now in Berlin, cables his paper as follows (3-2-1933):

"While it doubtless would be an exaggeration to say as some of Chancellor Hitler's close associates do, that 'the Soviet Union wants a Hitlerite Germany because the Soviet Union knows that would be a strong Germany, which the Soviet Union wants,' it is beyond question that Moscow would welcome even a 100 percent Hitler regime on the grounds that it would conjure away the nightmare that has harassed the sleep of Soviet statesmen for the past five years—namely, an anti-Bolshevik European coalition or a 'holy war against the Red peril.' Moscow already has reason to be gratified over the effect of Herr Hitler's rise to power on France and Poland. But that is only one aspect of the case. Of greater practical interest is the recent agreement concluded by the Deutsche Bank and Disconto-Gesellschaft and the Dresdner Bank to provide $50,000,000 in new credits to the Soviet Union...."

The continuation of "normal business relations" with Germany under Hitler, right at the moment when the decisive battle is imminent—a battle on whose outcome depends the next decade or more of the world's development—as if nothing unusual was happening, as if the Soviet Union were not concerned with what government was established in Germany—merely a little short of leaving the German proletariat to fend for himself, leaving it in the lurch, without the moral—and when necessary—the material assistance of the workers' state. When Duranty points out further that "only recently the official Soviet Government organ, the Izvestia, took occasion in connection with a speech by Foreign Commissar Litvinov to assure Germany that the Soviet Union would not intervene in the affairs of other countries, even in the event of a Communist revolution in Germany," it smacks not merely of "national-Bolshevik" degeneration in general, but of the preparation for treacherous national indifference to the fate of the German and world proletariat in the concrete! The sharpness of our terms is justified by the criminal deadly silence of the C. I. and by the broad hints of Duranty who experience has taught us is an authoritative backstairs spokesman of the upper stratum of the apparatus.

While this unbelievable indifference is being manifested by the upper layers of the Stalinist bureaucracy, matters do not improve in the German Communist Party. The Daily Worker (3-2-1933) prints the Impeccable cable from Berlin reporting that the German party "has again approached the Socialist Party, the A. D. G. B. (reformist trade unions), the Reichsbanner, etc., with a proposal for joint action against the murderous fascist terror." The headline given to this story by the Freiheit is even "plainer": "Central Committee of the Communist Party Turns Once More to the Social Democratic and Trade Union Leaders!" If the headline is correct, it would undoubtedly mark a turn in the right direction by the Stalinists. But our bitter experiences in the past cause us to voice our reservations in advance.

Up to yesterday, the Molotovs, Manulskys, Kuznetsovs, Thaelmanns, Badachts and Olgins weighed abutively against the Left Opposition precisely because we proposed that the united front be set into motion by an open proposal to the social democracy and its trade unions—from top to bottom, leaders and masses. "Counter-revolutionary"; "assistance to the social struggle or giving up the social struggle as hopeless? The Left Opposition does not consider the situation hopeless. It knows very well—and the newspaper reports to the humiliation of the Communist movement, confirm it—that the Austrian and Scandinavian borders are being scanned by an increasing number of Communist officials and leaders from Germany. For such capitalists, who are saving their hides, a revolutionist can have nothing but contempt and hatred. Of them, Trotsky wrote more than a year ago: "Without a victory over the social democracy, we cannot battle against Fascism." In other words, it has been the old ultimatum dressed up to make it sound better. At bottom, there has been no change.

Nevertheless, the change is imperative now. Unless the workers up to now still demoralized passives and divided, unite their forces, Fascism will huddle the country in the blood of the proletariat.

To this moment, the world remains unaware of the program of action of the Communist Party. We put the question again: Does the Communist party and its leadership really intend to organize the resistance of the proletariat to Fascism, or does it intend to capitulate without a struggle, on the half-formed or fully conscious theory that it is hopeless to fight, or that Fascism will soon collapse and give way to Bolshevism? Are the party leaders preparing for the final struggle or giving up the social struggle as hopeless? The Left Opposition does not consider the situation hopeless. It knows very well—and the newspaper reports to the humiliation of the Communist movement, confirm it—that the Austrian and Scandinavian borders are being scanned by an increasing number of Communist officials and leaders from Germany. For such capitalists, who are saving their hides, a revolutionist can have nothing but contempt and hatred. Of them, Trotsky wrote more than a year ago: "Without a victory over the social democracy, we cannot battle against Fascism." In other words, it has been the old ultimatum dressed up to make it sound better. At bottom, there has been no change.

Very little time left! Every hour counts! The socialist leaders, the traitors to the proletariat, will not act of their own accord. The Communist leaders must be forced out of their criminal passivity. They must be forced to put an end to this light-minded juggling with the fate of the German proletariat. There is no retreat! All that is left is mortal combat—or annihilation!

Thursday, March 2, 1933. —M. S.

LEON TROTSKY

"Soviet Economy in Danger"

The following letter was addressed to the editorial board of the "Sozialistische Arbeiterzeitung" (central organ of the German Socialist Workers' Party. After the press of the S. W. P. reprinted the deliberate falsification about the "liquidation of the Trotskyists," comrade Trotsky was obliged to refrain from sending the letter. As the letter nevertheless retains its importance, we publish it here.—Ed.)

Dear comrades:

In the two numbers of your paper, January 11 and 12, there appeared an article on my brochure "Soviet Economy in Danger". As it deals with an extremely important question, about which every revolutionary worker must form a clear opinion, I request you to afford me the possibility to elucidate to your readers by the present letter, in the shortest possible terms, those sides of the question which in my opinion were submitted to a false interpretation in your paper.

1. In the article it says a number of times that you are "not in agreement with everything" and "far from agreeing with everything" in Trotsky's conceptions on Soviet economy. Are all of the opinions we are differences of opinion between us? Nevertheless I cannot suppress my regret that—with one single exception, deal with below—you did not indicate which conceptions you are not in agreement with. Let us recall how Marx, Engels and Lenin censured and condemned evasiveness in fundamental questions, which finds expression mostly in the empty formula "far from agreeing with everything". What every revolutionary worker can demand of his organization and of his paper is a definite and clear attitude towards the questions of socialist construction in the U. S. S. R.

2. In only one point does your article endeavor to delimit itself more concretely from my conceptions. "We believe," you write, "that Trotsky considers matters somewhat onesidedly when he ascribes the main blame for these conditions to the Stalinist bureaucracy" (!)... Further on the article sets out that the main blame does not lie in the bureaucracy but in the circumstance that tasks of too great dimensions are put before economy, for the fulfillment of which the necessary qualified forces are lacking. But who was it that set up these exaggerated tasks if not the bureaucracy? And who was it that warned in proper time against their exaggerated dimensions if not the Left Opposition? Thus it results that precisely your article "ascribes" the whole blame to the bureaucracy.

Your reproach to me is wrong also for a deeper reason. To shift the responsibility for all the difficulties and for all the phenomena of crisis upon the ruling faction, could be done only by one who believes in the possibility of a planned development of the socialist society within national boundaries. But this is not my standpoint. The main difficulties for the U. S. S. R. arise out of: (a) the economic and cultural backwardness which forces the Soviet state to solve many of the tasks which capitalism has solved in advanced countries; (b) the isolation of the workers' state in an epoch in which the division of labor between the states of the whole world has become the most important postulate of the national productive forces.

3. We do not charge the Stalinist faction with the blame for the objective difficulties, but for their lack of understanding of the nature of these difficulties, of inability to foresee the dialectic of their development and unprincipled mistakes of leadership springing therefrom.

(Continued on Page 2)

Comintern and World Revolution at Decisive Historical Turning Point

When comrade Trotsky, in his writing "Germany: The Key to the International Situation," issued the urgent warning to the proletarians of all countries, to the Communist International, to the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, on the danger of Hitler, of the fascist counter-revolution in Central Europe, this writing took on the significance for the most conscious proletarians as that of Lenin's October 7, 1917: "The Impending Crisis". Two undoubtedly different situations; two palpably different epochs. In 1917 it was the eve of the proletarian revolution; in 1933, the eve of the fascist counter-revolution in Germany. But in the first warning as in the second, in Lenin's of 1917 as in Trotsky's of 1933, in spite of the difference between the two epochs, one encounters the same revolutionary and internationalist spirit, the same clairvoyance, the same strength.

Now, it can no longer be a question of foreseeing; now it is a question of seeing. Hitler is in power. And how the task of leading his open struggle for the crushing of the organizations, of all the organizations of the working class has been facilitated for him! The battle which the social democrats and the Stalinists thought could be evaded by submission and docility is at the present time inevitable. Otherwise, it will be annihilation without the struggle—an

Arrest Soviet "Trotskyists"

We are reliably informed from the U. S. S. R.:

In the course of the month of January, a large number of arrests were made in Moscow and Leningrad. In addition to Preobrazhensky, L. N. Smirnov, Ufimtsev, more than one hundred former Left Oppositionists were apprehended. They were accused of carrying on illegal "Trotskyist" factional work. It will be remembered that almost four years ago some of those named above resounded the Stalinist regime, claiming that it had adopted most if not all of the essential planks in the Opposition platform. The arrest of those who previously capitulated, following as it does right on the heels of the arrest and exile of Zinoviev, Kamenev and many others, is a fact of the greatest symptomatic significance.

In the huge Moscow automobile plant "Amz" approximately one hundred workers were arrested, because an Opposition leaflet had been distributed there. The same occurred in other plants and factories. Similar reports emanate from Leningrad.

(Continued on Page 2)

Jap Advance Hits U.S.S.R.

LEAGUE PRICE FOR SUPPORT OF JAPAN IS ASSAULT ON FATHERLAND OF WORKERS

With laudable thoughtfulness, the Japanese imperialists lay their plans in advance and then follow their schedule carefully. Many months ago, a Japanese "surveyor", engaged in political surveying in Inner Mongolia for the followers of Baron Tanaka, discovered an obstacle to the "direct descendant of the great Genghis Khan". This Mongolian prince could never have dreamed how fortunate was his fateful meeting with the awe-struck Japs. For to and behold, the press directly hints at the Japanese desire to restore this scion to his rightful place at the head of a new Mongolian state to be called Tayu-ankuo.

Thus the Japanese militarists continue to build a foundation for the ultimate struggle with the Soviet Union. Inner Mongolia will follow the road of Manchuria, and Jehol, possibly after the conquest of North China. If the powers continue to jockey for position in the present situation, each hoping to reap the benefits while the other pays the piper; if there is no real pressure applied to Japan to halt her march into China, it is because they expect Japan to pay the price, military intervention in Siberia, of course America and England are careful to establish the record that will be called upon in the more distant future to solve their internal conflicts. But as yet, that is merely a record.

What is the order in which capitalist powers place their enemies? Read the careful, restrained press accounts of the Japanese advance into Asia, note the gentlemanly manner in which reference is made to their astute campaigning. Then recall the violent, almost insane, attacks made periodically in the decade after the October revolution on the Soviets and their leaders. The vituperation carried on by Hitler against the German Communists is lame compared to the vicious campaign of slander recorded in the capitalist press of the entire world against the Russian Bolsheviks. In the light of that experience, one can easily pigeon-hole the present quarrel with Japan as a family affair. Despite all the failures and blunders of the Stalin bureaucracy, the Soviets still remain the nightmare of capitalism, spelling the twilight of imperialism.

At bottom that is the explanation of the Stimson note to the League accepting its invitation to express accord in view. For Stimson refuses to be sold by linked with Geneva and while agreeing blandly

(Continued on Page 2)

To Union Sq. on Saturday

The Unemployed Councils of Greater N. Y. have issued a call for a demonstration on Saturday, March 4 at 11 A. M. on Union Square. This demonstration is timed with the inauguration of Roosevelt which takes place in Washington on the same day.

The Left Opposition endorses the demonstration on Union Square and will be there in full force. The demands of the full demonstration, however, can and must be broadened to include the demand for long-term credits to the Soviets and to draw attention to the German crisis.

The demonstration meets at a crucial moment for the working class of the entire world. While the unemployed are dying of starvation in this country the bloody fascist regime of Hitler in Germany is murdering the flower of the revolutionary proletariat and destroying their organization.

All out on Union Square on March 4th!

For Unemployment Insurance and Relief!

For Recognition and Long Term Credits to the Soviet Union!

For the United Front to crush the Hitler Gangs!

Anti-United Front Policy Plays Into Hands of Socialist Party Bureaucrats

The conference on unemployment, held under the auspices of the "Labor Committee" of the Socialist party of New York last week, offers a number of aspects deserving of examination.

The brutal attacks of the socialist gangsters upon the Left wing delegates who came to present their credentials, the atmosphere of terrorism which pervaded the whole session, are a natural accompaniment of Socialist bureaucracy—weapons borrowed from the class enemy and first introduced by the Right wing into the labor movement in the days when the labor movement first raised the banner of internationalism during and after the war. The socialist patrons, allies and

OPEN FORUM

BONAPARTISM & THERMIDOR IN THE SOVIET UNION

DOES THE DANGER THREATEN?

Speaker:
MAX SHACHTMAN
Friday, March 3, 1933

126 East 16th Street,
Admission: 15c
N. Y. Br. Communist League of America (Opposition)

Roosevelt Regime Reopens Question of Russ Soviets

SITUATION OVER-RIPE FOR AMERICAN MILITANTS TO RAISE DEMAND FOR LONG-TERM CREDITS TO SOVIET UNION AS PART OF INTERNATIONALIST CAMPAIGN

Tomorrow, Roosevelt will be inaugurated as president of the United States. One of the first questions which he will have to decide will be whether or not to recognize Soviet Russia. Bourgeois and liberal papers have been hinting for some time that the attitude of the new administration will be much more favorable to recognition than that of previous administrations—it is even rumored that preliminary conversations between Soviet and American representatives have already begun.

If the attitude of the new administration is more friendly, it is not primarily because of the "liberalism" of the party of Jefferson and Wilson; it is rather because of the pressure of the economic crisis in the United States on the one hand, and of the political crisis in Manchuria on the other.

In other words, the question of recognition is being treated on the basis of the interests of the Soviet state and those of the bourgeois American state. The voice of the proletariat of America, whose class interests are indissolubly connected with those of the Soviet workers' state, has not made itself heard so far, with its own distinctive slogans and demands which are not those of the American capitalists.

Soviet Economy in Critical State

Yet Soviet economy is in a critical state, which have been fully analyzed by comrade Rakovsky in his famous letter from Barnaul and by comrade Trotsky in his recent brochure, "Soviet Economy in Danger". The utopian theory of Socialism in one country, of an interruptedly developing socialism in a backward country going on from triumph to triumph in an ever faster tempo, has been refuted by the facts. Increasingly sharp internal contradictions and disproportions, the failure of such important branches of industry as coal and steel to meet the planned figures, and, most dangerous of all, the serious food shortage—these and a host of similar facts characterize the situation in the Soviet Union today. The weakening of the bond between workers and peasants, the concessions to "private initiative", and the growing danger of Thermidorian reaction, have their basis in this economic situation.

The basis of the crisis in the Soviet Union is the necessity of laying a socialist basis in one land and a backward one in that. This necessity is falsely idealized in the revisionist theory of "socialism in one country". In the second place, the Stalinist bureaucracy, through its adventurist as well as its opportunistic methods, has aggravated the disproportions and contradictions of Soviet economy, including those carried over from Czarist days such as the contradiction between a highly concentrated industry and a primitive agriculture. In the third place, the world crisis, which according to the Stalinist bureaucracy could be kept out of Soviet Russia through the State monopoly of foreign trade and foreign banking, has swept over the boundary lines and convincingly proved that, whether it likes it or not, the Soviet Union is indissolubly bound up with the world situation economically as well as politically.

Soviet Trade "Strictly Business"

The methods of Stalinist bureaucracy operating on the basis of reduced the role of Communist

(Continued on Page 2)

BROWNSVILLE
MASS MEETING

«The CRISIS IN GERMANY»

Auspices: Communist League of America (Opposition)

Speaker:
MAX SHACHTMAN
Editor of The Militant

Brownsville Labor Lyceum
SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 2 P. M.
219 SACKMAN ST., Bklyn N. Y.
Between Chatham & Liberty Aves.
ADMISSION 15 Cents

Trotsky Replies to S. W. P. Editors On Opposition's View of Soviet Economy

(Continued from Page 1)

from. We are far from the idea, naturally, of explaining this "lack of understanding" and this "inability" by the personal qualities of the individual leaders. It is a question of the system of thinking, of the political tendency, of the factions which have grown out of old Bolshevism. We observe one and the same methodology in the economic leadership of Stalin as in the political leadership of Thaelmann. One cannot fight successfully against the zigzags of Thaelmann without having understood that it is a question not of Thaelmann but of the nature of bureaucratic Centrism.

4. Elsewhere your article calls to mind that the Left Opposition, especially and primarily Rakovsky, warned against the over-stretched tempo of construction in good time. But right next to this you write of allegedly analogous warnings of Bucharin, Rykov and Tomsky. Your article refers twice to the perspicacity of the latter without recalling with a single word the irreconcilable antagonisms between the Right and the Left Opposition. I deem it all the more necessary to clarify this point because it is precisely the Stalin faction which recoils from no attempt to cover up or to out the deep antagonisms between the opportunist and the Marxian wings in the camp of Bolshevism.

Since 1922, the Left Opposition, more correctly its future staff, conducted a campaign for the working out of a five year plan, the axis of which was to be the industrialization of the country. As far back as that time, we proved that the tempo of the development of the nationalized industry could, in the very next years, exceed the tempo of Russian capitalism (6 percent annual increase) "two, three, and more fold." Our opponents called this program nothing but an industrial phantasy. If Bucharin, Tomsky, Rykov distinguished themselves in any respect from Stalin-Molotov, it was only in the fact that they fought even more resolutely against our "super-industrialism." The struggle against "Trotskyism" was theoretically nurtured almost exclusively by Bucharin. His criticism of "Trotskyism" later on also served as the platform of the Right wing.

Bucharin's Stand

In the course of a series of years Bucharin was, to employ his own expression, the preacher of "toroise-pace" industrialization. So he remained, at that time, when the Left Opposition demanded going over to the five year plan and to higher tempo of industrialization (in 1922-1923) as well as in the years of the ultra-Left zigzag of the Stalinists, when the Left Opposition warned against the transformation of the five year plan into a four year plan and especially against the adventurist collectivization in 1929-1932. From Bucharin's mouth spoke not the dialectical appraisal of Soviet economy in its contradictory development, but an opportunistic attitude from the very beginning, an economic minimalism.

5. How unfortunately your article mixes up Bucharin's criticism with the criticism of Rakovsky, is perceptible from the following circumstance: In the same days that your paper called attention to the apparent perspicacity of Bucharin in the past, Bucharin himself categorically and completely renounced all his former criticism at the Plenum of the Central Committee, and all his former prognoses, as fundamentally false (Pravda, January 14, 1933). Rakovsky, however, renounced nothing at the Plenum, not because he is chained to Barmen as an exile, but because he has no need of renouncing anything.

6. Right after the appearance of my brochure "Soviet Economy in Danger," a turn-about-face took place in Soviet economic policy which throws a bright light upon the problem engaging us and makes possible an infallible check upon all the prognoses of the various factions. The story of the turn-about-face—in two words—is the following:

The XVII Conference of the C. P. S. U. approved in January 1932 the principles of the second five year plan. The tempo of growth of industry was established at approximately 25 percent, with Stalin declaring at the conference that this is only the minimum limit, and that in the working out of the plan this percentage must and will be raised.

The Second Plan

The Left Opposition characterized this whole perspective as a fruit of bureaucratic adventurism. It was, as is to be understood, accused of striving for the counter-revolution, for the intervention of Japan and for the capitalist if not the feudal restoration.

Exactly one year has passed. At the last Plenum of the Central Committee Stalin brought forward a new project for the second five year plan. But not a single word did he mention of the tempos approved the year before as the minimum. Nobody decided to remind him of them. Now Stalin proposed for the second five year plan a 13 percent annual increase. We do not at all conclude from this that Stalin calculates upon engineering a Japanese intervention and the restoration of capitalism. But we draw the conclusion that the bureaucracy arrived at a moderation of the tempos not on the grounds

The C. I. At a Turning Point

(Continued from Page 1)

proletariat. "For," as Lenin said, "internationalism does not consist in phrases, declarations of solidarity or resolutions, but in action."

Now, no illusion is possible on the international consequences which the final victory of Hitler in Germany would have, that is, the consequences of the crushing of the German proletariat. "The whole future of the Russian revolution is at stake. The whole future of the international workers' revolution is at stake." These words of Lenin in 1917 are terribly timely. The same historical problem is posed today as in 1917. In 1917, in Russia, it was a question of preventing the repression of the peasant insurrection, which would have sounded the "knell of the revolution" and have signified "the final triumph of the Kornilov regime"; in saving the Russian revolution, the first fortress of the "world-wide proletarian revolution" was being saved. At the present moment, it is the victory of the Fascist counter-revolution in Germany which puts "the whole future of the international workers' revolution" at stake. The fact alone proves how pernicious and erroneous is the Stalinist theory of "socialism in a single country," which has reduced proletarian internationalism to abstract declarations of solidarity; theory which has weakened, atomized, disarmed the working class in every country by creating the illusion of a "neutralization" of the world bourgeoisie towards the first workers' State, by regarding the international revolution, the European revolution primarily, as a fact which is of no interest to the building up of socialism in the U. S. S. R.

The Decisive Question

Now it is clear to every Communist worker what was meant and what is meant by the policy of "socialism in a single country." The Communist International itself, with all the conquests of the October revolution, is in danger. And it is in Germany that the most important scene is deciding today: the Hitlerist counter-revolution is taking the lead of the international counter-revolution; the German proletariat is representing in this moment the most vital interests of the world revolution. It must be decided in one direction or the other: and upon this victory of the counter-revolution or of the revolution will depend whether the "Holy Alliance" of all the big powers will return, or the road will be taken to that which is demanded by the modern epoch, the road to the Soviet United States of Europe.

Germany, by itself exhausts the problem of the "permanent revolution." The truth of Marx that no true, no respite is possible for the forces of the revolution (for the working class), "before it has destroyed, annihilated the power by which the old society asserts itself," is fully confirmed. "After the revolution, the permanent counter-revolution becomes (for the forces of the old society) a question of daily existence." The German bourgeoisie, after having utilized the revolution of 1918, is today driven to risk the Fascist counter-revolution, by arming the disoriented petty bourgeois masses in order to pit them against the working class with the aim of extorting from it the last concessions, in order to preserve its profits at the price of the most ferocious repression and the starvation of the toiling people.

So also on the international scale. "No truce between the two societies (bourgeois and proletarian). Their material interests, their needs, demand a mortal struggle: one of the two must triumph; the other must succumb"—there, according to Marx, is the "only entente that can be established between them."

Not a doubt, therefore, that we are at the present moment before a decisive turn in the revolutionary period opened up by the victory of the Bolsheviks in October 1917. Not a doubt that Hitler seeks to gain for German imperialism the favors and the concessions of the Versailles powers by making himself the butcher of the proletariat of his countries and the Gallifet of the Russian Commune. Is all this to be stood for without resisting at all? In 1917, Lenin asserted: "There is no doubt that if the Bolsheviks allow themselves to be trapped by constitutional illusions, by 'faith' in the convocation of the Constituent, by waiting for the Congress of the Soviets, etc., they would only be miserable traitors to the cause of the proletariat." With Lenin, we can repeat today: "To allow oneself to be trapped by illusions about 'non-aggression pacts,' by the 'building of socialism in a single country,' to leave the road of the international revolution, to close one's eyes to the Fascist counter-revolution which threatens the German proletariat, the U. S. S. R., the whole world proletariat—is to betray the cause of the proletariat."

What Is Demanded?

The only means of making the supreme effort to evade this catastrophe, to deal with this crisis which is striking at the heart of world Communism—is a decisive turn on the part of the Communist International, with the result, at this moment so heavy with responsibility and danger, to the posts of struggle and of leadership which rightfully belong to them of the comrades of the Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists), and primarily the comrades of the Russian Opposition who have been thrown into the places of exile and deportation: comrade Trotsky, comrade Rakovsky, the hundreds upon hundreds of other old warriors of the October revolution.

The immediate convocation of the Seventh Congress of the Communist International, demanded by the pre-conference of the Left Opposition, thus acquires an urgent and exigent character. This Congress, with the participation of the International Left Opposition, must prove to the proletarians of all countries that the Communist International does not intend to succumb; that the Communist International is on the contrary capable of regenerating itself to fight and to triumph. What is the Communist International doing, what does it intend to do? There is the question which every conscious proletarian puts anxiously to himself and looks for a reply. Let the Communist International regain itself its initiative and its proletarian internationalism, and it will see all the healthy and honest forces, ready to struggle, of the world proletariat, flocking to its side.

Paris, Feb. 16, 1933. —FERROCI.

For the German Opposition

The international pre-conference of the Left Opposition which recently concluded its sessions in Paris, adopted a decision to raise an international fund for the work of our German brother-section. It was decided that in every country where the Left Opposition has its national section, each member shall contribute a day's pay to the fund for our German section. The last meeting of the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition) decided to endorse this campaign and to open a subscription in the columns of the Militant.

Our German section is laboring at the present time under the greatest of difficulties and the fund collected will not only be of the greatest aid financially, but it will also serve as a magnificent display of the international solidarity of the Left Opposition and all its friends and sympathizers with the Marxian wing of the German revolution. Despite the financial difficulties we are ourselves experiencing at the present moment, we gladly and enthusiastically appeal to all our readers to make a generous donation to the international fund for the Left Opposition in Germany. All contributions sent to the office for this purpose will be carefully set aside and forwarded in toto immediately to their proper destination. Money sent should therefore be designated for this specific purpose. The contributions should be sent to the Communist League of America (Opposition), 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y.

As it was, the official Left wing decided on a policy which could not but yield the outcome that it did. It decided to go to the socialist conference with the ultimatum demand that the delegates denounce the organizers of the conference and follow the lead of the Communists, that is, of the Left wing unemployment conference. With such a policy, the S. P. leaders were easily able to strengthen their bonds with their following and weaken any sympathy that the latter might have for the Left wing. The Left wing was put in the position of claiming that its conference alone was "legal," so to speak, that it alone was entitled to the monopoly of leadership—which everybody must acknowledge in advance and on the spot. Instead of gaining the indispensably necessary support of the socialist and reformist workers, the Left wing

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Another «Friend» of the Soviet Union

Cleveland—On Saturday, February 11, another "Friend of the Soviet Union"—a lawyer by the name of Maurice Sugar, from Detroit—spoke before the Cleveland workers under the auspices of the FSU, at Engineers Auditorium.

After the customary, uncritical and rosy-pink picture of the state of affairs in the Soviet Union under the Stalinist regime, a question period followed. From all over the hall came questions regarding the burning problem of how the new Hitler government in Germany will affect Soviet Russia.

The speaker in the generally lukewarm spirit that can be expected of any liberal, replied jestingly that he did not think that the Soviet government was quite satisfied with this turn of events and in general waved the question aside with a gesture of unimportance and light-mindedness.

There were also some questions about Trotsky, as usual. What Mr. Sugar failed to do in the German situation, he made up for in his own inimitable way—with the usual slanders and brazen lies about our comrade. Comrade Gordon, of the local group of the Left Opposition, arose to reply, castigating the speaker for his criminal cynicism with regard to the Hitler danger and pointing to Trotsky's warning of an attack by a victorious Hitlerism in Germany against the Russian workers' state. The comrade concluded by stressing the necessity of the return of comrade Trotsky and the Bolshevik-Leninists from exile to take their place in the ranks of the proletarian army in this dangerous situation.

Mr. Sugar, unabashed, answered with more of his pink-hued cynicism and the meeting was ended. After the meeting, however, numerous workers crowded about the few comrades of the League who were present, expressing their agreement with them that the liberal shyster had treated the serious question of the fate of the German workers, contemptuously. They asked all sorts of questions and eagerly grasped at copies of the Militant, which were distributed in good number.

At the Socialist Party Forum—At the S. P. forum, that same evening, comrade Gordon took the floor to bring the attention of the workers to the critical situation in Germany and to call for solidarity of all American workers with the hard-pressed German proletarians. He was cut short by the Socialist bureaucrats present and forced off the floor, because "the speech was not in line with the subject under discussion". A few C. P. comrades present could not restrain themselves and shouted "Social-Fascists!" at the bureaucrats. After the meeting, the Militant was distributed among those present.

A Party Meeting on Germany in Semi-Secession—Some time ago, the party called for united front efforts in the organization of an Anti-Hitler Meeting on the West Side. A small "conference" convened and there the party representative, a certain A. Landy, explained, after he discovered that a representative of the Left Opposition was present, that it was not really a united front; the party was just asking for some aid, unofficially. Some of these present protested and the Stalinist representative had to explain that the first call was a "mistake".

Nevertheless, comrade Gordon of the League, offered our cooperation in the party's undertaking. But the party representative immediately restricted all his action in making arrangements with individual persons. No definite date, nor place, nor plan of preparation was decided upon.

Several days later, on Sunday last, the meeting came off quite unexpectedly. B. D. Amis and Landy made the usual speeches for the party. In the discussion German comrade made a lengthy address calling for a united front in Germany in the same sense as that proposed by the Left Opposition. It was this speech that was greeted with the greatest applause by the workers present.

Before a German Workers' Society—On Tuesday, comrade Gordon was given the floor at a meeting of the German Mutual Aid and Benefit Society (Krankenhaus), Franklin Avenue Branch. He spoke of the need for the active participation of the workers in this country in solidarity with their German comrades under the Fascist government and of the necessity of establishing the united front against Fascism in Germany by a bloc of the C. P. G., the S. P. G., the trade unions and other workers organizations. At this conclusion he invited the members of the organization to come to our Anti-Hitler meeting in Painters' Hall, on Wednesday, February 22.

A short discussion on the matter at hand followed and a resolution, expressing solidarity with the German proletariat and calling for the establishment of the united front in the sense presented by the comrade from the L. O. was adopted. Similar resolutions have been adopted by numerous German organizations in this city and sent to the central organs of the socialist and Communist parties in Berlin.

The Socialist Party Conference

(Continued from Page 1)

themselves with the bourgeois politicians, upon preserving a so-called respectability, of hush-hushing the mass movement—and relying upon the organized proletarian movement and its militant mass action, its demonstrative pressure, the socialist fakery will always choose the former again unless their rank and file is afforded the possibility of choosing the alternative of a united front with the Left wing.

This brings us to the question of the tactics which the official Communist party leadership pursued. In the Left wing conference for Unemployment Insurance, the representatives of the Communist League of America (Opposition) proposed that the conference shall make a direct appeal to the S. P. conference for a united front of both movements, for the merger of all the organizations represented by the two conferences so that the action of the New York workers for this specific goal might be successfully coordinated. Towards this end, our comrades proposed that the Left wing send a delegation to the S. P. conference (and call upon its affiliated bodies to do likewise) for the purpose of challenging the Right wing leaders in their own citadel, so to speak. This, the Left wing delegates should have been represented at the Rand School conference to demand of its organizers and patrons that they declare themselves publicly on the question of a genuine united front. Had the Left wing adopted our proposal, and at the same time carried on an agitation among the socialist and reformist workers in the ranks for this united front offer, it would not only have strengthened its position immeasurably, but would have been able to mobilize a movement among the socialist rank and file demanding of their leaders that favorable action be taken on the Left wing proposal.

Stalinist Blundering—As it was, the official Left wing decided on a policy which could not but yield the outcome that it did. It decided to go to the socialist conference with the ultimatum demand that the delegates denounce the organizers of the conference and follow the lead of the Communists, that is, of the Left wing unemployment conference. With such a policy, the S. P. leaders were easily able to strengthen their bonds with their following and weaken any sympathy that the latter might have for the Left wing. The Left wing was put in the position of claiming that its conference alone was "legal," so to speak, that it alone was entitled to the monopoly of leadership—which everybody must acknowledge in advance and on the spot. Instead of gaining the indispensably necessary support of the socialist and reformist workers, the Left wing succeeded only in isolating itself by alienating the latter.

Not merely this is of importance, but another circumstance, which does not, it is true, conflict with the other. The socialist workers—say nothing of the hundreds of thousands and millions of unemployed—are not interested primarily in it at all, as yet in whether or not the Communists have or fight for the leadership of the unemployed movement. What they are interested in is to set in motion a genuine united movement, powerful enough to extract some immediate concessions from the plutocracy and its government. They look with a certain suspicion upon those who, to their minds, seek to "exploit" the unemployed and their struggles for purely "party" reasons. The policy pursued by the party—"our leadership" or nothing! "our conference" or no united front at all—only strengthens these suspicions in the minds of the mass. There is not, in our view, the slightest necessary conflict between building the strongest and widest possible movement of the masses, and establishing the claim of the Communists to leadership of this movement. Quite the contrary. The Communists, by denouncing in practice and in the simplest, most understandable, least ambiguous way that they have no interests separate and apart from the interests of the class as a whole, will gain the support of the masses, not only for the movement in general, but for revolutionary leadership within it in particular. That is what the united front intelligently understood and correctly practiced, signifies in essence. The Stalinist rejection of the united front and their substitution for it of the ultimatum "united front from below," has brought it to its present position in the unemployed movement, and more specifically, it led directly to the inexcusable blunder made with relation to the socialist conference.—A

LECTURE ON GERMANY

The crisis in Germany and the program of the Left Opposition will be the subject of the lecture by comrade Morris Lewis this Sunday, March 5. The lecture will be held at the Free Workers Center, 219 Second Avenue, between 13 and 14 St., under the auspices of Unser Kampf Workers Club, at 8 p. m.

OPPOSITION DEBATES I. U. L.

On Sunday, March 5 at 2:15 p. m., a debate will be held between the Left Opposition and the Industrial Union League on the subject, "Can the program and tactics of the Communist League of America bring about working class emancipation in the United States?" George Clarke will speak for the affirmative and Adolph Silver the negative. The debate will take place at the Burnside Manor, Burnside and Harrison Aves., Bronx.

Roosevelt Regime Reopens Question of Soviet Recognition and Credits

(Continued from Page 1)

"Socialism in one country" have parties outside of Russia to that of a watchman, whose purpose is to help ward off foreign intervention and particularly war. The economic relations of the Soviet Union with the capitalist world have been kept outside of the domain of revolutionary strategy. On the contrary, Stalinism has attempted to reassure world capitalism (note the Stalin interview with Campbell) that its foreign trade is "strictly business".

The Stalinists have assumed that capitalist economy would be both willing and able to absorb the exportable surpluses of the Soviet Union without such declines in prices as would upset the import program which is an essential part of the Five-Year Plan.

This assumption has been knocked to pieces by living experience. England after the Conservative victory renounced the trade treaty with Soviet Russia some months ago; Germany has imposed a quota on its imports from the Soviet Union; political as well as "strictly business" factors entered into these steps. In any case, the crisis makes it advantageous for capitalism to restrict all its operations, including foreign trade.

But the immediate as well as the ultimate interests of the working class call for a different line of action. The revolutionary answer is to rally the working masses around the struggle for economic collaboration with the Soviet Union. It provides more jobs; it strengthens the workers' state; it brings to their feet masses of workers who are not Communists but who sympathize with the Soviet Union; it tends to break down the isolation of the Soviet state from the workers of the capitalist countries; and it leads over, in a certain stage of maturity of the revolutionary development of the struggle, into the demand for workers' control of production.

It is admittedly impossible, by mass pressure, to force private interests in a capitalistic state to buy and sell where it is not profitable for them to do so under given conditions. But these conditions themselves depend upon state laws in a large measure—tariffs, restrictions on imports, etc. The influence of the masses on state laws in such matters may be powerful. In a struggle on such issues, which concern also matters like the cost of living, the proletariat can even sweep along behind it masses of the petty bourgeoisie.

Trading with Soviets and Workers' Control

The question of a more systematic influence of the masses on the external commerce of a capitalist state is intimately bound up with the question of workers' control of production. Beginning with questions of wages and profit, the control of production expands over all the other functions of the enterprise, then of the group of enterprises, over whole branches of industry and the entire national economy.

Workers' control of production would compel capitalism to collaborate in the work of economic construction in the Soviet Union beyond the limits which are set by the possibilities of profit, particularly under the present conditions.

Japan and U. S. S. R.

(Continued from Page 1)

"in general" and "in principle" with the League's position, he will not permit America to be pushed into war at this time. London will not reap the harvest if Washington can help it.

London again reveals her backing of Japan by declaring an arms embargo, whose patent fraud is recognized in the bourgeois press here and abroad. Present contracts are inviolable. And pay for how many years do the contracts run? How much has been allotted to Japan by Vickers-Armstrong? In the debate on the embargo that is inevitable pool-bait, Lansbury, reveals the inner hollowiness of the social democracy. He states that it is impossible to exclude the possibility of war between Japan and Russia. But, he adds, it is not true that Japan is holding back the forces of Communism. No, says Lansbury, do not give Japan credit for that. The credit should doubtless go to the insipid Lansburys and the social democratic betrayers. Lansbury expresses faith that the U. S. will "act right". Indeed she will! One hundred percent "right", for American imperialism.

The attitude of Soviet Russia on the present situation is still being awaited, not only by the bourgeoisie but by the Communists of the world. Russian diplomacy, under the blind, opportunist "guidance" of Litvinov, has tasted all the fruits of that shriveled tree, socialism in one country. Again and again, the lasting interests of the world proletariat have been sacrificed to the desire for immediate "benefits" for the Soviet Union. Russian diplomacy is again placed in the dilemma of deciding which road to follow. If the Soviets properly denounce the entire fraud being perpetrated by the League of Nations, the Russian "diplomats" feel that the chances for recognition by America will be jeopardized. If the Soviet Union agrees to "cooperate" with the League, then in the immediate situation, Russia again renounces her leadership of the proletariat. Can we hope for any change of policy? Or will we witness a new compromise?

—JACK WEBER.

of world crisis. Carried beyond a certain point, this struggle could raise the whole question of state power, put the world revolution again on the order of the day, and transform the whole question of economic collaboration between Soviet Russia and one or more countries which are now capitalist, into the question of the creation of an international planning board.

In Germany the political prerequisites for such a situation have reached a higher stage of development than in any other country; if the working class can develop the power and cohesion needed to defeat Hitler, it will be in a position to present and press forward its own demands, political and economic, in which the demand for workers' control of production, intimately linked up with the demand for economic collaboration with the Soviet Union, unlimited by consideration for the profits of this or that group of capitalists or of capitalism as a whole, would develop all its revolutionary logic.

Credits for the Soviet Union and American Working-Class Demand

In the United States, development of the workers' forces and of the revolutionary situation has not gone so far as in Germany. On the other hand, American imperialism has a powerful financial basis while that of German imperialism is weak.

The approach to economic collaboration with the Soviet Union in this country might well be through the question of credits. In many European countries (Germany, England, Italy, Holland, etc.) export credits to the Soviet Union are guaranteed to the amount of 60-80 percent by the government. This greatly reduces the cost of credit, and consequently the cost of imports, to the Soviet Union. Certainly the very least that the American working class has a right to demand is that the American bourgeois government go as far as the bourgeois governments of Europe in supporting exports to the Soviet Union by a guarantee of a large part of the exporters' credits.

But the interests of the American worker and of the Soviet Union demand that the American government go further. It must extend substantial credits to the Soviet Union, instead of having Soviet imports limited by the extent to which individual American capitalists are willing to do business with the Soviets.

The main reliance for the financing of Soviet imports in the past has been placed on its export trade. It has had access to but little credit, and that only at exorbitant rates, about 30 to 40 percent a year. The average increase from year to year in the Soviets' outstanding credits has been only 10 percent of its best year's exports. Obviously this is only a slight reinforcement to the buying power of the Soviet Union, and consequently to its construction program. Recently there has been some talk about the Soviet Union floating a ten-year loan in the United States, but the figure mentioned was about 40 million roubles, a drop in the bucket.

The financial blockade of the Soviet Union continues to be effective, in spite of the high interest rates which it offers. The Stalinist policy, of relying on the "strictly business" self-interest of capitalism to serve as the basis of economic collaboration which is indispensable to the work of economic construction in Soviet Russia, has been an utter failure.

Credits for the Soviet Union as a Political Question

The energy of the international Communist party, the sympathies of the masses, even the direct interest of the petty bourgeoisie, must be mobilized in a political manner in the various capitalist countries for the benefit of the broad masses and of the Soviet Union. This involves a break with the theory and practice of "socialism in one country"—but it has the little advantage that it directly fits up the immediate needs of the broadest masses in capitalist countries with the problem of economic construction in the Soviet Union, in spite of the capitalist denial by Stalinism that the building up of Socialism in Russia has any connection with the workers' movement elsewhere.

In America, where the whole question of recognition is to be raised shortly, the working class and particularly the Communist party as its spearhead must put forth its demands for the extension of adequate credits to the Soviet Union.

The demand of credits for the Soviet Union can, no doubt, be considered as an isolated practical slogan. Such a way of posing the question would have a reformist character, and as such would not give serious practical results; for the international economic operations of capitalism are determined by considerations of profit, and the political interests of the capitalist class, not by the "pressure" of the working class.

The slogan of economic collaboration with the Soviet Union, credits, recognition, etc., must be introduced into a system of transitional slogans of the struggling proletariat. The immediately practical results in favor of the Soviet Union could be obtained, while so doing, as by-products, insofar as reforms generally are the by-products of a revolutionary struggle.

But the main achievement would be the fact that the workers would be concretely and practically confronted with the problems of planned economy—that is, the problems of socialism.

—B. J. FIELD.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.

Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Martha Aberr James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabeck

Friday, March 3, 1933
Vol. VI, No. 15 (Whole No. 162)
Subscription rate: $2.00 per year,
Foreign $2.50. One cent a copy.

OFF THE PRESS!

Two New Pamphlets By

LEON TROTSKY

Soviet Economy
In DangerIn Defense of the Russian Revolution

72 Pages

10 cents 48 Pages

5 cents

3 for twenty-five cents

Minimum number per order 5

Postage 1c extra per copy

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York

1 CENT
A COPYTHE
MILITANTPublished 3 times a week, Monday,
Wednesday and Friday

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Workers of the World,
Unite!Published three weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 16 [WHOLE NO. 163] NEW YORK, MONDAY, MARCH 6, 1933 PRICE 1 CENT

National Banking Crisis Fascist Elections Show Stalinist Bankruptcy

STAGE IN GENERAL CRISIS OF CAPITALISM IN THIS COUNTRY THROWS BOURGEOISIE INTO PANIC; ITS 'WAY OUT' TO BE SOUGHT ON BACKS OF WORKERS

The present cyclical crisis began in 1929 with a financial crisis, in the form of a crash on the stock market; now, after nearly 3 1/2 years, it is marked by a nationwide banking crisis. What does this mean? Is it what the Stalinists call "the end of the stabilization of capitalism," or the terrified bourgeois still more simply call "the end of the world?"

Crises, as we know, are not accidents under capitalism, but an intrinsic part of the mechanism; they have a definite role, which Marx has described as follows, "Crises are only violent and temporary solutions of existing contradictions, violent eruptions which reestablish for a time the equilibrium which has been destroyed."

These contradictions involve the overproduction of goods in the face of the poverty and underconsumption of the masses; the creation of artificial and exaggerated symbols of value through the expansion of credit and stock speculation, and a sharp rise in money rates and commodity prices, all constituting what we call inflation, or a contradiction between real values and the paper representatives of such values.

The role of the crisis is to get rid of overproduction by forcing the capitalist to reduce his production, to get rid of inflation by forcing down prices, money rates and outstanding credit. Ultimately it creates a situation in which prices are low, money rates are low, capital is abundant, the "growths and swellings" as Trotsky calls them, such as insensate and Kreuger, are removed, and the pre-conditions are created for a turn in the crisis into a depression, and ultimately perhaps even into a period of stabilization or a boom.

Crisis and the Class Struggle

But the crisis is also an arena of the class struggle, and not only economic but also certain social and political conditions are required for the ending of a crisis period and the preparation of a period of stabilization. If the working class, well organized through its own party, puts itself at the head of the masses, and makes all the measures by which the bourgeoisie attempts to throw the burden of the crisis off to other classes; if it is able to put up effective and generalized resistance to wage cuts, to force demands for unemployment insurance at the expense of the capitalists, to compel the governments to tax the rich instead of the masses, and its other immediate demands in time of crisis, the capitalist will be a long time in restoring the margin of profit in his production on which the restoration of business activity and with it, the turn in the crisis, depend.

These struggles are in their most important aspects non-parliamentary they tend to mobilize the masses for broader aims, and as the crisis becomes deeper and sharper, they may easily take on a highly political and revolutionary character. The German crisis of 1929-33, based on the steady inflation of the mark, culminated in the revolutionary crisis of October 1932, followed by an abortive Nazi putsch a month later. When the bourgeois German state had proven its ability to stave off the revolution even without the aid of the Nazis, it was able to invite the Nazis to discuss currency reform, and begin its way out of the crisis.

At the present moment in the United States, whether or not the turn in the crisis has already arrived, unquestionably most of the work of the crisis in violently and brutally solving, for the moment, the contradictions developed during the boom, has been accomplished. Commodity prices are low, many enterprises have gone out of business, capital has been rendered more liquid, money rates are low, production is down to 50% of "normal."

The violent crisis in the banking field has not therefore the character of the prelude to a period of deflation and liquidation; that period is largely or entirely behind us. Has it the character of the beginning of a final collapse of capitalism?

No Automatic Collapse of Capitalism

That seems most unlikely. It would mean that capitalism could be finally defeated on one sector of the economic front alone, and by the automatic working of the market, at that. The forces of the working class, poorly organized, divided and without the class leadership of a determined and clear-sighted Communist party, have had many more defeats than victories in the class struggle under crisis conditions—not only in strikes against wage cuts, in the question of adequate unemployment relief and insurance, but politically they have not been able to mobilize the masses against the bourgeoisie. There is no use in recapitulating the chapter of defeats and mistakes; we have pointed out the responsibility of the Communist party as the record has developed, its failure to assemble the proletariat around its banner and assume the leadership of the broadest masses.

This failure constitutes the political pre-condition for the capitalist solution of the present crisis, internationally as well as on the national scale. With a correct line of policy executed in a Bolshevik manner, Hitler would stand every chance of being defeated, and one of the weakest links in the capitalist chain might be definitely broken; the masses in other capitalist countries might be torn away from bourgeois and petty bourgeois influence and mobilized behind the Communist party, and capitalism find ever-increasing difficulty in

(Continued on Page 2)

Policy of «United Front From Below» Fails to Win Over Masses of Socialist Workers

In an atmosphere of unprecedented terrorism, intimidation and the suppression of Communist, socialist and even Centrist publications and meetings, the German Nazis have gained a distinct election victory which, together with the vote rolled up by the Hugenburg Nationalists, gives them a parliamentary majority in a Reichstag which has now lost particularly all importance.

The election victory of the Hitler-Hugenburg regime is due almost exclusively to the rise in the Nazi vote, which not only exceeded the vote in November 1932, but even passed beyond the number they had at their apex, in July 1932. Forty-four percent of the voting population cast its ballot for Hitler. In Catholic Bavaria, the Nazis made a huge sweep, ousting the Centrist party from control—an accomplishment which they all but attained in the Catholic capital of Germany, Cologne.

The figures thus far available are not yet complete as we go to press, but they are more than adequate for a summary of the results. The usual stay-at-home vote was apparently thought out by the millions in the largest vote yet cast in Germany, and it is mainly from this source that the increase in the Hitler vote was obtained. The Catholic Center appears to have held its own, but with the shifts in other parties, and with the increased vote cast, it is no longer in a position to affect the parliamentary situation as a balance of power—a position it has enjoyed for years. The Social Democratic Party did a little better than hold its own. The Communist vote, however, was drastically reduced by some twenty percent, to a total of less than 5,000,000, losing heavily in Berlin where the Nazis, and not the Communists, are now the largest party, with 1,000,000 votes as compared with 720,000 votes last November.

National Socialists	288	196
Social Democrats	125	123
Communists	81	100
Centrists	72	69
Bavarians	19	19
Nationalists	52	51
Scattered	9	24
	647	582

The Hitler regime—based on the Nazi-Nationalist coalition—thus has an absolute parliamentary majority with which to operate "legally" in the carrying out of its murderous policy of exterminating the organizations and institutions of the working class. More than that: the Nazi threat that the Communist deputation in the Reichstag will not be seated is constantly kept in reserve. If the Communist party is outlawed, or if its representatives are excluded from the Reichstag, the Nazis would then have an absolute majority on the parliamentary plane even without the support of their present Nationalist colleagues in the cabinet! The uneasiness of the Hugenburg camilla at the prospect of the Communists being unelected, is one of those paradoxes of politics which is quite comprehensible in the present circumstances.

But the parliamentary field is the least decisive of all in the present German situation. The just concluded election was purely and simply a plebiscite, the present Reichstag is a plebiscitary Reichstag, and the Hitler regime a plebiscitary regime. The principal opposition parties, from the Communists through the social democrats as far to the Right as the Catholic Center, were bound and gagged for weeks before the election took place. Not a single Communist publication appeared for days before the votes were cast. The two solitary social democratic papers allowed to appear before the elections in Thuringia, were compelled to reproduce Hitler's attack on the "Marxists" in their columns. Several Catholic periodicals were confiscated or suspended. No meetings of the social democrats or the Communists were permitted.

The election posters of both these parties were ripped off the billboards. The possibilities for election propaganda and agitation by these two parties were reduced to a tiny minimum.

In spite of the terrorism of the Nazis, the Communists managed to retain some eighty percent of their previous votes, and the social democrats even increased their balloting strength. But there is little consolation in this for the Communist party. As soon as the March 5, 1933 elections were announced, the Militant proclaimed them to be a fascist trap, designed to concentrate the attention of the working class exclusively on the parliamentary field and to distract them from mobilizing their efforts for the extra-parliamentary struggle—the only kind of struggle which can effectively deal with the now overwhelming threat of Fascism. The outcome of the elections bear out this contention. The elections settled nothing fundamental, nor could they have settled anything. At most, the voting gave the Nazis a convenient "parliamentary basis" for destroying "democratic parliamentarism."

But the elections nevertheless have a considerable symptomatic significance. The increase in the Hitler vote came predominantly from the petty bourgeois and conservative elements of the population. Their vote for Hitler was essentially an expression of their attendant convulsions. By giving Hitler "parliamentary majority," they hoped to avoid the costs of a civil war. Only, it cannot and will not be averted.

Of even greater significance, is the vote cast for the Communist and social democratic parties. The Communist vote declined, and the importance of this fact, even though it is far from decisive, cannot be ignored. The social democratic masses continued to give their support to the social democratic party. By this act, they gave a decisive reply to the empty boasts of the Stalinists that their policy was succeeding in breaking the socialist masses away from their leadership. And precisely herein lies the most significant aspect of the March elections!

It was claimed that the "united front from below" was winning the socialist masses to the Communist party. The Left Opposition replied that the socialist masses will be won over to a militant united front when the Communist party makes an open and sincere offer to their organizations, when it sits down with the leadership of the social democratic party and the trade unions to discuss a concrete program of action against the menace of Fascism. The elections are one of the numerous proofs that the "united front from below" has not only not succeeded in breaking the allegiance of the socialist masses to their organizations and leaders, but that it has served the Weis-Stampfer-Hilferding crew perfectly.

The results of the elections which are not, we repeat, of decisive importance, but are highly symptomatic, must give every Communist worker food for thought. It is essential, that the course of the Leninist united front. The Fascist triumph in the elections will only result in greater arrogance, more brutal measures against the proletariat and its movement, more violent suppressions and attacks. There is but one way to meet this attack—the mobilization of the German working class in a united front. There is only one way in which to establish the united front at the present time—the appeal from organization to organization.

In its appeal, just published in the socialist New Leader, the Bureau of the Labor and Socialist International (Second International) has declared: "The Labor and Socialist International has always been ready to negotiate with the Communist International with a view to common action as soon as this body is also ready." Our opinion of the desire for "action" of the Socialist bureaucracy, is quite well known; so is their own treacherous record which has paved the road to the triumph of Hitler. But it is precisely with such statements as the one quoted that the statements of the Second International retain their hold upon the socialist workers. The Communist International, which should have been the one to initiate such a movement, must pick up the challenge, must break its criminal silence, and declare:

The Communist International is prepared to negotiate with the Second International for the elaboration of a concrete program of action against Fascism. The German Communist Party is prepared to sit down for a joint discussion of the problem with the Executive Committee of the German social democracy and its party. We can under no circumstances agree to the social democratic party's proposal for a "non-aggression pact" where we are supposed to refrain from criticism and an independent policy; such an agreement would be capitulation and treachery to the revolution. But we will enter into a united front on a minimum program of action, with each organization to retain its independence, its freedom of policy and criticism. We enter into it not out of love for the social democratic leaders, not with any illusions about them, but because of the burning need of the hour to the united working class front to smash Fascism.

The Communist International, together with the German Communist Party, must take this step. If they fail to act in this manner, they will bear their share of the direct responsibility for the murderous bloodbath and catastrophe which the Fascist hands are preparing for the German proletariat.

—M. S.

Lovestone Group and the Opposition

A Political Swindle Exposed

The current issue of the Workers Age, organ of the Lovestone Right wing, contains the following attack upon the Opposition which we quote in full:

"But the most pitiful figure is by the Trotskyites. They, who not so long ago (Militant, July 25, 1933) insisted that it is absurd to think that the imperialists will welcome a Fascist dictatorship in Germany, who sagely informed us that on the contrary, they (the imperialists) have every reason to reinforce and support the social democracy and parliamentary forms, who were so sure (in 1931) that it has never yet been demonstrated that Fascism can have a stable endurance in such a highly industrialized country as Germany, these people, who later (Militant, Nov. 12, 1932) saw the 'Nazi social reservoir of voting strength well high exhausted' so that the Hitlerites 'must strive to fulfill their aims by violent seizure of power,' these people who branded as 'opportunism' the first calls of the Communist Opposition for a united anti-Fascist front, these people who even today (Militant, Feb. 24, 1933) regard Hitler as the 'screen' for Hugenburg, who can hopefully assert that 'the chief instruments of power are not in Hitler's hands, who echo the official Communist party that 'the social democracy is the most important prop of bourgeois domination', under all circumstances all the time, these same people now have the audacity to declare (Militant, Feb. 4, 1933) that 'the Left Opposition was the first to sound the alarm signal that Fascism was threatened (?), that it had to be met by a united front of all workers organizations!' Is this merely shabby self-deception or is it outright political swindling?"

Not bad, what? More exactly, it might be bad if it were all true. But when the Lovestone press "quotes" the Left Opposition, the very first thing to do is to take it for granted that it is deliberately misquoting us, distorting our point of view, or resorting to slight of hand. The present instance is a case in point. Let us examine from the files of the Militant the sections presumably quoted by Lovestone, so that one may judge who is engaged in "outright political swindling."

1. Here is what the Militant of July 25, 1931 really said: "At the present time, the main prop of capitalism in Germany is the social democracy functioning through 'democratic' forms. Its strength derives from the illusions of millions of workers in the democratic deceptions. It is absurd to think that the imperialists will discard this mighty bulwark against revolution as long as it serves its purpose. Only when the majority of the workers turn away from the social democracy to the Communists will the capitalists turn to the last resort—armed force expressed through Fascism. A Fascist dictatorship, by its ruthless abolition of democratic forms, would thereby turn away millions of workers from the support of the regime, and correspondingly undermine it. It has never yet been demonstrated that Fascism can have a stable endurance in such a highly industrialized country as Germany, with a powerful and well-organized working class. The imperialist bourgeoisie whose fate is bound up with the fate of German capitalism, have no interest to plunge into this desperate alternative, of their own volition. On the contrary, they have every reason to reinforce and support the social democracy and the parliamentary forms which have served them and saved them up to now. They will not risk Fascism until they have to." (Our emphasis.)

All the difference in the world, isn't there? Now, the Militant of November 12, 1932:

"As we have pointed out previously in these columns, the Hitlerites cannot hope to arrive in power by the smooth parliamentary train. The preceding election already indicated that, so far as elections are concerned, the Nazi social reservoir of voting strength was well-nigh exhausted. Not a parliamentary movement in the ordinary bourgeois sense, the Fascists must strive to fulfill their aims by the violent seizure of power and the more violent extermination of all proletarian movements and institutions. Or, if the necessity for such a step is

(Continued on Page 2)

Oppositionists Attacked

Last Friday night at Pitkin and Rockaway Avenue, members of the Left Opposition were again treated to a wholesale exposure of Stalinism in action. For the third or fourth time in a year, the aspiring bureaucrats of the American Youth Club saw fit to stir up hysteria for a physical attack on us. Though outnumbered at least two to one, our comrades halted this "hard guy" display that has taken the place of Leninist education. After this failure, we were invited to participate in putting back the furniture of an unemployed worker in a house at which a rent strike was going on. We accepted and the ironic picture was afforded to all the workers present—who had not been engaged in the melee—of the common bond of unity between us despite slander and despite terrorism. However, after we had arrived at the house (the furniture we were then told was in the cellar), waiting for some of the cops to clear out, a functionary arrived who saw fit to suspend operations. ("Trotskyists cannot fraternize, and they have no right to move furniture with us—they are Left social fascists"). We said we were always ready to cooperate with the unemployed councils and had done so in the past. It could be seen that many of them changed their attitude toward us. We invited them down to the Sunday meeting and the proof of the beginning of their education was that they came.

—R.

Chinese Bourgeoisie Is Impotent
Before Advancing Japanese Armies

The democratic phase of the Chinese revolution included as its major task the ousting of the foreign imperialists and the national unification of China. This task could only have been accomplished with the aid of the wide masses of workers and peasants. The revolution swept towards the goal of its first phase only as long as the Chinese masses were drawn irresistibly and on an ever greater scale into the movement for liberation. It was inevitable, however, that the oppressed classes, on whom rested the actual burden of carrying on the armed struggle, under the ferment of revolutionary activity, should come into conflict not only with the foreign oppressors but with their own native exploiters. This phase of the Chinese revolution did not wait upon the successful achievement of the program of unification common to all classes, bourgeois, worker and peasant, participating in the first stage. The irrepressible class struggle broke out before the imperialists had been swept into the sea and in the conflict that followed the vanguard of the working class, the Communists, on whom depended the continuation of the revolution, was all but exterminated.

Failure to Unify China

The Chinese bourgeoisie preferred far rather the continued strangling of China by the imperialist powers, so long as they were permitted to continue their own exploitation, than their own overthrow and their disappearance as a class through the dictatorship of the proletariat. But with the bloody suppression of the revolutionary workers and peasants, the native bourgeoisie, with the willing assistance of foreign imperialism, became the spear-head of counter-revolution in China. The revolution ebbed and the aim of unification failed of accomplishment because the masses did not succeed in marching forward, under the leadership of the Communists, beyond the narrower first aims of the revolution, to the conquest of power under working class dictatorship. Thus the Chinese revolution is a negative example (one hesitates to call it a "living" example) of the theory of the permanent revolution.

The lessons of the second phase of the Revolution remain as an abiding memory in the minds of the present bourgeois rulers of China. If today they are completely impotent in the defense of China against Japanese imperialism, it is because they fear above everything else to arouse the masses and arm them for a real struggle. For that would mean the resurrection of the revolution which, they clearly see, could only result in their own downfall. Ultimately, Chiang Kai-Shek, instead of sending a single soldier to Jehol for the defense of China against imperialist invasion, continues to battle with the peasant Soviets in his effort to establish his hegemony, if only in a few provinces. T. V. Soong, reactionary banker—the richest man in China—can only say at this juncture that the Japanese aggression is a good thing, for "in the long run" it will result in the "real" unification of China. Meantime he impotently offers, not any attempt at effective resistance, but the lives of one hundred million Chinese men to the Japs. These Chinamen "will know how to die." All the mercenary, thieving handiwork and bourgeois compradors are sending their wealth, that ill-gotten wealth coined out of the blood of the Chinese masses, out of the country and are "disappearing" themselves. "Governor" Tang Yu-lin of Jehol, that great opium-drugman of China, carefully evacuated his gold and his wives and has now left Jehol himself for destinations unknown.

The Japanese Continue Advance

Thus the Japanese conquer with almost no resistance because China, under the rule of the Chiang Kai-Sheks has failed to unify and has failed to build up its industries rapidly enough to supply a modern army. Having met no real obstacles, the Japanese will continue to seize more and more Chinese territory. The press repeats statements that the Japanese have demanded the withdrawal of Chinese troops from Tientsin, the next objective of the invasion.

—J. WEBER.

Newark Meeting

at the Hungarian Workers Home
87-16th Ave.,
Newark, N. J.

Saturday Evening, March 11th,
S. P. M.

THE GERMAN PROLETARIAT

AND FASCISM

Speaker:
JAMES P. CANNON

EVERYBODY WELCOME!

Communist League of America
(Opposition) Newark branch

Speakers:

JAMES P. CANNON
MAX SHACHTMAN
MARTIN ABERN, Chairman

LABOR TEMPLE

FRIDAY, MARCH 10th, 8 P. M.
14th Street and Second Avenue
LARGE HALL
ADMISSION 15 CENTS

MANHATTAN
MASS MEETING

After the German Elections—What Now?

(Sponsored by Communist League of America (Opposition))

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Stalinists Sabotage United Front

St. Louis.—The Unity Conference held at St. Louis by the Unemployed Councils unanimously passed the demand of the Left Opposition for a standing committee of each organization to compose a United Front Unemployed Conference Committee. And from this committee trade union and organizational committees were to be elected to work for the Permanent United Front movement and the calling of the second conference.

The bureaucrats did not dare to come before the workers with any opposition to this. The committee was supposed to hold its first meeting at the Labor Lyceum on Tuesday, Feb. 21st. The Opposition and its auxiliary organizations sent three delegates to this meeting. The opportunities for sabotaging the committee were made up for at the Labor Lyceum. As soon as the Left Opposition showed up the bureaucrats hanging around the lobby became nervous and there was much running to and fro and much whispering. Our efforts, to find out to what room in the three-story building of the Labor Lyceum the Committee was to meet, were in vain. We were finally led into a room on the second floor where we sat twiddling our thumbs for about a half an hour when we were informed that this was an S. L. P. section meeting and asked what our business was there.

With the exception of the delegates of the Left Opposition and two delegates from the Socialist party no one else showed up. The last named delegates however, did not suffer the same fate as that of the Left Oppositionists outlined in the preceding paragraph. It is significant that the only one of the Stalinist organizations represented was the Unemployed Councils whose delegate was Stone. Comrade Goldberg, who came late and by the mere chance stumbled into the committee meeting, informed us of this fact and also that not only was no regular meeting held but no definite date was set for the next meeting of the committee.

In the course of our search of the committee meeting we found guards downstairs in front of the auditorium where an "open" meeting of the Unemployed Council was in session. Thinking that we desired to enter these faithful keepers of the gate informed us that it was a private meeting and no one would be allowed to go in. With this we took our departure.

—G. ROBERTS.

Two Unemployment Conferences

Philadelphia. Last week saw two "United Front" conferences in Philadelphia on unemployment. One was sponsored by the Communist Unemployed Councils; the other by the Socialists. To both the local branches of the C. L. A. (O.) sent delegates, to present our program and to participate in the work. At the Left wing conference our delegation was seated. At the socialist conference they were, in common with all other radical organizations, not even admitted to the hall.

Last Sunday, February 19, the Unemployed Council's "Conference Against the State Commissionary Relief Plan" meeting, 260 delegates representing about 150 organizations, and many visitors enthusiastically greeted the first marked turn in Phila. of the Official C. P. organizations toward a broader united front. The week previously the Socialist party was forced by the calling of this conference, to send out their own call for a separate conference in conjunction with their Unemployed Citizens' League organization and the Hoosier Workers (A. F. of L.) Union which they dominate. The U. C. provisional committee, over the signature of comrade E. Bender, copied with it, in the form of an open letter addressed, to and behold, not to the rank and file below, but to the organizer of the S. P. conference, Franz Daniels.

The various reporters and speakers at the conference recognized correctly enough the splitting tactic of the local socialists, but there they stopped. The united front did not extend to an offer of joint work.

Comrade Lecomte presented our resolution on program and tactics before the conference body; urged the necessity of offers of common action with the Socialists on the immediate demands outlined by us—as a true method to either force the hand of Daniels, etc. or to further expose their claim to any desire for united action. He offered the full cooperation of the League in the furtherance of the work of the conference.

What the conference lacked was a broader representation of the working class and a broad and far reaching enough program to cope with the unemployment problem. It narrowed its aims down to the State Hunger March and Demonstration. No organizational report was discussed by the delegates. Our resolution was supported by the committee and comrade Roberts had to force the issue from the floor. The bureaucratic steering committee was able to prevent it from being taken to a vote.

The final action that the conference took is indeed significant. The S. P. conference was called to meet the following Saturday. In New York you recall, party leaders attacked our comrades' proposal to send delegates to a similar meeting, because we would increase the prestige of the fakers. But now! the meeting decided (1) to elect an official committee of ten and have it represent this conference, to the socialist conference on Saturday. And (2) urged; nay insisted, that all delegates present be delegated by their organizations to the Socialist confab to fight for the adoption of the program of this conference.

That the party leadership, just breaking out of their long third period stage had no intention of a real Leninist United Front and prepare to jointly work and fight for their program to the extent of offering proportional representation is I think undeniable. But what a vindication of all our propaganda! That many of those present recognized it cannot be doubted. The conference accepted our delegate Roberts as one of its committee of ten.

After the meeting individual party comrades speaking to us said, "Well, you got your kind of a United Front at last; I think it's a k."

The Socialist "Conference on Unemployment" (Saturday, Feb. 25), resembled even in many of its details what the reports bring us of the similar conference of the S. P. in New York City. Almost none of the Left wing-Red organizations received or could get the official invitation and so they made out credentials of their own. Looking the official c. k. of the Socialist party organizer, Daniels, a "Militant", they were refused admittance. Even organizations which had obtained the official paper, but being radical were rejected. We were all "illegitimate organizations."

I am told the Ypselers had a difficult time to get in! Comrade Kornfeldt who came representing the Hoosier Workers' Union, and a few others who did get in, demanded our admittance to no avail. The upshot of the whole affair was this—Inside the S. P. together with the IWW made a united front to keep the Communists out of their united front. Outside, in the ante-room milled about the party organization delegates and ourselves; enough of them by far to swamp the socialist conference if admitted. No wonder the S. P. fakers who called their meeting only after the Communists called one were in fear of being "captured."

What shall we do—the resolution we had—calling for joint sessions was not admitted. The task remains, to prove our sincere desire for united action of the working class against hunger—our willingness to show our program in action—for approval of the working class; to propose this must be done by the Executive Committee of our Conference—a joint meeting of both committees and the calling of a conference with proportional representation. This will remove the rejoinder of the fakers that the Communists want to capture them. It will give us a mass to appeal to which from the outside we can't meet. It can well start in Philadelphia and in the State a broad united front knitting together the employed and the unemployed, the organized and the unorganized in a common struggle for the needs today, of the workers. In such a united front of action our program will demand its adoption and prove its correctness.

I.L.D. Expels St. Louis Oppositionist

St. Louis.—Although the Beazly branch of the I.L.D. has an average attendance of about ten, the last meeting was filled to overflowing with the tense and heated faces of the South Side branch of the Communist party—not five of whom carry membership cards in the I.L.D.

The first order on the agenda was the report of the I.L.D. delegates to the Unity Conference. In his report Payer outlined the general program adopted by the United Front Unemployed Conference. This included demands of immediate relief, unemployment insurance, six-hour day and Long Term credits to the Soviet Union; the formation of a permanent U. F. U. C. consisting of one delegate from each organization to carry out the following activities; arrange March 4th joint demonstration for immediate relief; send speakers to all working class organizations in the city asking for a speaker from each tendency; issue 20,000 popular leaflets explaining the aims of the U. F. U. C. program; make arrangements for the calling of a second conference; organize a trade union committee to concentrate on getting union support. Payer pointed out that the entire program adopted was our "Trotskyist" program. This is the very same program which we had been urging the C. P. to adopt and for which we had been called "counter-revolutionists."

He also report upon the sabotaging of the conference work by the central committees of the Unemployed Councils—by the failure to hold the agreed upon Tuesday (Feb. 21) committee meeting.

Payer introduced the motion that "the Beazly branch, I. L. D. requests the C. C. of the Unemployed Councils to carry out the decisions of the united front unemployed conference by immediately calling the proposed meeting of the U. F. U. C. committee consisting of one delegate from each organization represented at the conference." The vote was 4 affirmative and 20 negative, three abstained—all the Stalinists naturally voted against.

Then a Stalinist motion—"To accept the report of all delegates to the conference with the exception of Payer's." On the question (by Casano) as to what was wrong with Payer's report none of the Stalinists could give a reason. However they replied by voting—22 affirmative, 5 negative.

Then another Stalinist motion "to get down to business" to expel Payer from the branch because of being a "disrupter." In the discussion that followed Payer endeavored to show that it was the Stalinists who were "disrupting" the organization and not he. He pointed out his record in the I.L.D. branch since organized; showed how all committees, all delegations to which he was elected were sabotaged by the higher S. E. C. Due to interruptions from the Stalinists he was not allowed to continue. "He spoke too long already" was the substance of what about a dozen Stalinists were saying at the same time. The vote was 19 affirmative, 5 negative with three abstentions.

Payer was then ordered to leave the hall. After Payer left, one of the newer Stalinists, Horrorn, thinking to further expose "Trotskyism" made a motion for an open discussion on the "Trotskyists" with speakers from both sides. Pandemonium broke loose. The Stalinists themselves split on the question. The voting was 10 negative and 8 affirmative with 8 abstaining. The motion lost, but only by a small margin.

At the very same time Payer was being expelled at the South Side I. L. D. the following motion was made and vigorously defended on the floor at the North Side Mooney branch of the I.L.D. by George Roberts and Harry Goldberg—"The Mooney branch protests to the National Committee, I. L. D., against the expulsions of workers from I.L.D. branches because of their political affiliations. In particular, members of the Communist League of America (Opposition) called 'Trotskyists' demand their immediate reinstatement in order to maintain the I.L.D. as a broad defense organization of all workers." The motion was lost but also by a narrow margin; 7 negative, 5 affirmative with 7 abstentions.

International Pre-Conference of the Left Opposition Presents Thesis

(We begin today with the publication of the most important of the theses adopted at the international Pre-Conference of the International Left Opposition which concluded its sessions last month in Paris. Representatives were present from the Russian, Greek, Swiss, American and other sections of the Opposition. The theses which we reprint here are now up for discussion in the membership of the Opposition for final adoption at the regular International Conference which is planned for convocation later in the year.—Ed.)

The task of the coming Conference of the Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists) consists of accepting a clear and precisely-formulated platform and organizational stance, as well as of selecting the leading bodies. The preceding theoretical, political and organizational work of the Left Opposition in various countries, especially in the last four years, has created sufficiently prerequisites for the solution of this task.

The fundamental programmatic and political documents of the Left Opposition are issued in no less than 15 languages. The Left Opposition disposes of 32 periodical publications in 16 countries. It has reorganized and strengthened its sections in 9 countries and in the past three years created new sections in 7 countries. But the most important and most valuable achievement is the undeniable raising of the theoretical level of the International Left Opposition, the growth of its ideological solidity and of its revolutionary initiative. The Organ of the Left Opposition in the U. S. S. R.

The Left Opposition, arose in 1923, ten years ago, in the land of the October revolution, in the ruling Party of the first workers' state. The delay in the development of the October revolution had necessarily called forth a political reaction in the land of the October

More will be heard from St. Louis later. Already the Stalinist bureaucratic have polarized (publicly) to other members of the L. O. and to sympathizers and stated that they were next. We will naturally fight against the expulsions with all our forces by relentlessly exposing the absolute bankruptcy of the Stalinist bureaucrats—in whose hands the working class defense movement has actually lost in membership (10,000 members in 1929—only 8,500 in 1932!) despite the most favorable objective circumstances.

—MARTIN PAYER.

Communist workers: Why is the Communist International silent about the crisis in Germany? Why is Stalin silent?

A Political Swindle Exposed

(Continued from Page 1)

obviated by the collapse of the proletarian movement—as happened in October 1923—the bourgeoisie saves itself the expense of the inevitably ensuing sanguinary conflict, a period of "stabilization" sets in and the Fascist movement begins to decompose. And with it, the revolutionary proletarian party. From this it does not follow that the Fascist danger to the German proletariat is now eliminated, or even definitively on the decline. Such a conclusion can be drawn only by those for whom the class struggle begins at the ballot box and ends with the parliamentary mandate." (Our emphasis.)

Now, finally, for the Militant, of Feb. 24, 1933, containing the article by comrade Trotsky:

"Hugenberg's government represents the quintessence of social parasitism. But just because of this, when it became necessary, in its pure state, it became impossible. Hugenberg requires a screen. As yet today, he cannot hide behind the mantle of a Kaiser, and he is forced to resort to the brown shirt of the Nazi. If one cannot obtain the sanction of the highest heavenly powers through the monarchy for the property owners, there remains the sanction of the reactionary and unbridled rabble. The investiture of Hitler with power served a twofold purpose: first, to decorate the camarilla of property owners with the leaders of a 'national movement'; and secondly, to place the fighting forces of Fascism at the direct disposal of the proprietors."

Further on in the same article: "When the official Communist party states that the social democracy is the most important prop of bourgeois domination, it repeats only that idea which served as the point of departure for the organization of the Third International. When the bourgeoisie invites it to power, the social democracy casts its vote for the capitalist regime. The social democracy tolerates (suffers) any bourgeois government that tolerates the social democracy. But even when completely discarded from power, the social democracy continues to support bourgeois society, recommending to the workers that they conserve their forces for battles, for which it is prepared never to issue a call. By paralyzing the revolutionary energy of the proletariat, the social democracy provides bourgeois society with an opportunity to remain alive under conditions when it is no longer capable of living, thus turning Fascism into a political necessity."

As for branding the Brandlerist theory and practice of the "united front" opportunist, the Left

In the Daily Worker of Monday, February 20, Max Bedacht, member of the Central Committee of the Communist party writes: "They, too, (the Left Opposition and others) come with the proposals of united fronts between the Communists and the Social-Democratic parties and accuse the Communist party of splitting the workers because it insists on addressing its call for a united front not to the Noskes, the Scheidemanns and the Wels, but to the masses of social democratic workers." (Our emphasis—G. R.)

Thus it is clear, according to Bedacht, that the German Communist Party is opposed to addressing Opposition pleads guilty. In theory and practice, Brandlerism has already been tested. In 1923, when it led the German working class to defeat and demoralization, as attested, among more decisive things, by dozens of articles and speeches by the same Lovestone, from 1923 to 1929!

While we are on the subject of Messrs. Swindlers and Forgers of the Lovestone group, it is instructive to point out that in their whole "critical review" on the theme of the German crisis, Lovestone does not mention by a single word the role of the Communist International and its "leader" Stalin! Not a word about the criminal silence of the C. I. Not a syllable about Stalin's treacherous muteness on what is happening in Germany. And for cause! Lovestone gives a fig for the German revolution. Bah! He's against Browder and Co., he's for Stalin, whom he zealously offers his services as dunkey-in-chief in the American party for the international Stalin apparatus. Therein, for him, lies the wisdom of the books and the sense of philosophy and the beginning of all good and proper things.

A MISTAKE IN THE DAILY WORKER

The Daily Worker of March 6, prints a picture of Joseph Stalin with the following caption: "The above picture, printed for the first time in the United States, shows Joseph Stalin, present secretary of the Communist party, Soviet Union, as he appeared in 1919 on the south front in the struggle against the white guard bands of Denikin and Wrangel, who unsuccessfully attempted to invade the Soviet Union." The Daily Worker here makes a little error. The photograph is well known to us. It is a picture of Stalin at a masquerade ball in Moscow two years ago, where he disguised himself as the Organizer of the Red Army. He lost first costume prize only to Martinov, who appeared at the ball disguised as a Bolshevik.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1923, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 125 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Martin A. Abern James P. Cannon

Max Shachtman Maurice Spector

Arne Swabeck

Monday MARCH 6, 1933

Vol. VI, No. 16 (Whole No. 163)

Subscription price: $2.00 per year,

Foreign $2.50. One cent a copy.

led at the beginning of this year to a new turn to the Right. According to the conditions of its privileged situation and its habits of thinking, the Soviet bureaucracy has many features in common with the reformist bureaucracy of capitalist countries. It is far more inclined to trust in the "revolutionary" Kuo Min Tang, the "Left" bureaucracy of the British trade unions, the petty bourgeois "Friends of the Soviet Union", the liberal and radical socialists, than in the independent revolutionary initiative of the proletariat. But, through the necessity of defending its position in the workers' state, the Soviet bureaucracy is forced every time into sharp collisions with the reformist hand-maiden of capital. In this way under unique historical conditions a fraction of bureaucratic centrism has separated out of proletarian Bolshevism, and has laid a heavy hand on the whole epoch of development of the Soviet Republic and of the world proletariat.

Bureaucratic Centrism is the worst degeneration of the workers' state. But even in its bureaucratically degenerated form, the Soviet Union remains a workers' state. To transform the struggle against the centrism bureaucracy into a struggle against the Soviet state, would be to place oneself on the same level as the Stalinist clique, which declares, "The State—is I". The unreserved defense of the Soviet Union against world imperialism is such an elementary task of every revolutionary proletarian that the Left Opposition tolerates in its midst no vacillations or doubts on this question. As before, it will break ruthlessly with all groups and elements which attempt to occupy a "neutral" role between the Soviet Union and the capitalist world (Monatte-Louzon in France, Urbahns group in Germany).

The Left Opposition in

Imperialist Countries

The Third International arose as the immediate result of the experience of the advanced workers in the imperialist war, in the epoch of post-war upheavals, and particularly in the October revolution. This determined the leading role of Russian Bolshevism in the Third International, and therefore also a united front proposal to the Social Democratic party. It stands for the so-called united front from below. Since such, according to Bedacht, is the position of the German Communist Party perhaps he can explain the following incident reported in the Daily Worker, Feb. 15, 1933. We quote directly from the inexpressible to the Daily Worker:

An End to Stalinist Confusion -- For the United Front!

"The Central Committee of the Reichstag met today under the chairmanship of the Socialist Deputy Loebe, whereupon the Fascist deputies repeated their tactics of howling down Loebe and preventing a session of the Committee. He therefore, again declared the session adjourned; whereupon the Fascists pushed him from the chairman's table. The Communists, Socialists and other oppositional members then left the room...."

"In the afternoon the members of the oppositional parties met to discuss the situation. The Socialists declared the Constitution had been violated and proposed that protests be made to the Fascist president of the Reichstag, Goering, and to President Hindenburg. The Communists declared such protests were useless, and proposed a new meeting of the Control Committee to be defended by detachments of the Anti-Fascist League and the Reichsbanner." (Our emphasis—G. R., Daily Worker, 2-15-33.)

Therefore, we would like to know, and let Bedacht or any other member of the Central Committee answer:

If the Stalinists are opposed to making proposals to the leaders of the Social Democratic party, why did they propose common action to the Reichstag leaders of the Social Democratic party to defend the Reichstag Control Committee from the disruptive actions of the Fascists?

Was this proposal in line with the party policy of only the united front from below?

Why are the Stalinists for a parliamentary united front, with the leaders of the Social Democratic party in the Reichstag, which is a united front purely from the top, and opposed to a united front with the Social Democratic party on the basis of a common minimum program of struggle against Fascism, which will draw the masses into action?

If the Stalinists can propose a united front of the Anti-Fascist League (controlled by the Communist party) and the Reichsbanner (controlled by the Social Democratic party) to defend a parliamentary meeting, why not a united front of the Anti-Fascist League and the Reichsbanner, the Communist party, the Social Democratic party, and the trade unions, to defend workers' meetings from the assaults of the murderous Fascists?

Let the Stalinists cease their policy of confusion! A clear-cut policy of the united front tactic of Lenin and Trotsky before it is too late.

—G. R.

'Trotsky's Genius Denied'

With this headline, today's World Telegram prints a United Press dispatch from Moscow which reads as follows:

"Leon Trotsky's leadership of the Red Army during the Civil War period is bitterly attacked in a speech delivered by Clement Voroshilov, present commissar of war, made public today. Voroshilov denied the world-wide belief that Trotsky, now in exile, possesses great military genius. He claims that Joseph Stalin really saved the situation on all endangered fronts, and that the Red Army was built up to an imposing strength in spite of Trotsky's inefficiency."

Voroshilov is spitting in the wind. Better men than he have tried in the last ten years to re-write the history of the party and the Red Army as it never happened. The "world-wide belief" was not founded on myth and falsification, as is the fable manufactured by Stalin and his clique. To take but one quotation out of hundreds in those days, we cite from Gorky's memoirs of Lenin, written in 1924:

"Yes, I have often heard him (Lenin) praise his comrades. And he knew how to do justice to the energies of even those with whom he was supposed to be personally unsympathetic. Surprised by the flattering appreciation he showed for one of them, I remarked that a good many people might be amazed by it. 'Yes, yes, I know. They tell a lot of lies about my relations with him. Yes, they tell a lot of lies and especially about me and Trotsky.'"

"Founding on the table, he declared: 'Show me another man who could organize in a year an almost model army and win the respect of military experts besides. We've got that man. We've got everything. And so we'll do wonders.'"

Comment superfluous!

Nation-wide Bank Crisis Breaks Out

(Continued from Page 1)

carrying through its own solution of the crisis.

Party and Crisis

Under such conditions, a banking crisis like the present would have the profoundest social results. It would be part of a general retreat in struggle of a demoralized, organized, well-staffed and victorious army of the proletariat.

As things stand, we cannot assign it any such importance. It becomes one of a series of episodes in the development of the crisis, like the heavy gold withdrawals of September-October 1931 and April-June 1932, which were met by temporary financial manipulations on the one hand, and increased pressure on the workers and the masses in general on the other. Just what manipulations will be invoked in this particular case is not of great consequence; it may be the issue of clearing House scrip, or a tax on gold, or an embargo on gold exports, or a guarantee of deposits by the government of a banking pool, etc. That increased exploitation of the masses will be the next step to be attempted is the one thing sure.

The main point is that the bourgeoisie, penicily and demoralized as it is, can and will find its way out of such immediate predicaments as the present banking crisis, on the backs of the proletariat and the working masses, unless the masses are organized for struggle under the leadership of a powerful Communist party. The rearming and development of the Party to a scale commensurate with its tasks is the basic function of the Left Opposition.

—B. J. FIELD.

the influence of its internal struggles on the development of the other national sections. Still, it is absolutely false to regard the evolution of the Comintern during the last ten years as a mere reflection of the fractional struggle within the world Communist party. In the development of the international labor movement there were internal reasons of its own which drove the young Communist sections to the Stalinist bureaucracy.

The first post-war years were everywhere, particularly in Europe, a period of expectancy of the near-by overthrow of the rule of the bourgeoisie. But at the moment when the internal crisis of the Party broke out, most of the European sections had suffered their first great defeats and disappointments. Particularly depressing was the powerless retreat of the German proletariat in October 1933. A new political orientation became an inner necessity for the majority of the Communist parties. When the Soviet bureaucracy, exploiting the disappointment of the Russian workers with respect to the European revolution, set forth the national-reformist theory of Socialism in one country, the young bureaucracy of the other sections breathed a sigh of relief; the new perspective opened before them a road to Socialism independent of the process of the international revolution. In this way the internal reaction within the U. S. S. R. coincided with the reaction in the capitalist countries and created the conditions for a successful administrative punishment of the Left Opposition by the centrism bureaucracy.

But in their further movement to the Right, the official parties collided with the real Kuo Min Tang, the real bureaucracy of the Trade Unions and of the Social Democracy, just as the Stalinists collided with the real kulaks. The new zig-zag to the side of an ultra-Left policy carried out thereafter to the spite of the official Comintern majority into the ruling Center and the Right oppositionist wing.

In the camp of Communism, therefore, during the past years it has been possible to follow clearly three fundamental groups: the Marxist wing (Bolshevik-Leninists); the Centrist fraction (Stalinists), and finally the Right, or properly speaking right-centrist wing (Brandlerists), which leads directly into reformism. The political development of almost all countries without exception has confirmed and every new day confirms the correctness of this classification and its living reality.

It was and remains in the highest degree characteristic of centrism that for long periods it went hand in hand with the Right as the current most nearly related to it in principle, but never made a bloc with the Bolshevik-Leninists against the Right. As to the Right wing on an international scale, like every form of opportunism it is marked by an extraordinary variety and contradictoriness among its national constituents, while they all have in common hostility to the Bolshevik-Leninists.

In the U. S. S. R., under the conditions of the dictatorship, in the absence of legal opposition parties, the Right Opposition inevitably becomes the tool whereby the class forces which are hostile to the proletariat exert their pressure—therein consists the main danger of the Right Opposition; on the other hand, the consciousness of this danger paralyzes those leaders of the Right Opposition who through their whole past are bound to the Communist Party all the shades up with the Party. In capitalist countries, where to the right of reformism can spread themselves, the Right wing (Brandlerists) has no field of activity. Insofar as the Right Opposition has mass organizations, it turns them over directly or indirectly to the social democracy (Czecho-Slovakia, Sweden), except for the revolutionary elements who find their way to the Bolshevik-Leninists (Czecho-Slovakia, Poland). The Brandlerist elements who have remained independent here and there (Germany, U. S. A.) build their calculations on being called back and pardoned sooner or later by the Stalinist bureaucracy; in the name of this perspective they carry on a campaign of lies and slander against the Left Opposition quite in the spirit of Stalinism.

To be continued

OFF THE PRESS!

Two New Pamphlets By

LEON TROTSKY

Soviet Economy
In DangerIn Defense of the Russian Revolution

72 Pages 10 cents 48 Pages 5 cents

8 for twenty-five cents Minimum number per order 5

Postage 1c extra per copy

PIONEER PUBLISHERS

84 East 10th Street, New York

1 CENT
A COPY

THE MILITANT

Published 3 times a week, Monday,
Wednesday and Friday

Official Organ of The Communist League of America (Opposition)

Workers of the World,
Unite!Published three weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 128 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 17 [WHOLE NO. 164] NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1933 PRICE 1 CENTCommunist International Changes Policy!
Half-Turn to Genuine United Front Must Be Completed and Actually Carried Out

The Communist International has at last spoken on Germany! The Communist International has at last made a turn in policy on the united front with the social democracy!

The alarm signal sounded by the Left Opposition in the ranks of the Communist movement, the increasingly critical situation in Germany, the hopelessness of the previous position of the Stalinist faction—all this forced the Comintern to speak out. It has been compelled to come out of its disastrously sectarian retreat in favor of a united front with the social democratic party to smash the forces of Fascism.

This is what is revealed by the Moscow cablegram from Walter Duranty to the New York Times of March 7, 1933. We quote directly: "The Communist International has reversed its policy of Communist party exclusiveness of recent years and has reverted to a 'united front of all workers' parties under a manifesto issued January 22 and published in the newspaper Pravda today. That is the Comintern's answer to Adolf Hitler's success and the 'unparalleled campaign of provocation and terror against the whole working class of Germany.'

"The manifesto, signed by the executive committee of the Comintern, instructs Communist parties throughout the world, first, to arrange a joint program of action with Second International and other labor organizations—that is, combined staff work; second, to form committees immediately for joint action with workers and other parties—that is, combined field work."

In its editorial comment, the Times, representing the most perspicacious bourgeois minds, observes that this is the "policy advocated by Trotsky." "M. Trotsky, from his exile on Prinkipo Island, in Turkey, a year ago advocated cooperation between the German social democrats and Communists."

We cannot sit down, they protested, with the murderers of Liebknecht and Luxemburg, with the 'social Fascist leaders'.

At the recently concluded 12th Plenum of the Comintern, the "historic leader of German Communism," Ernst Thaelmann, polemicized against those in the party who inclined in our direction: "The tactical conclusions which have been drawn from the false estimation of the role of the S. P. O. in the above-mentioned article, are substantially on a par with the proposals of the Berlin district leadership (of the party)—proposals which were made to the Social Democratic party with a view to the holding of joint demonstrations, and which were rightly rejected by the Central Committee of our party, and corrected in the case of Berlin." (Communist International, 1-15-1933, page 35.)

The article to which Thaelmann referred declared that "the demand of the Berlin-Brandenburg district leadership to the Iron Front movement, to hold a joint demonstration against Fascism, is most appropriate here."

"In this," replies Thaelmann, "we see the continuation of the false judgment of the role of the S. P. O. The proposal made by the leadership of the Berlin district to the Iron Front was sharply criticized by us, because it expressed an over-estimation of the degree of maturity attained by the social democratic workers, and an underestimation of our own power among the working class, for the organization of widespread demonstrations of the united front from below, coupled with a surrender in the face of certain sentimental feelings in favor of unity which are to be met with."

And again, attacking Trotsky who "wants in all seriousness, to see the Communists going hand in hand with the murderers of Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg," who demands "negotiations between the leaders of the Communist Party of Germany and the Social Democratic Party of Germany"—Thaelmann proclaimed solemnly: "This policy would mean that we would abandon our correct Bolshevik policy." (Ibid, page 35.)

Less than two weeks ago (February 27, 1933—and the Comintern manifesto was dated January 22, 1933!) Bedacht still wrote in the Daily Worker: "The more the Communist party united front with the social democratic workers is entering into the strength of social democracy (see the last elections!—S.), the more do the Brandeburg and the Trotskyites shout for a united front with the social democratic leaders.... Bolshevik tactics made the Communists the strongest single party in Berlin. Bolshevik tactics caused the inner disintegration (!!) of the social democratic party."

The Significance of the Turn

The blows of the International Left Opposition against this light-minded Neronian adding while the Fascist torch was being applied, coupled with the blows which the Fascists themselves were dealing, have now compelled a turn in the policy of the Communist International.

The Left Opposition enthusiastically welcomes the turn! But to our regret, it is impossible to welcome it unreservedly. In the last turn of the Stalinists, in the right direction though it is, we detect all the features which inevitably characterize the turns of the Centrist bureaucracy: half-heartedness, obscurity, covering up of frailties in the interests of the theory of infallibility and apparatus prestige, ambiguity.

"The Communist International," Buchwald's radiogram quotes from Pravda, "much earlier offered to all workers' parties (!) the proposal to create joint fighting fronts against the onslaught of the capitalists." Much earlier than who or what? Is the reference to the "united front from below," to the bureaucratic ultimatum of the demand for the "united front under Communist party"? If a repetition of the past policy is all that the turn signifies, then it would be a miserable dressing up in the trappings of a more guarded phraseology of the bankrupt policy of yesterday. From the Pravda quotations given us by Buchwald, however, it appears (one must look for a clear statement with a microscope) that the Comintern has finally addressed itself directly to the social democracy. "The Communist International is for setting forth direct and comprehensible claims, it offers to act and not to conceal joint declarations. In its appeal, the Comintern deprives the social democracy of the possibility of claiming that the Communists are against unity if the question is about unity for struggle.... The German social democracy is now confronted with the question of whether they come to an agreement with the followers of the Communist party (only the followers?—S.) and advance the fight against the Fascist dictatorship."

Just what does this pompous ambiguity signify concretely? In the same issue, the Daily Worker's International Notes report a "united front declaration" which the social leaders prevented the Communist representative, Torgler, from reading at the Socialist demonstration in Berlin on February 7. "The declaration read as follows: 'During the past few weeks (the C. P.) has repeatedly appealed to the Socialist party, the Free and Christian trade unions to join in calling upon the working class to oppose Fascism and the employers. In this hour of the greatest peril, the Communist party again calls upon the workers organized in the Socialist party, the Free and Christian trade unions at once to join us in beginning the fight against Fascism.'"

If words have any meaning, this "united front appeal" is simply a rephrased "united front from below" all over again!

The workers in the ranks of the reformist organizations must indeed be appealed to, they must be called upon to fight for the united front. That goes without saying. But unless the Communist party offers directly to the Social Democratic party and the trade unions a proposal for united front negotiations with a concrete fighting program—the agitation in the reformist ranks is confined to a Communist recruiting campaign which is in no sense a substitute for the united front.

The Communist International has been forced to make a turn, but thus far the turn is one of words only, and "clever," "diplomatic" words at that. "The about-face of the Stalinists is inevitable," wrote Trotsky a year ago. "More than once in the past it has happened that the Stalinist bureaucracy, having spoiled paper in hundred tons in polemics against counter-revolutionary 'Trotskyism,' thereafter made an abrupt about-face and tried to fulfill the program of the Left Opposition—in truth, sometimes after hopeless delays.... The correctness of our position will become apparent in action with each passing day. When the ceiling overhead bursts into flame, the most stubborn bureaucrats must needs forget about prestige. Even genuine privy councilors, in such situations, jump out of windows in their underwear. The pedagogy of facts will come to the assistance of our criticism."

The pedagogy of facts, the intransigent, unyielding, persistent blows of the Left Opposition, have forced a turn in the Stalinist policy. The turn is in the right direction, but it cannot be over-emphasized that it is inadequate; incomplete, cowardly—in a word, typically Stalinist. The way to complete the turn is not to be overwhelmed by enthusiasm and to swallow everything uncritically, but to strike twice as hard for the views of the Left Opposition. It is only by acting in this manner in the past that the Left Opposition contributed its share even to the partial turn which has now been effected.

What Must the Party Do Now?

The Communist worker, whose passive resistance to the old Stalinist policy was not the least factor in forcing a change, will be remiss in his revolutionary duty if he fails to drive ahead now. The turn must be completed; it must be made concrete; the bureaucratic loopholes (and there are far too many of them already apparent) must be plugged up.

What is to be done now? First: the party membership, the Communist workers, are our first concern, for without a clear-headed party, which understands what it is doing and why, even the best policy is worth very little. Therefore, it is imperative that the turn be elucidated, the reasons for it made clear, the blunder of yesterday revealed and condemned to prevent its recurrence, and bureaucratic prestige sacrificed in the interests of clarity. The party, which has been so horribly disoriented and miseducated, must be re-oriented and re-educated: in a word, it must be re-armed.

Second: the turn must be made genuine and concrete. We have not the slightest reason to doubt that the party leadership will content itself with the issuance of a formal appeal to the social democracy, equivocally couched, with a good deal of "united front from below" babble smuggled in. Then, if and when it is ignored or rejected by the social democratic leaders, the Stalinist leaders will retire to their old positions, "proving" the "hopelessness" of any "united front with the leaders." The correct and only procedure is to address a formal and public appeal to the social democratic party, through its executive committee; ditto to the trade unions; to propose in this appeal a public meeting (before the eyes and under the control of the working class) of the representatives of both movements to discuss a concrete program of action against Fascism. At the same time, to call upon the reformist masses to demand that their leaders accept the Communist united front proposal, that their leaders agree to meet, discuss, work out a fighting program, and act with the Communists. Therein and only therein lies the true significance of a "united front from below" as distinguished from the Stalinist conception of yesterday (and to a certain extent of today), as well as from the Chiang Kai-Shek and Anglo-Russian Committee "united fronts from above."

Third: outside of Germany, in the other capitalist countries, the Communist party must approach the social democracy and the trade unions in the same manner, demanding a united front to mobilize the masses in France, England, the United States and elsewhere for an international movement of struggle against Hitlerism and solidarity with the German proletariat.

These are elementary preliminaries. The latest events have only fortified the standpoint and the confidence of the Left Opposition. Our vigilance will not be diminished for a moment; our irreconcilable opposition to Stalinism will not be moderated; our role will not be reduced. On the contrary, "Should the Communist party be compelled to apply the policy of the united front, it will almost certainly permit the attack of Fascism to be beaten off," Trotsky wrote in 1932. "In its own turn, the serious victory over Fascism will clear the road for the dictatorship of the proletariat. But even at the helm of the revolution, the Communist party will still bear within itself many contradictions. The mission of the Left Opposition will not at all be completed. In a certain sense it will only begin. In the first place the victory of proletarian revolution in Germany would signify the liquidation of the bureaucratic dependence of the Communist party upon the Stalinist apparatus."

Even though much water—and blood—has flowed since this was written, and invaluable time irrevocably squandered by a bureaucracy jealous of its prestige, it remains essentially true. Fascism can still be conquered. The proletarian revolution may still be put at the top of the order of the day in Germany, and consequently throughout Europe. The Left Opposition, the Bolshevik-Leninists stands at the watchposts of the world revolution!

Wed., March 8, 1933. M. S.

SPARTACUS YOUTH AFFAIR

The Spartacus Youth Club will hold an entertainment and dance Saturday March 11, 1933, at the headquarters of the International Workers School, 126 East 16th Street. Admission is only 15 cents, and an excellent program of entertainment has been arranged. All young workers and students are cordially invited to attend and acquaint themselves with the Left Opposition youth.

Have read the Militant for the last month and have been profoundly impressed by the sincerity of the paper. It warms my heart to see an issue handled, and driven home, as the German crisis has by the Left Opposition. Enclosed herein please find $2.00 to add my bit for the cause. Internationally, GEORGE KELLEY.

ST. LOUIS BRANCHES

The St. Louis Branch, International Workers' School is conducting a study class on the "Fundamentals of Communism" with Martin Payer as instructor. Sessions are held every Monday evening, 7:30-10:00 P. M. in the downstairs club room, Cruden Branch Library, 14th and Cass Aves. All readers of the Militant invited to attend. Tuition is free. Sufficient literature is available to all students.

Newark Meeting

at the Hungarian Workers Home 37-16th Ave., Newark, N. J. Saturday Evening, March 11th, 8 P. M. THE GERMAN PROLETARIAT AND FASCISM Speaker: JAMES P. CANNON EVERYBODY WELCOME! Communist League of America (Opposition) Newark branch

LABOR TEMPLE

FRIDAY, MARCH 10th, 8 P. M. 14th Street and Second Avenue LARGE HALL ADMISSION 15 CENTS

MANHATTAN MASS MEETING

Speakers: JAMES P. CANNON MAX SHACHTMAN MARTIN ABERN, Chairman

From January 22nd to March 6th

The first question which rises in the reader's mind is the unexplained reason why six weeks was allowed to elapse between the alleged date of the issuance of the "united front manifesto" of the Comintern (January 22) and its first public appearance (March 6) in the Moscow Pravda. Was the Communist world—outside the immediate ranks of the Executive Committee—of the Comintern—aware of the existence of the manifesto? If it was not, what reason was there for withholding it from attention all during the recent period, when the official Communist press continued to advance the idea that the "united front with the social fascists" was a species of the "Left Trotskyist" vanguard of the counter-revolution? If the Communist parties were aware of the existence of the manifesto, why was it not made public in the last six weeks (in fact, it has not yet been printed in the American party press), or if it was available but "not ready for release," why was it not referred to in the press, or at the very least, why wasn't the change in policy which it represents reflected in the line of conduct of the parties? How could the responsible general staff of the world revolution permit itself the costly luxury of keeping under cover so vitally important a document for a period of six weeks during which events of paramount significance were beating down upon the heads of the German proletariat like a thunderstorm? And why, when it is finally made public, does the Communist public have to look for it in the columns of the bourgeois Times which, not for the first time, is in advance of the Daily Worker in its reports of developments in the Soviet Union and the Comintern?

The Comintern manifesto and the Pravda editorial do not go unreported in the Daily Worker, to be sure, even if a day later than the Times. On page 4 of its March 8 issue (page one is occupied with the more vital question of the "demands of the small bank depositors"), the Daily Worker first publishes a Moscow radiogram from its own correspondent about the peculiarly dated Comintern appeal. The American Communist Party maintains a permanent representative (more than one) in Moscow; it even has its own newspaper correspondent there, who is said to have been a dramatic critic, one Buchwald. But the advantage one would expect from such representation do not seem to accrue to the Daily Worker in such crucial questions as the present.

ST. PAUL MEETING

Speakers: HUGO OEHLEB CARL SROGLUND

ST. PAUL LABOR TEMPLE

Tuesday eve., March 14, 8:00 p. m. Admission 10c Unemployed Free

ST. PAUL MEETING

Speakers: HUGO OEHLEB CARL SROGLUND

ST. PAUL LABOR TEMPLE

Tuesday eve., March 14, 8:00 p. m. Admission 10c Unemployed Free

The Banking Crisis in the United States

TWO BILLIONS IN CURRENCY AND GOLD HOARDED, THREATENING TO CRIPPLE THE FINANCING OF BUSINESS; PLANS BEING WORKED OUT BY COURGEIOISIE TO TIDE ITSELF OVER CRITICAL PERIOD, WITH INFLATION MENACING PROLETARIAT

The basic problem of banking in this: In the United States, the national income in boom years was about 90 billion dollars a year, at present about half of that; the national wealth about 300 to 400 billions. This income is realized in the form of money, and a large part of the transfers of wealth take the form of money as an intermediate stage. This money is based on gold. But there is only 3 to 4 billions of gold in this country. The whole business of banking is to fill the gap between the 3-4 billions of gold and the hundreds of billions of money transactions which are based on gold. The banking system is a device for filling this gap by means of credit, in other words, paper. Every dollar of gold received by the Federal Reserve Banks can become the basis for 2-12 dollars of Federal Reserve paper, each of which in turn can become the basis of 8 to 14 dollars in loans and deposits in the ordinary commercial banks.

As a result of this mechanism, 3-4 billions in gold supports 5-7 billions in paper money which in turn supports 44 millions of bank deposits, which are the real "funds" with which the business of the country is transacted. All of this works well enough until and unless the people who have bank deposits ask for paper money instead, and the people who have paper money ask for gold. When this happens the credit, which stuffs the gap between the amount of gold actually available and the amount of business which has to be financed, is cut down. This cannot go very far without raising the possibility that the first 3-4 billions of deposits may be paid off in gold, and the entire rest of the banking structure be left without any gold foundation.

To put it somewhat differently—if all the economic life of the country were to be restricted to what can actually be financed on a cash basis, it would have to be reduced, not to 50% of "normal" as at present, but to about 3%. In Soviet Russia in the worst period of the civil war, in 1920, after years of imperialist and civil war and the transition from capitalists to war-time Communism, the lowest level reached was 18% of "normal." The complete wiping-out of credit and the reduction of economic activity would be an unparalleled economic collapse. When there is a danger of this, as there has been on six occasions since the Civil War, the banks, not having enough gold or currency to meet the demand, and finding their credit steadily cut down, fill in the gap with emergency paper of some sort as long as the panic continues, then retire it as soon as a "normal" basis for banking has been restored. This happens when gold and currency begin coming back into the banks, so that deposits increase instead of decreasing.

Just what has happened in the present banking crisis? Banks have been shut down by whole states at a time, and depositors have been withdrawing their money. Deposits have been cut from 44 to 42 billions, while note circulation has gone up over a billion dollars, from 5 to over 6 billions, at the same time gold on hand has been reduced from 4 to 3-1/2 billions. In other words, about 2 billions of currency and gold have gone into hoarding. The danger of a reduction in deposits and credit reaching the point of crippling the financing of business became imminent. As a result of the hoarding, there is not enough money to go around, and credit is not able to fill the gap because it is being withdrawn, not extended, when everybody wants cash.

How do the banks and the government and president who speak for them propose to meet this situation? In the same way as such situations have always been met—by putting out something which will take the place of money until the emergency is over, i. e., until money comes back out of hoarding and credit, along with deposits, stops declining.

Evidently there is a difference among the bankers as to just how this is to be done. The New York City group wants to issue Clearing House certificates, which represent only the balances which one bank has with other banks. Anyone who wants to accept this as money can do so, but unlike "regular" money, there is no legal way of compelling him to accept it. This is the device that was used in 1873, 1893 and 1907, on each of which occasions it was redeemed, after circulating for some months.

The plan being carried through by Gov. Lehman of New York State is to have new Emergency Certificate Corporations organized which will take over assets from banks and issue certificates against them. This kind of paper is backed by the particular assets against which it is issued, not by the general credit of all the banks in a given district, like the Clearing House certificates.

A third plan is being worked out by Woodin, Secretary of the Treasury, for the issue of Federal Reserve notes of a special kind against bank assets; something like the Lehman plan but on a national scale and without forming a new banking corporation.

Will There Be Inflation? No matter which of these plans is actually carried into practice, the result will be an increase in the amount of paper in circulation. Does this mean inflation? Not necessarily. If the total amount of all these new issues, of whatever kind, is kept down to the amount of money which has gone into hoarding, it will merely keep the total of cash plus credit in the status quo before the rush on the banks started; if the amount of new paper issued is less, it will be even a further deflation and reduction in the amount of circulating medium. If, on the other hand, more new paper is issued than the amount of cash that has gone into hoarding, or if it is kept in circulation and not retired while the hoarded cash comes back, it will result in a net increase in the total amount of means of payment available.

(Continued on Page 2)

After the German Elections-What Now?

Amplous: Communist League of America (Opposition)

Speakers: JAMES P. CANNON MAX SHACHTMAN MARTIN ABERN, Chairman

Our relation to the Communist International is determined by the name of our faction: Left Opposition. The content of our ideas and methods is characterized with sufficient clarity by the name Bolshevik-Leninists. Every section must bear both of these complementary designations.

We Demand Plain Speaking on Germany!

Only Unmistakable Change in Comintern Policy Can Smash Fascism at 11th. Hour!

What are the exact contents of the "united front appeal" signed by the Executive Committee of the Communist International, which, according to the Moscow dispatches, was dated January 22, 1933 and made public only six weeks later, on March 6, 1933? What exactly is the nature of the appeal? Does it propose a united front with the Labor and Socialist (Second) International? Does it mean that if the Second International is compelled to accept the proposal, the Communist International is prepared to negotiate with the social democracy concerning a concrete program of action against Fascism?

If this is what it signifies, then the Comintern leaders have made an important change in their policy, which should be openly acknowledged, the reasons for the change explained to the Communist workers, and the party really oriented towards an intelligent and concerted application of the new policy.

If this is not what it signifies, then the Stalinist center is only making a literary gesture for the record, behind which to screen the criminal responsibility for the present situation in Germany which its past policy has accumulated upon its back.

In either case: plain speech, please!

WE WANT TO KNOW
Why hasn't the appeal of the Communist International been published in the Communist press? The Moscow Pravda, we are told, declares that the appeal was issued on January 22. More than six weeks have elapsed since that date. Regardless of its contents, the appeal is of vital international importance to the working class. Why is there not even an extract from the manifesto in the Daily Worker or Freiheit, to say nothing of the manifesto itself. The American party maintains one or more representatives in the Comintern; it has a Moscow correspondent for its daily press. The correspondent finds it possible to cable regularly about the activity of this or that shock brigade's activity in this or that one of Russia's far-flung provinces. Why hasn't he found it necessary to cable at least the important sections of the Comintern manifesto? Why wasn't the manifesto sent by mail on January 22nd?

WE WANT TO KNOW:
Why are the negotiations with the Second International—which appear to be in progress in one form or another—being conducted behind the scenes and beyond the vision of the working class?

The socialist New Leader of March 11, 1933, prints a cable from Zurich signed by Adler, for the Secretariat of the Second International, which reads: "Our administrative committee published yesterday a declaration of 540 words concerning the Moscow 'united front' offer, which was a reply to our manifesto of February 19. Moscow's appeal will be considered at the next meeting of the Executive of the Labor and Socialist International. Affiliated parties are asked to refrain from definite action until then."

The "Moscow 'united front' offer" is unknown to the masses of Communist and socialist workers. It is deliberately withheld from publication in the official Communist press. The masses thus do not know what the Communist International proposes. Friedrich Adler and Company apparently do know. How are the workers to judge the actions of the Second International with regard to the Comintern offer if they do not know the contents of the latter? How are the Communist workers to approach their socialist class brothers on this question if they do not know what their own international proposes concretely? How are the socialist workers—who ardently desire a common struggle to smash the Hitlerite thugs—to exert pressure on their leaders, to call them to account to demand of them a favorable reply if these workers do not know just what the Communist International proposes?

The united front cannot be established by diplomatic negotiations on the quiet and behind the scenes—as conducted by Stalin with Chiang Kai-Shek, as conducted by Tomsky with Purcell, as conducted by Barbusse with Friedrich Adler during the notorious Amsterdam Congress. All negotiations must be conducted openly, under the eyes and control of the masses on both sides, with the important documents and proceedings available to these masses, especially the social democratic workers who can be relied upon to exert mass pressure on their leaders for common action with the Communists—providing the latter make it possible for these workers to act.

But how are the socialist masses to be mobilized if they do not even have the Comintern's appeal before them, if they do not even know what the Comintern proposes? Why doesn't the party press say a word about the Comintern appeal? Why hasn't the Daily Worker, which relegated the Buchwald cablegram to the last page, said a single word about the Comintern's united front appeal since that time?

WE WANT TO KNOW:

Does the American (or any other) party leadership know what the Comintern appeal says, what the change in policy signifies—if it is a serious change?

The Daily Worker says nothing, because the party leadership as well as the party membership have been demoralized, confused and paralyzed by the news from Moscow, precisely because it was so

Left Opposition On Germany

The next issue of the Militant will contain a manifesto of the National Committee of the Communist League of America (Opposition) on the situation in Germany, the menace of Fascism, the tasks of the working class and the Communist movement. In addition, we shall publish an open letter sent to the Executive Committee of the Communist Party of the United States on the concrete tasks confronting the party in this country and internationally, and presenting the proposals which the Left Opposition advances as the quintessential pre-requisites to the mobilization of a mass movement to crush Fascism in Germany and to create international solidarity for the German proletariat.

ambiguous and contradictory. But the Freiheit rather its editor Olgin, does risk a word in public about it. In the issue of March 10, 1933, Olgin devotes his whole articles to a polemic against the views we developed on the Comintern appeal in our last number. From his article, it is evident that Olgin knows as little about the details of the Comintern appeal as we do. Consequently, he thinks it safest to declare that there has been no change in policy: "This is the program. A united front of struggle, a united front of action, a united front for special interventions, a united front with the masses, and if necessary, with their local organizations, a united front to bring back the march of Fascism—this has been the policy of the Comintern, so it shall remain."

Is Olgin's view that of the Comintern, or is he just whistling in the dark? If he is correct in his assertions, the "change" is only the bankrupt old policy of the "united front from below", rendered more disastrous and irresponsible by the fact that an attempt is being made to smother it in under a new mantle at a time when every day and hour in Germany is the equivalent of months and years. If this explanation is wrong, then all the more reason why the party and the Comintern are obligated to speak plainly and unmistakably for its actual policy.

Are the social democratic leaders to be permitted to escape the responsibility for the treachery they are preparing? Are the statesmen of the Second International to be permitted to continue avoiding the struggle for fear of its revolutionary consequences? The maintenance of the old policy of the Stalinists makes it possible, affords the socialist leaders an easy way out. The policy of the Left Opposition—formal appeal for the united front, demand of negotiations to work out a program of action—puts the Second International right to the wall, compels it to speak and act unequivocally, forces it to show its true colors.

Olgin feebly defends his opposition to our policy with the declaration that the leaders of the Second International are traitors, with whom no united front can be made. When a discovery, however belated, is made, even if his conclusions are ludicrous. It took the Communists quite some time to convince Olgin, at that time a collaborator of Abraham Cahan and the Forwards, that his leaders were traitors on the other side of the revolutionary barricades. That he finally learned this elementary truth, is undoubtedly to his credit. The great misfortune, however, is that at this late date it is still necessary to spend invaluable time trying to explain to him that he will yet have to sit down once, and perhaps twenty times, with the leaders of the social democracy—traitors though they are, to force them into a common struggle in the course of which their followers will learn that only the Communists have the correct policy and leadership.

The socialist masses do not yet know that their leaders are traitors. We must patiently enlighten them. They will learn it through their own experience. The policy of Olgin makes it possible for the socialist leaders to retain their hold over the masses. "You see," they say, "we are ready to unite with the Comintern leaders, but all they want is to break your organization and attack your chosen leaders." This is an unmitigated lie of the socialist Tartarines and Elmer Ganttrys. They do not want to unite with the Comintern; they do not want to launch a really militant struggle against Fascism. But the masses do not yet know it (it takes them even longer to learn than it took Olgin, whose policy, besides, has prevented them from learning). And unless this policy is drastically altered, the socialist leaders will find a new purpose through which to see the struggle, to leave the workers to be crushed by the enemy, in a word, to betray them again.

WE WANT TO KNOW:
When will the Comintern make clear its position? When will it stop playing hide-and-seek with the crisis in Germany? When will it speak out so plainly that there will be no room for misunderstanding, misinterpretation, ambiguity? Europe, and consequently the world, is at an historical turning point. In the hands of the Comintern still lie those instruments which enable it to influence decisively the direction of this turn. The express speed of the Fascist advance in Germany has left but little time in which to act. But time is still left.

A terrific historical responsibility weighs upon the Comintern leadership. Its duty is plain. If it fails to do its duty, it will itself be inundated under the overwhelming catastrophe which its own blunders are now serving to prepare in Germany. Friday, March 10, 1933. —M. S.

The New U.S. Banking Law

ROOSEVELT'S EMERGENCY MEASURES LEAVE OPEN ROAD TO INFLATION; HELP CONCENTRATE BANKS INTO HANDS OF MONOPOLISTS, PREPARE FOR BRANCH BANKING SYSTEM

The new Roosevelt banking law makes it possible, under cover of the immediate banking crisis, for finance-capital to carry on a process of elimination of small banks and concentration of big ones and thus strengthen in finance-capital itself the monopolistic tendency which finance-capital has given to industry and commerce. In Canada there are nine banks which do practically all of the banking business of the country; in England, four; in Germany, three. In the United States there are about a hundred banks of world importance, and in addition about 20,000 smaller banks which collectively do a large proportion of the country and neighborhood business. Branch banking is very severely restricted in this country, while in most other imperialist countries branch banking based on monopolistic organizations of finance-capital is the backbone of the banking system.

"New Deal" in Banking System

This contradiction between the centralizing and monopolistic tendencies of developed imperialism, and the decentralizing, small-scale, competitive relics of a pre-imperialist era represented by the American banking system, is being solved ruthlessly in favor of monopoly by the "new deal". The dual system of state and national control, under which thousands of small banks were able to keep alive, and the right to stay out of the Federal Reserve system, are on the road to elimination. A large part of the new law is taken up with the new technique of closing banks. At the same time dictatorial powers are given the national government. It is clear that thousands of banks, particularly the smaller ones, will never open again. Monopolist control of banking will receive a great impetus, at the same time that the great commercial banks formally separate themselves from their investment banking affiliates, like the National City Co. and the Chase Securities Co.

The section of the new law dealing with the issue of additional circulating notes does not come out clearly for inflation—whether it results in inflation or not will depend on the final decisions of the big bankers, which do not appear to have been formulated as yet. All that has been settled so far is that new currency will be printed, of the same type as the old, except that it bears a small circulation tax which will probably induce the bankers to withdraw it from circulation in time. There is no new provision as to how such notes are to be issued—the basis is provided in the Glass-Steagall Act passed last year.

In short, the question of whether there will be inflation or not is not yet solved, the new emergency currency should circulate on a level with the old (that is, a del-lar of the new issue should be worth a dollar of the old, whatever a dollar of either kind will be worth in actual buying power). At the same time, the big banks are put in a position, through their control of the national government and its new dictatorial powers, to advance rapidly toward the crushing of small-bank opposition and the concentration of finance-capital into a few gigantic units along the lines of other imperialist countries.

The policy of the official party overlooks all this and results in a purely demagogic general agitation and a few empty and contradictory slogans. They view the whole banking crisis as a sort of gigantic racket intended to result in inflation, to reduce the value of the workingmen's wages; in the issue of a new kind of paper which will be worth less than the old paper and which the masses should refuse to accept; and in the robbing of depositors by bankers who refuse to pay out full deposits in cash.

Bankers and Inflation

As to inflation, it is by no means certain that the bankers will gain more than they lose by it: the higher the value of money (i. e., if there is no inflation) the greater the value of bankers' mortgages on homes and farms, as well as of all their other paper claims, and the greater the power of American capitalism on the world arena. As to the reduction in wages, the bankers have been able to carry it out directly, by cutting down the number of dollars in the pay envelope; not as in Germany in 1920-23, where the strength and militancy of the workers' organizations made it preferable for the bankers to pick the workers' pockets by reducing the value in buying power of his wages, not his amount.

At the same time as it opposes inflation, the party puts up as a slogan the fight for the right of depositors to withdraw the full amount of their deposits in cash. The money that depositors withdrew is paid out in bank notes, which are printed for the purpose. In the week ending March 1 over $700,000,000 of new notes were printed; last week over $800,000,000, bringing the total money in circulation up to over $7,500,000,000. If more deposits are withdrawn, the money supply will increase.

(Continued on Page 2)

SPRINGFIELD MEETING
THE DANGER OF FASCISM IN GERMANY
Speaker:
HUGO OEHLE
Member N. E. C. Communist League of America (Opposition)
Sunday, MARCH 19 at 8 P. M.
HOFFERKAMP HALL
627 1-2 E. Adams St.
ADMISSION FREE

Militant Back to Weekly

The heavy task we set for ourselves of bringing out the Militant three times a week for the period of one month, in order to alarm and awaken the Communist workers to the immediacy and the burning importance of the German situation, is successfully completed with this issue. With the next issue we return to our regular weekly four page edition and, in the next weeks, will concentrate on the task of organizing and consolidating the great political gains of the Left Opposition in preparation for another forward bound.

Simultaneously with the return to the regular four page edition the National Committee of the Left Opposition will proceed, on the basis of the widespread sentiment aroused in the party ranks by our agitation, to submit to the Central Committee of the party a series of concrete proposals for action in the present situation, and will develop the campaign of the Bolshevik-Leninists further on the basis of these proposals. Along with that, the four page editions of the Militant will proceed to the systematic elucidation of the fundamental principle line which guides our policy in the German crisis and brings us into irreconcilable antagonism to the policy of bureaucratic centrism on an international scale. In the past weeks all attention and agitation was necessarily concentrated on the question of the united front, since this is the most acutely critical and decisive one. Thousands of new readers have recognized the utter falsity of the Stalinist policy on this issue. It is now necessary to explain to them fundamental principle foundations of these blunders. The four page Militant, which will have space for longer articles and more detailed analyses, will undertake this duty without in the least moderating the agitation for a correction of the united front policy.

The publication of our Militant three times a week for the past month was an enormous undertaking for our small group and it strained our resources and energies to the limit. The task was accomplished only because of the unbounded enthusiasm and self-sacrifice of the American Bolshevik-Leninists and the loyal support of the sympathizing workers. To all those who helped in this task we extend our hearty appreciation and declare our firm confidence that this support, on an ever wider scale, will not be lacking in the still greater tasks that now lie ahead.

—THE MILITANT,

Appeal to Y.C.L. On Slugging of Opposition Youth

To the District Executive Committee, Young Communist League No. 8

To the National Committee, Young Communist League of America Comrades,

Walter Danylyuk, member of the National Students League and member of the Spartacus Youth Club of Chicago, has been attacked and severely beaten to unconsciousness by members of the Young Communist League in the streets of Chicago, (Western Ave. and Division St.) on Monday Night March 6, 1933 at 7:30 P. M. and again at about 8:15 P. M.

This cowardly and atrocious deed came as the culmination of a series of warnings given to numerous members of the Spartacus Youth Club, by members of the Young Communist League, that if they did not stop beating from YCL members in silence.

These beatings are, without a doubt, futile and ridiculous as well as scandalous attempts to combat the teachings of the Spartacus Youth Club, affiliated to the Communist League of America, (Left Opposition). Marxism has given the revolutionary movement a theoretical weapon to combat political opponents. Only political opponents must resort to the fist as a means of combat. Such tactics can neither intimidate nor defeat us; it can only subvert the YCL and besmirch its name. Just as the Socialist party and the American Federation of Labor used the black jacks and guns in an attempt to destroy the growing influence of the Communist movement, so you have resorted to similar methods. And just as the tactics of the S. P. and the A. F. L. acted as a boomerang, so will your methods react in the identical manner. It is unfortunate that the evolutionary process of the Socialist party and the A. F. L. against which we fought remorselessly, has so completely dominated you.

There is indeed, a touching affinity between the trade unions slugging and murdering of comrade Weisenberg in Chicago in 1890 and the present disgraceful assault upon comrade Danylyuk who is now in critical condition.

Whether our YCL comrades have repudiated Marxism, for the "individual terror" of Bakunin, or whether they are being influenced by the teachings of Al Capone, we do not know. One thing is evident, THAT SUCH ACTION CANNOT BE TOLERATED IN A REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT. THAT SUCH PROCEDURE IS THE CULMINATION OF THE DEGRADATION OF THE YCL TO A GROUP OF MURDEROUS HOOLIGANS WHO HAVE THEIR PLACE, NOT IN THE RANKS OF A REVOLUTIONARY YOUTH

(Continued on Page 2)

Com. Cannon At Albany:

Comrades and Fellow-Workers:

We meet here in the fourth year of the crisis which has brought the most appalling misery and privation to the masses and which is profound affecting the entire working class. The terrible and unprecedented conditions are undermining the workers' accustomed standards of life. They are destroying all their security of existence, such as it was, and are putting before them, in every more categorical terms, the necessity of seeking a way out by new methods and means. In such a situation this conference of 346 delegates from 248 workers' organizations can serve as a starting point in a significant movement of working class resistance, or it can remain a mere episode soon passed over and soon forgotten. It is for us to decide which it shall be. It depends in the highest degree on the success we achieve in pointing out the way to the impoverished masses, and in working out the methods and means of uniting with them in the struggle.

In order for us to give the right answer to this question, which is of such crucial importance, we must first see the situation as it really is. And at the very beginning we must discard any illusions about the real nature and composition of our conference. To talk as though the conference represented the unemployed millions of New York State, or even a numerically significant section of them, is a sure way of condemning all the deliberations of the conference to futility. The real class movement of the workers against the scourge of unemployment, does not yet exist on any wide scale. The movement which is on its feet and attempting to struggle against the conditions of the crisis remains, in the fourth year of the crisis, primarily and almost exclusively a movement of the class-conscious vanguard. The composition of this conference, called together after the most extensive preparation and agitation, is the most eloquent testimony to this fact. In this there is nothing fatal if we recognize the fact; if we do not deceive ourselves with illusions about a united front movement which does not as yet exist in reality.

The composition of the Conference determines its specific tasks. To me it is quite obvious that general agitation against the evils of unemployment is unnecessary here since everybody is already convinced. There has been enough, if not too much, of this already. There is very little doubt that the conference is ready, now without any further discussion, to endorse the most radical demands, and the social revolution too. If someone should move a resolution for the dictatorship of the proletariat, in order to test the sentiments of the conference, there is no doubt that

The N.Y. State Conference

LEFT OPPOSITION SETS FORTH ITS POLICY AND PROGRAM IN THE UNITED FRONT MOVEMENT OF THE UNEMPLOYED IN STATE-WIDE MEET AT THE CAPITAL

The next issue of the Militant will contain a detailed analytical report of the results of the Albany conference on unemployment by James P. Cannon, who headed the Left Opposition delegation to the conference. Pressure of space in the current issue compelled us to omit the report this time and to include only the speech of comrade Cannon and the resolution submitted to the Conference by our delegation.

STATEMENT OF L. O.

The united front conference for unemployment insurance and relief, assembled at Albany on March 5th, 6th, and 7th, is to be regarded as a progressive step in the process of struggle around this central issue of the day. Conceived in this way in the building of a genuine mass movement of the working class and properly developed, it can also against the scourge of unemployment and its source—capitalism. Through such a broad movement, the working class can be closely welded together in common struggle for the immediate and also for the historical interests of the masses. The Communist League of America (Left Opposition) heartily welcomes this movement, participates loyally in its activities and works for its advancement.

The specific tasks set for the conference is to work out a legislative program in the interests of the unemployed workers, and, consequently, of the entire working class of which the unemployed are an inseparable part. This proposal to put pressure on the capitalist legislature is a necessary part of the fighting movement for the unemployed. The fight on this front, however, can become really effective, even to serve the immediate interests of the unemployed, only if it is supplemented by and combined with a program of direct mass pressure through huge united demonstrations of the workers. We are not here to "lobby". We must not allow ourselves to be caught in a maze of legal technicalities and chicaneries. The capitalist legislature, where we appear at the moment, is for us primarily a forum from which to appeal to the working masses to unite for struggle.

From this point of view, our "legislative program" should not be restricted to the narrow groove of the rules of the state legislature. It should express the real class demands of the workers on a na-aim to put the New York section of this national movement on a firm foundation by bringing forward and concentrating on the basic class demands which set the militant movement on foot. In our opinion, it would be a grievous error to clutter up the "legislative program" with all kinds of incidental and secondary proposals which would detract from the sharp emphasis on the real important class demands.

In our opinion, the most important points to be incorporated into the program are as follows:

1. Immediate Relief.
2. Unemployment insurance, to be paid for by the employers and state government.
3. The 6-hour day and 5-day week, without reduction in pay.
4. Long term credits to the Soviet Union, as a means of unemployment relief for American workers and the cementing of fraternal relations between the American and Russian workers. This implies the demand for recognition of the Soviet Government and the establishment of trade relations.

In supporting the movement for legislative action, the Communist Left Opposition deems it necessary to point out the inadequacies of a parliamentary campaign to achieve any one of these demands. Such a tactic by itself is insufficient and would be misleading and incapable of obtaining the aims of the conference. The broad masses of the workers must be drawn into class struggle activity for these demands, through mass demonstrations and activity among the working class organizations, trade unions, fraternal organizations, etc., the employed and unemployed, the organized and unorganized must be united in the fight for these demands. In short, the widest possible mass pressure of the economic and political organizations of the working class must be exerted upon the ruling class to reinforce the legislative demands.

It is necessary that this Conference shall conduct a sharp campaign of exposure and criticism of the so-called labor representatives and their lobbying methods behind the scenes with the politicians at Albany and elsewhere in order to secure a few cheap and meager concessions for the unemployed. This capitalistic "politics" is only a snare and delusion to the workers and serves to disarm them before the attacks of the capitalists and their agents. These labor fakery must be shown up in their true colors by counterposing a program of class struggle to their political chicanery.

As has been said above, it is necessary to look upon the present conference not as an end in itself, but as a stage in the process of struggle. The central problem is—

(Continued on Page 2)

ST. PAUL MEETING

Speakers:

HUGO OEHLE

CARL SKOGLUND

ST. PAUL LABOR TEMPLE

Tuesday eve, March 14, 8:00 p. m.

THE WORKERS' FRONT

Carpenters Protest Against Bureaucracy at S.P. «United Front»

We publish below a copy of an open letter sent by Carpenters Local Union 2090 to the Socialist party and the labor press:

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE LABOR COMMITTEE OF THE SOCIALIST PARTY

Gentlemen:—After listening to the report by our two delegates to your conference on Feb. 22, 1933 this local union wishes to register a protest against the conducting of the conference called by your committee and especially against the treatment accorded to our delegates and those whose viewpoint on the unemployment problem is similar to our own.

The initiators of the conference addressed the call to our local union and to numerous other organizations. Many of these delegates were in agreement with the views of the conference. It should have been possible for all the delegates to obtain admission into the conference and to voice their views, to submit their proposals or resolutions, and then to have a thorough discussion of everything put before the conference. This is the only correct procedure for a working class movement.

Instead of this, our delegates witnessed exactly the opposite. Workers who came with regular credentials from various labor organizations, particularly Left wing labor organizations, were refused admission into the conference by a "credentials committee" which was never elected but arbitrarily appointed by nobody known who. In addition, squads of strong-arm men were stationed throughout the hall and without the slightest pretext, they were employed to make violent physical attacks upon these delegates who did not meet with the approval of the conference organizers. Not only were these workers slugged and forcibly ejected from the hall, but any delegate who rose to protest against this scandal, was immediately threatened with a dose of the same medicine. The delegate from our local union was twice pulled back into his seat by these strong-arm men, when he made an attempt to take the floor and voice his point of view and his protest.

We sent delegates, like other organizations, in order to help build up a strong and united movement to make some headway in the fight against the misery and hardship which unemployment imposes upon the working man and woman. But our delegates were not given the slightest opportunity to present our point of view, to submit resolutions or to argue for them. The time of the conference was taken up by long-winded speeches from leaders of the Socialist party and the rank and file delegates were made to listen only. Instead of serving there as active participants in a conference, they were lured there to give this conference of semi-business men and political job seekers a workers and proletarian aspect.

We hold to the view we have had before, that it is necessary to unite a large and powerful movement for unemployment insurance and relief. For this purpose, we favored the merging of the conference called by the A. F. of L. committee with that called by the labor committee of the S. P. We intended to present this view at the conference. But before we could do it, the slugging and ejections began, and an atmosphere of terrorism was created.

We therefore wish to protest most energetically against the procedure at this conference. In spite of what has happened, we intend to continue as before with the defense of our point of view that only the genuine united front of all workers' organizations can give a real forward push to the movement to relieve the workers from the effects of the crisis. Our representatives, wherever they are will defend this point of view.

Fraternally yours,
CHARLES EBEL,
Secretary,
Local Union 2090, UB of C and J. of A.
243 E. 84th St., N. Y. C.

F.S.U. Backs Out From L.O. Debate

Chicago.—On the west side of Chicago there exists a branch of the Friends of the Soviet Union that engages in educational activities, hold lectures, debates, etc. This branch decided one day, that it might stage a debate between a member of the F. S. U. and a representative of the National Committee would not permit such a discussion. But the arrangements were made.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published three times a week by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 128 East 16th Street, New York.
EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabeck
Friday, March 10, 1933
Vol. VI, No. 18 (Whole No. 165)
Subscription rate: $2.00 per year, Foreign $2.50. One cent a copy.

Appeal to Y.C.L. Against Slugging

(Continued from Page 1)

GROUP BUT IN SOME PETTY FOOLISH GANG THAT SUCH TACTICS CAN SERVE ONLY TO PLAY INTO THE HANDS OF OUR ENEMIES.

For you to tolerate such tactics in the least is to sanction them. You bear the preponderance of the responsibility for this act, for you have sat by, sanctioning the beatings we have received, by your silence. You bear the preponderance of the responsibility because you sat by, never allowing a word of criticism to emanate from your office against those who persist in disgracing the revolutionary movement because of their "revolutionary, and political integrity," by beating with the aid of pool-hall hoodlums, individual revolutionaries whose political concepts differ in the least. To continue your silence in the face of the recent occurrences, is to commit the greatest injustice to the revolutionary youth movement.

We demand the expulsion from the Young Communist League of Chicago, of Ted Cruck and Ted Peck, as well as all others who participated in the attack upon Comrade Danyluk and whom we could not identify, on the following charges:

1. For the brutal and cowardly beatings given to young revolutionaries, whose sincerity has been substantiated by countless arrests and jail sentences, by such worthless elements as Ted Cruck.
2. For the violation of the most elementary of Marxist axioms: axioms which distinguish us from anarchists and nihilists.
3. For destroying the prestige of the Communist movement.

We demand that the National and District Committees of the Young Communist League take immediate and austere action against the participants of the attack, and make an example of them by expelling these elements from the Young Communist League, as undesirables who are obstructing the progress of the revolutionary youth movement. The decision you make passes judgment upon your own revolutionary integrity and will decide the problem as to whether the Y.C.L. shall continue to grow or cease.

Comrade Danyluk was questioned by the police after he had regained consciousness. He refused to reveal the names of his assailants, nor did he utter a word that might throw the slightest suspicion upon the organization that was responsible for the deed. He pleaded ignorance to all questions that might in the least incriminate the Y.C.L. YON, AND NOT THE POLICE are the ones to pass decision upon such action. YOU MUST ACT.

We have tolerated these beatings long enough. WE REFUSE TO TOLERATE ANY SUCH FURTHER ATTACKS UPON OUR COMRADES. YOU MUST ACT AGAINST THEM. We do not believe in settling our problems before the capitalist courts. We know of more effective ways of settling such problems in the revolutionary movement. Your decision, and the outcome of the condition of comrade Danyluk, will go far to decide our action.

We register our revolutionary protests,
NATHAN GOULD,
For the Spartacus Youth Club,
JOSEPH GIGANTI,
For the Communist League of America, (Left Opposition), Chicago Branch.

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Big Oehler Meeting In Davenport

Davenport, Iowa.—A very enthusiastic audience of 125 workers greeted Hugo Oehler, member of the national committee, when he spoke in Davenport on "What Is Happening in Germany?" Comrade Oehler presented the situation in Germany in a very enthusiastic report showing the mistakes in the present Stalinist leadership and the necessity of the social democratic leadership. Comrade Oehler answered many questions about the situation in Germany.

The Stalinists—there were only about six present. They made an excuse that they were doing more important work than discussing the German revolution so that is the reason their leadership could not be present.

About seventy-five militants were sold at the meeting. A motion picture of the workers in Davenport and the greeting is to be sent through the International Left Opposition.

Comrade Oehler while he was in town gave a lecture on the principles of the Left Opposition before our branch, about an hour in the afternoon and about an hour after the mass meeting was over. Several comrades that are not in the Left Opposition attended both of the lectures. In fact there was not even a minute of spare time for comrade Oehler from the time that he reached Davenport to the time that he left.

March 15, 1933, 8 P. M., the Workers' Educational Forum will hold a 50th anniversary meeting for Karl Marx at the same hall. Comrade H. Brady of the Chicago branch will give a review of Marx's life and the significance of his teachings. There will be a musical program by a German singing society of this city. Refreshments will be served after the meeting. Admission 10c—Unemployed Free.

THE ONLY ROAD

The Only Road by Leon Trotsky has been completely set up and will go to press within the next few days. This is a fundamental analysis of the German situation and all the factors that led to the assumption of power by Hitler. No militant can fail to read this book. The book will consist of more than 100 pages and will sell at a very nominal price. Watch for its publication.

Comrade Cannon's Speech at Albany

(Continued from Page 1)

the overwhelming majority, if not every single delegate here, would vote for it with both hands. In its composition it is a conference of the vanguard. The important and decisive questions for such a conference are the questions of program, perspectives and tactics. From this point of view I shall undertake to analyze the situation as the Left Opposition sees it and from which our proposals flow.

The crisis is preparing the ground for a great resurgence of the American working class. The cynical indifference of the capitalist rulers to the plight of the hungry masses, the pittance relief doled out as charity, the savage wage cuts and other aggressions on the one hand, and the bankruptcy of all the capitalist panaceas for overcoming the crisis on the other—all this is producing in the depths of the working and unemployed masses the most profound resentment and dissatisfaction. The necessary conditions for the transformation of the psychology of the working class, for its political awakening and its emergence as a class on the road of the class struggle, are maturing rapidly; to a certain extent they have already matured.

The furious resentment of the workers is accumulating to the breaking point, preparing the way for a great explosion of working class protest. Of decisive importance to facilitate this are: the program, the tactic and the perspective. The present conference has to be conceived not as the culmination but rather as a point of departure in the struggle to set a real class movement of the working and unemployed masses on foot.

The hesitation of the masses to express their profound resentment at the terrible conditions imposed upon them in the crisis in aggressive struggles on a broad scale, which up to now has been one of the most outstanding characteristics of the situation, has certain causes. The mass unemployment overwhelmed the employed workers with a sense of insecurity and helplessness, and served as a deterrent to actions on their part. In addition to that, the absence of any organized movement of the unemployed on a sufficiently large scale, and the disunity in such movements as have existed have operated to paralyze the development of a real class movement. All this does not preclude the possibility of a change in the attitude of the workers, and that in a comparatively short time.

The program for the translation of the mass discontent and resentment of the employed and unemployed workers into class actions on a broad scale and for the fusion of their interests and their actions in a common struggle, centers around the following main demands:

- (1) Immediate relief
- (2) Unemployment insurance, to be paid for by the employers and the government.
- (3) The six-hour day and the five-day week without reduction in pay.
- (4) Long term, large scale credits to the Soviet Union, as a means of unemployment relief for the American workers and the combating of fraternal bonds between the American and Russian workers. This implies the demand for the recognition of the Soviet government and the establishment of trade relations with it.

The tactic by means of which the scattered separate movements can be welded into one, and the still inactive masses can be drawn into the struggle, is the tactic of the united front. The united front tactic aims to bring about common action of various workers' organizations, trade unions and parties. It proposes their joint action in a common movement for immediate aims. It is addressed to the official organizations as well as to the rank and file members, and puts the leaders to the concrete test of struggle. Without this tactic the reformist leaders who disrupt and sabotage the movement escape unpunished, they continue to deceive large masses of workers with empty phrases and to thwart their desire for united struggle. On the other side, without the tactic of the united front, the actions organized under the leadership of the revolutionary workers remain isolated vanguard actions; they do not succeed in reaching the less awakened workers and drawing them into the fight; and, consequently, they fail to exert the necessary class pressure on the capitalists and their government. The present composition of the Albany Conference (almost exclusively Communist and Left wing delegates), is the most striking illustration and warning on this question. A decisive turn to the genuine tactic of the united front is the most imperative need now for the further development of the movement.

The actions of the impoverished and hunger-driven masses, which can follow with accelerated speed and accumulating force from the program and tactic laid down above, must now primarily take the form of demonstrations which really unite wide masses in struggle. The appearance at the State Legislature must not be conceived as an end in itself, but as a means of popularizing and stimulating these mass demonstrations.

Such demonstrations, in the next stage of the movement—to the extent that they really involve broad masses and bring a class force to bear—can put upon the capitalist rulers a pressure which they have not felt up till now. These demonstrations can force concessions from the capitalists and compel them to cease further onslaughts on the workers out of fear of giving a further stimulus to the movement. Moreover, such united demonstrations, increasing in size and militancy and gaining visible results in concrete cases, (as, for example, in Chicago), will enormously strengthen the morale of the masses, increase their self-confidence and lead, in turn, to bolder, bolder, and stormier demonstrations.

On this road the hesitating mood of the masses and their more or less passive discontent can be rapidly transformed into the impulse for active resistance all along the line. The moment this decisive turn in the situation is clearly recorded, new and vast perspectives will be opened up. The increased self-confidence that will follow from the first successes in the demonstrations of the unemployed can be rapidly reflected among the employed workers in the industries in the impulse to resist further aggressions on their already unbearable standards. This can lead to economic actions of the employed workers, to local strikes on the basis of concrete local grievances and to the combination of these economic actions with the political demonstrations of the unemployed masses, and to the reciprocal influence of these movements upon each other.

In face of continued wage cuts, which raise the workers' resentment to the explosive point, the multiplication of such strike actions is quite possible. In such an event, and on the basis of a stormily developing strike movement, a demonstrative general strike of short duration is not excluded.

The general strike, however, is not an agitation slogan for the present. An adventurous playing with the slogan of the general strike at the present time can only operate to prevent the development of the elementary workers' movement on the basis of those demands and actions which are appropriate to the present situation and the present stage. The general strike formula cannot be substituted for the preliminary partial actions necessary to prepare the conditions for it. We must not attempt to compensate for the failure or the inability to organize a broad movement on the most elementary basis with big talk about a general strike.

The New U. S. Banking Law

(Continued from Page 1)

drawn, more notes will be printed. If these additional notes go into circulation, you have inflation at one blow. The only thing that has prevented the increased note issue caused by the withdrawal of deposits from resulting in effective inflation already has been the fact that the deposits have been withdrawn to be hoarded, not spent. But at any time the ex-depositors may become still more panicky, may be afraid that even their bank notes will lose in value, and go out and spend them and thus put the whole 2 or 2 1/2 billions of recently-issued currency into circulation. This would at once result in rising prices and in a genuine inflation.

To have more deposits withdrawn would mean to have more bills printed and add further to the danger that if the new bills actually go into circulation, inflation, with rising prices and lower buying power of money and money wages, would be upon us.

The party cannot have both—a fight against inflation for the sake of the workers, and a fight for unlimited cash withdrawals of deposits which involves additional currency and so opens the door to inflation.

The unanimous vote in the House, and the vote of 73 to 7 in the Senate for a banking law which its own father, Senator Glass, described as shocking, show how demoralized and terrorized are the parliamentary bodies. To propose "mass pressure" on them to change the course which is being dictated by the big bankers is simply not serious.

The workers must be told plainly, without hysteria or exaggeration, that there is a possibility that the present banking crisis may develop into a period of inflation, which will amount to a wage cut. Such a situation must be met with a demand for higher dollar wages, to compensate for the lower buying power of the dollar if it develops. Representatives of the workers should determine the amount of increase needed. The struggle for such higher wages must be waged on as broad a front as possible, as it will gain in strength if fought on a national basis and be proportionately weaker if it has to be fought out from shop to shop.

Second, such workers' committees who are charged with the duty of observing and measuring the movement of prices could well carry along with them the petty bourgeois masses, organized into consumers' leagues or similar organizations into committees for the suppression of abuses such as hoarding of commodities by dealers, unjustified price advances, substitutions, etc.

These are only typical of the methods by which a broad united front movement for a fight against inflation might be developed within the proletariat and under the guidance of its vanguard, which could lead the petty bourgeois masses and not be swamped by them. Such a movement, if the present banking crisis develops into a real currency breakdown, and if it is firmly guided by a resolute and correctly-orientated Communist vanguard, could rapidly develop from such practical and limited tasks to the boldest revolutionary demands, to workers' control of production as a road to the dictatorship of the proletariat.

—B. J. FIELD.

International Pre-Conference of the Left Opposition Presents Thesis

(Continued from last issue)

Cleansing of the Ranks of the Left Opposition and Composition of the International Conference

The Left Opposition is able to grow and strengthen itself only by the purging of its ranks of casual and alien elements.

The revolutionary awakening after the war seized not only the young generation of the proletariat, but also revived a great variety of sectarian groups, which sought a way out on the roads of anarchism, syndicalism, pure propaganda, etc. Many of them hoped to find an arena for their revolutionary ideas in the Communist International. Many elements of the petty bourgeois Bohemians also joined under the banner of Communism, having been thrown out of their ruts by the war and the post-war upheavals. A part of this many-colored army of partisans dissolved itself into Communism and entered into the composition of its apparatus; poachers often make the best gamekeepers. The dissatisfied ones on the other hand either returned immediately into their political non-existence or attempted, on the way, to attach themselves to the Opposition. Such elements are prepared to accept in words the best of principles; on condition that they not be prevented from remaining good bourgeois (Faz & Co.), that they be obliged to no discipline of thought and action (Sovietism), or to give up their syndicalist and other prejudices (Rosmer).

In approaching the task of assembling its ranks on the national as well as the international scale, the Left Opposition could do nothing else than begin with these many-fold groups which actually existed. But from the very beginning it was clear to the basic nucleus of the International Left that the mechanical combination of separate groups which count themselves among the Left Opposition is permissible only as a starting-point, and that later on, based on the theoretical and political work as well as on internal criticism, the necessary selection must be made. In fact, the last four years were for the International Left Opposition a time, not only of clarification and deepening of theory on the ground of the individual countries, but also of its cleansing of alien, sectarian and adventurist elements of the International Bohemia, without a principled position, without serious devotion to the cause, without connection with the masses, without a sense of responsibility and discipline, but for all the more inclined to listen to the voice of careerism (Landau, Mill, Graef, Weil and other varieties of the same fundamental type).

The principle of party democracy is in no way identical with the principle of the open door. The Left Opposition has never demanded of the Stalinists that they transform the party into a mechanical sum of fractions, groups, sects and individualities. We accuse the centrist fraction of carrying on an essentially false policy which at every step brings them into contradiction with the flower of the proletariat, and that it looks for the way out of these contradictions in the strangling of Party democracy. Between the organizational policy of bureaucratic centrism and its "general line" there is an inseparable connection. In contradiction to Stalinism, the Left Opposition is the bearer of the theory of Marxism and of the strategic achievements of Leninism in the world labor movement. As far as principle methods are concerned, the International Opposition has never broken with any group or with any individual comrade without exhausting all methods of ideological influence. Exactly for that reason the work of selecting cadres that has been accomplished possesses an organic and permanent character. By checking over each and every one, on the basis of his actual work, the Left Opposition must carry through to the end the cleansing of its ranks of alien elements, since, as experience has shown, only in this way can it expand and educate its proletarian cadres. The International Conference can rest only on the basis of the work which has already been done, and deepen and consolidate the results of this work.

The proposal to call a conference with each and every group that reckons itself in the Left Opposition (the groups of London and Rosmer, the "Maharur", "Spartacus", the Welsbord group, etc.) means the attempt to turn the wheel backward and gives evidence of a complete lack of understanding of the conditions and laws of development of a revolutionary organization and of the methods of selection and education of its cadres. The pre-conference not only rejects but condemns such an attitude as being radically opposed to the organizational policies of Marxism.

The Left Opposition in Italy (Relations with the Bordighists)

The so-called Left Faction of the Italian Communists (Prometeo-group or Bordighists) has its traditions, which are sharply distinguished from the traditions of the Bolshevik-Leninists. The Bordighists, who had originated in the struggle against the opportunism of the old Italian Socialist Party, at one blow put themselves on the ground of anti-parliamentarism and of ultimatum and persisted in their opposition to the Comintern as early as the period of its first four world congresses. The formal abandonment of anti-parliamentarism, which took place after the second world congress, changed nothing essential in the policies of the Bordighists. The rejection of the struggle for democratic slogans under any and all conditions, and the refusal of the policy of the united front with regard to the social democracy—today, in the year 1933, after the enormous experience in all the countries of the world—sufficiently proves the sectarian character of the "Prometeo" group. The Bordighist faction, while claiming the role of an independent Marxist current, has proven its complete inability to exercise any influence on the development of the official party. Within the latter there has arisen a new Marxist grouping (N. I. O.), entirely on the basis of the ideas of the International Left Opposition. Just as glaring a mark of the sectarian character of the Prometeo group is its complete inability, in spite of an existence of more than ten years, to extend its influence to other countries. The national limitations of Bordighism, from the standpoint of Marxism, represent its harshest and most bitter condemnation.

The International Opposition, in this case as in others, has made every attempt to make possible the adaptation of the Bordighists to the Bolshevik-Leninists. The gigantic events which have taken place in the last few years in China, Spain and Germany, have been an exhaustive checking-up of the differences of opinion in the questions of democratic slogans and of the policy of the united front. Every critical blow which the Left Opposition struck against the Stalinists, at the same time rebounded against the Bordighists. The three years of existence in common, the criticism of ideas and the criticism of events have brought them no nearer to us. Now the necessary conclusions must be drawn.

Within the framework of a mass party it would naturally be possible to live together with the Bordighists—under the condition of a firm discipline in action; but within the framework of a fraction it is completely impermissible, especially after the entire experience which we have gone through, to support the fiction of unity with an alien group, which remains ideologically immovable and isolated in a sectarian manner.

The Bordighists themselves have never assumed a loyal attitude toward our international organization. By compelling all their members, irrespective of their individual opinion, to come forward and to vote in no other way than in the spirit of the majority of their faction at meetings and conferences of the International Opposition, the Prometeo group has placed the international discipline higher than the national discipline and thereby violated not only the principles of democratic centralism but also those of internationalism. This alone proves that the Bordighists were never actually a part of the Left Opposition. If in spite of this they still hang on to their formal adherence to the International Left Opposition, that is only because in that way the character of their group as a purely national sect is disguised. But the policy of Marxism is not a policy of disguise. While paying due recognition to the honesty and revolutionary devotion of many Bordighists, the International Opposition still considers that the moment has arrived to declare openly: The Prometeo group does not belong to the composition of the International Left Opposition.

The only section of the Bolshevik-Leninists for Italy is the New Italian Opposition (N. I. O.)

To be continued

What Next

Vital Questions for the German Proletariat
by LEON TROTSKY

A penetrating Marxist analysis of the class dynamics and forces at work in the present situation. A burning indictment of the treacheries of the social democracy and the criminal blunders of the Stalinists. A work no Left wing worker and Communist can afford to neglect. One of the texts of the future. 192 Pages Cloth .65 Paper .35 Postage: .03 per copy extra

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Weekly Organ of the Communist League of America [Opposition]

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class matter, November 23, 1923 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879.

VOLUME VI, NO. 19 [WHOLE NO. 161]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY MARCH 18, 1933

PRICE 5 CENTS

Alarm Signal! Danger Draws Closer in U.S.S.R.

One would be a coward or purblind to minimize the extent of the danger—catastrophe looms over the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks), the ruling party of the proletarian state. It can be prevented only by the self-sacrificing struggle of the advanced workers.

The situation is so pregnant with danger that to confine oneself to phrases and hints would mean to participate in the activities of the ruling faction that is sapping the October Revolution. Under the Stalinist regime, the class enemies are better informed of all that takes place or is about to be undertaken, than the working class. The possible attempts on the part of counter-revolutionists to make use of our outspoken criticism do not present one one-hundredth part of that danger which is borne by the malignant misinformation spread by the bureaucracy and by the enforced silence of the proletarian vanguard.

In a broad historical sense, the situation of the Soviet Union cannot be so hopeless as is the situation of world capitalism which finds itself up against an absolute impasse. This general historical perspective not only completely justifies the October Revolution, insofar as it requires justification, but it also dooms beforehand as utterly reactionary all programs of the petty bourgeois democracy (Mensheviks, Social-Revolutionists, etc., etc.), which inevitably reduce themselves to the restoration of "democratic" capitalism. Even in the event of the victory of the counter-revolution, the Soviet Union will grow a new head in place of each one that is chopped off. But this does not at all mean that one may with an easy conscience permit the Stalinist bureaucracy to bring ruin upon the present, living Soviet regime. In the given case, the historical reckoning is a reckoning in terms of decades. Ultimately, the downfall of the Soviet State would express itself only as an historical episode. But should this happen, it would be one of the most horrible episodes in universal history. Our sole task lies in preventing it. Meanwhile the danger approaches closer and closer. Sound the alarm! We must sound the alarm!

BUREAUCRATIC SABOTAGE OF SOCIALIST CONSTRUCTION UNDER THE GUISE OF IN- FALLIBLE LEADERSHIP

By dint of unbelievable exertions on the part of the toilers, at the cost of innumerable privations and sacrifices there have been created grandiose technical values, there have been gained extraordinary productive victories. The October revolution has demonstrated to mankind the possibilities inherent in Socialism, by speaking in terms of steel, cement and kilowatts of electrical energy. But during this same period, the bureaucratic leadership, which is self-sufficient and irresponsible, is incapable of foreseeing and intolerant of criticism, which has been blinded by the mirage of socialism in one country, has brought national economy to the brink of absolute chaos. Industrial conquests and technical achievements are depressed by disproportions and gaps. No one so much as bothers to consult the opinion of workers and peasants upon the most fundamental question in the life of the nation—how much should be used, and how much put away for the future. The bureaucracy takes stock at a glance and proceeds to act, rejecting the objective criteria of achievements, recognizing no laws other than the laws it willfully wills, supplanting plans with commands and balance-sheets with coercion. The task that is most complex, the task that not only was never before solved but never even undertaken—to achieve by means of planned forecasting and regulation the mutual congruity between the branches of a growing economy of an enormous country; this task which by its very nature is insolvable without the daily experience of millions, without their critical checking over their own collective experience, without their openly expressing their needs and demands—this gigantic, all-embracing, nation-wide historical task is solved within official sanctums, in the secretariat of the OEO, all depending upon how the spirit moves it, and upon what this or the other spatz buzzes. What could be more monstrous?

Even if the Politbureau consisted of seven universal geniuses, of seven Marxes, or seven Lenins, it would have still been incapable all on its own, with all its creative imagination, to command over the economy of 170 million souls. But that is precisely the gist of the matter, the Politbureau of Marxes or Lenins would have never even posed itself such a task. And on the other hand, the present Politbureau consists of second-rate bureaucrats who are drunk with the power they have wrested from the party, who have lost the ground from under their feet and who are most of all concerned with preserving their inflated personal prestige.

By LEONTROTSKY

Is it so long since that these homunculi repeated their badly thought out formula of the alliance between workers and peasants, as the foundation of foundations? How long ago is it that they worshipped the middle peasant? How long ago did they ignore the very existence of the kulak? How many ages is it since they rejected the program of planned industrialization in the name of, presumably, preserving the "link" between the city and the village? Frightened by the consequences of their own negligence, they threw themselves into the extremes of 100 percent collectivization. Twenty-five million of isolated peasant egos, who only the day before represented the motive power of rural economy—gravid, feeble as the moujik's nag, but prime movers nevertheless—these millions the bureaucracy attempted to supplant at a single blow by the administrative will of 200,000 kolkhozi (collective farms) directorates which were without the necessary equipment, the necessary training, and which lacked the necessary support of the peasantry itself.

The excessive shift in the apportionment of national income—from the village to the city, from light industry to the heavy industry; the ominous disproportions within industry, light as well as heavy—has excessively lowered the efficient functioning of labor power and capital expenditures. The economic link (smychka) between the state industry and the peasantry turned out to have been broken prior to its having been achieved. The chervonnets in the pocket of a

(Continued on Page 2)

HAS RAKOVSKY BEEN ASSASSINATED?

A March 16 Associated Press dispatch from Istanbul, Turkey, reports:

"Information from several sources has been received by Leon Trotsky, living in exile on Prinkipo Island, that Christian Rakovsky, former Soviet Ambassador to Paris and former President of the Ukraine Republic, has been returned to Moscow from exile and put to death."

A feeling of the deepest horror will grip the heart of every working class militant at the mere reading of this report. We know that Stalin, rude and disloyal, personally vengeful, has not hesitated in the past to send to their deaths such sterling revolutionaries as Heinrich Richsen, Butov, Silov, Rabinovitch, Blumkin, Zivzaze and other Bolshevik-Leninists in the Soviet Union. We know that he has not hesitated to send to prison and to distant exile the flower of the old Bolshevik leadership, men and women with decades of revolutionary struggle behind them.

Has he now dared to assassinate Christian G. Rakovsky, the great champion of the revolutionary proletariat? Has he now dared to put to death, with a sword's blow in the dark of the night, the noble internationalist whose two generations of militant Marxism constitutes a milestone record difficult to match in modern times? Has the man who proudly gained the enemy of every Balkan tyrant, who founded the Third International, who was first chief of the Ukrainian Soviets, who was driven from Paris by the French bourgeoisie, who was later driven from the party by the Thermidorian reaction, has he finally been deprived of life itself by the bureaucratic apparatus?

We demand an answer from the responsible head of the Russian party:

WHERE IS CHRISTIAN RAKOVSKY?

HAS HE BEEN EXECUTED?

The revolutionary proletariat will hold to responsibility and a final accounting those who have dared lay murderous hands on the man whose life and struggles, whose unyielding intransigence, whose serene firmness under the hammer blows of reaction have been and remain an inexhaustible source of inspiration to every proletarian revolutionist!

Therefore, an open answer: WHAT HAS BEEN DONE TO CHRISTIAN RAKOVSKY?

Stalinists Discredited at Mooney United Front Conference In N.Y.

The New York United Front Mooney Conference was no ordinary demonstration of the strength and weakness of the Stalinist machine. As it turned out the conference got out of control of the Stalinist steering committee. Bedlam broke loose. A riot was avoided only by summarily adjourning.

The conference, overwhelming Stalinist in its political complexion, was oriented on the party's half-turn on the united front. The contradiction between this political orientation and the attempt on the part of the party steering committee to run it in the well known Stalinist, closed-corporation manner is the key to an understanding of the tense political drama that was fought for eight hours on the floor of the conference.

The conference was opened by the reading of a message from Mooney. Following this Palmer of the Federated Press was elected temporary chairman. A motion to elect a credentials committee was carried and the following were elected: Sultan of the Fraternity; Nesson of the TUUC; Gubernick of the Huntington Branch of the S. P.; Mac Christian of the NWIU; Riner of the Brotherhood of Painters, Local 445; Penn of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; and Berman of the Left Opposition who was a regularly elected delegate from a Workers Circle Branch. Berman's election caused the party members no end of confusion. Comrade Berman is well known to party members as a member of the L. O. When it came to voting on Berman the party steering committee raised their hands. Half the party members followed suit. But the other half were confused by the sight of their leaders voting for a counter-revolutionary Trotskyite and did not vote. The 140 votes Berman got were enough.

From this point on the confusion grew apace until the conclusion of this eventful gathering. Louis Scott, Mooney's personal representative made the report. He summarized some of the outstanding points in the legal aspect of the case. His perspective for the future of the fight was essentially a legal one. He laid down the tasks of the movement as follows: united front mass meetings and demonstrations; a delegation to Roph to demand the immediate and unconditional release of Mooney; a delegation to Roosevelt to get him to intercede with Roph for Mooney; a congressional investigation; and if all these measures fail, a general strike. The emphasis he gave the legal fight gave the impression that he regarded the mass movement as a somewhat helpful auxiliary; an ace-in-the-hole to be sprung on the capitalists if all else fails.

(Continued on Page 4)

A Notice To Our Readers

Just as the Militant was going to press, we received the highly important article of comrade Trotsky printed herewith. Coming at a time when events move with extraordinary speed and sharpness, the article bears all the greater significance. So much so that we have been forced at the last moment to eliminate a number of reports and comments on pressing local and national class struggle issues. These latter, as well as the rest of the article by comrade Trotsky will appear in the next issue of the Militant.

Cafeteria Strike On in N. Y.

Never before have the working conditions in the food industry been so bad as at the present time. The bosses, having taken advantage of the unemployment situation and the absence of a powerful workers' organization, have reduced the already miserable conditions to a point of slavery. Wages have been reduced to a starvation level, the working time lengthened to 14 and 15 hours a day.

The Polts-Fischer Cafeteria Company after having reduced the wages of their employees to the lowest possible level, on top of it, forces them to buy shares in the company, with a threat of losing their jobs. Under these conditions and with the persistent propaganda of the BWIU the workers realized the necessity of an organization as the only weapon against the attacks of the bosses.

As a first step they organized their shop committees. Through their shop committees the bosses were able to find out who were in these committees, and with hypocritical excuses began firing them one at a time. The union immediately staged a demonstration in front of the company offices demanding the reinstatement of the disgraced workers. Although the company promised to comply with the demands of the union, a few days later they fired more bakers who were members of the union. Under these conditions a strike on the part of the union was not only inevitable but a necessity. The strikers and the organization are

(Continued on Page 3)

Two Framed Up by Peabody Coal Co.

Springfield, Ill.

Dewitt C. Webb, one of the outstanding leaders of the Bonus Army while in Washington, captain of the Bonus Army at Camp Neal in Springfield and honorary member of the Progressive Miners of America and his co-worker, John Wang, have been framed-up and railroaded to Vandalla State Prison for one year and eight months respectively and fined 300 dollars. The framed-up charges against them was that they carried concealed weapons while on the picket lines against the Peabody Coal Co. But the evidence in the case showed conclusively and without the shadow of a doubt, that neither Webb nor Wang had any kind of weapon while on the picket lines. The evidence showed that Webb was beaten up by the State Highway police and then arrested and after that taken to jail and framed in the Sangamon County Jail. The evidence further showed that Chief Moody, of the State Highway Police and his Cossacks on the morning that Webb was beaten up to "bring him in." Within a few minutes after a decision was rendered against Webb and Wang, they were rushed on to Vandalla State Prison.

Why all the haste? And what is the real reason for the framing-up and railroad of Webb and Wang to prison? Because the Progressive Miners of America is

(Continued on Page 2)

Crisis In Germany Manifesto of the Left Opposition

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE C. P. U. S. A.
TO ALL COMMUNIST WORKERS!

The onslaught of Fascism is sweeping over the German working class with breath-taking swiftness. The heavy blows already struck have served to raise the necessity of united front action as the immediate life-and-death question of the German proletariat. The cry for the united front is resounding from the ranks at a high pitch, spurred on by the whip of events.

Under this pressure from the proletarian mass, both the yellow social democracy as well as the Centrist Stalinist bureaucracy have been forced to give an immediate answer to the question of the practical formation of the united front. It is this above all which accounts for the reported united front negotiations between the Second and the Third Internationals. It is in this light that the Left Opposition greets the reported negotiations as the incident fulfillment of a demand that the Bolshevik-Leninists have been fighting for from the beginning of the Fascist danger—as a confirmation of the correctness of its revolutionary foresight. If the reports are true, a desperately necessary step has been taken, if they are not true, a criminal and unmovable hoax has been perpetrated on the whole international working class!

The Left Opposition has been fighting for the application of the Leninist united front tactic, for the establishment of the proletarian united front as the gateway to the revolutionary struggle against Hitlerism, to the working class solution of the German crisis, to the extension of the World October.

The Left Opposition says to the Communist workers: If the necessary turn of the Communist international in the united front policy is really to be carried out, if it is to be carried out in the revolutionary sense, the negotiations between the revolutionary and the reformist internationals must be brought out into the broad daylight! No compromises behind the scenes but united struggle against the enemies concluded before the eyes of the Communist and social democratic workers! No covering up of mistakes, no silence on the past, but candid and frank explanations are necessary: Why the new turn, how is it to be carried out, on what basis?

To leave the confusion of "social Fascism", of the "united front from below" unexplained, to fail to bring clarity on these questions—that is the way to make the turn an empty, worthless maneuver, that is the way to undermine the progress which is essential. That must not be. Clarity, above all else, is the need of the moment. The Left Opposition, in America as well as elsewhere, has been in the forefront of the struggle against German Fascism because this struggle is the central task of proletarian internationalism, of the revolutionary working class in the present period. As the international vanguard of the working class, the Left Opposition has pointed out tirelessly that the fate of Germany—the weakest link in the chain of a decaying capitalism gripped by its deepest and most widespread crisis—concentrates within itself the fate of Europe, of the world. We have pointed out that there the solution will be given for years to come—on the road to the international extension of the October revolution or on the road to the triumph of world reaction and mortal danger to the existence of the Soviet Union.

A capitalist Germany—under Fascist rule—cannot exist without imperialist aggression against the USSR. A socialist Germany can only exist as a unit with the USSR in its extension to the Soviet United States of Europe. That is what the question of Fascism or Communism means to the international working class.

Precious time has already been lost. Many unnecessary sacrifices have already been made. The Fascist consolidation in Germany has been going on apace. But the decisive battle has not yet been fought. The test of forces between the ranks of the united proletarian and the motley hordes of Hitler's Brown shirts has not yet come out into the open.

The united front of the proletariat is on the order of the day for practical arrangements. The treacherous half-way and half-hearted measures of the social democracy will stand exposed in their nakedness once the proletarian united front is established. The open struggle between Fascism and working class can only be a struggle to annihilation, to the bitter end. In such a struggle the masses of social democratic workers will surge far over the heads of their treacherous leaders. They will, to life, to power will merge with that of the proletarian vanguard, the ranks of Communism.

The Fascist camp and the camp

(Continued on Page 2)

An Open Letter to the Central Committee of the Communist Party

To the Central Executive Committee, Communist Party of the U. S. A. Comrades:

Events in Germany are moving with break-neck speed. There is very little time left. The German proletariat, facing the bloody avalanche of Fascism, stands in desperate need of international aid. In the first place, it needs the aid of the Communist international in guiding it to a correct policy. A tremendous responsibility rests on the Comintern in this fateful hour. As a section of the Comintern, the American party bears a full share of this great historic responsibility. The Left Opposition, which is a faction of the party and the Comintern, turns to you now once more with concrete proposals for a line of action which in our opinion must be followed without delay.

Our proposals are the following:

1. That the American party openly demand of the Comintern and the German C. P. that they adopt completely and unambiguously and carry out in practice the policy of the united front.

2. That the American party demand the convening of the 7th

Congress of the Comintern immediately, with the participation of the International Left Opposition, and that Trotsky and Rakovsky be especially summoned to Moscow to take part in the Congress.

3. That the German question be put as the most important question before the party, that systematic discussion on it be organized in every unit of the party from top to bottom, and that it be the first point on the agenda of the forthcoming party convention.

4. That the Left Opposition be readmitted to the party on the basis of party democracy; that the American C. P. support in the Comintern the readmission of the Left Opposition on an international scale, and the release and return of the imprisoned Bolshevik-Leninists in the Soviet Union.

5. That the party call for a united front conference of all workers organizations, including the socialist party and the A. F. of L., to formulate a concrete program for united front demonstrations in Germany with the German workers. This action to begin on a national scale, and proceed from that to local actions along the same line.

For several years now, week in and week out, the Left Opposition has been warning of the very things that are happening now in Germany as the consequence of a false policy. It has predicted and its predictions are literally verified. The Left Opposition has pointed out the way and the events have confirmed its prognosis. It is time now to turn the helm. There is very little time left.

We hope you will realize it, and do your part to help the Comintern and the German party to realize it, before it is too late. The way to do this has been outlined above. The Left Opposition for its part stands ready, now as always, to help the party find its way on the path of international duty. Our agitation, our criticism, our warnings are all directly loyal to this end. And in any actions which will be undertaken, to rescue the American working class and form a united front of international support the members of the Left Opposition with the German proletariat, all will put themselves at the disposal of the party for any service required of them.

With Communist Greetings,
NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF AMERICA (OPPOSITION)
J. P. CANNON, Secretary.

One thing is certain. American imperialism must liquidate the bulk to win in the international struggle for the dominating position and of its heavy international debt it is make the Dollar the basic international medium of exchange. The capitalists had to find some form of juggling the contradiction between the gold standard internationally and the need of liquidation of the internal debt nationally. The present move of the bankers is an

(Continued on Page 2)

THE PARIS COMMUNE March-May 1871

Speaker:

Martin Abern

at the International Workers Hall, 126 East 16th St.
FRIDAY, MARCH 17, 1933, at 8 P. M. ADMISSION: 15c

MANHATTAN
MASS MEETING

The ALBANY CONFERENCE

And the Next Step in the Unemployment Movement

Auspices: Communist League of America (Opposition)

Speaker:
JAMES P. CANNON
Delegate of the Left Opposition to the Albany Conference

IRVING PLAZA
15th Street and Irving Place
SUNDAY, MARCH 19, 1933
ADMISSION 15c

The Soviet Union In Danger

(Continued from Page 1)

moujik fell into the same relation to commodities as a lottery ticket stands in relation to the prize. The new form of the link, which is so important in the perspectives of transforming the village, namely the productive link, which is realized by tractors and farming machinery, lost at once all its force of attraction in the eyes of the peasant, insofar as its actual fruits remain unrealized by him. Fifteen million peasant farms have been collectivized, and ten million private enterprises have been collectivized, and ten million private enterprises as not to permit the exposure of the superiority of barbaric small-scale economy over the purely bureaucratic collectivization. Thus by means of combined resources the bureaucracy succeeded in weakening if not in killing all stimulus for work within the peasantry. The harvest of crops, even previously extremely low, began to drop ominously. From quarter to quarter the supply of industry with raw materials and of cities with foodstuffs worsens catastrophically. The enormous conditions under which the workers live generate the turnover of labor within enterprises as well as lapses, careless work, damaging of machinery, high percentage of damaged products, and low quality in grade of production. The entire planned economy falls under the blow.

MONEY INFLATION

The bureaucracy has rid itself not only of political control on the part of the masses but also of the automatic control on the part of the chevronets. All the draft figures pertaining to the economic budget, to the quality of production, to basic costs and the productivity of labor—all these have been swirled away like so much dust when the inflation completely liquidated the stable unit of value. Bureaucratic supervision tried its hand in this case as well to supplant economic reality; the gospel of "Stalin's six conditions" was designated from then on to fulfill the function of a stable system of currency. This amounts to the same thing as feeding excerpts from a cook-book in place of proper food.

Money inflation means an ever increasing tax upon the living standards of the masses. By killing the interest of the worker in piece-work wages, by fostering the indignation of the peasant against fixed prices for rural products, inflation sets a frenzied premium upon speculation and the speculator.

He lies who affirms that under socialist construction there would be nothing to fear from inflation. On the contrary, during the first steps of planned economy—and this covers a series of five year plans—inflation becomes especially dangerous, not to say ruinous. That is precisely how a plan checks itself by being compelled to make both ends meet without inflation. To proclaim that the very existence of a plan nullifies the danger of inflation is approximately the same thing as to insist that the presence of a compass on the ship eliminates the danger of an existing leak. Money inflation becomes the source of credit inflation. The gaps with which the plan is stuffed with printed paper, real criteria give way to fictitious criteria. Planned economy is ravaged from within. For the employees of the Planning Commission there should be hung signs within all offices where the contradictory specifications of the Political Bureau are translated into statistics, each sign with the warning: "Inflation is the syphilis of Planned Economy."

WHO WILL PREVAIL?

The costliness of premature rudimentary bureaucratic collective farms alongside of dislocation of the ties between rural economy and industry, leads to the paralysis of the peasants' will to economic activity. In order to partially return to the moujik the economic stimulus he has lost, the Stalinist leadership has legalized within well-known limits, free markets, screening them under the jesuitical name of kolkhoz trade. The exclusion of traders—middlemen—under the legalization of private trade, signifies a monstrous crazy-quilt of prices in a speculation which is atomized and therefore more insane. The prices on the markets at once rose ten, fifteen and twenty times over the fixed government prices.

Naturally enough, the collectivized farmer sent bread and other products into those channels outside of the state. "This constitutes the negative side of kolkhoz trade," asserts Stalin, without, however, drawing any further conclusions. "Negative sides!" But this very fact—the fact that the collectivized moujik prefers the channels of private trade and speculation to the planned trade with the state—means nothing else but that the economic link between the state and the peasantry has still not even been attained.

Free trade, by raising to the most excessive heights the column of mercury that gauges prices, has brought out into the open the malignant condition of the economic organism. The struggle against this disease demanded a radical re-examination of economic plans and a no less radical revision of the methods of management. Frightened by the facts recorded by the rise of the mercury, the bureaucracy, however, decided to direct its activities towards the thermometer itself. Molotov proclaimed the impending "regulation" of market prices. According to the signs, the economic centers have already taken to this course. As if it is possible to reduce the temperature of a sick organism by lowering the zero point on the scale of the thermometer! The economy must be cured. One must begin with an open acknowledgment that the question Who Will Prevail? despite the official boasting, remains not only still unsolved even in the gongh, but that the very conditions for its solution have excessively worsened as a result of the incessant and uncoordinated bureaucratic coercion of the living tissues of economy.

The piling up of fixed prices, those set conventionally and the prices in the free market; the transition from planned collection of raw material stocks that is, the semblance of trade between the government and the peasantry, to grain, meat, and milk taxes; the struggle not for survival but against death itself, against the mass pillage of kolkhoz property, and against the mass concealment of pillage; the out and out military mobilization of the party for a struggle against kulak sabotage, after the "liquidation" of the kulak as a class; and simultaneously with all this: the undernourishment in the cities, the return to the card system and to the ration, and finally, the restoration of the passport system—what do all these measures mean, independently of the fact whether they are correct or no, if not the return of that cruel struggle between the capitalist and the socialist tendencies, which in 1932 revived a number of features of 1918-1919?

The bureaucracy leans harder and harder upon the administrative lever instead of pulling asunder the framework that restricts the personal interests of the peasants in conformance with the real condition of rural economy. It has been decided "to place" Communists, who will obey the orders of the ruling center, in charge of the kolkhoz which ideally represent volunteer producing cooperatives. Simultaneously with this, the CPC testifies that the village Communists are becoming soaked with the spirit of peasant opposition and must undergo a mass purification. In the meantime, no less than one and a half million of kolkhoz Communists are required in order to fill the commanding kolkhoz positions by party members. Where will they come from?

To force upon the peasant collectives, economic leadership in accordance with party tokens means to undermine not only the kolkhozi but also the authority of the party; it means to substitute a new dose of administrative coercion for the task of economic competition; it means not to go ahead of the Nep but to retrace one's steps back away from it, to "Military Communism", even if on a higher economic plane.

THE BALANCE SHEET OF THE FIRST FIVE YEAR PLAN

The moment at which the first five year plan was concluded coincided with the extreme sharpening of economic difficulties which did not obtain since the period of civil war. But the bureaucracy leads a double life, one for display and the other—in reality. This duality it transfers everywhere, among others, into the sphere of economic statistics.

With a stop-watch in his hands, Stalin insists that if the plan is fulfilled only 93.7, and not 100 percent, it is only because the threat of Japanese intervention, which could not have been foreseen at the time the plan was formulated, had swallowed up 6.3 percent. In other words, the blueprints of the CEC have been confirmed to the dot by the fulfillment of a gigantic plan which constitutes the first experiment of mankind in that sphere, which encompasses from all sides the life of a nation with a 170,000,000 souls and which moreover, was drawn five full years beforehand! If nothing else, this astonishing precision in identity between the design and the realization must arouse the acutest distrust in the entire report on the part of anyone familiar with the A B C of the question. It is sufficient to remark that, according to the casual admission of Molotov, the productivity of industry in 1932 grew only 8.5 percent against the 30 percent which was set by the yearly plan! Where has this grandiose lapse disappeared as well as the lapses of preceding years? Stalin can produce falsified figures, consciously misleading workers and peasants. The report is necessarily drawn in rubles. Within this simple implement of the report there is to be found the key to the secret of the astonishing coincidence between the initial and final figures. Thus, the tremendous over-expenditures in construction are set down as over-fulfillments of the plan, when as a matter of fact, the material results of the construction, despite the billions of over-expenditure, lag behind the plan several times ten per cent.

We are least of all inclined to look upon the fulfillment of the economic plan as a hit and miss affair and would have considered the fulfillment of the five year plan within six, seven or eight years a grandiose success, under the condition that, simultaneously, the proportions were mitigated, and the standard of living of the masses was raised. But it is precisely upon these more important criteria that we have the most unfavorable evidence.

The composers of a plan proclaimed in their own time as their task, "to lift up the country to a new and hitherto unseen, high level of material and cultural development". Even during the first two years the mitigation of the famine in commodities was to have been attained; the next two years were to have initiated the superabundance of goods. In the fifth year, the consumption of industrial products, should have increased, according to various categories, one and a half, two, and two and a half times. The increase in meat consumption was specified at 25 percent, in dairy products—50 percent, etc., etc. In actuality, the shortage in commodities has become unbearably acute; the supply of bread has sharply decreased, meat and dairy products have become rarities. But in return for this, there has been created the theory that socialism is not a consumers' organization of society. The consolation bears too close a resemblance to mockery! In the midst of newly erected factories' plants, mines, electric stations, collective and Soviet farms, the workers and peasants begin to feel more and more as if they are in the midst of gigantic phantoms, indifferent to the fate of living men. An acute feeling of disillusionment has possessed the masses. The populace, as consumers, can no longer understand to what end they are straining their forces as producers.

Had Stalin openly confessed, "the results obtained did not match our expectations because we had neglected much, over-estimated a great deal, and failed to fulfill a great deal more," then the tolling masses, of course, would not have fallen into ecstasy about the leadership, but they would have taken the confession into account; and, in all probability, would have extended the leaders an additional respite. But Stalin said the plan was marvelous, the leadership holds the heights, the design has been fulfilled to the slightest detail. In that case, what about the lamentable results? Stalin is imposing upon the masses the idea that it is not he, Stalin, who is rotten, but the very elements of the plan. The bureaucracy identifies its own blindness with socialism and, while saving the reputation of its own infallibility, villifies socialism in the eyes of the workers and especially the peasants. It seems as if the bureaucracy is consciously striving to force the masses to find a way out other than socialism.

Continued in the next issue

Since the Union Meeting, which gave it birth, the Minneapolis Railroad Council has held a number of council meetings at which new members were added from different local unions of the Brotherhoods. A letterhead and program has been drafted, discussed and printed. The program contains a brief outline of the Minneapolis Railroad Council, and the aim and purpose of railroad councils in general together with nine proposals covering amalgamation, organization and other needed changes inside of the Railroad Brotherhoods. The program also proposes organized and united action for the six hour day without any reduction in pay as a counter-proposition to unemployment and wage cuts which flow automatically from the profit system and the growing productivity of labor. The Council program is being well received by railroad workers wherever it reaches them and although it is less than two months old it has already been read in a limited way from coast to coast. When the R. R. Council idea permeates the minds of the organized railroad workers we think it will become a National Movement inside of the Railroad Brotherhoods which will promote healthy and much needed changes and developments towards amalgamation and organization of transportation workers in general.

On Sunday, February 26th, the Minneapolis Railroad Council held its first Union Meeting of the 21 Railroad Brotherhoods on the following program with reference to the next wage move which is expected to shape itself shortly after June 15th, the expiration date agreed upon at the wage confab of December last. The question proposed for discussion and action was divided in two parts, as follows:

(a) "What position shall we take, and what should be our policy and procedure?"

(b) "Should the 21 Brotherhoods vote and act as a UNIT, or should each organization vote and act separately, and make separate settlement and agreements?"

Handbills advertising the meeting and the program were printed and circulated. Through its chairman, A. F. Whitney, the Railway Labor Executives Association was asked by letter, signed by five members of different organizations, to furnish the meeting with its spokesman on the questions involved. Another letter, signed by three members from three of the Brotherhoods, was sent to about 20 General Chairmen located in the Twin Cities urging their attendance at the meeting to help the membership to decide on the best program and policy to pursue in the expected wage move after June 15th. No Grand Lodge Officer showed up at the meeting and their Chairman Whitney did not even reply to the letter sent him. No reply was received from any of the General Chairmen and only one of them attended the meeting. He said he was for unity and amalgamation without telling the audience what he had done to promote those things.

100 members from 38 Lodges and 12 of the railroad unions attended this Union Meeting. The composition of the meeting was determined by register. The seven shop crafts had only 8 members at the meeting on account of the fact that most of the are still in the Company Unions where they have been left practically unmolested for over ten years by B. M. Jewel and the rest of the official drones. The Communist workers! Demand the calling of the Seventh Congress of the Communist International with the participation of the International Left Opposition!

Party members! Demand that the leaders of the Red October, that Trotsky, Rakovsky and their comrades be immediately restored to their posts of struggle.

Demand the readmission into the party of the Left Opposition!

Forward to mass international solidarity with the German working class!

Forward to the revolutionary defense of the USSR!

Down with the black regime of Hitlerism!

Long live the victory of the German and international working class!

—NATIONAL COMMITTEE, COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF AMERICA (OPPOSITION)

Minneapolis.—On October 23rd, 1932, at a Union Meeting of the 21 Railroad Unions, the "Minneapolis Railroad Council" was organized. The aim and object of this Council, and Railroad Councils in general, is to provide a medium whereby the railroad workers, now divided into 21 separate unions, may have an opportunity to meet together at each terminal occasionally to discuss and take action on any question in which they are all interested.

Since the Union Meeting, which gave it birth, the Minneapolis Railroad Council has held a number of council meetings at which new members were added from different local unions of the Brotherhoods. A letterhead and program has been drafted, discussed and printed. The program contains a brief outline of the Minneapolis Railroad Council, and the aim and purpose of railroad councils in general together with nine proposals covering amalgamation, organization and other needed changes inside of the Railroad Brotherhoods. The program also proposes organized and united action for the six hour day without any reduction in pay as a counter-proposition to unemployment and wage cuts which flow automatically from the profit system and the growing productivity of labor. The Council program is being well received by railroad workers wherever it reaches them and although it is less than two months old it has already been read in a limited way from coast to coast. When the R. R. Council idea permeates the minds of the organized railroad workers we think it will become a National Movement inside of the Railroad Brotherhoods which will promote healthy and much needed changes and developments towards amalgamation and organization of transportation workers in general.

Continued in the next issue

Move to Unite Rail Unions In M'p'lis

Minneapolis.—On October 23rd, 1932, at a Union Meeting of the 21 Railroad Unions, the "Minneapolis Railroad Council" was organized. The aim and object of this Council, and Railroad Councils in general, is to provide a medium whereby the railroad workers, now divided into 21 separate unions, may have an opportunity to meet together at each terminal occasionally to discuss and take action on any question in which they are all interested.

Since the Union Meeting, which gave it birth, the Minneapolis Railroad Council has held a number of council meetings at which new members were added from different local unions of the Brotherhoods. A letterhead and program has been drafted, discussed and printed. The program contains a brief outline of the Minneapolis Railroad Council, and the aim and purpose of railroad councils in general together with nine proposals covering amalgamation, organization and other needed changes inside of the Railroad Brotherhoods. The program also proposes organized and united action for the six hour day without any reduction in pay as a counter-proposition to unemployment and wage cuts which flow automatically from the profit system and the growing productivity of labor. The Council program is being well received by railroad workers wherever it reaches them and although it is less than two months old it has already been read in a limited way from coast to coast. When the R. R. Council idea permeates the minds of the organized railroad workers we think it will become a National Movement inside of the Railroad Brotherhoods which will promote healthy and much needed changes and developments towards amalgamation and organization of transportation workers in general.

On Sunday, February 26th, the Minneapolis Railroad Council held its first Union Meeting of the 21 Railroad Brotherhoods on the following program with reference to the next wage move which is expected to shape itself shortly after June 15th, the expiration date agreed upon at the wage confab of December last. The question proposed for discussion and action was divided in two parts, as follows:

(a) "What position shall we take, and what should be our policy and procedure?"

(b) "Should the 21 Brotherhoods vote and act as a UNIT, or should each organization vote and act separately, and make separate settlement and agreements?"

Handbills advertising the meeting and the program were printed and circulated. Through its chairman, A. F. Whitney, the Railway Labor Executives Association was asked by letter, signed by five members of different organizations, to furnish the meeting with its spokesman on the questions involved. Another letter, signed by three members from three of the Brotherhoods, was sent to about 20 General Chairmen located in the Twin Cities urging their attendance at the meeting to help the membership to decide on the best program and policy to pursue in the expected wage move after June 15th. No Grand Lodge Officer showed up at the meeting and their Chairman Whitney did not even reply to the letter sent him. No reply was received from any of the General Chairmen and only one of them attended the meeting. He said he was for unity and amalgamation without telling the audience what he had done to promote those things.

100 members from 38 Lodges and 12 of the railroad unions attended this Union Meeting. The composition of the meeting was determined by register. The seven shop crafts had only 8 members at the meeting on account of the fact that most of the are still in the Company Unions where they have been left practically unmolested for over ten years by B. M. Jewel and the rest of the official drones. The Communist workers! Demand the calling of the Seventh Congress of the Communist International with the participation of the International Left Opposition!

Party members! Demand that the leaders of the Red October, that Trotsky, Rakovsky and their comrades be immediately restored to their posts of struggle.

Demand the readmission into the party of the Left Opposition!

Forward to mass international solidarity with the German working class!

Forward to the revolutionary defense of the USSR!

Down with the black regime of Hitlerism!

Long live the victory of the German and international working class!

—NATIONAL COMMITTEE, COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF AMERICA (OPPOSITION)

Pioneer Publishing Fund

THE ONLY ROAD

In response to our appeal for funds for paper for "The Only Road" comrade B. J. Field made a loan of $35 for this purpose. Work on the book is moving forward again. In a week it will be on the press. It will be a hundred page pamphlet and will sell for a quarter. All comrades are asked to help us rush the book to completion by ordering it now. Enclose five cents extra for postage.

THE PUBLISHING FUND

With comrade Field's loan the total raised in loans is $129.50. Of this $8 has already been paid back as it came due. The balance will be paid as it comes due.

In addition about fifteen dollars were raised in donations. When you realize that with about $150 dollars we have got out three pamphlets in 12,000 copies and are preparing two more in 7,000 copies you can readily see what a great deal a few dollars accomplishes.

Once more we appeal to all our comrades and friends to lend us a helping hand. This is an invaluable work we are doing. The literature we put out are the texts by which the cadres of the revolutionary movement will be educated. The work must be speeded up and its extent increased. Help it along with donations and loans—donations first and loans second.

Remember that every penny donated and lent is used exclusively for the purpose of getting out literature. It is a separate fund and is not mortgaged by other obligations. Send all funds immediately to:

Pioneer Publishers, 84 East 10th St., New York City, N. Y.

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

Continued in the next issue

The Three Sources and Three Constituent Parts of Marxism

By V. I. LENIN (On the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Death of KARL MARX March 14, 1883-March 14, 1933)

Throughout the whole civilized world Marxist teachings draw upon themselves the extreme hostility and hatred of all bourgeois science (both governmental and liberal). It sees in Marxism something in the nature of a harmful "sect". No other attitude could be expected, for an impartial social science is impossible in a society founded on class struggle. In one way or another every governmental and liberal science defends wage slavery, and Marxism has declared ruthless war against this slavery. To expect impartial science in a wage-slave society is rather stupidly naive—like expecting owners to be impartial on the question whether to raise the workers' wages at the expense of the profits of capital.

But never mind that. The history of philosophy and the history of social science offer abundantly clear proof that Marxism has nothing similar to "sectarianism". In the sense of a shut-in, ossified doctrine standing apart from the main road of development of world civilization. On the contrary, the very genius of Marx lay in the fact that he gave the answer to those questions which the most advanced thought of humanity had already raised. His teachings arose as a direct and immediate continuation of the teachings of the greatest representatives of philosophy, political economy and socialism.

The teaching of Marx is all-powerful because it is true. It is complete and symmetrical, offering an integrated view of the world, irreconcilable with any superstition, with any reactionism, or with any defense of bourgeois oppression. It is the legitimate inheritor of the best that humanity created in the 19th century in the form of German philosophy, English political economy, French socialism.

Let us dwell briefly upon these three sources and therefore constituent parts of Marxism.

The philosophy of Marxism is materialism. Throughout modern European history, and especially at the end of the 18th century in France, where a decisive battle was fought against all kinds of medieval rubbish, against serfdom in institutions and ideas, materialism proved to be the only consistent philosophy, true to all the teachings of the natural sciences, hostile to superstition, bigotry, etc. The enemies of democracy tried therefore with all their might to "refute", undermine and slander materialism, defending various forms of philosophic idealism, all of which come down one way or another to a defense or support of religion.

Marx and Engels defended philosophic materialism with the utmost determination, and many times explained the profound error of any departure from this foundation. Their views are expounded most clearly and in the greatest detail in the works of Engels, Ludwig Feuerbach, and Anti-Dühring, works which, like the Communist Manifesto, are everyday books on the table of the class-conscious worker.

But Marx did not rest on the materialism of the 18th century. He made an advance in philosophy. He enriched materialism with the acquisitions of the German classic philosophy, especially the system of Hegel which had led in its turn to the materialism of Feuerbach. The chief of these acquisitions is the dialectic—that is, the understanding of evolution in its fullest, deepest and most universal aspect, the understanding of the relativity of human knowledge, which gives us a reflection of eternally evolving matter. The most recent discoveries of natural science, radioactivity, the electron, the transmutation of elements, have admirably confirmed the dialectic materialism of Marx—all the teachings of the bourgeois philosophers, with their "new" ways of returning to an old and rotten idealism, to the contrary notwithstanding.

While deepening and developing philosophic materialism, Marx carried it through to the end, extending its mode of understanding nature to the understanding of human society. The historic materialism of Marx is one of the greatest achievements of scientific thought. The caprice and chaos reigning up to that time among opinions about history and politics were here replaced by a strikingly whole and symmetrical and scientific theory, showing how out of one set-up of social life, another one develops in consequence of a growth of the productive forces—capitalism for example out of feudalism.

Just exactly as a man's knowledge reflects a nature existing independently of him—matter, that is, in a state of development—so also the social understanding of man (that is, his various views and teachings, philosophical, religious, political, etc.) reflects the economic structure of society. Political institutions are a superstructure resting on an economic foundation. We see, for instance, how the various political forms of the contemporary European states serve as a reinforcement of the rule of the bourgeoisie over the proletariat.

The philosophy of Marx is that finished philosophic materialism which has given humanity in general, and the working class in particular, the greatest of all instruments of understanding.

Having seen that the economic structure is the basis upon which the political superstructure arises, Marx gave most of his attention to the study of this economic structure. His chief work Capital is devoted to a study of the economic structure of contemporary—that is, capitalist—society.

The classic political economy up to Marx's time had been formed in England, the most highly developed capitalist country. Adam Smith and David Ricardo in their investigation of the economic structure had laid down the principle of the labor theory of value. Marx continued their work. He firmly established and consistently developed this theory. He showed that the value of any commodity is determined by the quantity of socially necessary labor time involved in its production.

Where the bourgeois economist had seen a relation between things (exchange of commodity for commodity) Marx discovered a relation between people. The exchange of goods expresses the connection formed between separate producers by means of the market. Money means that this connection is becoming closer, inseparably uniting in one unit the whole industrial life of the individual producers. Capital implies a further development of this connection. The labor power of man becomes a commodity. The wage worker sells his labor power to the owner of land, factories and the instruments of labor. One part of the working day he spends in order to meet the cost of supporting himself and his family (wages), but another part of the day he spends working for nothing, creating for the capitalist surplus value, the source of profits, the source of the wealth of the class of capitalists.

The doctrine of surplus value is the keystone of the economic theory of Marx.

Capital, created by the labor of the worker, oppresses the worker by undermining the small proprietor and creating an army of the unemployed. In industry the victory of large-scale production is obvious at once, but in agriculture too we see the same phenomenon. The superiority of big capitalist agriculture increases; there is a growing application of machines; the peasant economy falls into the noose of money capital, declines and collapses under the weight of a backward technique. In agriculture the decline of small-scale production takes special forms, but the decline itself is an indubitable fact.

In outstripping small-scale production, capital leads to an increase of the productivity of labor and the creation of monopolies through the union of the biggest capitalists. Production itself becomes more and more social—hundreds, thousands and millions of workers are brought together in a planned, economic, industrial organism—but the product of their general labor is appropriated by a handful of capitalists. Anarchy of production increases, crises multiply, and therewith the mad search for a market and insecurity of existence for the mass of the population.

In enlarging the dependence of the workers upon capital, the capitalist structure creates the mighty power of united labor.

From the first beginnings of commodity economy, from simple barter, Marx followed the development of capitalism to its highest terms, to large-scale production.

And the experience of all capitalist countries, both old and new, proves clearly every year to a larger and larger number of workers the truth of this doctrine of Marx. Capitalism has conquered throughout the world, but its victory is only an earnest of the victory of labor over capital.

When serfdom was overthrown and the "free" capitalist society saw the light of day, it suddenly became clear that this freedom meant a new system of oppression and exploitation of the toilers. Various socialist doctrines began to emerge as a reflection of this oppression and a protest against it. But this original socialism was a utopian socialism. It criticized the capitalist society, condemned it, cursed it, dreamed of its destruction, new fanciful pictures of a better structure, and tried to convince the rich of the immortality of exploitation.

But utopian socialism could not show a real way out. It was unable to explain the essence of wage labor under capitalism, to discover the laws of its development, or to find that social force capable of becoming the creator of a new society.

Meanwhile the tumultuous revolutions which accompanied the fall of feudalism, of serfdom—everywhere in Europe but especially in France—were making it more and more manifest that the foundation of the whole development and its motive force was the struggle of classes.

Not one single victory of political liberty over the feudal class was gained without overcoming a desperate resistance. Not one capitalist country has been formed on a more or less free democratic basis without a life-and-death struggle between the different classes of capitalist society.

The genius of Marx lay in the fact that he was able sooner than others to make and consistently carry out the inference to which the whole of world history leads. That inference is the doctrine of class struggle.

People always have been and they always will be the stupid victims of deceit and self-deception in politics, until they learn behind every kind of moral, religious, political, social phrase, declaration and promise to seek out the interests of this or that class or classes. The partisans of reform and betterment will always be fooled by the defenders of the old regime, until they understand that every old institution, no matter how savage and rotten it may seem, is sustained by the forces of this or that dominant class or classes. And there is only one way to break the resistance of these classes: namely, to find in the very society itself the forces which can and should be organized to fight against them, those forces which can—and owing to their social situation must—form a power capable of sweeping away the old and creating the new.

Only the philosophic materialism of Marx has shown the proletariat a way out of that spiritual slavery in which up to now all oppressed classes have been sleeping. Only the economic theory of Marx has explained the actual situation of the proletariat in the general structure of capitalism.

Throughout the whole world, from America to Japan and from Sweden to South Africa, independent organizations of the proletariat are multiplying. The proletariat is educating and enlightening itself by waging its class struggle. In casting loose from the prejudice of bourgeois science, uniting more and more closely, learning to take the measure of its successes, it is tempering its powers and growing irresistible.

The foregoing article was written by Lenin in 1913 for a Russian magazine called "Education". The translation has been done by Max Eastman.—Ed.)

International Pre-Conference of the Left Opposition Presents Thesis

Continued from last issue

On Party Democracy

The sections of the Left Opposition, originating out of small propaganda groups, gradually are transformed into workers' organizations. This transition puts into the foreground the tasks of party democracy: the kind of regime to which a few comrades who are closely connected and understand each other even with the most informal indications, making all their decisions in a casual manner, must finally give way to regular organizational relations.

The foundation of party democracy is a timely and complete information service organization and covering all the important questions of their life and struggle. Discipline can be built up only on a conscious assimilation of the policies of the organization by all its members and on confidence in its leadership. Such confidence can be won only gradually, in the course of common struggle and reciprocal influence. The iron discipline which is needed cannot be achieved by naked command. The revolutionary organization cannot do without the punishment of undisciplined and disorganizing elements; but such disciplinary measures can be applied only as the most extreme means, and moreover under the condition of solid support from the public opinion of the majority of the organization.

The frequent practical objections, based on the "loss of time" in keeping to democratic methods are short-sighted opportunism. The education and the consolidation of the organization is a most important task, for whose fulfillment neither time nor efforts should be spared. Moreover, party democracy, as the only conceivable guarantee against unprincipled conflicts and unmotivated splits, in the last analysis does not increase the overhead costs of development, but reduces them.

Only through constant and conscientious keeping to the methods of democracy can the leadership undertake important steps on its own responsibility in truly emergency cases, without provoking disorganization or dissatisfaction thereby.

The pre-conference charges the Secretariat to observe the carrying-out of the principles of party democracy in content as well as in form, within each section as well as in the reciprocal relations between the Secretariat and the sections, particularly and above all in the question of the preparation for the International Conference.

The Left Opposition in Russia. The Austrian "Grey" group first entered the composition of our grouping, then left it, against attempt to enter, but refused to give information as to its internal condition and broke off negotiations on its own initiative. Through its actions it has shown that the tasks and aims of the Left Opposition are completely strange to it, and that it needs the international banner of the Bolshevik-Leninists only as a cover for its hopeless stagnation. The pre-conference states openly that the International Left Opposition bears neither direct nor indirect responsibility for the Grey group.

In Austria the group "Left Opposition of the C.P.A. (Bolshevik-Leninists)", originating from the result of a first regrouping of Oppositionist elements, places itself on the ground of the principles and methods of the International Left Opposition and is engaged in laying the foundations for an organization of the Left Opposition.

In view of the sad experiences of the past the International Secretariat had decided to set a probationary period of six months until the formal and final admission as a section of the International Left Opposition.

The pre-conference approves this measure of the International Secretariat as a means of checking over the regrouping which has already taken place, in action, and it charges the International Secretariat to follow closely the development of the group "Left Opposition of the C.P.A. (Bolshevik-Leninists)" and with the help of the German section to support its conversion into a real section of the International Left Opposition.

The Left Opposition in the Balkans

The disintegration of the capitalist regime in the Balkans has taken on an ever accelerated rhythm. (Great social shock are being prepared. An epoch of great revolutionary struggles is opening. In the near future the burning problems of the strategy of the proletarian revolution will be forced to the surface in the Balkans in all their sharpness and scope.

The pre-conference calls upon the sections as well as the I. S. to follow with the greatest attention the events in the Balkans and the life of the sections which exist there, and to make every effort to establish and consolidate connections with those countries in which no sections have been formed.

The pre-conference regards it as especially necessary to devote more attention within the International Left Opposition and in its publications to the activity of our Greek section ("Archio-Marxists"); this organization, through its strength, its ideological level and its revolutionary consolidation represents the most advanced of our European sections.

After the experience of the participation for more than two years of the Greek Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists, — "Archio-Marxists") in the life of our international organization, the pre-conference declares:

1. The Greek Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists — "Archio-Marxists") is the only representative of the ideas of the International Left Opposition in Greece.

2. The International Left Opposition bears no responsibility, direct or indirect, for the other groups "Spartakos", "Fraktionists", "Leninist Left Opposition", etc., which in words accept the International Left Opposition.

3. The pre-conference calls upon all honest workers to condemn the unprincipled struggle, contrary to the revolutionary spirit and now serving the interests of the Stalinist faction, now of the class enemy, which the above-mentioned groups have been carrying on against our Greek section.

4. The pre-conference calls upon all honest members of these above-mentioned groups to break with the policy of the united front which the Left Opposition in Greece, and to support the latter in its ideological struggles and its every-day actions.

The Left Opposition in Czechoslovakia

The many-fold efforts of the ILO to achieve a permanent unification of the various Czechoslovakian groups which claim to accept the ILO in order to make possible their assimilation into the ILO, have not shown the results desired. The organization created by the Unification Conference of Easter 1932 has proven unable to exert an adequate and systematic activity. Not only did the condition of split-up groups and of insufficient consolidation with the International Opposition continue; in addition, it placed the International Opposition before the accomplished fact of a new split. By this fact alone the existence of a genuine section of the ILO in Czechoslovakia has become illusory. It would be an inexcusable mistake to tolerate a fiction. We must say that which is, under the given conditions the International Opposition finds it impossible to make a final selection among the existing Oppositionist elements in Czechoslovakia. Therefore the pre-conference regards it as necessary to declare all the groups in Czechoslovakia which count themselves in the Left Opposition to be sympathizing groups. The pre-conference charges the Secretariat to follow for the next six months the activity of the Czechoslovakian groups, their evolution and their possible regrouping, in order to propose at an appropriate time a final selection.

It is taken for granted that the various groups must make every effort to arrive at a loyal agreement with regard to their public activities (publishing work, meetings, etc.), and in general to maintain a loyal attitude to each other, so as to avoid anything which might discredit the I. L. O. in the eyes of the Czechoslovak workers.

Continued in the next issue

Workers Letter to Slovene Stalinists

Dear Comrades,

In spite of the fact that the writer of these lines has been opened but unjustly attacked by you and your comrades from time to time; that he has been slandered by false charges; to spite of everything I turn to you once more because you claim that you are champions of the cause of the world proletariat. I turn to you, to these trying times when we meet at the crossroads, as a comrade and a worker.

I would like to call your attention to the following questions which demand a clear cut class standpoint:

1. The victory of German Fascism.

2. The stand of the C. P. of Germany.

3. The stand of the Communist International.

Comrades! Is it not time to re-investigate the position taken by the International Left Opposition?

Don't you think that the Stalin-Bucharin theory of socialism and a classless society in a single, isolated country surrounded by capitalism is totally false?

Don't you think that this theory was concocted to revise Leninism and Marxism in the same way that Bernstein revised Marxism to the second International?

Don't you think that Bernsteinism misguides the 2nd International into the swamp of reformism and parliamentarism and then to treason and complete failure in 1914?

Don't you think that Stalinism is leading the 3rd International to the same end?

Don't you think that the victory of German Fascism means the victory of world counter-revolution?

Comrades! In the name of our common proletarian international family I solemnly ask you to pay serious attention to this question. I sincerely hope that you will have space in your theoretical magazine for the clarification of these principles because this alone enables us to prepare and perform our historic mission and achieve victory over our class enemies.

Not Slavophilism against Germanophilism—but Communism against capitalism.

Comradely yours,
—E. C.

SCHOOL NOTES

Comrade Weber held the first session of his class in American Working-Class History last Sunday. The first topic under discussion was the European Background of American History. We also outlined the method which we will follow, that of having each pupil report upon one topic that he has investigated after which we will have a discussion and summary by the instructor. There is still time for the comrades who have not signed up for the course to do so now. The next session will meet on Sunday, 4 P. M., March 19th and will deal with Colonialism.

Comrade Shachtman has given two lectures in his course on the Principles and History of the International Left Opposition. The first lecture dealt with comrade Trotsky's "The New Course" his fight for internal party democracy; the second lecture covered the "Lessons of October". The third session dealt with the struggle for the industrialization program. The next session of the class will be held this coming Wednesday March 22, on the Opposition Bloc and the Struggle for Collectivization.

Comrade Martin Abern is continuing with his course on the Principles of Communism.

Comrade Cannon's class on American Labor Leaders has been postponed. Due to the German campaign, the Albany unemployment conference and other activities which conflicted with the Sunday date comrade Cannon's class had to be held over. It will begin at the first opportune date.

Pioneer Leader Is Expelled by YCL

I have been expelled by the Pioneer district as Pioneer leader of the Harry Bismar group.

For the past few months I have been wavering and standing on the fringe of the Left Opposition. Only when the events in Germany took on such a critical aspect and tested before my eyes the Left Opposition, was I finally compelled as a Communist to take a definite stand. Questions like "Socialism in one country", "bureaucratic Centralism", etc., are, so to speak, in the realm of theory. The Chinese revolution of 1925-27, the Spanish revolution, the Russian revolution of a year and half ago; these are in the realm of past history, flowing out of and testing the theories. These were convincing enough in themselves. But when the situation in Germany today, under our very noses, gives the most eloquent proof of the correctness of the Left Opposition and the rank degeneration, the vacillation, the stupidity of the Stalinist policy, then one must take a definite stand without reservation. The world proletariat is threatened!

At our last section council meeting (a meeting of Pioneer leaders) Vera Sanders, a member of the Communist party, came down to us to lead a discussion on Germany. She mouthed the same "united front from below" stuff and the phrases of "social-fascism" as had Hatbaway and Bedacht, even if not so expertly. In the true spirit of the new tradition she then launched into a campaign against the "counter-revolutionary renegade, Left social Fascist, agents of Wall St., the Trotskyists. Finally she wound up with a call pointing out to us the role of these "Trotskyists". This inspired suggestion was deftly emphasized by our section director, Gerry Morgan. The leaders, after a puerile discussion which consisted in repeating what the party member said and trying to add a bit here and there, seemed to agree wholeheartedly. It was all so clear and simple to them. I spoke and explained that I would not put up a "Bogey man" of Trotsky before the Pioneers. I gave my views on Germany which are the views of the Left Opposition and was asked to report to the district office. There I was expelled.

I now take my place with the Left Opposition and urge all Pioneer leaders and members of the Y. C. L. and C. P. to seriously study the views of the Left Opposition, and particularly to bring up the question of the present German situation for discussion in their units.

(Signed) DAVID LEVITT.

New York German Meeting

The Newark branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) has a year activity behind it. During this time it carried the flag of Leninism, struggled consciously and had more than one battle and victory over the Stalinist officials. But only on the Hungarian field. We addressed a crowd on May 1st, 1932 as the speaker of the Hungarian Home of Hillside, when they had the official representative of the Party also on the program. We compelled the district organizer of the Party more than once to come to our meetings and defend the Stalinist policy of the Party, which he did very unsuccessfully. That was the pioneer work we carried on last year.

Last Saturday, 11th of March, we held our first meeting in English and appealed directly to the American workers and followers of the Party. The German question, the burning problem of the international proletariat was the subject we discussed with an audience of about fifty people, mostly Party sympathizers and members. Comrade Cannon, our speaker, convinced the listeners that the standpoint of the Opposition is the only road to solve the German problem and lead the Party back to the Leninist line from which they departed by the destructive tactics of the Stalinist bureaucracy. The carefully constructed queries and the eagerness to clear up all the disputed questions are the most illuminated symptoms that comrade Cannon reached the goal for which the meeting was called.

Many of the Party members and sympathizers declared that they were misinformed by the teachings of the Party leaders and urged the branch to arrange more meetings to make known the platform and the tactics of the Opposition to show to the misled masses the only road on which the victory of the proletariat is possible. We decided to do so.

—LOUIS NAQY.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 8, 1879.

Published Weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Max Eastman, James P. Cannon, Matt Shachtman, Maurice Spector, Louis Naqy, and the Swabian.

SUNDAY, MARCH 18, 1933
Vol. VI No. 19 (Whole No. 166)

Subscription rate: $2.00 per year.

Workers' Schools Confer on Fascism And Prepare for Demonstration

A conference of representatives of workers' schools and students organizations was held at the Rand School on Wednesday night, March 8, for the purpose of organizing an anti-fascist demonstration in New York City. The initiative in calling for the demonstration was taken by the Rand School Students Association.

Schools Represented
The call was answered by the party workers' school, the International Workers' School affiliated with the Left Opposition, the New Workers' School of the Lovestone group, the National Students' League, the Brookwood Fellowship, several Ypsel educational centers and the Rand School.

Attitude of the Party Workers' School
If the action taken by the party Workers' School is in line with the present policy of the C. P., then in the course of a few days the party has made one of those sudden, unprepared, sharp turns reversing almost completely its previous stand on united front action. This would be in keeping with the reversal on part of the Communist, forced upon it at this late hour by the violent blows aimed at the working class in Germany.

Comrade Betty Ganett of the Workers' School, after stating frankly that she was a member of the party, and after a lengthy talk in which she attacked the leaders of the social democracy, nevertheless accepted wholeheartedly the plan for a demonstration in front of the German consulate. Even though there was still plainly visible the false ideology of social Fascism and the concept of the united front "from below", comrade Ganett could not avoid taking the position that while a committee of the conference should arrange the banners and the slogans to be used as well as a special leaflet, all the organizations participating should have the right to issue in addition their own leaflets to their own organizations explaining their stand in the united front action against Hitler. The socialists present were opposed at first to the reservations as to the right to criticize, fearing that this meant disruption of the demonstration itself. But it was pointed out that the committee elected by the conference (one from each school) would arrange all the banners and slogans. The socialists then accepted a motion by comrade Ganett on this score.

Role of the Left Opposition

The tardiness of the C. P. in correcting its blunders permitted the initiative in this case to fall to the socialist worker-students. But the delegates of the International Workers' School upheld the banner of Communism by pointing out clearly that this conference, small and non-to-informant as it was, represented in actuality a victory for the Left Opposition, a victory of the C. P. We criticized both the socialists and the official party for their false united fronts "from below", we pointed out that on a broader scale the social democratic leaders could not initiate a real united front for action, that this was the role and duty of the Communists. We explained the specific nature of a united front movement, using comrade Trotsky's slogan "march separately, strike unitedly".

Results of the Conference

The conference accepted the idea of holding a demonstration, not in front of the small Fascist organization here, but in front of the German consulate. It was planned to appeal to the worker-student groups and to youth organizations as well to participate in a militant demonstration against Hitler, date to be announced later.

The party's stand (if it is the case) in this conference, coming so soon after the experience at the Socialist Unemployment Conference from which, owing to the disruptive policy of the official party, the Left wing was violently ejected without a hearing, represents on a small scale, a form of capitulation. We must trust that the party has learned its lesson and that in the more important class struggles involving united front action it will not permit the initiative to fall to the socialists whose role is precisely that of forestalling the real united front by placing themselves in the lead.

—J. W.

Cafeteria Workers Strike

(Continued from Page 1)

determined to fight until the company submits to their demands. The victory of the Polit-Fischer strike will signify a revival for organization among the unorganized workers in the industry who are watching the results of the strike with great interest. However militant the strikers and the members of the whole union may be, more efforts are needed to carry the strike to a victory. The real struggles are still to follow. The bosses have at their disposal the police, jails, gangsters, the judges with their injunctions to be used against the strikers. Our union is rich in such past experience. The united front of all organized workers in the industry is necessary. This depends on the FIWW. The union must immediately propose a united front conference to all locals of the A. F. of L. and A. F. W. in support of the strike and discuss a program for the organization of the unorganized in the industry, which, the union should explain, is a life-and-death question for all existing organizations.

At such a conference, if it materializes, the role of the fake leaders in this industry will be revealed. In their refusal to participate in a conference the FIWW will prove in practice to the workers in these unions the treacherous policies of their leaders. And its prestige will be strengthened among the members of the reformist organization. Away with the policy of the "united front below", which has proved to be a failure! Also away with a united front from above which means secret discussions in closed chambers with the officials. A genuine united front, open, in the presence of all workers, with articles and leaflets to explain to the workers the meaning of a united front from organization to organization. The A. F. W. must not delay such action. We must act immediately.

Also, the case of comrade Petras must not be repeated. Comrade Petras has offered his assistance to the union in its strike because he did not share the political views of the leadership.

Paragraph 3 in the new membership book reads as follows: "The FIWW stands for the united front of all food workers, regardless of political or trade union affiliation". But apparently not including Left Oppositionists. Before the ink was dry these fundamentals were violated by the leadership of the organization. Such action brings only harm to the organization. This must not be repeated.

—SEBASTIAN PAPPA.

The Stalinists Distort Our Stand

"Trotskyites Retain Faith in Strength of Capitalism," with this headline the Daily Worker, March 11, 1933 carries an editorial which continues its campaign of confusing and miseducating the workers as to the principle differences between the Left Opposition and the centrist Stalinist and Right wing Lovestoneite groups. The viewpoint implied might be imputed to the latter; it is not and never has been that of the Left Opposition.

To bolster up its assertion, the Daily Worker brings two quotations from an article by Max Shachtman in the Militant of Dec. 14, 1929, and one from an article by the present writer in the Militant of March 6, 1933.

Comrade Shachtman's article is quoted as follows: "This (Stock Exchange crash) does not point to a crisis—it but indicates a growing depression." What he actually did say was that "This does not yet point to a crisis—it but indicates a growing depression." His very next sentence was, "And Hoover offers no way out for the workers for the simple reason that he cannot solve the multiplying contradictions of capitalism, American capitalism included." A fine defense of capitalism!

More than that—this correct Marxist estimation of the situation as it stood in early December 1929, was absolutely representative of the attitude of the Militant during that whole period, which corresponded to the facts of the developing crisis. In the previous issue, Dec. 1, 1929, the Militant said, "What Congress will do 'nothing' about—except to hand out sort soup—as the increasingly obvious tendency towards a deep economic depression which is cutting the ground from under the feet of the American workers." The issue before last, Nov. 30, 1929, under the heading, "Crash in the Stock Market," closes with the words, "The crash on the stock market is a harbinger of the coming catastrophe."

The isolated sentence quoted by the Daily Worker, wrenched out of its context and misquoted at that, is typical of the Stalinist method of falsifying the viewpoint of a political opponent.

The quotation from the article of March 6, 1933, is given as follows: "At the present moment in the United States, whether or not the turn in the crisis has already arrived, unquestionably most of the work of the crisis in violently and brutally solving, for the moment, the contradictions developed during the boom, has been accomplished."

The Daily Worker distorts this into the following comment, "The present banking crisis is the Trotskyites already see the solution of all the 'evils' which grew out of the 'boom' period, thus clearing the way for a new 'turn in the crisis' for a turn towards prosperity." And the moral, as the Daily Worker puts it, is that "Since the development of the crisis in 1929, in unison with the capitalist economists, the Trotskyites and Lovestoneites denied the sharpening of the crisis in order to lull the growing readiness of the workers to struggle!"

The Militant article of March 6, 1933, begins, "The present cyclical crisis began in 1929 with a financial crisis, in the form of a crash on the stock market; now, after nearly 3 1/2 years, it is marked by a nationwide banking crisis."

This clearly shows that the writer was talking about the specific cyclical movement that began in 1929, not about the general post-war crisis of capitalism. The "turn in the crisis" to which he referred was a cyclical turn, the kind of limited and temporary recovery which is possible within the framework of the general crisis of capitalism.

To deny the possibility of such a turn within the general crisis of capitalism, is to say that capitalism has no way out, that the collapse of capitalism is an immediate practical question, and that this can mean only that the revolutionary crisis is "around the corner"; in the language of tactics, it means that the proletariat should prepare for the seizure of power in the immediate future. It means that capitalism can fall of the weight of its own internal contradictions, when the decisive forces of the working class are not yet mobilized under the banner of Communism for the revolutionary overthrow of the bourgeoisie.

This is not and never has been the language of Leninists. It is the language of pseudo-"Socialist" sectarians of the Socialist Labor Party type. Lenin proved at the

Cornelia Davis

Cornelia Davis, a long-standing member of the New York Branch of the Left Opposition, died a few days ago in Utica, N. Y. Stricken by the full weight of the economic crisis, comrade Davis succumbed. It is with extreme sorrow that we report this untimely death of a very sincere and active comrade. The passing of comrade Davis is but another of the innumerable instances in which the murderer, capitalism, strikes with the weapons of hunger and privation one victim after another in the camp of the proletariat. We mourn the loss of this comrade whose services to the revolutionary movement might yet be manifold, to her husband, comrade Peter Hansen, who is likewise a long-standing member of the League and we promise to continue our relentless struggle against this system which robs us of our best fighters long before their time.

On Our "Faith in the Strength" of Capitalism

Second Congress of the Comintern that capitalism can always find a way out unless the revolutionary proletariat, under the leadership of the Communist Party, will block its ways of escape. The economic contradictions of capitalism, including its cyclical form, will come to an end only with its political destruction. They will not culminate in an automatic collapse, whether called "the end of capitalist stabilization" as the Twelfth Plenum named it, or by any other name.

As long as there is capitalism there will be crises, that is, cyclical movements of economic activity; cycles have both an upward and a downward phase; a turn in the cyclical crisis from its downward to an upward phase by capitalist means, i. e., on the backs of the workers, will be impossible if the proletariat takes the power, and it will be delayed or rendered impracticable to the extent of the effective, organized resistance of the post-war general crisis to the extent that workers' organization and resistance is inadequate and ineffective. History has so far shown us no other instrument than a genuine Communist party which can organize the effective resistance of the workers.

To say that a turn in the crisis is possible because the resistance of the workers has been inadequate is therefore a criticism of the Communist party, and is resented by the Stalinist ruling faction as such. Consequently they deny the facts: cover up the failure of the party to win the leadership of the class, a failure due in large part to the mistakes and crimes of bureaucratic centrism, and deny the possibility of the upturn, preferring instead to lull the workers themselves with "the end of capitalist stabilization."

With this basic approach, they are unable to formulate a policy for either understanding or meeting the developing phases of the crisis. They accept the banking crisis as opening the collapse of capitalism, instead of seeing that, coming at the end of four years of crisis, which during capitalism has held on to the bases of its power, it must have a secondary rather than a fundamental importance.

With typical contempt for the intelligence of the worker, they tell him that the banks have not enough money left to pay off their deposits because their holdings have depreciated, while the fact is that no bank ever can pay off all its deposits at one time, no matter how sound it is. They explain that the banking crisis is due to the bankers' desire to exploit the workers still more, having found that wage cuts alone are not enough. They say that the U. S. is heading at the same kind of inflation, in Germany, since the situation has gone beyond the possibility of control. They point out that the dollar has already been depreciated till it is now worth only a quarter, because with the new issue of notes there will be $4 of paper currency to each $1 of gold—by which reasoning the dollar was never worth a dollar, since there never was $1 of gold for each $1 of paper. They say that the 1907 scrip was finally redeemed at a big discount—historically untrue. They draw the conclusion that the depositor must demand repayment at full value and the worker refuse to accept scrip, but must demand "full payment of wages in old currency values", which would mean an immediate increase of 300 percent, if it is true that the dollar is worth only a quarter now.

We on the other hand pose the principle that the conscious revolutionary action of the working class at the head of the broad masses will overthrow capitalism, not the automatic accumulation of its contradictions; that capitalism has been for many years in a general crisis, within which alternations of cyclical stabilization and crisis have taken place and will continue to take place; that a turn in the crisis toward the upward branch of the cycle at the expense of the working class is possible unless the working class prevents such super-exploitation as it should under the leadership of a real Communist party; that in the absence of such leadership, capitalism can find a way out of the crisis and that the banking crisis together with the rest of the cyclical crisis which has developed since 1929 is part of the machinery with which capitalism restores temporarily its equilibrium, and not the prelude to an automatic collapse.

—B. J. FIELD.

Sidelights On the Albany Conference

Albany—Between freight cars, via jail, and in the back of a depression which is cutting the ground from under the feet of the American workers. The issue before last, Nov. 30, 1929, under the heading, "Crash in the Stock Market," closes with the words, "The crash on the stock market is a harbinger of the coming catastrophe."

The isolated sentence quoted by the Daily Worker, wrenched out of its context and misquoted at that, is typical of the Stalinist method of falsifying the viewpoint of a political opponent.

The quotation from the article of March 6, 1933, is given as follows: "At the present moment in the United States, whether or not the turn in the crisis has already arrived, unquestionably most of the work of the crisis in violently and brutally solving, for the moment, the contradictions developed during the boom, has been accomplished."

The Daily Worker distorts this into the following comment, "The present banking crisis is the Trotskyites already see the solution of all the 'evils' which grew out of the 'boom' period, thus clearing the way for a new 'turn in the crisis' for a turn towards prosperity."

And the moral, as the Daily Worker puts it, is that "Since the development of the crisis in 1929, in unison with the capitalist economists, the Trotskyites and Lovestoneites denied the sharpening of the crisis in order to lull the growing readiness of the workers to struggle!"

The Militant article of March 6, 1933, begins, "The present cyclical crisis began in 1929 with a financial crisis, in the form of a crash on the stock market; now, after nearly 3 1/2 years, it is marked by a nationwide banking crisis."

This clearly shows that the writer was talking about the specific cyclical movement that began in 1929, not about the general post-war crisis of capitalism. The "turn in the crisis" to which he referred was a cyclical turn, the kind of limited and temporary recovery which is possible within the framework of the general crisis of capitalism.

To deny the possibility of such a turn within the general crisis of capitalism, is to say that capitalism has no way out, that the collapse of capitalism is an immediate practical question, and that this can mean only that the revolutionary crisis is "around the corner"; in the language of tactics, it means that the proletariat should prepare for the seizure of power in the immediate future. It means that capitalism can fall of the weight of its own internal contradictions, when the decisive forces of the working class are not yet mobilized under the banner of Communism for the revolutionary overthrow of the bourgeoisie.

This is not and never has been the language of Leninists. It is the language of pseudo-"Socialist" sectarians of the Socialist Labor Party type. Lenin proved at the

Cornelia Davis

Cornelia Davis, a long-standing member of the New York Branch of the Left Opposition, died a few days ago in Utica, N. Y. Stricken by the full weight of the economic crisis, comrade Davis succumbed. It is with extreme sorrow that we report this untimely death of a very sincere and active comrade. The passing of comrade Davis is but another of the innumerable instances in which the murderer, capitalism, strikes with the weapons of hunger and privation one victim after another in the camp of the proletariat. We mourn the loss of this comrade whose services to the revolutionary movement might yet be manifold, to her husband, comrade Peter Hansen, who is likewise a long-standing member of the League and we promise to continue our relentless struggle against this system which robs us of our best fighters long before their time.

with the comrades was extremely interesting. There weren't enough seats; the organizers rushed up and down seeking places; at last we were in, one of us sitting on a pile of Hunger fighters, with all the comrades offering condolences in a wonderfully comradely manner for the uncomfortable position.

Came discussion... and far into the night we microscopically examined the united front from below. For hours we discussed the program and work of the Left Opposition. There was the inevitable question, "Why don't you mass work; why don't you lead the masses in rent strikes?" We could only point out that by their looking at only personal events and by disregarding the questions of principle and tactics they were led into a bog of empiricism. Then we have our comrades facing the guns of Illinois miners disgusted with Communism because of the incorrect tactics of the party which are post-facts self-criticism—that is, too late. The party says we are misleading the workers. We don't aim to set up rival organizations to that of the C. P. One delegate of the Labor Sports Union told of the troubles he was encountering in the development of the political life of the organization, and the proposals and comment we made were greeted by hand-clapping from a comrade at his side. In all—we feel that, the party comrades are taking a serious Communist attitude to the criticisms and proposals of the Left Opposition.

A delegate from the National Students' League was the only youth speaker while we were there, although we asked for the floor.

It was great to note the sh. sh. that went around the hall, and the close and interested attention devoted to the delegate from the Communist League. Whereas the other opposition delegates (Lovestoneites-Weisbord) aroused a hubbub of protest and antagonism, comrade Cannon never suffered a single interruption for even a moment from the floor, and from the table only a tap with a gavel that his time was up; but he read the entire resolution on unemployment which he was bringing before the delegates, to a quiet, very attentive audience.

The return trip on the bus

with the comrades was extremely interesting. There weren't enough seats; the organizers rushed up and down seeking places; at last we were in, one of us sitting on a pile of Hunger fighters, with all the comrades offering condolences in a wonderfully comradely manner for the uncomfortable position.

Came discussion... and far into the night we microscopically examined the united front from below. For hours we discussed the program and work of the Left Opposition. There was the inevitable question, "Why don't you mass work; why don't you lead the masses in rent strikes?" We could only point out that by their looking at only personal events and by disregarding the questions of principle and tactics they were led into a bog of empiricism. Then we have our comrades facing the guns of Illinois miners disgusted with Communism because of the incorrect tactics of the party which are post-facts self-criticism—that is, too late. The party says we are misleading the workers. We don't aim to set up rival organizations to that of the C. P. One delegate of the Labor Sports Union told of the troubles he was encountering in the development of the political life of the organization, and the proposals and comment we made were greeted by hand-clapping from a comrade at his side. In all—we feel that, the party comrades are taking a serious Communist attitude to the criticisms and proposals of the Left Opposition.

A delegate from the National Students' League was the only youth speaker while we were there, although we asked for the floor.

It was great to note the sh. sh. that went around the hall, and the close and interested attention devoted to the delegate from the Communist League. Whereas the other opposition delegates (Lovestoneites-Weisbord) aroused a hubbub of protest and antagonism, comrade Cannon never suffered a single interruption for even a moment from the floor, and from the table only a tap with a gavel that his time was up; but he read the entire resolution on unemployment which he was bringing before the delegates, to a quiet, very attentive audience.

The return trip on the bus

Albany: 3 Years of Party Policy

The Albany State Conference for Labor Legislation represented a culminating point in the endeavors of the party, over a period of nearly three and a half years of the crisis, to organize and develop a movement of the workers on the issue of unemployment. In all that time the heavy burdens of unemployment have been accumulating and growing more and more intolerable, and the situation has thereby become increasingly favorable for the work of the revolutionary party. There has been no lack of effort—agitation, slogans, conferences, demonstrations and marches, organized and directed by the party in these past years, have centered chiefly at and around the burning question of unemployment.

The Albany Conference itself was conceived and prepared as a major demonstration. It was preceded by months of preparatory work, including two conferences in New York City. On top of that—it should be added—the Albany Conference came after the recent half turn in the policy of the party, and provided a means of measuring its value. Socialist party branches and local unions of A. F. of L. were invited to participate in the well-known "united front" from below.

Not Result of False Policy And what was the net result of three and a half years of the "third turn" frenzy capped with the "half turn"? Out of 348 delegates, only seven local unions of A. F. of L.—and those all Left wing locals—and one branch of the Socialist party were represented from the entire state of New York! Crushing and irrefutable testimony to the utter falsity of the policy of the party leadership!

The shadow of this catastrophic failure to create even the semblance of a united front movement outside the sphere of direct party influence hung over the conference from the first day. The attempt of the leadership of the conference—Hathaway, Winters and lesser bureaucrats of the Stalinist apparatus—to compensate for the failure to attract the non-party workers who, according to their own thesis, are eager to struggle against unemployment, with windy soap-box agitation could not blunsh from the minds of the delegates the haunting question: why are these workers not represented here? A delegate from a bakers' local union gave a truer expression to the unspoken sentiment of the great majority than all the "official" speeches when he said: "I read in the Daily Worker that only seven A. F. of L. unions are represented here. As a trade union man I would like to see this hall packed with union delegates." But such delegates were not there. The questions of why they were absent and how to attract them in the future—to these questions, which were uppermost in the minds of those who want to see a broad class movement on the class issue of unemployment, the Hathaways had no answer. They could only paint a cross over the bankruptcy of all their previous maneuvers and leave the future blank.

To all that has gone before, to the great detriment of the movement, the official leaders added new blunders and stupidities at Albany. The conference was obviously not a united front affair in any real sense of the word. It was a gathering of the vanguard—of the Communist party and its auxiliaries and sympathetic organizations. Besides that it had very little of a State-wide complexion. The roster of delegates could have served, with a few alterations, for a roll call of the second and third line functionaries of the party and Left wing organizations in New York City. Even such a representation, after a united front conference of workers' organizations in the whole of New York State had been aimed at, might have been turned to advantage. If the conference had been led by half-way competent politicians they would have sized up the situation, charged off the expenses of transportation to profit and loss, and devoted themselves to a discussion of ways and means of transforming the Albany conference of the vanguard into a conference of the class another time.

The Opposition's Criticism of Stalinist Bankruptcy

Instead of that, they tried to solve the contradiction by a characteristic exhibition of Stalinist self-deception. The thing that became transformed in their minds—into the thing that had been desired. The conference of party members and sympathizers was declared to be a united front conference of workers' organizations, political parties and trade unions. Their speeches to the conference were predicated on this fictitious assumption. The conference needed the concise, business-like elaboration of a program for changing the situation and uniting the vanguard with the masses—a single bullet aimed at a real target. It got, from the official leaders, the thunder of agitation in the name of the masses who were not represented in the conference—blank cartridges fired in the air. Worse, they not only talked; the actions of the conference, under their control, were the same caricature. Comedy, in the speeches of the leaders, alternated with tragedy in the misguided "legislative" deliberations of the delegates.

The "Bills" Discussion As sad and pitiful a spectacle as one could expect to see in the revolutionary movement was the session of the conference devoted to the report of the "bills committee." (This was the committee that had been charged with the task of drawing up legislative bills for presentation of the State legislature). As it transported to another world the delegates, Communists almost to a man, who had expressed their real sentiments shortly before in cheers for the overthrow of capitalism, were put through the ridiculous and futile business, for many wearisome hours, of discussing and debating, line by line, the legal phraseology of proposed legislative measures. What, for example, is the precise legal residence of a seaman under the terms of the bill for unemployment insurance? And how shall the different rates of wages for various categories of labor employed on proposed public works at same future time be decided upon in meticulous detail?—With just such questions the conference was occupied, solemnly and seriously, for hours on end. Pitiful!

Here was a picture of the double game of bureaucratic centrism. Posing on a half-turn in policy under the pressure of events and of our criticism, the futile bureaucrats stood with one foot in the mud of ultra-Left sectarianism and the other foot in the mire of parliamentary cretinism. The conference was dedicated to a mélange of both, and thus it was confused and muddled and demoralized.

Among all the "leaders" there was not one to explain to the worker delegates that the fight for a legislative program does not require and is in no way advanced by trying to transform a conference of several hundred workers delegates into so many amateur lawyers. The task of the vanguard workers is to formulate the program of demands clearly and concisely and then to mobilize the power of a mass movement behind the program. The task of the leaders is to show the vanguard the way to do this. As for the drafting of the "bills" for presentation to the Legislature—a small committee with the aid of a jockey lawyer is sufficient. It is a shame to lead conscientious worker militants through the rigmarole of solemn debate about the wording of legislative bills.

More than that, it is a crime, for it sows illusions as to the real nature of the struggle for labor legislation. This was to be noted already in the session of the conference devoted to this tragedy. The bold note of militancy in the remarks from the floor in the earlier sessions was muted down, became more "practical" and restrained. And, even more significant, a different type of delegate became conspicuous in the discussion. The militants imbued with the spirit of the class struggle gave place to the legal-minded elements who took the wording of "bills" very seriously and, read them carefully lest a comma be out of place and the law fail on that account.

In both sides of their policy the Stalinist misadventurers worked against a fruitful outcome of the conference. With their sectarian "Left" tactic they shunted the conference off the broad highway of the united front which could lead to a broader movement; with the vulgar opportunist comedy of the "bills" they put brakes on the further development of the narrow vanguard movement.

The hope for the emergence of a broad workers' front of struggle against unemployment was in Albany, in spite of all its limitations, just because the pick of the vanguard militants, the indispensable dynamic force for the creation of a broad class movement, were there. But the leaders, not all of whom are as stupid as the policy they expounded under orders, did they could to frustrate this hope. They gave no review and summary of the experiences of the movement in those years of the terrible crisis—for this would require the examination of missed opportunities and multiplied mistakes which have left the movement weaker than it began three years ago, despite all the powerful social forces propelling the movement forward. They laid out no perspectives and offered no real measures to set the vanguard movement out of the strait-jacket of isolation—because this would require a sharp turn in policy which they are not permitted to make.

The Left Opposition It remained for the delegates of the Left Opposition, a small minority in the conference, to analyze the situation realistically and to point out the way to improve it radically. We did this to the best of our ability within the short time allotted to speeches from the floor. In the formal sense of the word our views did not prevail. The Stalinists entrenched in the apparatus scored another victory which, like their old victories over the Marxist wing, was a defeat for the party and for the whole movement.

But this victory had a certain Pyrrhic quality filled with ominous forebodings for the future. One fact stood out above all others at the Albany Conference: the delegates wanted to hear the Left Opposition. Our speeches were heard in a tense silence, without a single interruption from the floor, and received closer attention than any others. Our statement was distributed to all the delegates without interference and was read attentively by them. The closest fraternalism, between the Left Oppositionists and other delegates, comradely discussion with large groups of party members and sympathizers, went on continuously throughout the conference.

While still remaining within the framework of the bureaucratic discipline and voting as they were required to vote, the conference delegates nevertheless expressed in all these actions a different attitude. In substance, after four and a half years of falsification, slander, ineffectual and violence against the Left Opposition, the rank and file delegates, by their attitude, said to the bureaucrats: We don't believe it; we want to find out for ourselves! Armed with the invincible ideas of Marxism that is all the Left Opposition needs. Given such a hearing, as was the case at Albany to a far greater extent than ever before, our eventual victory is assured.

—JAMES P. CANNON.

The Stalinists at the Mooney Conference

(Continued from Page 1)

In the discussion which took place later the party offered no line of its own, nor any criticism of this essentially liberal-legislative line. Why did the party maintain an opportunist silence? On the vital question of policy and line it must speak openly and clearly its silence contributes only confusion.

The credentials committee tried to carry out the pretence of a genuine united front. Nessin reported 309 delegates from 347 organizations. All attempts to obtain an analysis of the report met with the stubborn resistance of the party steering committee which publicly prevented Nassin from giving the information asked for from the floor. 49 trade union organizations were reported but what they were was not revealed. 31 political organizations, 50 defense organizations, 22 unemployed organizations, 195 fraternal organizations were also listed but no analysis was given.

However, it is known that there were very few A. F. of L. locals. The CPLA was there as were Weisbord, the Lovestoneites, the League for Industrial Democracy. The New York district of the C. P. was represented. In front of us sat delegates from the YCL. It was said that some YPSL locals were present. The SP was represented by a lone individual, Gubernick of the Huntington, Long Island Branch. It was reported from the floor that the S. P. had instructed the locals of the ILWGU over which it has control, to stay away. Scott reported later that the City Central Committee of the S. P. had voted unanimously not to endorse the conference and not to attend. That is how the Socialist party answered Mooney's call. But it also testified to the weakness of the united front policy of the C. P.

The fight to establish the composition of the conference on the floor was intense but short-lived and unavailing. The Stalinists were in complete control of the proceedings at this point. The matter was finally disposed of by Scott's personal promise to publish a detailed report within 48 hours! The report which has just arrived confirms our analysis of the composition of the conference.

But what the credentials committee report failed to establish, was made clear from the collection which together with pledges exceeded $500. For some forty millions a flood of donations and pledges was poured into the treasury of the conference by IWO branches, ILD Branches, Unemployed Councils, TUUL unions, the C. P. and Communist opposition groups. It was clear to all that this was a Stalinist conference.

The resolutions committee was carefully selected by the Stalinist steering committee. It was composed of "reliable" people: Becker, Benjamin, Gubernick (!) Corliss Lamont, etc. Its retirement to consider the resolutions of the conference created a vacuum in the proceedings which was filled by discussion.

The Stalinists intended, no doubt, to confine the discussion to the routine speeches by their leading comrades. The discussion that took place caught them completely unawares. Delegate after delegate spoke. And all the speeches centered around the united front.

In this discussion the Lovestoneites were jeered and howled down. Boos greeted other delegates who even timidly proposed that to draw the socialist workers into the conference it was necessary to suffer the presence of their leaders. Not all of these proposals were correct. But they were the gusts of a new wind.

The voice of the Left Opposition rang loudly and clearly for a genuine, Leninist united front. From beginning to end the speech of our delegate was accorded the closest attention. An attempt to heckle was squelched by the entire conference. At its conclusion there was not the faintest sign of hostility.

The blow the Opposition delivered to the Stalinist policy on the united front accounts for what happened afterward. Even the Stalinists were forced to take this into account. All their later attacks against the people who "represent tendencies but no masses" were careful to avoid any reference to the Left Opposition. It was easy to see that the tremendous impression made on the party members by our campaign on the situation in Germany made them eager to hear what we had to say on the Mooney question and especially on the united front.

Under the hammering the Stalinists were losing control of the conference. Their feeble attempts to counter the political attack with parliamentary procedure alienated them. Panic began to seize the chairman who publicly rebuked party steering committee. They turned loose their heaviest artillery. The speeches were the same as yesterday's but the difference was clear. Hereafter there were violent intonements to violence. Sunday they were last line defenses.

Politically they were a denial of the Comintern's invitation to the Second International for a united front. Alexander strained himself to prove that we couldn't have any traffic with Green and Wolf, Hillquit and Thomas. If the Stalinists did not dare to say it openly they made the implication clear: no united front with the leaders.

The resolutions were abstract expressions on the Mooney question and class war prisoners. The resolution on Mooney set May Day as a day of united struggle for his release. It proposes a united demonstration of the socialist and Communist workers and includes the A. F. of L. Formally the proposal is correct. But the line of the conference and the content with which the Stalinists fill their united front proposals make it doubtful whether this will be realized.

The final blow which accomplished the rout of the Stalinists came with the nomination of a permanent committee of 25. Nessin reporting for the credentials committee which had been instructed to make the nomination read only 24 names. Comrade Berman protested from the floor, pointing out that the name of the delegate from the Left Opposition who had been agreed on by the committee had been omitted. The chair asked Nessin to explain. He attempted to lay the blame on Berman. Berman's contention was supported by another member of the credentials committee. The already heated atmosphere was beginning to simmer. The chair appealed to Scott for his explanation of the incident. Scott came forward and supported Berman. Nessin was left standing on the platform, in view of the entire conference, caught red-handed in a clumsy attempt to remove the

Marxist Works by Leon Trotsky

WHAT NEXT?—Vital Questions for the German Proletariat	THE PERMANENT REVOLUTION
192 pages paper .35	180 pages paper .50
Postage 6c extra per copy	Postage 6c extra per copy
STRATEGY OF THE WORLD REVOLUTION	THE SPANISH REVOLUTION IN DANGER
Postage 1c extra per copy	Postage 1c extra per copy
COMMUNISM AND SYNDICALISM—On the Trade Union Question	PROBLEMS OF THE CHINESE REVOLUTION
Question .15	450 pages paper 1.00
Postage 1c extra per copy	Postage 10c extra per copy

Workers' Pocket Series

By LEON TROTSKY	By Arne Swabeck
IN DEFENSE OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION	UNEMPLOYMENT AND THE AMERICAN WORKING CLASS
Speech Delivered to the Socialist Students at Copenhagen
Minimum Quantity per Order 5 copies	Postage on all the above 1c extra per copy
SOVIET ECONOMY IN DANGER	Minimum Quantity per Order 5 copies

Pioneer Publishers

84 East 10th Street

New York N. Y.

What Next

Vital Questions for the German Proletariat
by LEON TROTSKY
A penetrating Marxist analysis of the class dynamics and forces at work in the present situation. A burning indictment of the treacheries of the social democracy and the criminal blunders of the Stalinists. A work no Left wing worker and Communist can afford to neglect. One of the texts of the future.
192 Pages Cloth .65 Paper .35
Postage .06 per copy extra

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Weekly Organ of the Communist League of America [Opposition]

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 28, 1923 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 1, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 20 [WHOLE NO. 167] NEW YORK, SATURDAY MARCH 25, 1933 PRICE 5 CENTS

C.I. Turn to the United Front in Germany

The Executive Committee of the Communist International has made a distinct turn in the policy of the united front. Now that its Manifesto of March 6 has finally been made public in the United States, it is possible to give a more detailed and thorough evaluation of its significance.

Three days before the publication of the Manifesto in the Daily Worker, its new editor Sam Don declared in the leading editorial of March 15, 1933 that no turn at all had been made by the Communist International, that the categorical refusal to make a united front "with the social democratic leadership" remained the policy of Stalinism. The copy of the Manifesto came the following day—not through the regular channels to the Central Executive of the party, but in the form of a copy of the London Daily Worker which had, in turn, translated it from the Paris L'Humanite. Forty-eight hours—enough time, in the editor's opinion, for his readers to forget what he said on the 15th—were allowed to elapse until, on March 18, the Manifesto finally made its appearance in the columns of the Worker. In direct contrast to the Daily Worker of three days before, and to what the Communist leadership itself has been stating for the past four years, the Manifesto declares:

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International, in view of Fascism which is unchaining all the forces of world reaction against the working class of Germany, calls upon all Communist parties to make yet another attempt (when was the last one?) to set up the united front of struggle with the social democratic workers through the medium of the social democratic parties."

Not, therefore, the "united front from below" of yesterday. Not the "united front over the heads of the leadership." This time it is the united front of the masses "through the medium of the social democratic parties."

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International recommends the Communist parties of the various countries to approach the Central Committee of the social democratic parties with proposals regarding joint actions against Fascism and against the capitalist offensive."

Can there be any doubt about the sharpness of the turn after reading this passage, and more, which we quote below? At the New York party membership meeting, reported elsewhere in this issue, Hathaway had the effrontery to deny that any change in policy has been made by the Comintern. The "invariance" of the party and the International, concerned primarily with their own prestige reputations, with their prestige events have so cruelly undetermined, with their posts, which are endangered, are making a miserable attempt to preserve the theory of infallibility by shouting to the membership whom they have bewildered and demoralized. We were right yesterday and we are right today. Our policy yesterday was correct, so is our policy of today. The situation may have changed, but our line has not changed. In this way, the Stalinists continue to confuse and disorient the party workers, who are consequently rendered incapable of riding the working class in general of its confusion and disorientation.

Is it really necessary to prove at this date that the frightened Stalinist center has been forced to make a turn? The theories and practices which it dined into the minds of the Communist workers in the last three years—is it conceivable that they have already been forgotten? To refresh the memory, we quote only from some of the most recent contributions to revolutionary tactics made by the Stalinists in this question:

Just a week before the Manifesto appeared, the "Educational Department, National Committee, Young Communist League U. S. A." issued its "Pamphlet Outline No. 1" entitled "What is Happening in Germany?" So recent is its publication that it has not yet even been discussed in all the New York units of the youth League. On page 9 of this authoritative document, we read: "4. From the above it will readily be seen why the Communist Party of Germany cannot propose a united front with the leadership of the Socialist Party of Germany. To do so would amount to making peace with these leaders and, therefore, with those whom they represent (capitalists) and would amount to betraying the proletarian revolution. The Communist policy of united front is a weapon for struggle against the S. P. leaders, based on the immediate needs of the workers for which the S. P. leaders will not fight. For this reason, all the traitors from Communism (Trotsky, Lovestone) to bring about the unity of the C. P. and the leaders of the S. P. is in the final analysis, a betrayal of the German working class and the proletarian revolution." (Our emphasis.)

What was nothing short of a betrayal of the proletarian revolution a week ago, what was nothing else but "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism"—is now taught to the Communist workers as good, sound Bolshevism!

On February 20, Bedacht wrote in the Daily Worker (just two weeks before the Manifesto appeared in L'Humanite): "Renegades of Communism, Trotsky, Lovestone and others... come with proposals of united fronts between the Communist and Social Democratic Parties and accuse the Communist party of splitting the workers because it insists on addressing its call for a united front not to the Noskes, the Scheidemanns and the Wells, but to the masses of the social democratic workers." (Our emphasis.)

Could the difference between good Bolshevism and Trotskyist renegacy be put more bluntly and unmistakably?

The January 15, 1933 issue of the Communist International reprinted Thaelmann's speech at the 12th Plenum in which he specifically attacked the Berlin district of the party for proposing to the social democracy a joint demonstration against Fascism—a thoroughly correct proposal—and unlike the Manifesto of the Comintern, a timely proposal, less timely than when it was made by the Left Opposition, but still more timely than the present Manifesto.

"Trotsky," declared Thaelmann, "said as follows to quote him word for word: 'One must actually declare complete readiness to form a bloc with the social democracy against Fascism... One must compel social democracy to form a bloc against the Fascists.' This policy would mean, 'that we would abandon our correct Bolshevik policy.'"

How bitterly one must reflect upon the fact that this obstinate failure by Thaelmann and the Comintern leaders to "abandon our correct Bolshevik policy" (i. e., the thoroughly wrong Stalinist policy) in good time, is being paid for at the present moment by Thaelmann himself and thousands of other courageous proletarian revolutionists who are in the toils of the Fascist terror. How quick is the bourgeoisie to take advantage of our blunders! How criminal and disastrous have been the blunders of Stalinism! What a dreadful responsibility rests upon its shoulders!

And what scoundrels are those brass-capped bureaucrats who, for the base ends of saving their own hides and prestige, continue to be fuddled the already badly befuddled Communist workers with the refrain: There is no turn, we were right yesterday, are right today, will be right tomorrow and forever!

But belated though the turn is, it remains, it is clearly a turn in the right direction. Nevertheless, at the same time that the Left Opposition greets the turn, it is compelled to draw attention to the cloven hoof of opportunism which sticks right out of the Manifesto.

The social democracy, to cover up its cowardly capitulation to Fascism, to screen the cravens who flee to Switzerland and renounce all political activity, have sought to excuse their treacherous passivity by pompous declarations in favor of a united front with the Communists on the basis of a "non-aggression pact". By this they mean that in the period of this singular united front, the Communists shall pledge themselves not to criticize the social democracy, not to attack it, not to expose its weakness, its readiness to betray at the crucial moment, its vacillations at all times. In a word, the social democrats have been demanding that the Communist party dissolve itself into a socialist-dominated fusion, thus assuming equal responsibility for social democratic betrayal.

With indignation and contempt, the Communists have repeatedly spat this "clever" proposal, and the Left Opposition, while polemicizing against the Stalinist conception of the united front, has nevertheless supported the party wholeheartedly in its rejection of the "non-aggression pact" with the social democracy. Non-aggression pacts of a similar nature with Chiang Kai-Shek and the Kuo Min Tang, with Purcell and the Trade Union Congress leaders, brought about the destruction of the Chinese revolution and the British militant movement respectively.

Now, however, we read towards the end of the Comintern Manifesto: "In the adoption and practical carrying out of these two conditions, the ECCI considers it possible to recommend the Communist parties during the time of common fight against capital and Fascism to refrain from making attacks on social democratic organizations... The most ruthless fight must be conducted against all those who violate the conditions of the agreement in carrying out the united front, as against strikebreakers

(Continued on Page 4)

LEON TROTSKY

Alarm Signal

The Second Five Year Plan

The Seventeenth party Conference, in February 1932, approved the directives of the second five year plan. Its annual coefficient of growth of industry was set at 25 percent, whereas Stalin explained that this coefficient would even be surpassed in the process of configuration and fulfillment. The Left Oppositionists cautioned against record-breaking leaps in industrialization. They were accused of counter-revolution, and placed in solitary confinement.

Eleven months later, in January 1933, Stalin proclaimed unexpectedly that the coefficient of growth during the second five year plan would be, in all probability, around 13 percent. None so much as dared to contradict him or to refer to the decision of the year before. Thus, the actual results of the first five year plan buried the fantastic project of the second five year plan, before the latter could have been supplanted by a new one. At present, there is no second five year plan at all. Nor is there any possibility of one in view of the chaotic condition of economy at the close of the first five year plan. The January plan, which only had hazy directives, considerable time will yet be spent upon a formulation of the second five year plan and it will undergo more than one change.

The current year 1933 turned out to be surpassed factually by the second five year plan. The control figures for it have been designated apart from the general perspective. Obviously, the concocters of the plan for 1933 sought only to mitigate those disproportions, and to plug up those yawning gaps which were inherited from the first five year plan.

In their reports, Molotov and Ordzhonikidze tried to mock at our proposal that 1933 be set apart as the year of "capital reconstruction of Soviet economy". The reporters cited as a fact that during 1933 new enterprises would also be undertaken. As if we had excluded this, as if we had made a point of putting patches on old rubbers, and not of the "reconstruction" of economy as a whole. The struggle to restore the disrupted balance presupposes, necessarily, also new constructions, but under the head of correcting mistakes made in the past, and not under the chapter of plugging up new mistakes.

Thus, under the blows of the crisis, which it did not foresee, and which it does not openly admit even now after it has broken out, the leadership has been forced to retreat in the sphere of industrialization even as it had begun to retreat still earlier in the sphere of collectivization. However, it is executing its maneuvers of retreat stealthily, partially, without a plan, hiding the significance of its own actions from others as well as from itself, and preserving completely thereby, even redoubling its methods of barefaced bureaucratic commandeering. The new zigzag of Stalinist policies is an unmistakable proof of the profound dislocation of Soviet economy, but it is absolutely incapable of leading to a way out of the great wreckage.

Bonapartist Tendencies in the Party

Against the background of enforced silence and irresponsibility, the economic crisis becomes a double, triple danger. The more bankrupt and despotic the leadership is, the more widespread becomes the resistance of beings as well as things. The ruling elite takes for granted that only activities of the class enemy are manifest in all types of disharmony, opposition, resistance, dissatisfaction, passivity, and friction which are engendered by objective obstacles and by case of miscalculations and privations. The bureaucracy, which up to 1928 announced the kulak danger was a danger originated by the Left Opposition uncovers at present after "the liquidation of the kulak as a class", the kulak danger there and everywhere, within the Soviet

(Continued on Page 3)

Hathaway Seeks to Explain Away C.I. Turn at Membership Meet

At a closed meeting of the Communist party membership on Monday, March 20, the district organizer Hathaway explained the united front to the party. His speech deserves the fullest analysis as a typical example of theoretical confusion, misstatement of the German situation and misunderstanding of the factors involved.

Hathaway began his speech by a consideration of the capitalist crisis in America, but we pass over his false position on this score to an examination of the main question before the meeting.

The Hathaway Apologetics

After dealing with the economic situation in America, Hathaway turned to Germany. He stated that there was a growing feeling among our party members that the German situation was due to the blunders of the German Communist Party. In answer, he attacked the Left Opposition for its defeatism. He

Sunday OPEN FORUM

THE RANKING CRISIS AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE

Speaker:

R. J. FIELDS

Sunday, March 26, 1933, at 8 P. M.

at International Workers School

Hall

126 East 16th Street

Auspices: New York Branch, (O.)

Admission: 15 Cents

First Daily of Opposition

We have just received the news that the paper of our Greek comrades, Pail ton Takeoon (Class Struggle) which has been appearing twice a week for a long time, is now a daily.

Through their ardent devotion to the proletarian cause, our Greek comrades have raised themselves to the highest level of the international struggle for the ideas of Marx, Lenin and Trotsky. They have extensive influence over the working class. The proletarian vanguard helps and supports them. Today they have attained this splendid result: in spite of the double repressions of the capitalist bourgeoisie, which has thrown hundreds of them into prison, and Stalinist slanders and provocations, they are at last publishing the first daily paper of the International Left Opposition.

We send them our most fraternal greetings. We will give them all the assistance at our disposal in the march towards victory, by making their struggles known to the American proletariat.

Kincaid Miners Up For Trial

Chicago.—The famous Kincaid battle between Peabody's company thugs, scab miners, all armed for battle and the pickets of the Progressive Miners' Union has been shifted to the court struggle for the moment. The result of this fight in which fifty pickets were attacked by two hundred thugs and scabs, has been the indictment of 54 members of the PMA and the Women's Auxiliary charged with law violations of various kinds.

Twenty-two of the indicted miners are under charges of murder or double murder.

The first trial scheduled for March 23, has been continued to March 25. It becomes increasingly clear that the Peabody Coal Company in alliance with the UMWA and the state forces are intent upon gaining convictions in this case. For this reason a mere court struggle would be playing into the hands of the forces of reaction. In the interest of the indicted miners and the PMA it is of paramount importance to prevent this struggle from being sealed within the four walls of a capitalist court that is bound up hand and foot with the Peabody Coal Company, the Lewis machine and similar interests.

What additional examples are needed to prove this, than the refusal of the Sheriff in Christian County to accept the warrant sworn out for the arrest of one of the things who shot and killed the wife of the striking miner, Camerlato? It is also significant that in the arrests following the fight at Kincaid only members of the PMA and the Women's Auxiliary were rounded up. So, it becomes obvious, that this affair is another attempt to railroad a group of militant workers engaged in struggle.

That briefly is the background to the meeting called by the Civil Liberties Union of Chicago on March 14, and participated in by some of the leading organizations in the city. The aim of this meeting to build a broad united front defense movement in the interests of the Taylorville miners. Present on that night were representatives of the Chicago Workers Committee on Unemployment, the International Labor Defense, the League for Industrial Democracy, the Socialist Party of the Chicago branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) represented by Joe Giganti and Albert Giotzer, and the Chicago Civil Liberties Union. Although not presented in person, the General Defense Committee, signified its intention to participate in the provisional committee that would be composed of the above-mentioned organizations.

The meeting opened with reports on the case by Tom MacKenna of the Civil Liberties Union and Giotzer of the Communist League. An interesting discussion followed, where agreement was reached upon the calling of another meeting of the provisional committee which Workers: Out On Saturday!

(Continued on Page 4)

A demonstration of the militant working class of New York is to be held at 10 A. M. Saturday morning, March 25, 1933 to protest against the murder regime of Hitler-Hugenberg. The demonstration organized at the call of the Communist party, is to be held at the corner of Whitehall and South Streets, hard by South Ferry, in front of the German Consulate. It is the elementary duty of every class-conscious worker in the city to join in this first important public demonstration to be organized in New York since the assumption of power by the Hitlerites. By our serried ranks and united deeds, by crying out in a single loud voice our vows of international solidarity, we will help to make the Brown Shirts assassins feel the pressure of the working class of the world, and give encouragement to the sore-pressed proletariat of Germany.

The Left Opposition wholeheartedly endorses the demonstration and plans to participate in it with all its forces. The New York branch of the Communist League (Opposition) has issued a mobilization call to all its members and sympathizers to participate in the demonstration. All friends and supporters are therefore urged to assemble first at the International Workers School Hall, 126 East 16 Street, at or before 10 o'clock in the morning, so that our contingent may march in a body in the demonstration before the Consulate. Attendance at the hall IN TIME is urgently needed.

I.L.D. Allows Reactionary Lawyer To Injure Scottsboro Struggle

One of the bright spots in the recent record of the International Labor Defense has been the struggle for the nine Scottsboro boys. The I.L.D. had the original good sense and courage to take this difficult case. It provided a good legal defense, built a fair mass movement and a good publicity campaign, won a series of impressive partial victories which saved the lives of the boys four times, and raised the issue of a rape frame-up to the level of a significant and clear political struggle. It would be unforgivable if, after all this, the I.L.D. were permitted to weaken in that struggle. That there is grave danger of such a weakening is indicated, among other things, by the I.L.D.'s failure to react to a statement appearing in the New York Times of January 14.

The Times reporter states that Mr. Samuel Liebowitz, of I.L.D. counsel in the new Scottsboro trial, has divorced himself "from the Communist activities which have helped crystallize sentiment in the South against the accused Negro since the I.L.D. interested itself in the case". After declaring himself

First Underground Leaflet of Left Opposition Issued in Germany

The Militant has just received the first underground leaflet to be issued in Germany by the Left Opposition since the assumption of power by the Hitler gang. Together with the whole Communist movement, our brother section in Germany has been suppressed; so also has its weekly organ, Die Permanente Revolution. True to its revolutionary duty, however, our comrades are continuing with their work under the most difficult circumstances. The leaflet, issued in Hamburg, is mimeographed both in German and English and is addressed to all marine and railroad transport workers. We present it here in full!

TO THE REVOLUTIONARY PROLETARIAT

To the Seaman, Transport Workers and Railroad Men!

Under the insignia of the bloody terror of the Swastika, the Fascist dictatorship is being established in Germany. The streets have been cleared for the brown terror troops of the Hitler army.

Thousands of proletarian corpses already litter the path of Fascism. Many thousands more will follow. The terror of the Bismarck socialist laws are being surpassed a thousand fold.

The extermination of proletarian class consciousness—

The smashing of all workers' organizations—

The robbing of all the democratic rights conquered by the working class—

Back to barbarism—

These are the aims of Fascism.

A defeat of the German working class and a final victory of Hitler will be the signal for the world bourgeoisie.

To establish the blackest reaction in every country of the world.

To war against the Soviet Union.

To unleash a new world war.

The victory of the German proletariat, however, would signify a tremendous impulsion to the forces of the world proletariat in its struggle for emancipation.

The struggle of the German proletariat is not only a struggle for its own rights, for its own life. Victory or defeat for the German workers decides the fate of the first workers' state, the fate of the proletariat of the whole world.

Hitler will and must be beaten in the international arena. Proletarians of the world, support actively the struggle of the German proletariat!

NOT A SHIP, NOT A TRAIN, NOT A CHEST, NOT A BAG INTO HITLERITE GERMANY!

...Boycott the Germany of the Brown Terror!

International solidarity, a common will to struggle—that is the demand of the hour.

Demand of all workers' organizations the convocation of

A WORLD WORKERS' CONGRESS

to adopt a position on the following fighting measures:

Against international Fascism.

Against the war in the Far East.

Against the attacks on the Soviet Union.

Against wage-cuts and political oppression of the proletariat and the colonial peoples.

The initiative for this Congress must come from the Communist International, which must invite all the international labor organization to join it in organizing this Congress.

The international idea of the proletariat must become an internationalism of deeds. Force the international labor organizations to common action.

—Left Opposition of the Communist Party of Germany (Bolshevik-Leninists).

New York Entertainment

The Fiftieth Anniversary of Karl

Marx will be Celebrated at the Headquarters of the

INTERNATIONAL WORKERS

SCHOOL

126 East 16th Street

on Saturday, March 25, 8 P. M.

Admission: 15 Cents

Auspices: New York branch of the Communist League of America

(Opposition)

Stuyvesant Casino
2nd Avenue and 9th Street
ADMISSION 15 CENTS

FRIDAY MARCH 31, 1933

at 8 P. M.

Auspices: N. Y. Branch, Communist

League of America (Opposition)

The Crisis In the Soviet Union

SPEAKERS:
JAMES P. CANNON
MAX SHACHTMAN
MARTIN ABERN

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

New League Branch
In Springfield

Springfield, Ill.—A new branch of the Left Opposition was organized here last night with six charter members. Comrade Hugo Oehler, member of the National Committee of the Communist League was present at the meeting and gave an explanation of the principles of the Left Opposition. The new members are all miners, active members of the Progressive Miners of America. The first activity of the new branch will be the organization of a public mass meeting on the German crisis on March 19 with comrade Oehler as the main speaker. We have a considerable number of other contacts whom we expect to draw into the organization. Plans are being made to start a study class for the new members in Communist fundamentals.

The struggle of the Progressive Miners Union against the Peabody Coal Company and the strike-breaking activities of the Lewis gang is still raging furiously here. The new branch of the Left Opposition will give a good account of itself in this struggle as well as in all the other affairs of the Progressive Miners. The Left Opposition has carried on its propaganda work and has made its ideas on policy felt over a long period of time in the Illinois miners movement. Up till now we did not succeed in crystallizing the effects of our propaganda work in Springfield in an organized form. The construction of a branch which will organize and regulate our collective work means a big step forward for the Left Opposition.

—JOE ANGELO.

Chicago Stalinist Again
Try Gangsterism

Chicago. — Stalinist gangsters, last Wednesday night appeared at a session of the class in "Theoretical System of Marxism" conducted by comrade Giganti. The gangsters were armed with blackjacks and clubs and came for the purpose of smashing the heads of the "counter-revolutionary Trotskyist" students.

Red Cruck, YCL member and leader of the crew, came up before the session started and told the comrades present that he was giving them half an hour to beat it out of the neighborhood, at the end of which time he was coming back up with a gang. Our comrades, however, refused to be terrorized and the class was opened as usual. While the meeting was going on, in marched Red Cruck and his crew of toughs, all YCL and party members. The instructor asked them what they wanted, to which they made no answer. However, in order to avoid provocations Giganti told them they could remain to listen in, provided they kept silent and made no noise.

However, in a little while, tiring of the knowledge that was being propounded, they left the room stating that they were waiting outside where they would get us. The session proceeded to a regular close. In the meantime the young toughs with clubs and blackjacks were slinking around the entrances. Our comrades decided that this should not be a one-sided affair, and immediately proceeded to improvise clubs out of chair legs. Viewing the determination of our comrades with evident apprehension, Red Cruck's army thought it best to disappear leaving their redoubtable leader to face the hostilities together with a creature by the name of Ben Brown, an individual who is said to be at the present time one of the leading party members of this city.

As our comrades marched out of the hall into the sidewalk Red Cruck and Brown advanced with open knives in hand with their faces leering; but soon that look changed to fear as they saw that our comrades were not in the slightest bit cowed. The last remaining member of Red's army took to his heels and left Red to face the music alone. Red submitted to a little chastisement which ought to be remembered on future occasions, should similar thoughts of breaking up Left Opposition meetings ever occur in his head.

Mink & Co. Expel 'Trotskyist' Seamen

At the membership meeting of the Marine Workers Industrial Union on Wednesday, March 15, the Stalinist bureaucracy managed to unburden itself of another "disruptive" element. Mink, Hudson and company railroaded through the expulsion of Henry Weser, an unemployed seaman, on the main charge of "Trotskyism" as well as other subsidiary charges.

Comrade Weser had been especially spotted by the Stalinist henchmen for his agitation on the waterfront around the question of the German crisis, in which he defended the views of the Left Opposition, which have been confirmed by events, particularly since that time. At the packed membership meeting, in which the majority of the participants were avowed party members, the bureaucratic machine went into action against Weser, attacking him as a "Trotskyist" and charging him with the "attempts to organize an opposition in an underhanded manner." The crew of hand-raisers assembled naturally supported the Stalinists.

Comrade Weser, who has for a long time been sympathetic to the Left Opposition, has in the past been one of the most active workers in the union and in the waterfront section of the party. Participating in a leading position in the Morgan Line strike of October 1931, Weser

When one considers that recently there has been a wave of terrorism against the Left Opposition, the obvious conclusion is that the campaign is being directed by responsible people higher up. It is nothing more than a desperate effort of the Comraids to answer our Marxist arguments with the only weapons they have left—those of the club.

The Chicago branch of the Left Opposition is protesting to the party officials in a formal letter in which it points out the dangerous possibility as well as the further debasement of the name of the Communist on the part of Stalinist bureaucrats.

Austintown Jobless
Forge Ahead

Youngstown.—Under the direction of the local Unemployed League, the unemployed workers of Austintown have started to move ahead again. After passing through a period of comparative inactivity they succeeded in mobilizing their forces for a strike today and winning their demands. Here are the facts:

A township trustee, Ohl, succeeded in getting his son, Boyd Ohl, a job as foreman over the gangs of men who are forced to work on the county roads for their meager relief. The older Ohl has never done anything to make the workers like him, and the son was foolish enough to walk in his father's footsteps. He kept apart from the men, though himself superior to them, and the men who know more about construction work than he did, and bullied several men smaller than himself. This typical "boss" went just a little too far Friday when he struck a young defenseless worker in the face after he had provoked him into argument by continual nagging. That night an Enlarged Grievance Committee met and decided to call a strike Saturday morning, demanding that young Ohl be permanently removed from the payroll, and suggesting that he could work in the ditch for his relief like the rest of us.

The Grievance Committee was out on the road where the men were working at 7:30 Saturday morning. The 30 or 35 men reporting for this work "relief" responded to the plea of the Committee gladly and without much persuasion. The men all agreed to stick together and strike until our demands were met; the Committee promised to fight to see that the men would get their grocery orders even though they didn't work. When the road superintendent showed up the Committee gave him a written copy of the demands and made it plain that the men were not going to work until the demands were met. The Committee then visited the Relief Headquarters to see the State Investigator and the Trustees.

In the meantime young Ohl, whom the superintendent had advised to go home, had gone to the County Courthouse to confer with his father who was there on business. Soon the County Commissioners called the investigator who confessed that he thought Ohl "in le wrong" and that the thing had to be settled in order to avoid any "violence." News reporters phoned a committee member for the details, and later drove seven miles for the complete story. At the committee's request one trustee was sent after a third one; and we later learned that these two visited the scene of the strike in order to see whether or not we were bluffing. Trustee Ohl, of course, did not make his appearance. But the other two were anxious to meet our demands when they returned. In the Relief office, in the presence of many workers, these two trustees, Brickley and Shively, promised to call a meeting of the three trustees on Monday and to see that Ohl was discharged. On these conditions the committee directed the men to return to work at about eleven o'clock; the trustees are, of course, to pay the men the full day amount. And it was generally understood that unless young Ohl is removed immediately, as the trustees promised, that the more than 300 men working for "relief" in this township would be called out on strike.

This is just one step in a very high ladder. The next step is more adequate relief. The first measures in this battle have already been taken and the Austintown Unemployed League swears that it will use every resource at its disposal in order to gain another victory. More about this struggle later. —N.

Miners Hear Opposition
On Germany

Springfield, Ill.—The Springfield meeting of the Left Opposition on the danger of Fascism in Germany, with Hugo Oehler as the speaker, was attended by about 45 class conscious workers, representing all tendencies in the city. After the speaker had concluded, the chairman, comrade Angelo, asked the party members present to select a speaker, who would be given more than the regular time, so an active C. P. miner comrade took the floor. He did not deal with the German question but confined himself to a five minute discussion on the inflated front from below.

After the question period the chairman raised the question of the Taylorville cases and pointed out the danger of withholding mass pressure. The lawyers think they can take care of the case better in this way, and the defense committee is yielding to this false policy. The meeting unanimously went on record for a motion calling upon the miners of the PMA and the workers of America to proceed to mobilize mass pressure at once in order to have a solid foundation under the cases when they come up for trial. The Peabody Coal Company intends to bring some of these miners in the electric chair. This can be prevented only through properly directed mass pressure.

The mass meeting also took up the case of Webb and two other miners who had just been framed up and sent to jail. The Right whig in the union object to Webb's popularity with the Left wing rank and file workers. They are not following up this clear cut, class case and defending the victim of capitalist persecution. A committee was elected from the meeting to arrange the PMA to action on the frame-up and to demand that the case be appealed.

Second Big Meet In Minneapolis

Minneapolis.—The second large meeting on the crisis in Germany was held here in the Mayor's Reception Hall at the Court House, with comrade Oehler of New York as a main speaker. This meeting followed the Minor meeting of the official party by three days, at which all Left Oppositionists were mobilized to cover with Militants and hand-bills advertising the Oehler meeting. This was primarily the only place the branch distributed its advertising for its German meeting, the large turn out of 400 showed that we practically duplicated the party meeting minus the most hard-shelled Stalinists.

The concentration of 11 League members in front of the Finnish Hall where Robert Minor, editor of Daily Worker spoke, covered the bulk of workers attending the meeting with Militants. Near to the time of starting the meeting, the party bureaucrats sent out about a dozen strong-arm "boys" who threatened to fight if we did not stop. They were told about the workers' struggle for free press, that they were facing a group of workers who were still ready to defend their press along with the Right to distribute it. After a confab, "the gang" went back in the hall, we finished distributing what few militants we had left, and the comrades selected to go in, paid their dime, and also entered the hall. After the Internationale, the collection, Robert Minor was introduced.

After a few minutes of discourse in which he spoke sporadically on Germany but more on Soviet Union and the "world rise of Communism" as against "the decay of Capitalism" we were told off-hand about "the terrible fate of the German proletariat." Although the local capitalist press carried the announcement of the C. I. call upon the Second International for a united front against Hitler, Minor stuck to his old guns, the resolutions of the XIth Plenum. He explained that we have socialism already achieved in Soviet Union; he did not mention the "offers of a united front to the social democracy." Time again he would break his speech to vilify comrade Trotsky.

In a din of howling and hooting organized by bureaucrats, the members of the Left Opposition asked their questions of Minor. On the united front, social Fascism, Socialism in one country, playing with the General Strike slogan, on the role of the Red Army. In reply Minor made curt restatements of the Stalinist political fallacies. "Trotsky says socialism cannot be built in one country; we say that it can be and is being built in one country," etc.

Oehler covered the German political situation from all angles; answered dozens of questions on all aspects of Communism. In the discussion two rank-and-file leaders in the Unemployed Council spoke against "theoreticians" and wanted "action." Oehler in reply asked them if the Russian revolution would be possible if the Russian workers had such an attitude toward Lenin, Trotsky, and Marx, and other theoreticians. These workers were not dumb Party members for one had attempted to lead "heckling" carter in the meeting. It soon melted away before the ideas presented by the speakers. V. R. Dunne spoke with Oehler stressing

Litvinov at Geneva

Opportunist Diplomacy Plays Into Hands of Imperialists

The Moscow Daily News for February 15, 1933 contains the full speech made by the representative of the Soviet Union on February 7 in the Geneva Committee on Disarmament. Litvinov, speaking on the security question, stated that the Soviet delegation "is glad to say" that some of the French proposals, if not all, have met with full support by the Soviet delegation. Litvinov submits a sort of "self-criticism," pointing out that after all the travail, they find themselves at the same stage where they were five years ago. According to Litvinov, the Geneva Committee is to be blamed for that because it does not agree with the Soviet delegation that "the best, if not the only guarantee of security for all nations is complete disarmament, or at least the maximum reduction of armaments in a short time."

As to the French proposals themselves, the Soviet delegation finds they "give a much wider interpretation to the obligations assumed by the signatories of the Kellogg-Briand Pact." On the basis of that he is again "glad to be able to state that the Soviet Delegation... will be ready to sign a convention incorporating them."

Thus it is plain that the Kellogg Pact continues to fulfill its great historical task as an imperialist band heap into which the Stalinist ostrich is putting his head in order to forestall the dangers to the building of socialism in the Soviet Union alone, thereby also preventing that treacherous leap from crumbling under the blows of the world proletariat.

Lenin defined the gist of opportunism as readiness to sacrifice fundamental interests for the sake of a partial and temporary advantage. The fundamental task of the Soviet delegation at the Geneva and all similar conferences, should consist in one thing only: to expose to the world proletariat the machinations of the imperialists from the very tribunal which they are sometimes compelled to offer it. But at a time when the Stalinist Comintern is quiet as a grave for four and half years, the People's Commissar of the Soviet Union is substituting for a tribune some other means which are "less dangerous" to the building of socialism in the Stalinist fashion. That exposure of the imperialists should consist only in playing up one of the imperialist wolves against the other, utilizing their fundamental antagonisms and their readiness to jump at each other's throats, and forgetting at the same time that it is the Soviet Republic which they hate more than anything else.

To hope that these imperialist powers will act as opportunists, sacrificing their fundamental aim of overthrowing the Soviet Union for the sake of restoring the capitalist relations there and thereby transforming it into a semi-colonial country—one of the very few ways to escape the revolutionary consequences of the present crisis—to hope for this, is to act, in Lenin's words, as a shyster politician and cheap diplomat. Lenin gave that definition in his speech on concessions, to those who would try to utilize not the fundamental differences between the imperialist powers, but the secondary ones, exactly as Litvinov is trying to do. He is attempting to convince the old sharks of capitalist diplomacy that the French proposals are acceptable to the Soviet Union, hoping thereby to put French diplomacy in a difficult position in relation to its old friends, the Japanese diplomats.

Litvinov is doing this at the time when the imperialist French robbers are doing everything in their power to strengthen the diplomatic position of Japanese imperialism in its preparatory work for an assault on the Soviet Union. Litvinov did not find a word to say about the danger of German Fascism. That was not, you see, on the agenda.... —L. GREEN.

Hathaway at Membership Meet

(Continued from Page 1)

has been steered in the struggle of 1918. It has been steered in the struggles of 1923. It pointed out that although in 1923, 25,000 workers lost their lives and the insurrection was suppressed, the revolutionary movement continued. What he failed to mention was that it took ten years after 1923 for another revolutionary situation to come into being in Germany and for the proletariat to be in a position to seize power—and at a disadvantageous position for the movement, at that. This fatalistic pessimism of the social democracy. Neither permits accurate analysis of a situation. The Stalinists have delayed because they are not conscious of the meaning of Fascism, and because they forget the rudimentary fact that a revolutionary situation, once lost, may not reappear for a decade. The German proletariat has been "steered in the struggles of 1918 and 1923"; it will survive 1933. That is true, but—the question is not at all one of the survival of the revolutionary movement; it is a question of whether or not the revolution is to triumph now or be smashed for a decade.

For years the Left Opposition has been pointing out the danger of Fascism being permitted to consolidate its power in Germany. For years the Opposition has been calling for a united front of the Communist Party of Germany and the reformist organizations to unite the German workers so as to be able to resist Fascism and be in a position to seize power. All this Hathaway "demolished" by stating that the Trotskyists say that if Fascism comes to power the revolution is lost!

Hathaway pointed out that for a successful revolution, two conditions must exist: a revolutionary upsurge of the workers and a split in the ranks of the bourgeoisie. On the basis of the theory of social Fascism the split cannot be said to exist. The social democracy is simply the Left wing of Fascism, basically the same. But actually, when Fascism arises, there is a split in the ranks of the bourgeoisie. Social democracy is the Left wing of the bourgeoisie; the Fascist is the Right wing. But the bourgeoisie cannot use both wings at the same time. When it uses the Fascist wing, it liquidates the social democracy. Fascism, to exist, must break and destroy all workers' organizations, including the social democracy. Thus the rise of Fascism creates a split in the bourgeoisie, since Fascism endangers not only the Communist party but the social democracy as well, leaders together with the rank and file. Thus, on Hathaway's own grounds, a revolutionary situation exists in Germany. But bound to the theory of social Fascism, the bureaucratic leaders of the Communist Party of Germany and the Comintern see the revolutionary situation. Hence they failed in the past both to unite the organization and literature. The first down-town Open Forum this year was announced with comrade Oehler speaking on Soviet Economy for the following day. Fifty-seven workers attended the Forum meeting Sunday and heard more of the Left Opposition program. Three workers expressed their desire to be members of Left Opposition at the Forum. At the last branch meeting we planned for further recruitments through an organization drive for members.

—C. FORSEN.

The American Capitalist Paradise

HOOVERVILLE

Ambition and hope characterize almost every young man, who, leaving his family hearth, enters the cruel capitalist world in search of his fortune. Ambition and hope makes his life bright and happy. The young worker, possessing these natural stimuli for working and fighting, needs no artificial substitute.

But when ambition and hope fade in the hopeless individual struggle against heavy odds—the cold industrial oligarchy and the boss class—different psychological characteristics appear in a worker. As an unskilled or semi-skilled worker, working at first steady job, and afterwards losing one job after another, he begins to lose ambition and hope for a better future in his life. Gradually, as he gets older and becomes less productive, he is pressed into the army of unemployed and very often the army of unemployables.

This is the road that the great multitudes of workers, who roam over our railroads and highways in a continuous stream, who fill the employment-offices, charity institutions and jails in our cities, have traveled; this is also the road that the residents, who make up the population of Hoovervilles all over the country—of shanty-towns, shack-cities and jungles, have gone over. First a steady worker, then a casual worker, and finally an unemployed worker: this is the lot of an average American industrial slave!

These latter institutions, popularly known as Hoovervilles, are of a recent origin. They have sprung up all over the country near the big cities, empty lots and river edges only during the last few years. They consist of a number of shacks, which sometimes reach into several hundreds in a cluster.

Its inhabitants form a community composed primarily of the aforementioned average American unskilled workers, but during the present great unemployment crisis many skilled workers and even professionals are moving into the "shanty-towns", men who are thrown out of their jobs and constantly being evicted from their living quarters.

This last-mentioned layer of these Communists can merge with the social democrats without violating any point in Hathaway's speech.

Hathaway's speech is interesting as an example of theoretical confusion and also because of its vicious attacks and misstatements against the Left Opposition. It shows how much our influence has increased due to the German situation and the about-face of the Comintern. Many of his remarks concerning the discouragement of the party members, their criticism of the Communist Party of Germany, the sentiment of the united front among the workers—all show that our correct criticism has penetrated deeply into the party. The epithets, the lynch demand, the falsification of our position, all demonstrate how hard pressed Hathaway and the Stalinist bureaucracy must be in their attempts to answer us. But curses and lies are flimsy defenses and still worse guides for a workers' party.

Characterizing the confusion and demoralization into which the party members have been thrown by the zigzags in Stalinist policy, is the fact that out of all the questions asked, none dealt fundamentally with the question at stake; they were all of a technical nature. Discussion, what little there was of it, was of the same kind. But the Communist workers will yet speak up, and when they do their language will be unmistakable. —PARTY MEMBER.

International Workers
School Notes

Two new classes in the New York International Workers School are now definitely under way. Comrade Max Shachtman's lectures on the "Principles and History of the International Left Opposition" is bringing a larger attendance with each session. The lectures take place each Wednesday evening at the hall of the International Workers School, 126 East 16th Street. The admission per lecture is 15 cents, and the public is invited.

Comrade Jack Weber's class in "American Working Class History" meets each Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Those who still wish to register for this course have an opportunity to do so at the next session.

The class by Martin Abern in the Principles of Communism will conclude, after having held ten straight and successful sessions, next Monday, March 27th.

Comrade Cannon's lecture course on American Labor Leaders has been indefinitely postponed. Those who desire are urged to join either or both of the two IWS classes that are now under way for this session.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879. Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th St., N. Y. C. EDITORIAL BOARD: Martin Abern, James P. Cannon, Max Shachtman, Maurice Spector, Arne Swabeck. Saturday, March 25, 1933. Vol. VI, No. 20 (Whole No. 157). Subscription rate: $2.00 per year. Foreign $2.50. Five Cents per copy.

working class elements, who have learned or who have been forced to learn through suffering the class composition of society and their position relative to these classes, therefore being more class-conscious, have a great mission to perform; to study the psychology and interests of their fellow-worker; to approach them correctly in order to educate and finally organize them, so that this section of the broad unemployed masses do not become lost for the revolutionary working-class who need all the help they can get in their bitter struggle against the master class.

The approach is a hard one. The citizens of Hooverville do not read anything of consequence; they seldom think of anything outside their miserable dwellings and hardly ever talk of the class struggle. They are devoted mostly to the accumulation of possessions with no purpose beyond the pleasure of the game, or their own pride or vanity—as collecting useless furniture, clothing, and cooking utensils which they cannot use. These dull, uninteresting, selfish, crude, human animals, with their petty lives and narrow visions, become absorbed in rags-picking and drunkness. They have drifted into the Hoovervilles where they settle and become either passive or indifferent towards the class struggle and develop a peculiar murchistic individualistic character—or degenerate into "bums-proletariat" that is, into the category of workers known as unemployables—tramps, bums, vagabonds, petty-criminals, etc.—in short the down-and-outers.

To the question, what is the matter with these men, and how could they be made again useful to society?—many, many answers have been given to the writer who has spent the last eight months in an East River shack town, by curious and interested visitors who flock to these places in singles and groups.

Bourgeois Explanations

The bourgeois element usually says that the men are too lazy to work; the laws, courts and police are too soft as regards begging, loafing and living in shacks that do not pay any taxes, and the charity organizations demoralize rather than uplift the men, by giving them meals in the breadlines without working.

The charity "worker" says that the men themselves are defective and responsible for their misfortunes. They have acquired bad habits, have lost their rugged individualism and will-power. They indulge in drunkenness.

Of course the "sky-pilot" suggests for the men to turn to God and everything will be "hunky-dory." The educator and moralist preach that the main cause is the lack of general character-building and the presence of too many speakies and disorderly houses.

And finally comes the technocrat and explains "scientifically": the existence of unemployed workers, who live in large numbers in various shack-towns, is an essential of the present organization of our industrial system; rapid introduction, and pressure of circumstances and environment in general. Only the "energy-certificate" and the "org" will solve the problem.

The widely varied opinions of the capitalist spokesmen about the unemployed workers in general, show the complexity of the problem in their minds, and the lack of complete understanding.

They do not like to admit that the existing miserable conditions of the workers; low wages, long hours and unemployment are to be traced through the whole capitalist system, which is responsible for the existence of Hoovervilles, and the production of hoboes and tramps—that is, the surplus labor population. Yet, they refuse to see that there is nothing wrong with the men themselves; they are just as human as anybody. They do not like to hear the only solution, that of the overthrow of the capitalist system which will do away with these conditions—the products of industrial slavery.

How They Live

In the meantime the residents of the shanty-towns go about their way, and do not mind in the least what is said about them in the papers, or in what "pose" they are supposed for the tabloids. They are generally willing and desirous to work, if there are any wages. But in the present unemployment crisis they are supplementing their living by such means as beggars and stealing—"taking." At night they go for their "kill" like wild animals. But their "kill" consists mostly of loaves of week-old bread from bakery back-doors, discarded vegetables from Waldbaum and Washington markets, rotten fish from the Fulton Street pier and "nickels" from subway entrance. They do not overlook also the milk-bottles in the hallways and pastry-baskets outside the chain-store doors—though they usually take it only in such quantities as to satisfy their immediate needs. However, being workers they prefer to earn their living by working.

Some of the individuals are averse to work because their nervous systems, by suffering and privation, are exhausted. But this seeming laziness is nothing more than a kind of defense reaction forced upon them by this rotten system. In drunkenness they also find a sort of relief and forgetfulness. Rags-picking is again an artificial means of making life newly "hopeful." Their lack of ability to concentrate their attention on anything could be explained by the fact that they are worn out, and as a result their will power has gone to pieces.

(To Be Continued)

—PAUL SCHWALBE.

Trotsky Sounds the Alarm Signal on the Danger to the Soviet Regime and collective farms, in tractor and machine stations, in plants, factories and state institutions, in party organizations, even within the Central Committee itself. The "damaged" is that image up against which the bureaucracy stumbles at every moment, while staring into mirrors and failing to recognize itself. On the other hand, the dislocation of economic relations and the growth of universal discontent do provide actually a culture medium for the bacilli of bourgeois counter-revolution.

(Continued from Page 1)

Violently driven inward, the economic dislocations between the city and the village but least of all the commonplace kulak "remainders" or the "survivals" of bourgeois psychology—augment the absolute unbearable tension in the political relations of the country, impelling the bureaucracy to take to the road of further suppressions of all Soviet social activities, thus breeding the malignant embryos of the Bonapartist regime.

Repressions become the chief method of economic management. With all the earmarks of civil war, the collection of seed takes place and preparations are made for spring sowing. The struggle against slackness which is bred from starvation by apathy proceeds in the form of savage penalties. Shortage of food is met by mass expulsions from cities. The press celebrates as a socialist victory the introduction of the passport system.

The helmsman of the October revolution, the builder of the Soviet state, the Bolshevik party is crushed, bulldozed, trodden underfoot, demoralized, or driven underground. The dictatorship of the party has been supplanted by personal dictatorship. Within the apparatus those are handpicked who are trustworthy; from among the trustworthy are chosen the most trustworthy. No one, in effect, trusts any longer in the "leader" whose infallibility has brought about a series of frightful miscarriages. Everybody knows and sees that his own policies have driven Stalin into a blind alley and that he does not know today what Stalin will do tomorrow. But the more the apparatus loses its support in the masses, the more do those who are trustworthy and most trustworthy isolate themselves away from the apparatus, the more religious is the homage paid the sagacity of the "divine leader." The personal oath of allegiance has completely superseded loyalty to the program. Only those articles and speeches are permitted which rehearse the oracular maxims of the leader. The voice of the entire Soviet press has become the voice of wishful and loathsome toadyism. One cannot, without blushing from burning shame, look upon the outraged covens of the party and the trampled down banner of the October revolution!

Defense of the U.S.S.R.

It is self evident how important are the successes of industrialization from the viewpoint of the technical reinforcement of the Red Army and the Red Fleet. The world wide situation imperiously imposes upon the armed forces of the Soviet Union a role of exceptional importance both in the West and the East. But it is precisely within this sphere that a policy of illusions would prove most dangerous and criminal. The Red Army is not reducible to military technique alone. In war, bread and meat play no less a role than projectiles for artillery; the horse occupies no less a place than does the tractor. The living forces of the army have as a reservoir the workers and peasants. The mood of the workers determines the mood of the army. Taken on the scale of a major war, military technique itself is a function of the entire economy, demanding from the latter inner harmoniousness and ability to operate without a hitch.

If Stalin seeks to justify the material privations of the toilers as a sacrifice they place upon the altar of state defense, then his explanation is as false as are all the bureaucratic totals of the first five year plan. In point of fact the disjuncture between rural economy and industry hits directly at the army and saps at the will power of the Soviet government in the international arena. Without the acute disorganization of Soviet economy, the extraordinary insolence of Japanese imperialists as well as the free play for the activities of German Fascism would have been impossible. The Stalinist religion of pacifism, of the Geneva as well as the Amsterdam brand, is the religion of weakness. Today the chief defense of the proletarian state lies in the pretrefaction of world capitalism. While that is very important, it is still an insufficient means of defense. In order to conquer the initiative in the world arena, it is necessary to rehabilitate the economic foundation of the Soviet state.

The Stalinized Comintern

If one were to leave aside for the moment the conscious and unconscious damage done by the bureaucracy, the onerous internal condition of the Soviet Union is rooted in the economic backwardness of the country and in the international isolation of the proletarian State. But, in its turn, the present isolation is the result of the policies of the Comintern. The vain glorious overestimation of the internal successes achieved in the USSR is just as criminal as the underestimation of the tasks of the international revolution. It is absolutely essential that Soviet economy be built up, step by step, thus reinforcing the foundation of the dictatorship of the proletariat and preparing the elements of the future Socialist state—but that is not enough. Should the European bourgeoisie batter down the workers with the club of Fascism and retard the revolution for decades, no economic successes whatsoever can save the Soviet Union. The problem of capitalist encirclement poses us face to face with the strategy and tactic of the Comintern. International, its chain of mistakes and crises.

Within the USSR, where the Stalinist bureaucracy has at its disposal the mighty resources of the State, its policies could still masquerade its bankruptcy for a number of years; squandering the basic capital of the revolution but not leading directly to catastrophic consequences. On the world arena, where the open struggle is compulsory against the social democracy and all other forces of bourgeois society, the policies of bureaucratic Centralism have already succeeded in exposing themselves in all countries and in all quarters of the globe, as the systematic, even if unconscious sabotage of the proletarian revolution. For the past ten years, the Stalinist leadership has contributed nothing to the struggle of the international proletarian vanguard, save mistakes, confusion, demoralization and defeat. Bulgaria (1923), Germany (1923), Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania (1924), China (the period of the bloc with Chiang Kai-Shek as well as all the subsequent policies), England (the Anglo-Russian Committee), Spain (the period of revolution)—such is the far from complete geographical inventory of the genuine deeds of damage perpetrated by the Centralist bureaucracy in the sphere of international revolution. The growing isolation of the Soviet Union cannot be compensated for by any "non-aggression pacts" whatsoever.

There has not remained a living spot upon the body of world capitalism. Reformism has drained to the dregs its fund of ingenuity and slavish sagacity, and it stands before the proletariat exposed in its impotence, branded by its treachery. In the Soviet Union—as the Stalinists insist—the five year plan has been fulfilled, and socialism has been absolutely guaranteed. What other conditions are there required for the Comintern in order to overthrow the organizations of reformism that have rooted to the core, and to collect around itself the proletarian masses and lead them to the conquest of power? Concurrently, however, official Communism everywhere is losing positions and influence, is becoming isolated away from the masses, and is being forced out of the trade unions. At best, sections of the Comintern now serve as thoroughfares for the unemployed.

Its mode of action in Germany has been the tragic zenith of the international defeatism of the Stalinist faction. Were one to set as one's conscious goal: to save from disintegration the crime-spotted social democracy; and to open the shortest road to power for Fascists—none could have devised a tactic more direct than that employed. Stalin placed General Chiang Kai-Shek into the saddle with the friendly hand of an ally; as for Hitler, he made the road to power easy by guaranteeing the division of labor between the social democratic and Communist bureaucracies; screening themselves behind different phrases, they both have led and still lead the tactic of retreat, maram, and cowardice. The results are an open book. To serve its class enemy under the guise of waging irreconcilable struggle against it—this is the curse that hangs heavy over Centralism!

Groupings in the C.P.S.U. and the Comintern

The course of events within the CPSU shows that the economic crisis has turned into the crisis of the revolution, and that it is forcing its way more and more decisively from below to the tops, through the state and party apparatus.

The exclusive Stalinist faction that is mustered around the plebeian "leader", whom it has ceased to trust, exerts its efforts desperately in order to maintain itself. The first condition requisite for this is not to permit the party's awakening. Repressions against the opposition have now assumed a mass character such as did not obtain even in 1928 when promises were given and taken that all opposition would be "liquidated" once and for all. Naturally the chief blows are directed against the Bolshevik-Leninists, the only faction whose authority has grown immeasurably and continues to grow.

Two most recent facts are particularly significant of the situation in the party: the arrests and deportation of the leaders of the Left Opposition who capitulated about four years ago, and the complete and final capitulation of the leaders of the Right Opposition. A few months after the quite notorious deportations of Zinoviev and Kamenev to Siberia, Stalin arrested L. N. Smirnov, Preobrazhensky, Ulimtsev, Ter-Vaganyan and about 100 former Left Oppositionists connected with them. The significance of this fact must be plumbed to the bottom. Those concerned are old Bolsheviks; they had built the party, carried it through on their shoulders during the years it was driven underground, participated in the October Revolution and the Civil War, and created together with the faction of Bolshevik-Leninists. When (in February 1928) under the pressure of food shortages, Stalin made a sharp turn to the side of planned industrialization, and of struggle against the kulak, an influential section of the Left Opposition, became frightened by the perspective of a split, capitulated to the bureaucracy, and extended to it trust on credit. In its own time this fact played a major political role in that it strengthened the position of the Stalinist bureaucracy and retarded for a long period the influx to the ranks of the Left Opposition. Today we have the balance sheet of the experiment made by the honest, sincere and not careerist capitulation: after deporting Zinoviev and Kamenev, Stalin arrested Smirnov, Preobrazhensky, Ulimtsev and the rest! This blow at the top had been preceded in the course of the past year by the arrests of several hundred rank and file capitalists, who anticipated their leaders' returning to the road of the Left Opposition. Within the last two years, a truly gigantic shift has occurred in the consciousness of the party for the regroupings of the top are only belated and diluted reflections of the profound processes that occur in the masses. Here we have an extraordinarily clear illustration of the power that is latent in the correct and unyielding line of politics; isolated individuals and groups, outstanding even in regard to their revolutionary qualities, may drift at times into the camp of the enemy, under the influence of temporary conditions, but they are forced ultimately, by the march of events, to return to the old militant banner.

There is an altogether different, but in its kind no less symptomatic significance in the 100 percent capitulation of Rykov, Tomsky and Bukharin. The political cohorts of these leaders spread far into the camps of class enemies. As we had forecasted more than once, the sharpening of the crisis of the revolution could not but inevitably throw the Bolshevik and tiny head of the Right Opposition up against its lefty counter-revolutionary tail. The moment for this has arrived. Alarmed by the mood of their own followers, leaders of the Right crawled unconditionally on their knees to the official leadership. They were able to go through with this surgery all the more easily because no matter how acute the internecine fight became from moment to moment, it nevertheless remained the fight between Left and Right shadings in the camp of bureaucratic Centralism.

In this manner, the capitulation of the Right wing leaders reflects the differentiation of the Right Opposition, which remained amorphous but which undoubtedly was the most numerous of all groupings of the last period. Workers by tens of thousands, party men among them, dismayed by the economic adventurism of the bureaucracy, gravitated all the more naturally to the side of the Right wing leaders, the more sincerely they were inclined to interpret Stalin's policies as the direct application of "Trotskyism", after they had been hoodwinked by the entire preceding anti-Trotskyist demagoguery. The differentiation of the Right wing means the liberation of these proletarian elements from under the Thermidorian influence; and their drawing inevitably closer to the Left Opposition, the

The Capital Reconstruction of Economy

In their appraisal of the possibilities and tasks of Soviet economy, Bolshevik-Leninists take as their point of departure not the vague abstraction of socialism in one country but the real historical process in its world relations and living contradictions. Only the foundations that have been laid by the October revolution can guard the country from the fate of India, China and assure, in the present transitional epoch, serious successes on the road of transforming capitalist society into socialism. The discussions concerning our supposed "denial" of the proletarian character of the October revolution are a hodgepodge of scholasticism, ignorance and lies. The whole gist of the matter lies in the fact that it is possible to pursue various policies upon the social and political bases of the Soviet Union. What still remains to be decided is—precisely which one?

In order to curb the economy which has been disordered by the epigone leadership, i. e., to mitigate the dislocations, strengthen the link between the city and the village, create a stable unit of currency, and improve the condition of the toilers, it is necessary first of all to break away from the bureaucratic maddening and lying. The general character of economic measures, which are dictated by the situation today, may be most correctly denoted by the word, retreat. It is precisely because the collective farms have spread over too extensive a field at one blow that the workers' government cannot find sufficient means to counteract the breakdown of kolkhozi. The measures of repression must inevitably disclose their impotence. The only correct mode of activity lies in sacrificing quantity to gain in quality. Upon the political plane this same task may be formulated otherwise, to wit, sacrifice space in order to gain time.

It is necessary to check the strength of centrifugal tendencies in the kolkhozi and to open up an economically rational outlet for these tendencies by leaning upon the peasant poor, the rural workers, the best kolkhozi, and the best collective farmers. It is necessary to preserve and develop those kolkhozi which have demonstrated their viability, or which may prove viable in the nearest future, in accordance with their available resources and the interest shown by their members. The Stalinists, of course, will resume their din that our readiness to retreat from 60% collectivization to 40%, and maybe even to 25% (the percentage must be economically determined by actual test, and not set bureaucratically beforehand) signifies "capitalism", "the restoration of capitalism", etc., etc. If, so why then did these bravos desist from completing their collectivization 100% as they set out to do? Why was it decreed sacred to hold to that line at which adventurism stalled at the well-known moment, and already well in the process of retreat? One must not be alarmed by the pseudo-revolutionary bogies lisped by the bureaucracy. Retreat without battle from revolutionary conquests is equivalent to betrayal. The retreat from bureaucratic adventurism is demanded by revolutionary realism. In relation to rural economy, it is necessary first of all and regardless of everything else to restore the rule: Leadership and not bulldozing!

The differentiation in the peasantry is still inevitable for a protracted period; there will be well to do kolkhozi as well as poor ones; within isolated kolkhozi there will be not only preserved but also developed considerable social distinctions, with the development of productive forces. And over and above that, there exist 10 million individual enterprises! Such a correlation must be established with the peasant mass as would eliminate the "de-classed" kulak from leading the peasantry against the Soviet state. One must come to an understanding with the moujik. Concessions must be made to the middle peasant. And the village poor must be economically strengthened by the tax, credit, and co-operative systems, by the policies of machine and tractor stations, etc., etc., without at the same time depriving either individual peasants, or the prosperous kolkhozi, or the more well to do collective farmers of the stimulus to further accumulation. The insanity of mechanically liquidating the kulak must be rejected decisively, completely and unconditionally. It is necessary to understand and to admit that the kulak exists not in the guise of "remainders" or of "psychological survivals" but as an economic and social factor. The return must be made to the policy of systematically confining the exploiting tendencies of the kulak, in a serious manner, and for a prolonged period, practically unto the victory of the proletariat in the West.

Such a system of combined activities can be applied with success only in the event that the pauperized layers of the peasantry are organized in the Union of the Village Poor, the chief support of the party in the village. The tempos of industrialization must be subordinated to the task of restoring the dynamic equilibrium of economy as a whole. One must reject the development of mistakes in the plan merely because they were declared holy in the specifications of the day before. The programs of capital undertakings must be radically gone over, and all those which are obviously out of match for the forces of the country must be immediately stopped. The inevitable loss of billions today will safeguard against the future loss of tens of billions. It can be a safeguard against the worst thing possible, against catastrophe.

Even at this moment it may be said with assurance that the industrial growth of 16% for 1933, set for the sole purpose of not breaking too sharply with the adventurist first stages of yesterday, will turn out absolutely unfeasible. In 1932, industry grew only 8.1-2% instead of 36% as was stipulated in the plan. The point of departure must be taken from these actual attainments in 1932, in order that still higher coefficients may be attained by gradually reinforcing the ground underfoot.

Those resources which are liberated by way of lowering the tempos must be immediately directed partly into the funds for consumption and partly into light industry. "The condition of the workers must be improved at any price" (Rakovsky). During the construction of socialism people must live like human beings. What is broached here is the perspective of decades and not a military campaign, or "a Saturday" or an isolated case of extraordinary intensification of forces. Socialism is the labor of future generations. But it must be so assembled as to permit the living generations to carry it on its back. The stable of currency system must be restored, as the only reliable regulator of planned economy at the present stage of its development. Without it, the locomotive of planned economy will inevitably fall to make the grade.

It is self-evident that an end must be and will be put to the Bonapartist regime of a single leader, and of the pack compelled to revere him, because that is the most shameful perversion of the idea of the revolutionary party. But the matter touches not the expulsion of individuals, but the changing of a system.

It is precisely the Stalinist clique that indefatigably circulates rumors to the effect that the Left Opposition will return to the party not otherwise than with a sword in its hand, and that it will immediately begin merciless reprisals against its factional opponents. This poisonous lie must be refuted, repudiated, and exposed. There is no feeding for revenge in politics. Bolshevik-Leninists never were motivated by it in the past, and least of all do they intend to be motivated by it in the future. We know only too well those historical reasons which have driven tens of thousands of party members into the blind alley of bureaucratic Centralism. We are motivated by considerations of revolutionary expediency, and not by revenge. We make no exceptions beforehand. We are ready to work hand in hand with every one who seeks to prevent catastrophe through the restoration of the party.

For an honest party regime! This means: for a regime that allows members of the party to say out loud what they think; that eliminates double-dealing, this inner-lining of the Stalinist monopoly; that has no leaders who inherit leadership for life; that freely reflects all the leading organs during congresses of the party; that has an apparatus which serves the party, and the party that serves the proletarian.

For Soviet democracy! This means that the party directs the system of proletarian dictatorship, but does not strangle the mass organizations of the toilers, but on the contrary leads them to the burgeoning of their initiative and independence. As one of the most important means for the disciplining of any and every apparatus and for subordinating them to the party, the secret ballot must be introduced within trade unions and the Soviets, during elections of executive organs,—this to be done gradually and regularly, widening the scope on the basis of what experience demonstrates.

The historically created groupings within the Bolshevik party must be bound to carry on their entire activities within the framework of serious discussions; free from personal persecution and calumny, prepare for the extraordinary congress of the party. This can be attained only by struggle. Bolsheviks by hundreds and thousands must raise their voice in protest against the usurping clique that tramples upon the party and leads the revolution to ruin. "We demand an honest party congress!" Let this slogan unite the Left Opposition with all party members who are worthy of the name.

This same system of activity must be extended to include the Comintern. The Third International can be saved from further degeneration and complete collapse only by the radical change of all its policies, first of all that in Germany. The political turn, here as well, is inseparable from the change in the regime. The readmission of the Left Opposition into all sections must be the first step. The democratically prepared for congresses of national sections compose the second stage. The World Congress of the Communist International is the consummation.

The platform of the Left Opposition upon the questions of the world proletarian revolution, has been expounded in numerous documents, and has been consolidated in the program theses of the international pre-conference of Bolshevik-Leninists, in the beginning of February, of this year. It is with this platform and not with the sword of vengeance that the Left Opposition will return to the ranks of the Comintern. This platform it shall place upon the table of the next world congress.

Two and a half years ago, the Left Opposition gave the alarm signal because of the danger from German Fascism. Confronted and blind as usual, the Stalinist bureaucracy counselled us of "over-estimating" National Socialism, and even of "hysteria". The events have brought their merited verification.

Today—not for the first time but with tenfold force—we sound the alarm signal because of the situation in the USSR. Here the immediate danger threatens not from without but within. Bureaucratic Centralism has become the chief source of danger.

For the struggle against it we call upon all true revolutionists, all class conscious workers, all Leninists, who have remained Leninists. The task is difficult, and the struggle will cost lives. But it must be pursued to the end. The ranks must be closed, the cadres must be strengthened, and the connections must be spread wider. No repressions, no provocations, no persecutions whatsoever will paralyze our efforts, for the atmosphere of sympathy envelops more and more solidly the work of the Left Opposition in the party.

Bolsheviks of the Soviet Union, Bolsheviks of the World! Soviet economy is in danger! The dictatorship of the proletariat is in danger! The International Revolution is in danger!

Upon all of you, upon all of us, there is placed the incommensurate responsibility before history.

—L. TROTSKY.

The New I. L. D. Scottsboro Lawyer

(Continued from page 1)

sacred" such "ancient shrines of our civilization" as "our Caucasian sense of even-handed justice," he praises Alabama's "great heritage of honor," and he rings the chimes of white chauvinist condescension as follows: "Persons of substance in the Southern States have recognized for many generations a moral obligation toward the simple and generous folk whom slavery brought them first as chattels."

The fact that the ILLD has during the past two weeks issued numerous statements concerning Liebowitz's activities without once mentioning his attack on the ILLD line, seems to indicate that his insolent letter of Jan. 9 was swallowed by the ILLD and that the ILLD proposed to make no reply.

The ILLD has always put itself forward as a class struggle organization. Its principles call for the abolition of all vestiges of class justice by means of an able legal fight based on mass pressure. It has contended that this strategy not only provides the best defense for the case at issue, but that it alone defends the general principle involved in every case. It proclaims that it approaches all cases from the angle of the class struggle, reveals the political underpinnings of class justice, and fights a principled fight. To do less is to risk the defendants immediately concerned, or at best, as reformist organizations have repeatedly done, to jeopardize all future victims of class justice by trading the principles involved for an immediate partial concession.

This position the ILLD was always explained to outside attorneys who accept legal assignments from it. It has not required them to espouse the philosophy of the ILLD, but it has required them to remain silent on all points where they disagreed with it. It has insisted that they serve purely as court-room technicians entitled to interfere neither in word nor deed with the ILLD's conduct of the political struggle. Such, for example, were the terms on which the ILLD retained Walter Pollack, a liberal whose philosophy is distinctly not one of class struggle, for the trial before the Supreme Court of the United States. Pollack was, as Lenin insisted lawyers always must be, the lawyer of the class which employed him. Only if the relationship is on such a basis can the ILLD relate a good legal fight to the fundamental and essential political fight.

This does not seem to be the basis of Liebowitz's relation to the Scottsboro Defense. He is getting a free hand to attack that defense from a platform given him by the ILLD. He attacks the mass struggle which has saved the Scottsboro boys four times, he maneuvers just as would an NAACP lawyer seeking to make a deal. When one considers these facts in relation to the equally regrettable fact that the mass defense movement has died down in recent weeks almost to the vanishing point, it begins to look as though the ILLD were teetering on the brink of a rotten and dangerous piece of opportunism.

To force Liebowitz to hold his mouth on political questions while he conducts a court-room technical job will, however, not be enough. It is no surprise that New York's most notorious gangster lawyer behaves this way. Least of all is it a surprise to the leading functionaries of the ILLD who had due warning from his letter of Jan. 9. Who was responsible in the first place for hiring a man of this stripe who so clearly announced his vicious intentions? The cynical opportunists who took that responsibility were betraying the basic political aspects of the case as well as the interests of the nine Scottsboro boys. They and along with them those functionaries of the Communist party who gave them permission to take the step, deserve a rap over the knuckles. It is up to the ILLD and Party rank-and-file to administer that rap.

The Left Opposition favors, as it always has, the broadest united front movement on behalf of the Scottsboro boys as on all immediate working class issues. It demands that the Communist party maintain freedom of criticism in ILLD. He attacks the mass struggle which has saved the Scottsboro boys four times, he maneuvers just as would an NAACP lawyer seeking to make a deal. When one considers these facts in relation to the equally regrettable fact that the mass defense movement has died down in recent weeks almost to the vanishing point, it begins to look as though the ILLD were teetering on the brink of a rotten and dangerous piece of opportunism.

To force Liebowitz to hold his

World Economic Situation Today

The question of the position of world economy today is of primary importance, and above all for Marxist revolutionists. Comrade Trotsky has proved irrefutably the connection between the strategic errors of the Comintern for the past ten years and its wrong estimations of the world situation, with its persistence in ignoring the turn which it has not foreseen.

At the present moment, the crisis has lasted over three and a half years. The working class, which up to last year had reacted only feebly to the political and economic offensive of the bourgeoisie, has let loose a powerful wave of strikes in Germany, in England, in Belgium, in Czechoslovakia, in Poland, lately in the United States. On the other hand, the crisis, which had kept increasing in sharpness day after day with little interruption from its very beginning, has entered into a period of relative calm on the world scale for over half a year; the more optimistic circles of the bourgeoisie are even beginning to speak of the coming upturn.

Are we now facing a real turn in the world economic situation? What effects may we expect of it on the strategy and the tactics of the labor movement? These are questions which justify a serious effort at an answer.

We all know that the crisis has reached a depth and a sharpness hitherto unknown. We can measure it by the number of unemployed, by the decline in production and trade, the number of bankruptcies, and a host of other indexes which show that it is not a question of an ordinary crisis such as capitalism has known ever since its birth. But besides these quantitative indexes, we have also the qualitative signs of an internal degeneration of capitalism. The banking crisis in the United States, the falling away from the gold standard of England, the Scandinavian countries, Japan, Spain and many other countries; the unstable and even fictitious character of the world market by a host of restrictions on the international movement of commodities and capital; the fact that the regime of the bourgeoisie can no longer afford to back up its class domination by economic and political concessions to the workers, but reveals more and more nakedly its character as the organ of capitalism; the fact, of the most fundamental importance, that a sixth of the globe, the USSR, has torn itself away from capitalist domination—all this shows that we are dealing with a crisis of a different kind than the "healthy" crises of the past.

This means that, contrary to the claptrap of the social democrats, there is not only a cyclical, but also a general crisis of capitalism. But we must also take into account the fact that the converse proposition is also true—that there is not only a general crisis of capitalism, but also a cyclical crisis. We cannot afford to lose from our sight both of these facts in our discussion of the crisis.

We all know why there cannot be a capitalism without a cyclical crisis. As Marx said in his masterly analysis in the third volume of "Capital," "...The last cause of all real crises always remains the poverty and restricted consumption of the masses as compared to the tendency of capitalist production to develop the productive forces in such a way that only the absolute power of consumption of the entire society would be their limit" (Vol. III, page 568).

The cyclical crisis is therefore not an accident, but a normal part of the functioning mechanism of capitalism. It has, in other words, a definite role to play in the capitalist economic process, which Marx has described as follows, "Crises are only violent and temporary solutions of existing contradictions, violent eruptions which re-establish for a time the equilibrium which has been destroyed."

Evidently, these alternations of stabilization or even prosperity, depression and crisis, which take place in a cycle of five, seven or eleven years, are something entirely different from the fundamental movement of capitalism as a whole, which impresses its specific character on a whole historical epoch. For instance, the half-century before the war was a period of economic progress, punctuated by crises, while the past twenty years have been in the first instance a period of economic decline.

To envisage the possibility of a period of stabilization of the cyclical crisis, followed by an upturn, in no way implies the restoration of capitalism to its former vigor, that is, the solution of the general crisis of capitalism.

On the contrary, the fundamental character of the degeneration of capitalism in the present historical epoch must put its impress on any possible recovery in capitalist economy. This means that such a recovery may be expected to be limited, temporary, uncertain, and little inclined to extend to a point where it surpasses the peaks of production and of trade recorded during the preceding boom. In the same way as the cyclical crises of the ascending period of capitalism were, in general, short, and were followed by new periods of economic upswing which made new records at each cycle, so the crises of the descending period are prolonged and followed by relatively feeble and short recoveries which would be far from reaching the high points of economic activity at

How It Stands Today and Its Next Perspectives

As long as the proletarian revolution has not definitely broken the back of capitalism, the latter will always have the possibility of completing its cyclical crisis, that is, of passing from the phase of acute crisis into that of depression and even to a recovery in business. What then are the conditions which make possible an improvement in world economy, and are there reasons to believe that this possibility may be realized effectively in an upturn?

It is clear that the conditions for a turn in the world situation cannot be considered from the standpoint of "pure" economy—there is no such thing. The class struggle is fought out on all fronts—economic, political, ideological and the ups and downs of the struggle on each front affect the others. Politically the net result of the period of the past ten years has been—the consolidation of the power of the bourgeoisie, the set back of the proletarian offensive of 1917-21. It is painful to have to record this, but it is the truth. The responsibility of the Stalinist faction in turning the policies of the Comintern away from the road of the world revolution, the permanent revolution, and in losing much of the enormous influence and prestige within the proletariat which Communism once enjoyed, is a heavy one in this respect.

It is not only true that a series of revolutions in the various advanced or colonial countries would have rendered impossible the recovery and the relative stabilization of capitalism after 1923. But more than this—very partial victory of the proletariat led by its revolutionary vanguard, in trade union organization, in strike leadership, in the struggle for social insurance, for shorter hours, against wage cuts and against taxes which strike the working masses hardest, weaken the bourgeoisie to that extent. It is the ravages which centrist tactics had made in this field which have permitted the bourgeoisie to carry out its policies since the crisis, without effective broad resistance from the working class.

What the policies of the bourgeoisie consist in, we know—mass unemployment, the attack on living standards and on social relief, new class taxes, the proletarianization of large sections of the petty bourgeoisie.

In the mass organizations, the workers' forces, split-up and mutually distrustful, have had to give way time after time. The social democratic leadership has been able to play its habitual and disastrous role of pacifying, lulling, putting a brake on the actions of the masses. The Communists have not been able to tear the masses away from the reformist leaders, but have weakened their possibility for action within the reformist organizations by following the trade union policies of Stalin and Losovsky.

The political conditions which render possible the recovery of capitalism within the framework of the general crisis, that is to say, the possibility of throwing all the burden of the crisis on the working class by crushing or sterilizing its resistance, these conditions therefore exist.

But we must also take into account a whole series of factors of more strictly economic kind in order to be able to judge of the possibility of a cyclical upturn within the near future. The historical function of the crisis is to sweep away certain factors of economic instability which have grown out of the inherent contradictions of capitalism, and to replace them by conditions which permit of the temporary equilibrium of the system.

To be continued
— R. J. FRIEDL.

International Pre-Conference of the Left Opposition Presents Thesis

(Continued from last issue)

On the Reorganization of the International Organ of the ILO
1. After a period of delimitation and selection the ILO has passed into a new phase, which is characterized by the advanced crystallization of its cadres, the expansion of its organized forces, and the strengthening of its international cohesion.

The leading organ of the ILO has reflected and will continue to reflect necessarily, to a great extent, the general condition, the weaknesses as well as the progress of our sections and groups. The birth difficulties of the I. O. as an international organization have, through all weaknesses and mistakes, found their expression in the progress of our leading international organ.

2. The pre-Conference is of the opinion that the present stage of development of the ILO demands an improvement in the form of our leading international organ, which must assure its evolution into a real political center, capable of leading the ILO in its entirety.

3. The pre-Conference has decided on the following organizational form, which in its opinion best corresponds to the present stage and the degree of consolidation of the International Left:

(a) It has determined the formation of a so-called "Plenum" composed of one delegate each, of the Russian, Greek, German, Belgian and French sections, which to meet at least once every three months to investigate and solve the most important problems raised before the ILO.

(b) The naming of delegates to the Plenum is to be assumed directly by the sections named.

(c) In case of conflicts of opinion on serious matters (expulsions, splits, approval or refusal of admission) the minority has the right to demand a final decision by means of a referendum of the national sections.

(d) The organ which assured the political continuity and practical execution of the work of the International Secretariat, composed, not of delegates of the sections, but of comrades who are capable of fulfilling this function, it is selected by the Plenum, is responsible to the Plenum, and can be deposed by the Plenum. (For the first time the pre-Conference itself has assumed the selection of the I. S.). The I. S. must be a real center for connection, information, control, and political impulsiveness, in accordance with the growing development of the I. S. the relations among the sections should be carried on more and more through the I. S. and not through individual correspondence.

(e) The pre-Conference has determined on Paris as the location of the I. S.

(f) International connection can be adequately assured only through the regular publication of the International Bulletin, which should be an organ of international discussion and not only a bulletin of information and of the exchange of experiences.

In order to assure the independent financial life of the Bulletin, it will be sent to the sections, cash payable on receipt.

(g) In order to assure the independent financial life of the I. S., an international membership contribution of the national organizations is necessary.

P. S. The pre-Conference charges the I. S. to conduct, and to follow attentively, the reshaping of the sections in the sense of the organizational forms described in the theses of the first four Congresses of the C. I., as well as the adaptation of the section to the fundamental principles of a Communist organization (control of the work, collective and responsible work, etc.).

On the International Conference of the Left Opposition

In order to prepare seriously for the first International Conference of the ILO, the pre-Conference has decided to have these prepared on the following political problems:

1. Theses on the German situation (by the German section).
2. Theses on the Spanish situation (each of the two tendencies will work on its own thesis).
3. Project of a platform on the USSR (by the Russian section).
4. Theses on the International situation by the French Ligue).

5. Theses on the Balkan countries (by the Greek and Bulgarian sections jointly).

6. Theses on the dictatorship of the proletariat, democracy and Fascism (by the New Italian Opposition).

Possibly the American League will prepare a thesis on American imperialism.

All the projects for these above-mentioned must be prepared for publication by April 15, 1933.

A discussion period of three months is to take place, and the International Conference is then to be called for the month of July.

The sections are called upon to prepare special funds beginning today in order to assure their representation at the International Conference.

Accepted by the pre-Conference of the International Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists) in Paris, February 4-8, 1933.

Kincaid Miners

(Continued from Page 1)

would plan the enlarged conference on as broad a basis as possible. The discussion centered around the character of the united front primarily. It is of particular importance to the members of the Left Opposition to know the position of the International Labor Defense which was represented by Andy Newhoff. When asked what the position of the ILO was in relation to the united front he said in effect: "The ILO is prepared to participate in any united front affecting the interests of the workers. We are prepared to unite with anybody, no matter who they are, on any minimum basis, except of course, that we shall have the right to our independence. On such a basis, we are prepared to participate in this movement. That has always been our position."

This has not always been the position of the ILO as is known to everyone. Quite the contrary, it is a decided departure from the previously known position of the ILO and as such marks a positive step forward. How far the ILO will go in arriving at a correct position on the vital question of the united front remains yet to be seen, and this conference will be a test for the organization. But if it is really prepared to follow a correct position, it will be a decisive force in this movement. If not, it will continue its previously disastrous line, it will only continue to lose prestige in the eyes of the working class.

The real work of the conference will lie ahead. There are excellent possibilities for the creation of a mass movement that will struggle in the interests of the industrial workers who run the danger of being railroaded to jail or to the electric chair by the allied interests of reaction. The working class of Chicago, as everywhere, must be made acquainted with the Taylorville case. They must be mobilized into action to prevent a deliberate attempt to cut into a movement of militant workers in struggle for their bread and butter. Silence will only help to defeat the miners.

Victory or Defeat in Germany?

(We publish herewith a second article on the German situation, written by comrade Arne Swaback who is at present in Europe, close to the scene of the events which he deals with in his correspondence.—Ed.)

The course of the further developments in Germany will decide whether the epoch shall continue and finally secure the proletarian revolution or whether we shall face an entirely new epoch. This decision, of course, extends far beyond the German borders. And in either case it will spell the beginning of the end to Stalinist domination of the movement.

On the one hand it is now possible to affirm that a victorious German revolution developing out of this juncture could be accomplished only in opposition to Stalinism and in violent collision with its policies. On the other hand it is just as certain that a defeat of the working class in Germany at present and the inauguration of a new and reactionary epoch would also signal the transformation of the revolutionary movement onto a new basis. Although a frightfully narrowed basis of retarded developments, it will nevertheless be one within which there will be no room for the curse of Stalinism.

The Possible Variants
The outcome of this gigantic struggle that is in which direction the decision will turn, nobody can as yet predict. The Fascists have already gained an enormous advantage while the working class has been kept disarmed and unprepared. But in the process, which this struggle implies, the dialectics of class relations may turn the present proletarian disadvantage into its opposite. Many intervening factors will still have to be reckoned with their effects, however, primarily depending upon the strategy of the revolutionary vanguard. Yet it may be asked, are there no possibilities of a middle course in between these two extreme variants? The answer is that such possibilities are fading away and that they could at this stage only mean a postponement of the final decision. But likely also is a postponement creating new advantages to the proletariat for a decision in its favor.

The lines are now sharply drawn and extremely tense. Hitler proclaims the extermination of Communism and Marxism, not only in Germany but throughout the whole world. Conscious of their present advantage the Fascists in the government are particularly vociferous in declarations that they will not abdicate until they have reached the goal. In reality this means a recognition on their part that the power is not securely in their hands until the working class movement is completely destroyed. In this manner they serve as the most deadly instrument of the reactionary German junkers and big bourgeoisie.

To fully appreciate the serious menace constituted by the Fascists in this role it is important to understand the extent of their social basis within contemporary Germany. "The Fascist movement is a plebian movement, composed essentially of the petty bourgeoisie and slum proletariat, but drawing recruits also from the bourgeoisie and from the proletarian masses to a certain extent. It has a large basis in Germany particularly by virtue of the numerous middle class there. Germany has yet a large farm population maintained through decades by protective tariffs imposed by the reactionary junker regimes. While this kept agricultural prices high it also served to maintain the farmers as a social counter-weight against the proletariat, England, by her industrialization, and by virtue of acquiring a large colonial empire could afford to sacrifice her agriculture and drive the peasants into the factories. The German bourgeoisie was not so fortunate. It did not attain such a wide expanse and therefore had to find specific means to create this social counter-weight against the proletariat. To an extent that was also accomplished by the development of a large and conservative state bureaucracy. But its lower layers were hit hard by the general pauperization of the post-war crises. And hence it became so much more important at the present juncture to clean out the "unreliable" social democrats from their positions in this bureaucracy.

Alternatives in the Decisive Class Battles

The German Fascist movement has passed through its evolution of demagoguery, socialist in tone and coloring necessary to recruit a mass movement. In the beginning the leaders, who rose from the rank and file, promised to drive out the international bankers and all "foreign", particularly Jewish, exploiters. They promised to break up the landed estates and to rehabilitate the farmers. They promised to restore the middle class property and the losses it suffered during the inflation period. They turned the fire of aroused nationalism against the former enemies across the border, particularly against the Versailles treaty and all that it implied.

Now that the Fascist brigands believe that the maintenance of power is securely within their grasp the direction of their fire has entirely changed. While continuing their demagoguery as a coat of arms under which a ruthless working class suppression is carried out, the international bankers and the landowners no longer appear in their vocabulary characterizing the enemy. They now feel that they can move their troops directly against the Communist and working class movement. For that the state powers are put at their disposal. This aim has moved up to the very center of their campaign. The Fascist hordes no longer direct their fire against the Versailles treaty. The annual payments of tribute have practically ended and further readjustments promise no great difficulties. Military equality for Germany can easily be obtained. And more so by virtue of the direction of the Fascist fire which is now turning eastward toward the Soviet Republic. The first intimations are the reports of straining relations between the two governments.

The German Fascists and the German big bourgeoisie know very well that within the working class of the Soviet Union lie the greatest sources of sympathy and support to the German working class movement. Its existence is no doubt clear to them even if they do not discount the present stronghold of Stalinism paralyzing actual support. They recognize the world implications of the advance of the Communist movement and hence they hurl their challenge to the Comintern and to the proletarian dictatorship. In their threats to exterminate the Communist movement throughout the world they are already consciously and deliberately forging the spearhead of imperialist intervention against the Soviet Union. This is the double-edged sword by which they aim to accomplish their immediate goal in Germany and simultaneously rally the support of allies of the imperialist powers everywhere for the international objective.

Danger in C.I. Turn

(Continued from Page 1)

who disrupt the united front of the workers." (Our emphasis.)

The Pravda comment on this passage repeats that "during the time of these revolutionary actions, that solely during that time, the Communists will refrain from attacks against the social democratic organizations."

What "attacks" are meant? Obviously not physical attacks on the social democratic organizations. The only significance that can be attached to the passage is that inside the united front the Communist international pledges itself to refrain from all criticism of the social democracy! The overnight swing from ultra-Leftism to that species of bureaucratic opportunism which characterized the whole course of the Stalin-Bucharin leadership from 1924 to 1928, is positively breath-taking! And therein lies the outstanding danger in the turn of the C. I. It must always be borne in mind that the ultra-Leftism of the Stalinists is itself of a peculiar kind. It is not so much kindred to the extreme radicalism that characterized certain sections of the Comintern in its infancy, as it is the specific trait of an opportunist group in Communism which has been frightened into a leap to verbal radicalism by the catastrophic consequences of its own Right wing policy of the day before. The bureaucracy of the Comintern is not ultra-Leftist "per se", but (centrist, that is, a petty bourgeois tendency swinging between Marxism and liquidationism. The immature opportunist ultra-Leftist, swinging to the right in a second spasm of fear, is capable of the wildest plunges in that direction, with consequences no less disastrous for the revolutionary and working class movements. The first distinct signs of that swing are already visible. "The Stalinist heroes who yesterday refused to sit down with the "murderers of Liebknecht and Luxemburg" now knock tearfully at the doors of the "united front" organized by the hunted Jewish bourgeoisie to protest mildly against Hitler's anti-Semitism.

These who were too proud yesterday to take the leadership of a united proletarian front, today complain pathetically at not being allowed to march at the tail-end of a "united front" of the bourgeois and petty bourgeois stock coats of various religious denominations.

Against this dangerous opportunist trend, an alarm signal must be sounded immediately. The united front for which the Left Opposition fights is the united front of Lenin and Trotsky, and not of Stalin and Chiang Kai-Shek, of Tomsky and Puzlov, of Pepper and LaPollette, of Kolarov and Kallitche. We are for the united front with the social democracy—from top to bottom, in which the social democracy is put to the wall and compelled to act or be discredited in the eyes of the masses, a united front in which above all, the Communist party retains its independence, its freedom of criticism, of the press, of its ideas—in a word, in which it remains a Communist party and is not liquidated. We are as intransigently opposed to the non-aggression pacts proposed by the Stalinists as we are against those proposed by the social democracy. That price for the united front is not only too high but leads directly to disaster.

Touching Reconsiderations
The German southern states, reluctant to the early Hitler pronouncements, have now declared that their unity in the aims against world Communism. "French imperialists, who once greatly feared the Hitler ascension to power, are now completely reconciled to that fact and not at all disturbed. Voices in France indicating rapprochement to Germany are becoming more audible. While the international objective is yet concealed in these voices it undoubtedly is taking form in the minds.

Thus we see today in actual development the enormous danger against which the International Left Opposition a long time ago raised its voice of serious warning.

The events, however, will continue and develop their own inevitable logic. German capitalism today still constitutes the weakest link of the imperialist chain. Its tremendous convulsions and developments in the capitalist epoch exist also in the capitalist decay stage. But to the revolutionary proletariat this poses definite strategic problems which the Stalinist regime has completely failed to master. On the one hand it poses the possibility of breaking the weak links in the imperialist chain and the possibility of the proletariat seizing power. In this sense the uneven development of decay becomes a lever favoring the proletarian dictatorship in the USSR.

But at the same time it also emphasizes the impossibility of building socialism within one single country, in the USSR which is still subject to the conditions of this very unstable equilibrium of the world market dominated by decay capitalism. These two problems of strategy cannot be separated but must go hand in hand so that a policy of building toward Socialism in the USSR first of all presupposes a policy of preparing the parties, of preparing the working class for the extension of the proletarian revolution by the seizure of power in the weak links of the imperialist chain.

Effects of Stalinist Strategy
The entirely false strategy of the Stalinist Comintern regime has run counter to the dialectics of the developing capitalist contradictions. As a result the proletariat has suffered defeats and become disarmed, despite the objectively favorable situations, and the most murderous reaction has at present gained the upper hand. What enormous crimes! But by this the Stalinist regime has only succeeded in postponing the shocks which will now reverberate with so much more titanic force and sweep it from its position of domination in the movement.

Without entering into discussion of the possibilities and implications of further developments in Germany, and without even excluding in advance the worst variant for the next stage, it is neverless well to remember that the at present attempted counter-revolution will still meet its complications. The economic conjuncture is by no means favorable to its development. The working class is not yet defeated. And it is more important yet to remember that the German working class, though unprepared still possesses great resources within itself. But these can be unfolded fully only when its vanguard has become freed from the curse of Stalinism.

To be continued

— ARNE SWABACK.

A Trade Union Balance Sheet In Germany

The failure of the German Communist Party to arouse the working class against Fascism is to a large extent explainable by its false trade union policies. When von Papen put through his coup d'Etat, on July 20th of last year, the party's call for a general strike met little response in the ranks of the workers. Similarly, on the occasion of the appointment of Hitler as Chancellor of the German Reich on January 30, the call of the Communist party for a general strike found all but the most advanced revolutionary workers, as the Hamburg dock workers, staying on their jobs. A revolutionary party which was able to rally over five millions to its parliament banner, could get tens or at best several hundred thousands to respond to its extra-parliamentary action, the general strike.

To understand this one must examine the party's trade union policies in the past few years and its relation to the general trade union movement.

The Third Period Policy
At the height of the "third period", when the social democracy and the reformist trade unions were called "social Fascist" and an integral part of the capitalist state apparatus, the German party organized its own trade union center. (It may be remarked that our American party was instructed to do likewise in the same period—the Trade Union Unity League was formed). On November 15 and 16 at Berlin, the Revolutionary Trade Union Opposition as a center of red trade unions and opposition groups in the reformist trade unions (which would try to split off locals for the red unions) was formed. The old policy of the Leftist Communist Labor Party, condemned by the Comintern and the International of Labor Unions under Lenin and Trotsky of forming the General Labor Union which would try to destroy all reformist unions, withdraw the revolutionary and militant elements from the reformist unions, and organize "pure and simple" revolutionary unions—was revived.

The reformist trade union leaders did not at all dislike this policy. The need for struggling with the militants within the trade unions was obviated. Instead of expulsions being necessary, withdrawal of Communist workers took place. Nevertheless the reformist unions did not have any easy sailing.

The General Federation of Labor, affiliated to the reformist Amsterdam International showed a growth of membership up to January 1st 1930.

End of 1928: 4,866,926
July 1, 1929: 4,942,964
Jan. 1, 1930: 4,948,267

However, with the intensification of the economic crisis in Germany, the growing unemployment and the failure of the reformist unions to struggle for the workers—jobless and employed—interests, hundreds of thousands left the unions. In 1930 over two hundred thousand (233,068) workers quit the unions. In the following year, the unions lost 582,000 workers.

Despite this process, the reformist unions succeeded in maintaining their hold over the employed. The unemployed flocked in large numbers to the Communist party and its auxiliaries; the employed and organized remained under the control of the social democrats.

This is substantiated by an article in the Communist International of Feb. 1, 1933: "In the factories the reformist trade unions have not only not become relatively less important, but according to many indications their strength has even grown." (Page 69.)

The Twelfth Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern held in September of last year was compelled to record the practical futility of the party trade union course.

Admission of Failure

"In Germany, the red trade unions (metal workers, miners) have failed to organize the struggle against the capitalist offensive and have now stagnated." (Capitalist Stabilization Has Ended, page 30.)

But mere admission of shortcomings is hardly sufficient. The policy of small red trade unions combined with the slogans of "independent leadership", that is, leadership in strikes which in practice is independent of the union organizations and the workers themselves and "united front from below" divorced the revolutionary workers from the mass of organized labor.

Out of 13,129 local branches of the General Federation about 250 are led by Communist and Left wing groups. Even in branches controlled by the party the workers could not be aroused to the calls for "united front from below."

"Thus, in the district of Hessen-Frankfurt, the leaders of a number of local T. U. branches controlled by us refused to issue a call for strikes against Fascist terror because, they maintained, "as organizations affiliated to the All-German Federation of Trade Unions they must await a strike call from their federation." Communist International, Vol. X, No. 2, February 1, 1933, page 73.)

The same author, one S. Perevoshnikov, gave some interesting information which throws light on the present situation.

"At the last Berlin District Conference of the party, it was revealed that about 250 delegates (nearly a quarter of the total) voluntarily quit the unions. At a district conference of the party in Rastatt, ninety-nine of 176 delegates were neither in trade unions nor the trade union opposition. In Saxony, of 4,000 party members, only 250 members of the revolutionary opposition." (Page 74.)

"Altogether, according to the figures of the National Committee of the revolutionary trade union opposition, 34,000 new members joined and 48,000 left the opposition during the last nine months." (Page 78.)

Are such conditions due to a "wrong application of the correct line"? Hardly. They are the legitimate fruits of the Stalinist policies.

A decisive turn has to be made. The ultimatum slogan of "united front from below under revolutionary leadership" has to be thrown overboard. The several hundred thousand members of the Red trade unions must return, as a group, to the reformist unions and struggle for the workers' economic needs and fight for the revolutionary program of the united front of workers' organizations against Fascism.

Such a change of policy is especially imperative today when according to news reports (New York Times—3-13-33) thousands of workers are returning to industry. This lays the basis for broad strike movements. The workers' will struggle for the positions lost in the past period; against worsening of economic conditions, wage cuts, etc. At such a time the revolutionary workers functioning militantly within the reformist unions can further the interests, both economic and political, of the entire class, and a cement a unity of the proletariat that can defeat Fascism and go over for the struggle for a Soviet Germany.

— JOSEPH CARTER.

For the United Defense against Hitlerism!

A Talk with the Socialist Workers by Leon Trotsky

This brochure addresses itself to the social democratic workers, even though personally the author belongs to another party. The disagreements between Communism and social democracy run very deep. I consider them irreconcilable. Nevertheless, the course of events frequently puts tasks before the working class which imperatively demand the joint action of the two parties. Is such an action possible? Perfectly possible, as historical experience and theory attest: everything depends upon the conditions and the character of the said tasks. Now, it is much easier to engage in a joint action when it is a question for the proletariat not of taking the offensive for the attainment of new objectives, but of defending the positions already gained.

That is how the question is posed in Germany. The German proletariat is in a situation where it must retreat and give up its positions. To be sure, there is no lack of windbags to cry that we are allegedly in the presence of a revolutionary offensive. These are people who obviously do not know how to distinguish their right from their left. There is no doubt that the hour of the offensive will strike. But today the problem is to arrest the disorderly retreat and to proceed to the regrouping of the forces for the defense. In politics as in the military art, to understand a problem clearly is to facilitate its solution. To get intoxicated by phrases is to help the adversary. One must see clearly what is happening: the class enemy, that is, monopoly capital and large feudal property, spared by the November revolution, are along the whole front. The enemy is utilizing two means with a different historical origin: first, the military and police apparatus prepared by all the preceding governments which stood on the ground of the Weimar constitution; second, national-socialism, that is, the troops of the petty bourgeoisie counter-revolution whom finance capital arms and incites against the workers.

The aim of capital and of the landowning caste is clear: to crush the organizations of the proletariat, to strip them of the possibility not only of taking the offensive but also of defending themselves. As can be seen, twenty years of collaboration of the social democracy with the bourgeoisie have not softened by one iota the hearts of the capitalists. These individuals acknowledge but one law: the struggle for profit. And they conduct this struggle with a fierce and implacable determination, stopping at nothing and still less at their own laws.

The class of exploiters would have preferred to disarm and atomize the proletariat with the least possible expense, without civil war, with the aid of the military and police means of the Weimar republic. But it is afraid, and with good reason, that "legal" means by themselves would prove to be insufficient to drive back the workers into a position where they will no longer have any rights. For this, it requires Fascism as a supplementary force. But Hitler's party, fettered by monopoly capital, wants to become not a supplementary force, but the sole governing force in Germany. This situation occasions incessant conflicts between the governmental allies, conflicts which at times take on an acute character. The saviors can afford the luxury of engaging mutually in intrigues only because the proletariat is abandoning its positions without battle and, without system and without direction. The "enemy" is unleashed to such a point that it does not constrain itself from discussing right in public where and how to strike the next blow: by frontal attack, by bearing down on the Communist Left flank; by penetrating deeply at the rear of the trade unions and cutting off communications, etc. The exploiters whom it has saved disavow the Weimar republic as if it were some worn-out bow; they ask themselves if it should still be utilized for a while or be thrown into the discard right away.

The bourgeoisie enjoys the full freedom of maneuvering, that is, of the choice of means, of time and of place. Its chiefs combine the arms of the law with the arms of handiwork. The proletariat combines nothing at all and does not defend itself. Its troops are split up, and its chiefs discourse languidly on whether or not it is at all possible to combine forces. Therein lies the essence of the interminable discussions on the united front. If the vanguard workers do not become conscious of the situation and do not intervene peremptorily in the debate, the German proletariat may find itself crushed for years on the cross of Fascism.

IS IT NOT TOO LATE?
It may be that here my social-democratic interlocutor interrupts me and says: Don't you come too late to propagate the united front? What did you do before this?

This objection would not be correct. This is not the first time that the question of a united front of defense against Fascism is raised. I permit myself to refer to what I myself had the occasion to say on this subject in September 1930, after the first great success of the national-socialists. Addressing myself to the Communist workers, I wrote:

"The Communist party must call for the defense of the material and moral positions which the working class has succeeded in conquering in the German state. The fate of the political organizations, of the trade unions, of the newspapers and printing plants, of the clubs, of the libraries, of the working class, etc., is directly at stake. The Communist worker must say to the social democratic worker: 'The policy of our parties is irreconcilable; but if the Fascists come tonight to sack the hall of your organization, I will hasten to your aid with arms in hand. Do you promise me that if a danger threatens my organization you will run to my aid?' There is the quintessence of the policy of the present period. All the propaganda must be attuned to this diapason."

"The more seriously, persistently and reflectively we carry on this agitation... the more we will propose in the factory, in each worker's quarter and ward, active organizational measures for the defense, the less will be the danger of being taken by surprise by the attack of the Fascists and the morecertitude we will have that this attack, instead of smashing the ranks of the workers, will cement them."

The brochure from which I take this extract was written two and a half years ago. There is not the slightest doubt today that if this policy had been adopted in time, Hitler would not be chancellor at the present time and the positions of the German proletariat would be unassailable. But one cannot return to the past. As a result of the mistakes which were committed and the time which was allowed to pass, the problem of defense is posed today with infinitely greater difficulty; but the task remains just as before. Even right now it is possible to alter the relation of forces in favor of the proletariat. Towards this end, one must have a plan, a system, a combination of forces for the defense. But above all, one must have the will to defend himself. I hasten to add that only he defends himself well who does not confine himself to the defensive but who, at the first occasion, is determined to pass over to the offensive.

What attitude does the social democracy adopt towards this question?

A NON-AGGRESSION PACT
The social democratic leaders propose to the Communist party to conclude a "non-aggression pact". When I read this phrase for the first time in the Vorwarts, I thought it was an incidental and very happy pleasantry. The formula of the non-aggression pact, however, is today in vogue and at the present time it is at the center of all the discussions. The social democratic leaders are not lacking in tried-out and skillful policies. All the more reason for asking how they could have chosen such a slogan which runs counter to their own interests.

The formula has been borrowed from diplomacy. The meaning of this type of pact consists in this: two states which have sufficient causes for war engage themselves for a determined period not to resort to the force of arms against each other. The Soviet Union, for example, has signed such a rigorously circumscribed pact with Poland. Granting that a war were to break out between Germany and Poland, the said pact would in no way obligate the Soviet Union to come to the aid of Poland. Non-aggression and nothing more. In no way does it imply common action for defense; on the contrary, it excludes this action: without this, the pact would have a quite different character and would be called by a quite different name.

What sense then do the social democratic leaders give to this formula? Do the Communists threaten to sack the social democracy's organizations? Or else is the social democracy disposed to undertake a crusade against the Communists? As a matter of fact, something entirely different is in question. If one wants to use the language of diplomacy, it would be in place to speak not of a non-aggression pact, but of a defensive alliance against a third party, that is, against Fascism. The aim is not to halt or to exorcise an armed struggle between Communists and social democrats—there could be no question of a danger-of-war—but of combining the forces of the social democrats and the Communists against the attack with arms in hand which has already been launched against them by the national-socialists.

Incredible as it may seem, the social democratic leaders are substituting for the question of a genuine defense against the armed actions of Fascism, the question of the political controversy between Communists and social democrats. It is exactly as if one were to substitute for the question of how to prevent the derailment of a train, the question of the need for mutual courtesy between the travelers of the second and third classes.

The misfortune, in any case, is that the ill-conceived formula of a "non-aggression pact" will not even be able to subserve the inferior aim in whose name it is dragged in by the hair. The engagement assumed by two states not to attack each other, in no way eliminates their struggle, their polemics, their intrigues and their maneuvers. The semi-official Polish journals, in spite of the pact, foam at the mouth when they speak of the Soviet Union. For its part, the Soviet press is far from making compliments to the Polish regime. The fact of the matter is that the social democratic leaders have steered a wrong course in trying to substitute a conventional diplomatic formula for the political tasks of the proletariat.

JOINTLY ORGANIZE THE DEFENSE, DO NOT FORGET THE PAST, PREPARE FOR THE FUTURE

More prudent social democratic journalists translate their thought (Continued on Page 3)

Stalinist Persecutions

Russian Left Opposition Forges Ahead in the Party

Moscow.—The most important fact here is the arrest of former Left Oppositionists, this time not rank and file, but leaders... You probably already know about the arrests of I. N. Smirnov, Preobrazhensky, Ufimtzev, Ter-Vaganyan, Lifshitz, Gruenstein, Mrazhkovsky, Pereverzev, and many others. In Leningrad, Olga Ravich was arrested. In Kharkov, Karetny, the wife of the People's Commissar of Agriculture of Ukraine, who himself, it is said, had and has no connection whatever with the Opposition. Mrazhkovsky and Pereverzev were arrested in the Far East and they are being brought to Moscow. Many arrests were made in the Foreign Trade Department (in particular, the above-named Lifshitz). All told about a hundred people were arrested who at one time or another belonged to the cadres of the Left Opposition. The chief arrests were made in Moscow, Leningrad and Kharkov.

As you know, the repressions in the party have been going on at full speed for the last few months, and are continually on the increase. But nevertheless the arrests of Smirnov, Preobrazhensky and the others have made a tremendous impression, not only because old party members with great reputations are involved but chiefly because those concerned are former Opposition and made the attempt at reconciliation with the Stalinist bureaucracy. The political connection between these arrests and the exile of Zinoviev and Kamenev is self-evident. Old revolutionists, experienced politicians made the

I. N. Smirnov and Preobrazhensky—Bolsheviks from the day the party was founded; they belonged to the center of the Left Opposition from the day it was organized.

Ufimtzev one of the leading Ural Bolsheviks and Oppositionists, in his own time he was sent to Vienna, as chairman of the trade bureau.

Ter-Vaganyan—old Bolshevik, founder and editor of the magazine "Under the Banner of Marxism", author of books on Plekhanov, on the national question, etc. Gruenstein—Lithuanian Bolshevik, spent many years sentenced to hard labor, hero of the Civil War, former chief of a Red Division, subsequently head of an aviation school. Mrazhkovsky—Bolshevik from the foundation of the party, leading figure in the Urals, hero of the Civil War, subsequently in command of a military district. Pereverzev—old Bolshevik, one of the leaders of the Ukrainian Opposition, subsequently was sent to Berlin; Trotsky's letter to Pereverzev was intercepted and published in the press by the Stalinists on the eve of Trotsky's deportation to Alma Ata. O. Ravich—old Bolshevik, intimately connected with Lenin during the emigration period, member of the Petrograd Party Committee, etc.—Editor.

attempt to find a common language with the apparatus. The experiment endured about four years and led to a break. In its own time, it was explained, in all the nuclei in the party, that "all the old Bolsheviks have broken with the Left Opposition" and that this fact alone meant its finish. It is indubitable that this declaration created a great impression upon wide party circles. At present the arrests of former Left Oppositionists create even a greater impression. But this time just to the contrary. Many say, "This proves that the Left Opposition has shown its correctness, since all those are now returning to

(Continued on Page 3)

Party May Day Conference Reveals Inner Dispute on United Front Policy

Five hundred and thirty delegates from one hundred and sixteen organizations gathered to constitute the New York United Front May Day Conference, on Sunday, March 19th. For the most part, they were the same delegates who make up all the party united front masquerades hereabouts. Its breadth can be seen from the credentials committee report: four AF of L unions were represented by six delegates; there were no representatives from the Socialist party or YPSL.

The proceedings were the usual six-cylinder, Stalinist machine affair. In last Sunday's dull routine points of great importance for the movement as a whole stood out and must become known to our movement. Hathaway made the report. His speech was marked by the utmost confusion on the question of Fascism in Germany and the fight against it. According to him, the danger of war has become more acute since Hitler's accession to power, not because the inevitable development of a triumphant Fascism makes it the spear-head of the imperialist intervention of the "MSR"—according to Hathaway; the danger lies in Hitler's attempt to organize an anti-Versailles bloc to recapture the territory of Germany lost to the Allied powers.

Hathaway's analysis of the perspectives of German Fascism were the last word in confusion. He foretold its mechanical collapse! Italian Fascism, said he, improved the conditions of the masses because it came to power in the upward curve of the economic conjuncture! But Hitler has come to power in the period of the downward curve! The workers will become quickly disillusioned with

Workers' Youth Form Genuine United Front in New York Protest Struggle against Hitlerism

One hundred and nineteen delegates, representing fifty-five youth organizations met in New York, March 24-25, at a conference to plan concrete action in the struggle against German Fascism. The delegates were overwhelmingly Left wing and Communist, including the Young Communist League, the Young Communist League (Opposition)—Lavestone Group, the National Youth Committee of the Communist Left Opposition, the New York Spartacus Youth Club, and the National Student League. Several socialist groups were present, such as the Rand School Students Ass'n, which had initiated the conference, the Brookwood Labor College Fellowship—one of the delegates being a member of the National Committee of the YPSL, the New York University Socialist Club and the Rand School Debs' Club. Youth clubs, youth sections of Left wing unions, the Menorah Society—a Jewish group, the League of India (Gandhi followers), the various workers' schools, and several sport organizations were represented.

The conference opened with an address by the temporary chairman, the delegate from the group which initiated the conference, the Rand School Students Ass'n. He read the appeal of the Left wing socialist parties to the Communist and Socialist internationalists for a united front against Hitlerism. It contained a criticism of the German Social Democratic Party's policy of class collaboration, etc., and the sectarian policies of the Communist party. It further called for unity of the two internationalists on the basis of the class struggle.

Following this, the chairman of the provisional committee, comrade Joel, a member of the Communist party and representative of the Workers' School, gave the report for the Committee. He prefaced his report by a reply to the criticism of the Communists delivered by the previous speaker. He did not get very far when the overwhelming majority of the delegates—members of sympathizers of the YPSL—booed and hissed him for criticizing the socialists!

Comrade Joel reported that the City Committee of the YPSL had forced several Ypsel circle delegates to withdraw from the provisional committee; that the City Committee refused to participate in the Conference and had even denied the floor to a delegation from the provisional committee to present to it the appeal for a united front. He proceeded to criticize this action when, once again, the YCLers and sympathizers booed and hissed and told him to stick to the subject. Several delegates, including the temporary chairman, rose and protested against comrade Joel's remarks.

(Continued on Page 2)

Comrade Joe Carter of the National Youth Committee, Communist League of America (Opposition), took the floor and stated that as a member of the provisional committee he protests against the interruptions of its spokesman. He declared that the committee had unanimously agreed to criticize the actions of the Ypsels in its report to the Conference, and that the delegates could discuss the report of comrade Joel when it was concluded. Joel continued with his speech explaining why it was imperative to criticize the Ypsel committee, the need for united front, and the present plans of the Committee for a mass demonstration on April 1 before the German con-sulate in New York. Five speakers from different political tendencies were permitted to discuss the report. Herman of the YCL stated that talk against Fascism was insufficient; one's actions would show whether the organization is ready for a struggle against Hitlerism. Carter of the National Youth Committee of the Left Opposition, explained that the reason for the united front was that all workers' organizations, Communist, Socialist and trade union, were attacked by Fascism, that in the united front we retain our right of criticizing the groups participating. He declared that it was the social democracy which paved the way for Hitler and it was the speed with which the state militia were called and the quick follow-up by the new national administration, with promises and minor concessions to the lesser exploiters, proved to be of sufficient force to line up the majority of the states to drive through the new law and for the power to be given to those in control of the reorganization of the banking structure. The majority of the industrialists and the urban and rural middle class were taken off their feet and in line for the "national emergency".

What Was Aimed At?
Regardless of the fact that the door is now wide open to inflation and indirect wage cuts, the main target aimed at and hit by the imperialists was the reorganization of the banking structure for the purpose of eliminating many more small banks and sectional banking influence over the dominating group; thereby, to organize the machinery so as to enable the bankers to mold a single national banking system out of the present dual system; finally, so as to liquidate the heavy internal debt bearing down upon the American industries.

Such liquidation in this period of attempted capitalist reorganization is called deflation by the capitalists but in no way conflicts, at this stage, with the currency inflation. On the contrary, liquidation of the internal debt proceeds through a two-fold process. On the one hand, bankruptcy, mergers and concentration—liquidation. And on the other hand, at the right moment, and properly planned through a graduated "controlled" through a graduated plan—the process of inflation.

Senator Vandenberg, Republican from Michigan, in objecting to the present procedure said: "If the government continues to license banks on the present basis we are embarking upon the most ruthless deflation in the history of this or any other nation... we are going to needlessly massacre the savings of the American people." What else is to be expected? That is just what the Roosevelt administration must do in order to function for the group of imperialists that backed its campaign in the last election. It is a government action to hasten the process of weeding out the small banks. It took the crisis several years to weed out small banks through bankruptcy. The new laws speed up this process. The capitalist government "organizes" the anarchy of capitalist production, but it cannot organize capitalism production.

American imperialism must obtain markets and is doing everything possible on an international scale to obtain them. However, this

New Ill. Mine Contract

Left Wing Criticizes Provisions of 2 Year Agreement

Gillespie, Ill.—The Scale Committee of the Progressive Miners' Union of America has met with the operators holding contracts with the union, to renew the contract expiring April 1, and recommend to the membership of the union to sign a contract for two years. A referendum vote of the union will be held Saturday, the 25th. The Gillespie office has sent to all locals instructions and the contract to be voted upon, but up to this date, Wed., March 23, the majority of the miners have not yet seen the new contract or the amendments to the old contract as proposed by the Scale Committee. Regardless of the changes or lack of changes in the new contract, the miners should have more time to study the contract, and to discuss it before the referendum vote is taken.

All indications show that the leadership of the PMA consider the contract they present as the most they could obtain from the operators at this time. The strategy of the Scale Committee and the present leadership seems to be the desire to obtain a two year contract instead of the one year contract in order to obtain a breathing spell which is to enable them to consolidate and strengthen their union. This intention may be the best but the way the action is being carried out is far from the best for the interest of the miners in the PMA.

Shortcomings of Contract
The shortcomings in the contract presented by the scale committee, at least as much of the new contract as we are reliably informed on, are the following: The contract calls for a two year period instead of a one year period. Signing a contract does not favor the miners and a militant union. On the contrary, such a contract will favor the light wing in the union and the small operators with whom the contract is signed. At this stage of the crisis, and especially since we have the new banking laws that open wide the doors for inflation with possibilities of a wide price change, not downward, but upward, it is not advisable to sign a contract over such a long period, unless a special clause is inserted taking care of such price changes and inflation. The new contract does not provide for this.

There is no fundamental difference between the contract presented for referendum and the Lewis contract. Such a contract is presented when the PMA is far stronger than it was when it fought the other (Lewis) contract and had been forced to compromise. This present compromise comes without a struggle—if the referendum is carried, at least so far as the leadership is concerned.

The struggle for the shorter workday is left out entirely, and yet this is a burning problem for the whole working class and especially the miners. It is true that the PMA is confronting great odds and an uphill fight; against operators, their state force, murder frame-ups, the Lewis machine and the general effects of the crisis, and therefore they will have to be careful in their struggle. The union must now fight for the lives of the Taylorville frame-up victims whom the Peabody Coal Company wants to burn in the electric chair. The PMA must win over Franklin County and all indications are that a powerful strike movement will be upon us within a period of days. Confronted with these conditions the leadership desires a base below them for the fight. All this is true but it is

(Continued on Page 4)

Friday April 21, 1933 at 8 p. m. SPRING DANCE & FESTIVAL Jazz Orchestra - Songs - Other Features
IRVING PLAZA HALL 15 St. & Irving Pl. for the Benefit of 'THE MILITANT'
Auspices: New York Branch Communist League of America (Opposition) and Protomagic Club.

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

A Stalinist Meeting
In Chicago

Chicago.—After months of campaigning, at mass meetings and in print, by the Left Opposition, the local German Stalinists have finally been made aware of the Fascist danger in Germany. At last they too got to the point of calling a protest meeting. But how? The anti-Fascist meeting held by the "Chicago Arbeiter Club" at the Social Turnhalle on March 5 gave new evidence of the false evaluation of the present events in Germany on part of the CP comrades. Instead of appearing as a brother organization of the KPD—that is, as Communists—they are hiding behind the mantle of the Arbeiter Club.

After a short speech in German, an English speech was made by comrade N. Blattner. It was an aggregate of platitudes often culminating in statements which had to be retracted immediately after loud guffaws from the audience. One of these guffaws was the contention that only recently "the Spanish Fascists and their king were chased out with machine guns" and that the same is bound to happen elsewhere. Asked who it was that chased out the Spanish Fascists and who it is that is standing at the head of the government in their place, the speaker was puzzled, but like a good Stalinist he quickly recovered to retort: "It was the Republicans and the social Fascists, who are only slightly different from the other Fascists."

Another such clumsy turn of speech was the assertion that the "capitalist system has broken down everywhere except in the Soviet Union." That was most of course for the Nazis present, who were profuse in their applause on this point. It was not at all surprising therefore when after the many questions asked, the speaker got sick at heart and instead of giving a factual answer to the question, replied with the well-known muddling method to many of the questions.

The Leninist application of the united front in the Kornilov period in Petersburg, cited by the Left Opposition, was pointed as a Trotskyist lie by him. Lenin could not have given the instructions—because he was not in Petersburg! The demand of the Opposition for a united front with the social democratic party and the trade unions (from top to bottom) was distorted by the speaker in his reply as if the "Trotskyists" wanted to build an unconditional bloc with the social democracy. In his trade again, a "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism" Blattner did not achieve anything new. His frenzy did not help him any either. The workers present listened attentively to the arguments presented and did not allow themselves to be swayed by the lying spirit. In the discussion that followed our comrades (Giganti, Minslow, Martin, Satir, Bornstein, etc.) participated. The views of the Left Opposition were as adequately presented as is possible in the five minutes that are granted.

A resolution was proposed by comrade Martin and accepted by the meeting, demanding that the Arbeiter Club send out an appeal to ALL workers organizations for the purpose of forming a united front against Fascism. The Stalinists showed how they proposed to fight Fascism by a resolution which called merely for a telegram of protest against the Fascist terror to be sent to the German embassy in Washington! Literature and Militants were sold and discussion held long after the meeting was over.

Oehler Meeting
In St. Louis

St. Louis.—The two meetings arranged for comrade Oehler in St. Louis were well attended and the workers present were attentive and sympathetic to our viewpoint on the German question. The Militant as well as other literature was eagerly reached for.

In the next room, adjoining the hall where our meeting was held—on the South side—four or five Stalinists were in session. The purpose of their meeting was the formation of a "Hitler Club", which evidently was a flop because no workers seemed to hear of the Stalinist interpretation of literature. They were invited to attend our meeting. They came in, sat down for about five minutes and then returned to their retreat to

Stalinists Merge With Balbontin

Important news! The Spanish C. P., which numbers two to three thousand members, has just "taken to its bosom" the Socialist Revolutionary Party...which numbers fully 8,000.

Let us call things by their name: the C. P. of Spain has gone from crisis to crisis, it has driven from its midst the Left Opposition, it separated from Maurin's Right wing group. Finally, on orders from Moscow, it expelled its entire Political Bureau (Bullos-Adame Trilla). It has just taken a new step by merging with Balbontin's Socialist Revolutionary Party.

This "party", led by those who are called in Spain Inhabiles (Bloody) Balbontin and Company, is supported partly by the radical bourgeois, partly by the peasant and the anarchist circles. It disseminates a sheet with quite a large circulation. In Tierra—a truly demagogic piece of confusion! Mr. Balbontin, its leader, a notorious adventurer, is a deputy. He was, it seems, won over by continue their literary discussion. It is significant that the leader of this group is Sernich, the Stalinist who is most active in expelling Left Oppositionists from the ILD in St. Louis.

At the North side meeting, Orville Smith, a young Stalinist fanatic, constantly made notes on a very large sheet of paper. Every one present noticed him thought he was making notes for a short speech on Germany from the Stalinist viewpoint. When he was finally given the floor for ten minutes (which was extended to fifteen) imagine our surprise when the only remark he made about Germany was that he knew nothing about it! The bankruptcy of this individual was further exposed by his admission that not only did he know nothing about Germany but that he knew nothing about anything else except St. Louis. This, from a representative of the political party of the world's greatest internationalist, Lenin! His entire fifteen minutes were devoted to the glorification of the local members of the Opposition, particularly Roberts and Payer who have been active in party auxiliary organizations.

Other Stalinists also had their say. One of them asked the hoary question, "If Trotsky is a friend of the workers why was he called from the Soviet Union, the Workers' Republic?" A German Stalinist remarked, that being a German, no one could tell him anything about the German situation! This individual walked out of the meeting in feigned disgust, evidently hoping that others would follow. His rise failed as the other workers sat eagerly by waiting for comrade Oehler's reply. The reply was brief, because of lack of time, but nevertheless to the point—dealing crushing blows to the lies and slanders of the political bankrupts who call themselves Communists. At their complaint of lack of time to present their viewpoint (!) we offered them plenty of time if they would meet us in debate at some near date. This proposal left them stunned and wordless, and they walked out of the meeting considerably crestfallen.

—G. ROBERTS.

A United Front
from the Top?

At the first session of the Congress Organization Committee of the N. Y. Free Tom Mooney Conference, in which Stalinists have the control, a serious discussion arose over the question of the united front. The question arose in connection with the problem of broadening the conference.

It was the unanimous sentiment of the Committee that the crux of the problem was the approach to the SP and A F of L. It was proposed to send a delegation to the SP City Central Committee and the A F of L Central Trades and Labor Alliance to invite them into the work of the conference. To bring them in, it was proposed to offer them a number of places on the Congress Organization Committee equal to the number held by any other single group. It was further proposed that the invitation specify that all participants agreed in advance not to "attack" other organizations. Nessin was elected to this delegation.

The Left Opposition which is represented on the Committee proposed that the Committee issue a letter to the Socialist and A F of L workers asking them to raise in their organizations the questions of why their organizations did not participate in the Conference and asking them to demand that they participate as organizations. This was voted down. The vote was one for; all the others against.

Following the rejection of our proposal, Winter proposed an open letter to the SP and A F of L embodying the proposal of the delegation. A lively passage of arms took place over this proposition between Nessin and Winter. Nessin was opposed to the open letter. He argued that we must give the appearance of sincerity to our proposal to the SP and A F of L. He was afraid that an open letter would frighten them away.

The Left Opposition proposed an open letter to the SP and A F of L asking them to appoint committees to meet with a sub-committee of the Congress Committee to work out the means of drawing them into the work of the conference. The motion was defeated. Winter's carried.

As it stands now the party is swinging to the Right. The people of St. Louis is preparing to take a trip to the USSR. So the die is cast.

The miserable roping of the Spanish C. P. into Mr. Balbontin's impossible managerial illuminates its entire political course. Stalin and his clique expel the Bolshevik-Leninist from the party. It antagonizes the entire revolutionary vanguard, and it falls swooning into the arms of...deputy Balbontin. It is hardly necessary to add that Mr. Balbontin has nothing whatever in common, neither immediately nor ultimately, with Communism. His union with the C. P. is a truly frightful marriage, which can contribute nothing to the Spanish proletariat but disastrous mistakes.

The Spanish Left Opposition must denounce to the proletariat this open sliding of Centism into the positions of petty bourgeois radicalism. In order to raise the banner of Communism again, the first task it must achieve is the publication of a weekly paper.

who but yesterday thundered that the united front from below was the simon-pure Marxian version, are today beginning to tread in the steps of the Anglo-Russian Committee policy. From the united front below the Stalinist zigzag is moving toward the united front from the top. Therein lies the danger.

Bureaucratic Centism cannot consistently carry out a correct policy. In the process of oscillating from the extreme of ultra-Leftism to the extreme of Right opportunism Stalinism strikes a point at which it appears to coincide with the Marxian policy of the Left Opposition. The Left Opposition strives with all its influence to hold the policy to the correct line. But the nature of bureaucratic Centism makes this impossible for the Stalinists. They continue their course.

At the present the direction is toward the united front from the top. Left Oppositionists must be on guard.

—T. STAMM.

The Opposition in Bethlehem

Allentown-Bethlehem Pa. — We workers of this vicinity are fortunate enough to have been "educated" and "organized" by the 14th "organizer" sent to us since 1929 from the District office of the C. P. in Philadelphia. Each of these organizers—or rather disorganizers—claims that the previous one made all the blunders and mistakes, but that he (the present one) has the right pattern for the solution of all the workers' troubles. Let us see what comrade Powers—on orders from above—is doing.

In January 1933 the local branch of the Allentown S. P. issued a call for a united front conference. The conference was held in the same month, with the participation of 35 delegates representing about 25 organizations. Among them were also organizations controlled by the S. P., mostly unemployed councils and fraternal organizations.

The purpose of the conference was to protest against the specious promises of Governor "Pinchot," which intends to reduce the relief of adult workers to $4.11 a week and $2.17 for children. The demand was: cash relief of $7.00 per week and an additional $1.00 for each dependent, and other demands for relief.

It was also decided by the conference to hold a demonstration on Feb. 7, at which no other banners were to be displayed but those calling for relief. This was instigated by the S. P. delegation. This same delegation perpetrated another shameful deed upon the conference, by the move that thanks be extended to a gentleman, supposed to be from the chain stores, for his donation of $45.00 for leaflets. It was just a simple trick, for the money was never given. On Feb. 7 the demonstration started, on the basis of the united front, with a mass meeting in the Trainmen's Hall. On the platform was the S. P. organizer, Leary Heibach and the C. P. organizer Powers. A resolutions committee was elected. After this, someone from the crowd of about 1200, moved that the Tom Mooney banner, which was displayed in the hall by Communist sympathizers, be removed and not be carried to the Court House where the resolutions committee was to present its demands to the county commissioners. (About 2000 people demonstrated at the court house.) This motion was seconded and a general melee began. A vote was finally taken, not against the Mooney banner but for Powers to get off the platform. The motion was carried by an overwhelming majority. The writer of these lines voted with the rest of the comrades against the removal of Powers. But we remained in the minority and Powers had to step down from the stage. This was defeat number one.

At the same time I had collected all available copies of the Militant and distributed them in and out of the hall. A few days later, the Slovak Worker's (a Stalinist daily) wrote the usual—and not for the first time—slander against me, recommending that I be expelled from the Slovak Workers' Club because of my "counter-revolutionary activities." At the instigation of Powers, they shamelessly called me "stool pigeon" and similar epithets. At the SWC in Allentown they, together with a few misled and fanatical workers, decided to expel me from the Slovak Workers' Home for the simple reason that I distributed a few copies of the Militant.

After the Feb. 7 incident in the Trainmen's Hall, Powers decided to break with the united front, issuing a mimeographed leaflet calling the local leaders of the S. P. traitors to the Mooney cause. Simultaneously, he issued another leaflet calling the workers of Allentown to another demonstration at the Court House on Feb. 14th. About a half a dozen of us showed up! Defeat Number Two.

And now as a result of this stupid act of Powers the united front is completely smashed and the workers look at each other as enemies.

With the best of intentions and in a comradely spirit I called Powers' attention to the mistakes committed. But to no avail—the same epithets were hurled against me as previously.

After a few unemployed councils were formed, one was also organized in our township with our participation. Delegates were elected on Feb. 25 to the hunger march on Harrisburg on March 4. The delegates returned on March 4 and made a report in the Bethlehem Hungarian Hall. About 400 workers, mostly youngsters—the new recruits of the Stalinist machine—turned out to listen to the delegates. It was torture to listen to the "reports." We pity these young enthusiasts whom we regard as victims

International Workers' School

AMERICAN HISTORY

A Series of Lectures, by JACK WEBER
Given Every Monday, at 8 P. M.

- April 3. European Background of American History
- April 10. The Period of Colonization
- April 17. The American Revolution
- April 24. The Bourgeois coup d'Etat—the Constitution
- May 1. Economic Development up to the Civil War
- May 8. The Frontier and Its Influence
- May 15. The Civil War—the Conflict between Opposed Economic Systems
- May 22. The Reconstruction Period
- May 29. Agrarian Movements
- June 5. The Early Labor Movement
- June 12. The Modern Labor Movement
- June 19. American Imperialism

Outlines of each lecture and references will be given to all students.

THE HISTORY AND PRINCIPLES OF THE INTERNATIONAL
LEFT OPPOSITION

A Series of Lectures by Max Shachtman, Editor of the Militant
Four sessions have already been held on the following topics: The Fight for Party Democracy; "The New Course" by Leon Trotsky. The Defeat of the German Revolution, 1923—"The Lessons of October" by Leon Trotsky. The Opposition Program for Industrialization. The Left Opposition Program for Collectivization. The Anglo-Russian Committee. The Chinese Revolution of 1925-1927.
The sessions are held on WEDNESDAYS, at 8 P. M.

The May Day Conference

(Continued from page 1)

between these two faces of the Stalinist Janus which took place in the resolutions committee of the May Day Conference.

Here, again, as in the Mooney Committee session, Nessin leans far to the Right. Winter's position is not as clear. He appears to stand half-way between the ultra-Leftist position of yesterday and the Right wing position of Nessin. No doubt further developments will make the picture clearer.

In the days when the Left Opposition was hammering on the gates of the Stalinist conference organized under the ultra-Leftist sign of the united front from below the difference between our position on the united front question and the Lovestonite position was not as clear to the Communist workers as a whole as it is becoming today. This great advantage for us is an indirect result of the party's half turn on the united front question.

Heretofore, we had to fight for admission to the conference. That is how we won the respect of the party membership.

Today we are all seated. We utilize the opportunity and the hegemony of worker's democracy accorded the Left Opposition to explain our conception of the united front, to elucidate our policy of face to the party, and to throw our weight into the scale to broaden the conference from the point of view of strengthening Communism. The Lovestonites pursue a different policy. They tell all their conception of the united front with a content manifestly hostile to the party and sympathetic to the social democracy. As a result, they antagonize the conference, they differentiate themselves from us and help us make clearer the differences on this point among the three wings in the Communist movement.

The resolutions adopted by the conference were not satisfactory. The main resolution on May Day gave a false perspective of the war danger: it was "Hawthorne's." The Resolutions Committee voted down our motions to include demands for the six hour day and long term credits for the Soviet Union. The latter demand was simply ignored. In rejecting the first Winter explained that we have to distinguish our demands from those of the demagogic A F of L leadership! The special resolution on Fascism avoided most of the errors of Hawthorne's speech but was an abstract protest. The Committee rejected our proposal to demand a united front of all working class organizations in Germany against Fascism.

The conference decided to issue an open letter to the Socialist party and A. F. of L. inviting them to participate in the organization of one united May Day demonstration. The conference agreed to allow all organizations participating in the demonstrations to march under their own banners. Hundreds of thousands of leaflets will be printed calling on all workers and workers' organizations to unite for a gigantic demonstration. The Left Opposition will do its utmost to achieve this aim.

—T. STAMM.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY IN DAVENPORT

Davenport, Iowa.—International Women's Day was observed in Davenport, Iowa, by members of the Workers Educational Forum, sponsored by the Communist League of America (Opposition). A meeting was held, with about 50 workers in attendance. Comrade Papen, organizer, called the meeting to order and introduced the speaker, comrade Jessie Behr, who spoke on the subject, "Shall women work in factories?" This followed by questions and discussions—a few of the other comrades supporting the positive side of the topic.

Let us hope that this International Women's Day will have rallied more women comrades to the work of Communism.

—J. E. B.

of Stalinist misdirection. These youngsters will be excellent material provided the party is in the hands of the membership, with workers democracy as its guiding internal principle. All this should be with the goal in view to raise their political level, which in turn will induce independent thinking from which springs the much needed initiative that is so sadly lacking today.

—O. D.

Bank Holiday & Concentration

(Continued from page 1)

is only half of the process. At the same time they must reorganize and improve production at home in order to undersell the other capitalists on the world market. The liquidation of the internal debt is a major part of this. And the move the imperialists are making now with the banking structure is the key to this necessary change through a graduated plan of attack upon the lesser exploiters and the working class.

The banking crisis brought another factor to the surface that we have always pointed out. Now the evidence is clearer. We have rejected the theory current in the American Communist movement that the American imperialists were one bloc against the other sections and classes. We know that when it comes to a struggle against the working class or other imperialist nations their unity can be obtained in the light because the interests of the groups of financiers run parallel. However, we also know that a constant fight between the groups of financiers to gain hegemony of the whole at the expense and elimination of the other sections of the American financiers is a point of elementary understanding to the Marxists, if it is not to many Stalinists.

To point out to the workers in the election campaign that Hoover and Roosevelt are heads and tails of the same coin is correct, but to stop at this point, as the Stalinists do, is to leave unanswered another important problem. Imperialists support both Hoover and Roosevelt but different groups of American financiers cast their lot with each office boy. It is true that in the main they are united against the industrialist, the middle class and the workers. This is natural. While they have this united front against the other lesser, exploiters and the workers, clearly revealed in their program, it is also true that the different groups of financiers have their struggle for domination. And at this point, we find the advantage of one group of financiers' candidate, Roosevelt, against the other group of financiers' candidate, Hoover. Roosevelt can talk against the "money interest," the "Wall Street crowd" and time up the support of the confused workers and the middle-class and middle reformers. That is how the war lords in China "fight" imperialism and that is how the capitalist politicians from Roosevelt on down to the socialists fight "Wall Street".

It looks as though Mitchell is with the "wrong" group of financiers. Now there is a movement on foot to "draft" Pole as Controller. La Salle Street supports Pole against the Wall Street man, Governor Meyer of the Federal Reserve. The truth is that it is not La Salle Street vs. Wall Street. The groups of financiers struggling for domination have their connections all the way down the banking structure.

Working class or capitalist politics must find the key to open the lever that will pull the greatest number of factors for the class interest. The group of imperialists supporting Roosevelt was successful in its first major move along this line. Will it be able to keep it up? At least Hoover may take lessons from Roosevelt. The idea is—that whenever you hand the bankers a billion, or the navy a half billion just hand the worker a glass of beer or any other slop and the misleaders of labor will call it fifty-fifty.

PEEKSKILL MEETING

For the first time the viewpoint of the Left Opposition was presented at a mass meeting of the progressive school of Mohagan Colony, Peekskill, New York on Saturday, March 25. About 100 colonists heard comrade Carl Cowi analyze the German crisis and the urgent need of effecting a united front of workers organizations against Fascism. After considerable heated discussion, in which socialists, anarchists and Stalinists took issue, the speaker was invited to a debate or a symposium to be arranged in the near future, at which the position of the Left Opposition would again be presented.

MINNEAPOLIS MASS MEETING

A mass meeting against Fascist terror will be held in Minneapolis, Saturday, April 8, at 8 P. M. in the Mayor's Reception Room of the Court House. Comrades V. R. Dunne and Clem Forsen of the Communist League of America (Opposition) will be the speakers.

The American Capitalist Paradise

HOOVERVILLE

Continued from last issue

When months passed in constant fear of being thrown out of his shack by police, when his clothes and his shoes begin to wear out and his ambition and hope begin to fade, different psychological characteristics also appear in the resident of "Hooverville"; he starts drinking more heavily wherever and whenever he has a chance; he acquires a profound aversion to any activity; he develops a strange childish expectation that he may strike in some way, somehow, a tremendously promising opportunity. This is something like the delirious dream of marrying a millionaire's daughter. If this hope for opportunity were reasonably to be expected he would start to battle anew for his life, till he wins out. But if one asks him of what nature is the opportunity he expects to find, he answers that it may happen that he will by chance "find a roll" in the streets; or save a rich man's son from the East River; or he may find suddenly a very good job; or he may invent something; or he may inherit a big fortune; or—or...

Led by such faint hope—very faint, almost nothing in his mind, but strong enough in his sentiment—he sticks to his cabin, hammers and patches it inside and out, and goes out for his "kill". He has lost his ability to concentrate on anything sensible.

How can such psychological features, seemingly fatal to any man he explained? Life is dark and hopeless for him; nothing is left of his ambition, except gloomy thoughts and memories. The hopeless hand-to-mouth existence into which he has been forced by the capitalist system, is of all things least conducive to organizational inclinations. Under the influence of capitalist propaganda for "better times", he not only becomes incapable of united class action, but ceases to desire it even, preferring to remain by himself in the isolation that is his lot in this society—he becomes an anti-social animal.

But after all, the case cannot be hopeless for us, the class-conscious section of the workers of Hooverville. We should systematically be on the job of educating and organizing the others. They are at present knit together by notions of nationality, common customs and "jungle-fading"; it is up to us to transform some of that into economic class consciousness. We should make that our goal.

If we could draw them into action, into the class struggle, then life with all its drawbacks would be worth while for all of them. They would have a purpose.

It is for the workers themselves to grasp the unwelcome opportunity placed in their hands by the capitalist class, to use their leisure time in sorting and arranging the values in their lives and direct it into collective mass action. The workers in Hooverville have a tremendous asset of non-work at their command. The realization of this exceptional opportunity depends mainly on the workers themselves, and partly on the revolutionary organizations, particularly unemployed councils. Their forced leisure is the most effective tool they could wish for, provided they will use it constructively.

Granted that the workers' self-expression must come mainly through his own initiative, what should the revolutionary organizations do to help them along? They should systematically in form them of all revolutionary mass activities by supplying them with leaflets and papers and have a few comrades reside in the "village" for that purpose. They should encourage and promise to help to defend their meager dwellings against the city authorities when the time comes for such a task. There is a tendency on the part of most workers in Hooverville to become so psychologically adjusted to their physical and social surroundings that they experience a strong dissatisfaction when attempts are made to transfer them to a new environment. This state of mind should be utilized and organized into physical resistance when such action is taken by police.

The worker's mind today is in a restless state and needs a steady and vital element. The inspiring influence of mass demonstrations and action must reach these people, for whom the memorial lecture hall and the printed page have little appeal. The unemployed councils should approach the settlement on this basis! The worker in Hooverville needs what every other worker needs—a satisfactory purpose in life apart from the business of making a mere living. The value of the spare-time, constructively employed for the demands of immediate relief, should not be overlooked by the revolutionary worker.

The actual work in the East River Hooverville where there are at present 550 workers in 80 shacks, has been so far of a purely propaganda nature on the part of one comrade. For a short period he represented a small section of more advanced workers in downtown unemployed councils, and was functioning there in its executive committee. He also led a body of workers in the "rediet March" to the City Hall, last September. The unfortunate incident on the corner of 7th Street and Avenue A last summer where two workers were killed, spelled the end of his work; he was told, indirectly, not to hang around the "hall" any longer. That checked the work temporarily, but that incident should not stop the councils from selecting others for the work.

The Hoovervilles should be converted, from what was first a more geographical locality, into a real workers' stronghold; that is to say, a stronghold with sentiment, revolutionary spirit and a purpose of its own.

When the first man set off a piece of land and said "this is mine," the enslavement of the workers began, until we see now, in Roosevelt's words "mnn, burn free, everywhere in chains." This cannot go on much longer, the future belongs to the proletariat, not to capitalists, the proletarians, the land-lords and the inheritors.

The psychological character of the workers in Hooverville is extremely emotional, impulsive, violent, irascible and extreme in action, displaying mainly the harsh emotions and the less refined sentiments.

This is just what is needed. Comrade Trotsky wrote once: "All efforts ought to be made to concentrate the bitterness, the anger, the protest, the rage, the hatred of the masses, to give those emotions a common language, a common goal, to unite to solidify ALL THE PARTICLES OF THE MASSES... to smother all the revolutionary forces to simultaneous action."

UNEMPLOYED COUNCILS—PENETRATE INTO A NEW TERRITORY!

—PAUL SCHWALBE.

The Youth United Front in New York

(Continued from page 1)

policies of the Communist party which played into the hands of social democracy. All talk of fusion with the socialists was nonsense and false. He supported Joel's criticism of the Ypsel attitude towards the Conference and asked the Conference officially to criticize the Ypsels and again invite them to participate in the April 1 demonstration and the permanent committee of the Conference.

Resolutions on the defense of the Soviet Union, against the persecution of the Jews in Germany, for the release of all class war prisoners, and for a united front May Day demonstration against fascism and for the class war prisoners were carried. A resolution calling upon the Communist International, the Labor and Socialist International and the International Committee of Left Socialist parties to cement a united front against Fascism was passed.

Another resolution was introduced from the floor by the Lovestonites instructing the permanent committee to invite the YPSL to participate in the April 1 demonstration and elect a representative on the Committee. The Left Opposition introduced a counter-resolution which criticized the Ypsel boycott of the Conference and invited them to join the permanent committee and the April 1 demonstration. The Y. C. L. refused to criticize the Ypsels!

At the conclusion of the first session the Rand School delegates withdrew because of the criticism of the socialists and the Ypsels. This despite the fact that they had opened the Conference with a criticism of both the social democrats and the Communists. Later, however, they returned to the Conference.

In the next day's session the Young Communist League made a statement on the previous session. The official reports were poor; there was too much political squabbling. The YCL was to make it clear that it will refrain from all attacks on the participating groups during the period of the united front unless any of them violate the minimum program accepted. This was a slap at comrade Joel of the Workers' School (that is, the Communist party!) It clearly reveals the opportunist nature of the Communist manifesto's statement on not attacking the social democratic organizations—for even the Ypsels who had refused to join the Conference were not to be criticized!

In the discussion of preparations for the demonstration before the German consulate it was pointed out that the only paper which carried the call for the Conference was the Young Spartacus. Other groups pledged that their press would carry announcements of the demonstration. A resolution to boycott the Olympics to be held in Berlin carried. A permanent committee of eleven was elected from the different political tendencies present. The Left Opposition has one comrade on the committee. The Committee was empowered to broaden its membership and particularly to draw in the Ypsels, the Rand School, the Young Circle League and the League for Industrial Democracy.

All are urged to participate in the mass demonstration before the German consulate. The demonstrators will gather at Whitehall and South Sts., Saturday, April 1 at 11:00 A. M. Members of the Spartacus Youth Club and sympathizers of the Left Opposition will meet at our headquarters at 126 E. 16th Street, 10:30 A. M.

IN THE NEXT ISSUE

The next issue of the Militant will carry some highly important correspondence from Berlin which shed light on the true state of affairs there, as viewed by direct witnesses. In addition, there will be reports from other parts of Germany, as well.

For the United Front of Defense Against Hitlerism

(Continued from Page 1)

in this sense, they are not opponents of a "criticism" based upon facts, but they are against suspicious, insults and calumnies. A very laudable attitude! But how is the limit to be found between permitted criticism and inadmissible campaigns? And where are the impartial judges? As a general rule, the criticism never pleases the criticized, above all when he can raise no objection to the essence of it.

The question of whether or not the criticism of the Communists is good or bad is a question apart. If the Communists and the social democrats had the same opinion on this subject, there wouldn't be two parties in the world, independent from each other. Let us conclude that the polemic of the Communists is not worth much. Does that fact lessen the mortal danger of Fascism or do away with the need for joint resistance?

However, let us look at the other side of the picture: the polemic of the social democracy itself against Communism. The Vorwaerts (I am simply taking the speech which Stamper delivered on the subject of the non-aggression pact. In this same issue a cartoon has as its caption: The Bolsheviks are signing a non-aggression pact with Pilsudski, but they refuse to draw up a similar pact with the social democracy. Now, a cartoon is also a polemic "aggression", and it so happens that this particular one is most unfortunate. The Vorwaerts completely forgets the fact that a non-aggression treaty existed between the Soviets and Germany during the period when the social democrat Sheller was at the head of the Reich government.

The Vorwaerts of February 15, on the same page, defends in the first column the idea of a non-aggression pact, and in the fourth column makes the accusation against the Communists that their factory committee at the Aschinger Co. betrayed the interests of the workers during the negotiations for the new wage scale. They openly use the word "betrayed". The secret behind this polemic (is it a criticism based on facts or a campaign of slander?) is very simple: new elections to the factory committee of the Aschinger Co. were to take place at this time. Can we, in the interests of the united front, ask the Vorwaerts put an end to attacks of this sort? In order for that to happen, the Vorwaerts would have to stop being itself, that is, a social democratic journal. If the Vorwaerts believes what it prints on the subject of the Communists, its first duty is to open the eyes of the workers to the faults, crimes and "betrayals" of the latter. How could it be otherwise? The need for a fighting agreement flows from the existence of two parties, but it does not do away with the fact. Political life goes on. Each party, even though it adopts the frankest attitude on the question of the united front, cannot help thinking of its own future.

ADVERSARIES CLOSE RANKS IN THE FACE OF THE COMMON DANGER

Let us assume for the moment that a Communist member of the Aschinger Co. factory committee declares to the social democratic member: "Because the Vorwaerts characterized my attitude on the question of the wage-scale as an act of treason, I do not want to defend, together with you, my head and my neck from the Fascist bullets." No matter how indignantly we wanted to characterize the reply as utterly insane.

The intelligent Communist, the serious Bolshevik, will say to the social democrat: "You are aware of my enmity to the views expressed by the Vorwaerts. I am devoted and shall devote all my energy to undermining the dangerous influence which this paper has among the workers. But I am doing that, and shall do it by my speeches, by criticism and persuasion. But the fascists want to do away with the existence of the Vorwaerts, promise you that jointly with you I will defend your paper to the utmost of my ability, but I am waiting for you to say that at the first appeal you will likewise come to the defense of the Rote Fahne, regardless of your attitude towards its views." Is this not an irreproachable way of posing the question? Does not this method correspond with the fundamental interests of the whole of the proletariat?

The Bolshevik does not ask the social democrat to alter the opinion he has of Bolshevism or of the Bolshevik press. Moreover, he does not demand that the social democrat make a pledge for the duration of the agreement to keep silent on his opinion of Communism. Such a demand would be absolutely inexcusable. "So long," says the Communist, "as I have not convinced you and you have not convinced me, we shall criticize each other with full freedom, each using the arguments and expressions that he deems necessary. But when the Fascist wants to force a gag down our throats, we will repulse him together!" Can an intelligent social democratic worker counter this proposal with a refusal?

The polemics between Communist and social democratic newspapers, no matter how bitter it may be, cannot prevent the composers of the papers from forming a fighting agreement to organize a joint defense of their presses from the attacks of the Fascist bands. The social democratic and Communist deputies in the Reichstag and the Landtags, the municipal councilors, etc., are compelled to come to the physical defense of each other when the Nazis resort to loaded canes and chairs. Are more examples needed?

What is true in each particular case is also true as a general rule: the inevitable struggle in which social democracy and Communism are engaged for the leadership of the working class cannot and must not prevent them from closing their ranks when blows threaten the whole working class. Isn't this obvious?

TWO WEIGHTS AND TWO SCALES

The Vorwaerts is indignant because the Communists accuse the social democrats (Ebert, Schuler, Noske, Hermann Mueller, Grzesinski) of paving the road for Hitler. The Vorwaerts has a legitimate right to indignation. But this remark is too much: how can we, it cries out, make a united front with such slanderers? What have we here? Sentimentalism? Prudish sensitiveness? No, that really smacks of hypocrisy. As a matter of fact, the leaders of the German social democracy cannot have forgotten that Wilhelm Liebknecht and August Bebel often as well as the social democracy was ready, for the sake of definite objectives, to come to an agreement with the devil and his grandmother. The founders of the social democracy certainly did not demand that during this occasion the devil should check his horns in the museum and that his grandmother should become converted to Lutheranism. Whence then comes this prudish sensitiveness among the social democratic politicians who, since 1914, have made united fronts with the Kaiser, Ludendorff, Groener, Brunnin, Hindenburg? Whence come these two weights and two scales: one for the bourgeois parties, the other for the Communists? The leaders of the Center consider that every infidel who denies the dogmas of the Catholic Church, the only Savior, is one of the damned and shortly destined for eternal torments. That did not prevent Hitler, who has no particular reason for believing in the immaculate conception, from establishing a united front with the Catholics in the government and in parliament. Together with the Center the social democrats set up the "Iron Front". However, not for a single instant did the Catholicism cause their unbearable prophecies and their polemics in the churches. Why these demands from the Hitlerites? Part with regard to the Communists? Either a complete cessation of mutual criticism, that is, of the struggle of tendencies within the working class, or a rejection of all joint action. "All has nothing!" The social democracy has never put such ultimatum to the bourgeoisie society. Every social democratic worker should reflect upon these two weights and two measures.

Suppose at a meeting, even today, someone should ask Wells how it happens that the social democracy, which gave the republic its first chancellor and its first president, has led the country to Hitler. Wells will surely reply that to a large extent it is the fault of Bolshevism. Surely the day has not passed that the Vorwaerts will fail to repeat this explanation and in the united front with the Communists it will forego its right and its duty to tell the workers what it considers to be truth? The Communists certainly have no need of that. The united front against Fascism is only one chapter in the book of the struggle of the proletariat. The chapters that went before cannot be forgotten. We must build on it. We preserve the memory of Ebert's alliance with Groener and of Noske's role. We remember under what conditions Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht died. We Bolshevists have taught the workers to forget nothing. We do not ask the devil to cut off his tail: that would hurt him and we would not profit by it. We accept the devil just as nature has created him. We have no need of the repentance of the social democratic leaders nor of their loyalty to Marxism; but we do need the will of the social democracy to struggle against the enemy which is actually threatening it with death. For our part, we are ready to carry out in the joint struggle all the promises which we have made. We promise to fight courageously and to carry the fight to a finish. That is quite enough for a fighting agreement.

A Letter from Moscow About the Left Opposition

(Continued from Page 1)

It may have broken off. From mouth to mouth there is now being passed the statement presumably made by Zinoviev prior to his departure for exile. "The greatest historical mistake we made was our leaving the Opposition in 1927." It is reported that Kamenyev told him in his so saying. I have no means of verifying this fact at its source. But the report in itself is quite characteristic of the circles with which Zinoviev and Kamenyev were connected.

The sympathy for the Left Opposition has grown greatly, even within the apparatus circles, especially among old party members, who know and remember the past. "The Lefts have a program, real men, clear character, and leaders." One chance to hear such remarks very often, sometimes where one would least expect them. However, among the apparatus functionaries, who were educated during the last period, there is considerable fear of the Left Opposition; should it come to power it would deal harshly with all those who in their own time took charge of Stalinist reprisals. It goes without saying that all such doubts and fears are carefully encouraged from above.

In the course of the last few months, arrests on a large scale have been made in factories. More than a hundred workers were arrested in the "Anno" factory, where Opposition circulars were distributed. A few dozen workers were nabbed in Sharkopodshnik. There were arrests in the "Calibre" factory (30 to 40 workers) and in the Baltic factory in Leningrad. A circular, set up locally, was distributed at a factory in Kovrov; undoubtedly similar facts could be obtained in many other places. I send only those reports that have reached me.

I have already informed you that during the October days, at a brake-producing plant a portrait of Stalin was so drawn that the next morning it turned into a portrait of Trotsky. There was a great to-do about this; many were arrested but the offenders were not caught. From time to time "misunderstandings" of this type occur in other enterprises. At the factory "Proletarian Labor", on the 22nd of January, the leading article of the wall newspaper, dedicated to Lenin's anniversary, turned out to be completely composed of excerpts from Trotsky's articles on Lenin. A terrible rumpus! Many of the participants were excluded from the party.

The workers in factories are alienated, dissatisfied and irritable. The authorities are taking advantage of the passport system primarily in order to ship out of Moscow all the undesirable and even the least suspicious elements, in a political sense; among them all those Left Oppositionists who had repented at diverse times. The purpose behind this is clear: toward Spring stormy times are expected in factories and all those are being liquidated before having any chance of serving as leaders in these agitations. This measure, just as many others, serves as a means of self-defense for the apparatus to the detriment of the party, for it is quite self-evident that the Left Oppositionists in whom the workers trust would have striven to lead every movement into Soviet channels.

In factories there spring up odd opposition groups which function with their own means and forces. During arrests there is found "Trotskyist" literature, chiefly home-made circulars, theses, extracts, etc. From out of "My Life" comrades have selected material for propaganda. On this ground, three Oppositionists were arrested. In many cases, the ideas of the Opposition get abroad intuitively. Workers are drawn to our slogans by different paths. At present the questions that are posed most acutely are those that deal with oppression, bureaucratic despotism, and unbearable conditions in factories and in the party. Recently, the party apparatus issued a secret circular with instructions to double the watch over hectographs and other multiplying machines in offices; evidently, the Opposition utilizes these machines in order to publish its documents.

In January, at a Moscow party session, Kaganovich said, "in the Leningrad region (near Moscow) for five months all the nuclei were in the hands of Trotskyists. And what happened? The apparatus proceeded to enter into a discussion with them instead of dealing with the Trotskyists as they ought to be dealt with." The same Kaganovich reported, "Khichkov, a woman worker in Leningrad, took the floor in her nucleus to announce that she did not believe in Zinoviev's counter-revolutionism. She was, of course, expelled immediately."

Arrests among the workers, especially among the young Communists, take place continually. The majority of these arrests pass unnoticed. Party circles become acquainted with mass arrests only when the latter are connected with individuals more or less well-known. Thus, for instance, the following is current in connection with the arrest of the group of Nemchenko, a trade union functionary: first, a group of YCLers was arrested, among them Nemchenko's son. They were confronted with the indictment charging them with conspiring terrorist acts (!) and they were harshly cross-examined to make them divulge how they, the youngsters, had come to such ideas. Nemchenko's son is reported to have replied, "There's continual talk at home that the Chief is ruining the country." In this manner they got at Nemchenko and his friends.

It is, of course, possible that within some circle or other of the youth, which are deprived of leadership and of the possibility to discuss and criticize, there is actual talk going on about terrorist acts. But most probably, what is involved in the above matter and the like, is provocation for the purpose of intimidating and vilifying "liberal" parents. The struggle against those elements in the apparatus which are inclined toward the Opposition proceeds not only by means of arrests but by slander as well. Those who criticize are smeared with filth, being charged with embezzlement, graft, nepotism, etc., etc. This facilitates liquidation.

The following method is widely applied. During all sorts of authoritative conferences, particularly those connected with collectivization, industrialization, inflation, the conditions of the workers and other burning questions, the chairmen propose that the discussion proceed in the spirit of forthright frankness, presumably to give the "leaders" an opportunity to elucidate all sides of the question. Concurrently, every critical statement, particularly, if it seems to be behind it considerable reflection, serves invariably as a reason for inquiry and surveillance, and for ferreting out connections; and not infrequently it leads to the arrest of individual groups. It is said that Smilga suffered for his "criticism" at a conference where the most touchy questions of rural economy were discussed. It is indubitable that Smilga, in any event, did not represent any Oppositionist or semi-Opportunist group. But, nevertheless, he paid for his attempt to speak out upon the peasant policies of Stalin in the very intimate and super-authoritative circle.

From well informed sources the following is related about the manner in which the group of Elsmont, Tolmachev and others was liquidated. While recruiting supporters, Elsmont shared his views with a close intimate of his, Nikolsky, speaking of the situation in the country and, in particular, of the necessity to get rid of Stalin. This candid "shared" Elsmont's views with functionaries from the Central Control Commission. Elsmont was ordered to report there, "What are your relations with Nikolsky?" "The best," "You trust him?" "Yes." Thereupon Elsmont was shown Nikolsky's testimony; and that was immediately followed up with an indictment charging preparation of... terrorist acts. Obviously, this indictment was in reference to this words about the necessity of "getting rid of Stalin." Elsmont could not withstand the pressure and betrayed Tolmachev, and said that Rykov and Tomsky knew about his point of view. It is possible, of course, that Elsmont merely referred to Tolmachev, Rykov and Tomsky, as witnesses who could testify that while he, Elsmont, spoke out critically about Stalin's policies, he was much too far away from any idea of terrorism. A reference of this sort to authoritative witnesses could and must have become transformed, under the given conditions, into "betrayal" and have called for a charge being brought against Rykov and Tomsky, of their being informed, and their failing to report. As is well known, in its own time, the charge against Zinoviev and Kamenyev in relation to Kintin and Smilga referred itself to precisely the same thing.

In connection with the affair of the Elsmont group, the word was carefully passed around among the party tops, that not only Rykov and Tomsky knew about the "conspirators" but also one member of the Politbureau; a delicate hint at Kalinin. There is no doubt that Kalinin is heart and soul with the Rights. It is also possible that in a super-cautious manner he is taking the insurance "to the Right." At the Plenum of the CEC, Voroshilov said, turning to Tomsky, "You out thinking that you are a leader. That's all over now. You want to deport yourself as a leader but you are just an ordinary party member. Begin working as a rank and file Communist in the nucleus; work in the wall newspaper; produce proof that you are deserving of trust."

Rykov unburdened himself at the Plenum in the following manner. "How can I prove my devotion to party, working only among the letter-carriers? Give me the opportunity to step out before the masses. Now, for example, I was refused permission by the district committee chairman when I wanted to make an address during a jubilee at the Park of Culture and Rest, where 30,000 participated." The same Voroshilov replied to Rykov at the Plenum, "And he was right in refusing—who knows what you would have said, and what line you might have defended. You learn how to work among the letter-carriers." At present, Voroshilov, at any rate, is not a rank and file member of the party, but a "leader."

One must not think, of course, that after the complete capitulation of the Right leaders, the attitude towards them has been radically changed. At the meeting of the Moscow Party militants, Kaganovich while reporting on the Plenum, spoke with great animosity not only about Rykov and Tomsky but also Bukharin. The latter, however, because the least dangerous, has been slightly pardoned.

Among the Rights there is great confusion. They are strong in moods but not in organization or ideas. They are now without central leaders. However, the arrests among the Rights continue. Recently there were important arrests in the People's Commissariat of Agriculture. A "wrecking" organization was discovered there, embracing many super-authoritative workers. At its head presumably were the chief of this commissariat, Konor, and his colleagues Kovarsky and Wolf. They are accused of having maintained connections with Petlura organizations in the Ukraine and in Kuban, and of even keeping in touch with the Petlura center in Poland. It is possible, of course, that there were isolated class enemies in the apparatus of the Commissariat, but the entire case as a whole represents an obvious amalgam. So far as I know, Konor was born in Galicia, joined the Bolsheviks during the imperialist war, or shortly thereafter; he participated in the Civil War, and I think he sympathized with the Left Opposition a few years ago. Of his later history I know nothing. Notwithstanding the curt and detailed character of the accusations, no one believes in their validity. Everybody is of the opinion that the "chief" is simply preparing for an instructive trial of those supposedly guilty of the collapse of rural economy.

MARCH ISSUE OF YOUNG SPARTACUS

The March number of Young Spartacus, which is ready for sale, is a lively issue containing articles on the burning questions of the day. Its leading article "Unite to Smash Fascism" discusses the manifesto of the Comintern for a united front with the Socialist International. The call for an anti-Fascist Conference signed by a number of youth groups including the National Youth Committee of the Left Opposition, the New York Spartacus Youth Club and the Young Communist League, an item on "Non-Aggression Pact or United Front", a review of comrade Trotsky's pamphlet "The Only Road" and quotations from the Stalinists and Social Democrats on Germany, make the issue a predominantly German campaign number.

Reports on the toy workers and anti-Fascist youth conferences, the Alban-Jewess and Tom Mooney Conference, the conditions of the homeless youth, reflect the activities of the youth movement. Several items on the Young Communist League, "A YCLer Speaks" "Ninth Plenum of the Young Communist International" a statement of a Chicago comrade, the appeal of the Chicago Club against physical assaults on Left Oppositionists, etc. a letter of comrade Trotsky to the Spanish youth, the report of activities of the French Left Opposition youth, "Karl Marx's Confession", an article on the Paris Commune, reprints of two proclamations of the Comintern, complete the lively number of our youth paper, Young Spartacus.

Comrades are urged to order donations. Get subscriptions and donations for our paper.

YOUR LEADERS DON'T WANT TO FIGHT!

However, it still remains to be known why the social democratic leaders speak at all: regarding polemics, non-aggression pacts and the disgusting manners of the Communists, instead of answering this simple question: in what way shall we fight the Fascists? For the simple reason that the social democratic leaders do not want to fight. They cherished the hope that Hindenburg would save them from Hitler. Now they are waiting for some other miracle. They do not want to fight. They lost the habit of fighting long ago. The struggle frightens them.

Stamper wrote regarding the actions of the Fascist banditry at Elsenheim: "Faith in right and justice has not yet died in Germany." (Vorwaerts, February 14.)

It is impossible to read these words without being revolted. Instead of a call for a fighting united front, we get the consoling words: "Faith in justice has not died." Now, the bourgeoisie has its justice, and the proletariat its own too. Armed injustice always comes out on top of disarmed justice. The whole history of humanity proves this. Whoever makes an appeal to this self-evident "ghost" of "justice" is deceiving the workers. Whoever wants the victory of proletarian justice over Fascist violence, must agitate for the struggle and set up the organs of the proletarian united front.

It is impossible to find in the entire social democratic press a single line indicating genuine preparation for the struggle. There is not a single thing, merely some general phrases, postponements to some indefinite future, nebulous consolations. "Only let the Nazis start something. They march forward step by step, they tranquilly take over one position after another. These petty bourgeois reactionary malcontents do not care for risks. Now, they do not care to risk anything at all; they are sure in advance that the enemy will retreat without a fight. And they are not mistaken in their calculations."

Of course, it often occurs that a combatant must retreat in order to get a good start for a leap forward. But the social democratic leaders are not inclined to make the leap forward. They do not want to leap. And all their dissertations are made in order to conceal this fact. Just a short time ago they kept asserting that so long as the Nazis do not quit the ground of legality, there is no room for a fight. Now we get a good look at what this legality was: a series of promissory notes on the coup d'Etat. Still, this coup d'Etat was possible only because the social democratic leaders lull the workers to sleep with phrases about the legality of the coup d'Etat and console them with hope of a new Reichstag yet more important than those that preceded it.

The Fascists can ask for nothing better.

Today the social democracy has even ceased speaking of struggles in the indefinite future. On the subject of the already-begun destruction of the working-class organizations and press, the Vorwaerts "reminds" the government not to forget that "in a developed capitalist country the conditions of production group the workers in factories." These words indicate that the leadership of the social democracy accepts in advance the destruction of the political, economic and cultural organizations created by three generations of the proletariat. "In spite of this" the workers will remain grouped by the industries themselves. Well then, what good are proletarian organizations if the question can be solved so simply?

The leaders of the social democracy and the trade unions wash their hands, and relegate themselves to the sidelines while waiting, "grouped together by the industries," break the bonds of discipline and begin the struggle, the leaders, obviously, will intervene as they did in 1918, in the role of pacifiers and mediators and will force themselves on to the workers' backs to re-establish the positions they have lost. The leaders conceal from the eyes of the masses their refusal to fight and their dread of the struggle by means of hollow phrases about non-aggression pacts. Social democratic workers who leaders do not want to fight!

THEN IS OUR PROPOSAL A MANEUVER?

Here the social democrat will again interrupt us to say: "Since you do not believe in our leaders' desire to fight against Fascism, isn't your proposal for a united front an obvious maneuver?" Even more, he will repeat the reflections printed in the Vorwaerts to the effect that the workers need unity and not "maneuvers."

This type of argument has quite a convincing sound. In actuality it is an empty phrase. Yes, we Communists are positive that the social democratic and trade union functionaries will continue to evade the struggle to the best of their ability. At the critical moment a large segment of the working class bureaucracy will pass directly over to the Fascists. The other segment, which succeeds in exporting its carefully hoarded financial resources to some other country, will emigrate at the opportune moment. All these actions have already begun and their further development is inevitable. But we do not confuse this segment, today the most influential in the reformist bureaucracy, with the social democratic party or the entirety of the trade unions. The proletarian nucleus of the party will fight with blows and it will carry behind it a good-sized section of the apparatus. Exactly where will the line of demarcation pass between the turncoats, traitors and deserters, on one side, and those who want to fight, on the other? We can only find this out through experience. That is why, without possessing the slightest confidence in the social democratic bureaucracy, the Communists cannot abstain from addressing themselves to the whole party. Only in this manner will it be possible to separate those who want to fight from those who want to desert. If we are mistaken in our estimation of Wells, Breitscheid, Hilferding, Crispian and the rest, let them prove that we are liars by their actions. We will declare a mea culpa on the public squares. If all this is merely a "maneuver" on our part, it is a correct and necessary maneuver which serves the interests of the cause.

You social democrats remain in your party because you have faith in its program, in its tactics and in its leadership. This is a fact with which we reckon. You regard our criticism as false. That is your privilege. You are by no means obliged to believe the Communists on faith, and no serious Communist will demand this of you. But on their side the Communists have the right to put no confidence in the functionaries of the social democracy and not to consider the social democrats as Marxists, revolutionists, and genuine socialists. Otherwise, the Communists would have no need for the setting up of a separate party and a separate International. We must take the facts as they are. We must build the united front not in the clouds, but on the foundation which all the previous development has laid down. If you sincerely believe that your leadership will lead the workers to struggle against Fascism, then what Communist maneuver can you distrust? Then what is this maneuver of which the Vorwaerts is continually speaking? Think this out carefully: Is this not a maneuver on the part of your leaders who want to frighten you with the hollow word "maneuver" and thus keep you away from the united front?

(Conclusion in the next number)

—L. TROTSKY.

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879, published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th St., N. Y. C.

EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin A. Berman James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabeck

Saturday, April 1, 1933
Vol. VI, No. 21 (Whole No. 169)
Subscription rate: $2.00 per year.
Foreign $2.50. Five Cents per copy.

The Crisis in German Communism

Two days before the German Reichstag elections forty thousand Fascist storm troops, preceded by two hundred armed "auxiliary police" in Nazi uniform, marched through the streets of central and western Berlin. They were greeted by most of the Schupo (German police) with the Fascist salute. It was effective election propaganda, but more than that, it was an attempt to put force behind the Fascist claim that they are the "masters of Berlin." To the extent that one can speak of weight of election figures, the claim appeared to have been confirmed two days later; though the real contest is yet to come. The streets of Berlin will undoubtedly witness some serious aspects of this contest.

Out in the West End the brown-shirted paraders were greeted by Fascist flags from practically every window. In that section of the big and petty bourgeoisie they could return the greetings to their friends, not excluding the rich Jews. But in Berlin North, the working class section which includes Wedding, on that very same day the whole section was isolated by a strong police cordon and every house ransacked while the terror and the arrests were mounting. To have horns, hands is sure grounds for suspicion and almost proof of guilt.

Such is now the normal procedure of expressions of everyday life not only in Berlin but throughout Germany. The contest for final and complete assertion of power is on and increasing in intensity even though, compared to what is to come, this is mere guerrilla warfare.

The False Outlook of the Stalinists

The election results expressed a serious setback to the revolutionary vanguard. Not even the screaming and empty boasts of victory made by the Moscow Pravda can hide that fact nor does this in the least change the reaction to these results within the disorganized ranks of the practically annihilated vanguard. The setback weighs heavy upon them. During these years of growing Fascist danger the Stalinist leadership of the official Communist party tried to combat Fascism and social democracy as two sections of the same camp—Fascism and social Fascism. That was the official policy of the Stalinized Comintern.

At the eleventh Comintern plenum held in April 1931, that is after the German Reichstag elections of September 1930 in which the Fascists recorded their first great forward sweep, Thaelmann, reporting on the German situation, said:

After September 14, after the sensational successes of the National Socialists, its supporters throughout Germany nourished great expectations. We did not at that time permit ourselves to be misled by the panicky sentiment which partly existed within the whole working class and at any rate within social democracy. That there were even within our own ranks certain comrades who not only signalled but also overestimated the great danger of this development of Fascism, that is known to most comrades. But we (Thaelmann and fellow bureaucrats—A. S.) declare soberly and serenely that September 14 was in many respects Hitler's best day, which will be followed not by better days but by worse.

Thaelmann in his report recognized that the social democratic workers have a different ideology of civil war from that of the Fascists, and that he proceeded to state the essence of the Stalinist view as follows:

"On the other hand we will witness that the Social Democrats will succeed also in Germany, as they are now already in a measure succeeding, to form terror groups for the civil war from their mass supporters, which will surely in the future fight side by side with the Fascists against us on the other side of the barricade."

Up until the very last moment, that is to the actual establishment of the Hitler government, on January 30 of this year, the Stalinists maintained that the main attacks must be concentrated upon the "social Fascists." What are the results of this policy?

The actual results are that the originally false policy of the incompetent party leaders has so far saved the social democratic bureaucracy. As a party, the S. P. votes cast for a workers party in Germany indicate conscious support for its policies. According to this there are today seven million workers still under social democratic influence and following the social democratic leaders. Perhaps one may reduce the number by about one million, allowing that many for various functionaries, trade union, co-operative and what is left of social democratic local governmental officials. Its former petty bourgeois support in general has already gone to Hitler. This leaves nevertheless the conscious support of six million workers, the solid section of the proletariat, workers engaged in industry, in the main employed workers with the tools of production in their hands. That is yet a formidable strength.

The social democratic bureaucracy has been saved because it was not at all put to the test in action before the eyes of these six million workers. They can now continue to prate about opposition to Fascism and sabotage action. Would it not have been far better to put them to the test and inevitable exposure so as to be recognized in their true light in front of these six million workers? Is it not now clear that a real Communist pressure for a united front

Alternatives in the Decisive Class Battles

In its genuine sense with social democracy, would not only have united the working class but would also have forced the hands of this treacherous bureaucracy? But it is precisely the fatally wrong policy pursued of centering the attacks against "social Fascism" instead of a united front with the working class in the streets, to sweep the elections and to sit in the government claiming the imposing support of seventeen million votes to be used as a preparation for the final coup d'état. This is the catastrophic record of the policies pursued by the Stalinist leadership to date.

In increasing measure the Fascist bands roam the streets exercising themselves, training themselves for the big battles in assassinations upon the workers. One look at a Nazi storm troop reveals its make-up. Speaking in a political sense it is the rag tag and bob tail of society. Their appearance is in general that of roaming bandits. Its ranks contain primarily petty bourgeois elements to a large extent recruited from the disorganized section, those impoverished by the inflation and the crises. The slum proletariat which go to make up part of its ranks is generally recruited from those who as a regular part of their lives are down on the lowest step of the social ladder, and the shady elements. But it recruits also other more or less demoralized proletarian elements. For example in Germany today there are about two to three million workers who have been unemployed so long that they have lost practically all semblance of unemployment insurance. A frightful demoralization results. These elements divide mainly between the C. P. and the Fascists, the most conscious going to the former.

Fascist-Stahlhelm Unity Aims at Working Class Destruction

A goodly portion of these elements are attracted by the socialistically colored demagoguery of the Fascist movement. However as it nears the pinnacle of power, the movement changes its program and its whole structure likewise undergoes a change. The petty bourgeois elements begin to recede toward the background and the movement assumes its real role of championing and defending the big bourgeoisie—the last defenders of the capitalist system. This change is already in the making in Germany.

The Stahlhelm on the other hand makes quite a different impression, not less reactionary but still different. They represent the old Prussian soldier type. They love to cover themselves with the decorations of war days, especially the iron cross. When they meet they click their heels and salute in the stiffest military fashion. In composition the Stahlhelm is made up of bourgeois, petty bourgeois of the more solid layers especially from the rural towns, and even workers from the Prussian landed estates. At its inception it was for the republic and democratic. Today its ideology is reactionary. In the recent elections it had a common ticket with the German nationalists. Jointly they express the political organization of the von Papen-Hugenberg-Seldte section of the Harzburg united front. The differentiation between this section and its bigger and much more turbulent violent half-brother, the Nazi, is still to come. And it may have some serious reverberations.

The common goal of destruction of the working class movement found them easily united. To the reactionary bourgeoisie the brown hordes promised something which it had never enjoyed before—complete security against strikes. They embody its hopes of doing away with the hated and troublesome working class demands. Their ravaging fury, worked up on high and heavy promises, is therefore unleashed first of all and most directly against the Communists. But the aim is much broader, as the many repressions against the social democrats show, yes, even going beyond to any section suspected of being allies to the working class parties. The broad aim is, of course, necessary if the Fascists are to realize their hope of conquest. But within it, also, the dangers of complications for the reactionary camp. Because of this it will surely yet have to make its retreats. Thus in more ways than one are the possibilities of difficulties in the Fascist path apt to become breathing spells for the proletariat, openings under the heavy attacks which it can utilize the better to gather its forces.

Workers Possess Remarkable Collectivity and Organizational Discipline

Meanwhile this heavy pall hangs over the working class, weighing upon it like an alp. The burden is carried in silence. But it is a grim silence foreshadowing serious events. It is something unnatural to witness German workers looking at a swaggering Fascist storm troop with eyes which express recognition of the enemy and then speaking their thoughts to one another in a careful whisper not destined for outside ears. No semblance of freedom of expression exists. For a long time all working class meetings and demonstration of any kind are totally prohibited. The same is the fate of the press, social democratic practically as well as the Communist.

Some Fundamental Aspects of the Present Crisis in Germany

In the last issue of Die Weltbuehne (the radical bourgeois Berlin periodical) to reach here, Hellmuth von Gerlach, the well-known pacifist, who has since been reported under arrest and subject to the tortures of the Fascist police, quotes the following conversation between a Nazi leader and a prominent French journalist:

Nazi: "We know quite well that Germany needs fifteen years to come to power again economically and fifteen more in order to be in shape as a military power."

Frenchman: "But the corridor?"

Nazi: "The question of the corridor can be solved of itself, without war. It won't take long before Russia cracks. Then we leave the Voles the Ukraine as far as Odessa and we, in turn, get the Corridor and Danzig." (Weltbuehne, February 28.)

This solution of the Nazi chief, in of course, rather oversimplified. In their calculations, the German reactionaries, intoxicated with their recent and rather easy successes, are counting without their host—the international working class. The latter on the other hand has not as yet, by far, said its last word. But it is necessary to face the situation clearly, to look eye to eye with the facts. And the facts point to a shifting of the specific gravity of the world political situation from Germany where world reaction has been able to put a feather into its cap, to Soviet Russia, which is from all indications, the next butt of its attack. The defense of the Soviet Union as the fortress of the world revolution stands first on the order of the day for the international proletarian movement. A genuine defense of the world revolution and its Soviet fortress requires a re-counting and an evaluation of the setback already suffered in Germany.

The Warning of the Opposition

When the International Left Opposition first sounded the alarm over the Hitler danger and raised the implications it had for the USSR and the progress of the world revolution, the Stalinists accused us of a counter-revolutionary design to draw the attentions of the workers away from the threat of Japanese invasion in the East. In doing this, the shining lights of bureaucratic Centrism only exposed their own lack of foresight, their own poverty of fundamental international perspective and orientation. Blinded by their "practicality," by their empiricism, these pretenders to Communist leadership only see a danger when they come up square against it. So it has been with the Hitler danger, to which they are only now, two years after the Bolshevik-Leninists warned against it, waking up. The Left Opposition foresaw the danger in its time thanks to its internationalist orientation, the guiding line for which is furnished by the Marxist conception of the permanent revolution. Only that conception, viewing the class struggle as an international phenomenon and its revolutionary solution as a solution to be realized decisively only on a world scale, provides the foresight that is necessary in coping with the problems posed for the Communists in the present epoch. The Stalinist conception of "socialism in one country," redefining, as it does, the fundamental ideas of Marxism, of necessity leads to blind groping, to the bungling of the strategic problems posed, to the perpetration of crimes against the revolution, to the heaping up of defeats for the proletariat.

The breath-taking events of the last few weeks and months in Germany are a case in point. The Fascist reaction is almost without obstruction consolidating its power and preparing for its next steps in the East. These blows are struck in the face not of an unorganized proletariat, but of the best organized working class in the whole capitalist world. Germany possesses not only the strongest social democracy in the world, but the strongest Communist party—outside of the USSR—as well. In accounting for the events that have transpired, in analyzing the setback that has been suffered, it is therefore indispensable and of the greatest import to probe the basic policies of these two tremendous forces, the policies which failed to stand the test and the leadership that failed to stand the test. The basic policies of the social democracy have long been those of treachery to the working class and the betrayal they achieved in helping Hitler to power was all the less surprising because it merely complemented their treacheries of 1914 and 1918. The key to a successful resistance of the Fascist danger naturally rested with the Communists and their ability to win the majority of the working class from the social democracy and for revolutionary struggle. That involved, above all, the highly important and concrete question of the application of the Leninist united front tactic. But in evaluating the events, it is once more necessary to give a complete characterization of the social democracy, especially insofar as it has a bearing also upon an understanding of the Stalinist role in the situation.

The German social democracy started out on its road of working class betrayal by substituting for

The Left Opposition organ Die Permanente Revolution has been banned until the end of May.

There have been no mass demonstrations in Berlin since the mighty Reichsbanner meeting in the Lustgarten on Sunday, February 19. It was estimated well above 150,000. The Reichsbanner troops formed a solid gigantic square in the center. But they listened to their just elected leader, Karl Holtermann, proclaim the empty phrase previously coined by the Stalinist Renegade "We come after Hitler!" Then the demonstration dispersed. Such an event leaves a distinct impression of gigantic forces at hand but not being utilized.

On February 27, the social democrats of Berlin had engaged the "Sportplatz" for a commemoration of the fiftieth year of the death of Karl Marx. The commemoration speech was made by Friedrich Stampfer, the editor in chief of the Vorwaerts. But he had no more than commenced saying: "To be a Marxist requires a great knowledge, whereas to be an anti-Marxist one does not need to know anything," than the police found sufficient grounds to call a halt. The meeting was broken up. Moreover, it is now reported as a common opinion in capitalist political circles that when the newly elected Reichstag opens in the Potsdammer Markstrasse church there will be admission for neither Communist nor social democratic deputies.

In Germany the highly developed technology has been accompanied with a horrologing industrial discipline. In turn this has produced deep-rooted working class organizations and possessed the workers with a remarkable quality of collectivity and organizational discipline. The highly socialized production has produced in the German working masses its high degree of such consciousness and of class consciousness as an inevitable result of a social system based upon class divisions. The German workers live practically the whole of their social lives within workers' organizations, in the political, economic and social spheres. They have their own workers political parties, trade unions, consumers co-operatives, workers sports organizations (Friends of nature, football, anglers, etc.), workers freethinker associations, etc., etc., together in the huge people's houses, existing in every city, in workers' movies and theatres and so forth. The German workers are born into organizational institutions and mostly receive their burial from them also. Broadly speaking, that is, excluding the C. P. and its auxiliaries, all these organizations are distinctly of a social democratic ideology and under social democratic leadership. As usual the Social party bureaucracy permits a wide latitude of opinion within these organizations, so long as its own direction and control is not seriously threatened.

(To be continued.)

—ALNE SWABECK.

World Economic Situation Today

(Continued from last issue)

The factors which presided at the birth of the crisis may be resumed as follows: overproduction, the excessively high level of prices, and the inflation of credit. When production will be reduced to the point where it does not suffice any more even for the reduced consumption, so that the world stocks of raw materials begin to be drawn out, when prices will be reduced to the point where many producers will have to go out of production, on the one hand, while a certain amount of buying is encouraged by the low level on the other; and when the deflation of credit and the release of liquid capital has lowered the basic level of interest rates to the point where hungry capitalists will be more and more tempted by speculative affairs, then we have the economic framework within which a recovery can take place, provided the bourgeoisie is politically in position to assert its interests as against the other classes of society.

But, if these economic and political conditions render an upturn possible, they are not sufficient of themselves to produce such an upturn. For this, the capitalists must find the means of establishing their profits and restoring the circulation of capital, for under capitalism the making of profits and their realization in the accumulation of capital determine economic activity or inactivity. Under the conditions of crisis, profit is to be found in unblocking the circulation of capital by reducing production, and in the super-exploitation of the proletariat by all methods—wage cuts, higher hours, speeding up. It is only when the capitalist again begins to find his profit in increasing production that he recovers in industrial and commercial activity begins again.

Now capitalist statistics are not kept with a view to facilitating Marxian economic research. The data are insufficient for even an approximate estimate of the rate of surplus value, and even the rate of profit can be estimated only on the basis of very incomplete and delayed data. The law of uneven development plays an important role here—the figures for France, for instance, are in general published much later than those of other large countries, while America has no official statistics at all on unemployment. Different figures arrive with different delays, ranging from 24 hours to two months, and often are not comparable among themselves.

For these reasons we have to be guided by rather summary and incomplete indications. But they will suffice to give us the broad lines of the present world developments.

Perspective for Coming Period
As early as August of last year, in studying these questions at Trinkipio with comrade Trotsky, we called the attention of our comrades to the following facts: that the prices of commodities after an unprecedented decline, had begun to rise; that industrial production in certain lines, such as steel, was no longer sufficient even to maintain fixed capital; that interest rates had reached such a low point that speculation was beginning to take hold of the markets, and that in general the most important preconditions for an ultimate recovery were beginning to be outlined.

How It Stands Today and Its Next Perspectives

This perspective was reinforced by the beginning of the wave of workers' resistance in England, later in Germany, where it was accompanied by a beginning of re-employment of laid-off workers. Comrade Trotsky had proven as far back as the Third Congress of the C. I. in 1921, in an economic situation which in certain ways resembled the present one, that a recovery under certain conditions would result in reinforcing the militancy and aggressiveness of the workers. He polemized against those who believed that the perspectives of working class action depended on the uninterrupted intensification of the crisis, and that a recovery would weaken the fighting spirit of the proletariat. He showed that while, in fact, a long period of capitalist stabilization, such as that before the war, there could no longer be a question of such a stabilization within the general crisis of capitalism, but rather only of a partial and temporary recovery. As all well know, the events fully confirmed him. In America, for instance, the great railway shop strike of 1922 came after the turn in the crisis toward recovery was no longer doubtful.

We have continued to study the later developments of the situation. In September and in October, we reported that the first uncertain signs of an ultimate recovery, in the liquid and intangible realm of stock exchange speculation and in the commodities markets, had been consolidated for the time being without making further headway, between the high points of August and the lows of June, but that only a little progress could be seen in the tangible domains of industrial production and in trade.

"There is nothing surprising in this. We must not expect the recovery to be uniform and homogeneous, any more than the crisis which preceded it or the period of stabilization before that. The law of uneven development is fully manifested here: uneven development among various countries, and among different branches of economic life. In America, for instance, in 1929, industrial production began to fall after the month equally as true that a union of the working class will ALWAYS face similar conditions and the united front of the bosses, the state and the labor fakers. The question is: will the two year contract, with no essential difference from the Lewis contract, strengthen or weaken the PMA in the struggle against the operators, the state and the Lewis machine? Our opinion is that the present contract will weaken rather than strengthen the union in the struggle. This is the opinion of the Left wing in the PMA.

Left Wing Criticizes Provisions of New Illinois Mine Contract

(Continued from page 1)

The Right Wing Wants "Peace"
The unions came into existence through mass pressure and mass struggles and can only grow through such struggles. The growing Right wing in the union want less mass struggles and long contracts and the respect of the "best people" in the mining towns. The Left wing wants "peace," but the Left wing knows that you can only have "peace" if you are strong enough to maintain the union and its conditions. It is the Left wing and the progressives who are carrying on the dangerous work in Franklin county, men whom the Stalinists call traitors.

We may ask the question: How much work will the PMA miners obtain this summer? Very little. In fact, a strike struggle for a better contract, rallying the UMWA miners throughout the nation behind this program will cut the ground from underneath the Lewis control and strengthen the PMA. The PMA is far stronger today than it was when first organized and a far greater influence. It has an excellent chance of winning, for years undisputed in the leadership of the Bolshevik party and the Communist International which arose in the struggle against the social democracy and its treachery, assumes thereby all the greater significance. The whole past of the social democracy anticipated their role in the Hitler disaster. But why did not the Communist party, the German section of the Bolshevik International prove equal to the task? This is the paramount question that is posed by the German events. This is the question upon the answer to which depends the successful preparation for the tasks that face us at present. Without the correct answer to this question it will be impossible to make up for lost time, to repair the losses already suffered and to arm for future action.

—SAM GORDON.

(Another article on this question will follow in the next issue.)

Chicago R.R. Conference

The Association of Railway Executives concluded a meeting at the Drake Hotel in Chicago that was attended by executives of fifty nine roads. They held a one-day closed session and elected V. Fletcher as general counsel of the association. None of the members would comment on the proceedings or the plans but the Chicago Tribune says the following: "It was understood that four major issues dominated the discussions: plans for railroad relief; consolidations, mergers, and readjustments in the industry; reduction of passenger rates; revision of the wage scales."

What more need be told to the working class? They want government help for their bankrupt industries, mergers and reduced passenger rates to meet modern bus and air transportation and more wage cuts for the workers. This is the railway executives' method of reorganizing to find a way out of the crisis. It is the same method of reorganization used by the other exploiters.

The executives of the fifty-nine roads realize that the necessity of unity in fighting the depression so that they can shift the burden on the working class and small stock holders. The 21 crafts of the railway industry have not yet realized this need on their part. The workers in every terminal must establish railroad councils of representatives of the 21 crafts. They must follow the lead of the Minneapolis Railroad Council to fight the plans of the railroads.

—B. J. FIELD.

Trotsky's masterly analysis "The Only Road" has been all set up and is ready to go to press. We have been unduly detained by lack of funds. Send funds and donations to help us publish this work immediately.

of June, but the solemn warning of the world crash was given only by the break on the New York Stock Exchange in October. On the other hand, industrial production in France continued to increase until the month of June, 1930. We must therefore expect still more striking disparities, even apparent contradictions, in the course of the development of the world crisis.

What conclusions do we then draw from an examination of the available statistics?

1. For several months now, the world crisis, instead of continuing to grow sharper, seems to have stabilized itself at a level fairly close to the lowest point attained so far.

2. The political and economic preconditions for a recovery exist. It is therefore not excluded that the present temporary breathing-spell may develop to the point of becoming a real recovery, that is, the crisis may then be transformed into a depression.

3. On the other hand, in view of the intensity of the crisis, the political as well as the economic convulsions in the world capitalist system (rise of Hitler), and the progress of internal contradictions within the general crisis of post-war capitalism, it is unlikely that such a recovery could be followed by a prolonged period of stabilization, not to speak of prosperity. On the contrary, it is rather probable that the unresolved and unresolvable contradictions will be aggravated by the efforts of each country to draw the maximum of profit from the recovery, under conditions where the bourgeois slogan of "international collaboration" has become more ridiculous and lying than ever.

4. The class struggle could in all probability take on even greater sharpness under such conditions, and the radicalization of the masses, based on a stronger strategic situation for the worker whose labor would again be in demand, could be extended, beginning with more effective resistance in the field of economic struggles, up to the most advanced political demands.

The Reformist Theory and the Stalinists

That the reformists should vacillate, between the hope of a near future of social peace and the fear that the crisis will never finish, that is only to be expected. Their theoreticians have deformed the Marxian analysis of the crisis to the point of assimilating it to the "American" doctrine that the capitalist, in his own well-understood self-interest, should pay higher wages in order to increase the purchasing power of the workers.

That is the logical consequence of the theory of social collaboration, in which the worker disappears as the creator of surplus value and appears as a simple consumer. Under these conditions, according to the social democrats, if the capitalist out of sheer meanness continues to reduce wages instead of increasing them during the crisis, evidently will never end.

But that the official Communist parties should use such a line of reasoning, when they say that only a bourgeois optimism can foresee the "end of the crisis," because the reductions in wages continue the crisis, that is a cause for surprise. For obviously, the reductions in wages serve to re-establish the profit of the capitalist, which is the moving power of economy under a capitalist regime.

For this reason Varga, in the Imperialism, is compelled, first to deny obstinately that there are any symptoms of an ultimate recovery, second to admit the existence of a "stagnation at approximately the present level," of "the ultimate attainment of the bottom of the crisis," of the "bottom of the crisis" itself.

All this is the purest "third period," this time rebaptized "end of the partial stabilization of capitalism." Already after three and a half years of crisis it seems fair enough to say that the partial stabilization is over. There is nothing to be surprised at therefore in the fact that the theoreticians of the C. P. of Germany, in their monthly paper Die Internationale, have begun to speak of a "fourth period." For this they were soundly scolded in an issue of the Imperialism last year, as being "in appearance very radical, but having for its actual result a weakening of the work of the Communist parties." And the "third period," then, not to speak of the "end of capitalist stabilization?"

The Stalinists prefer to keep to the fallacious perspectives of the radicalization of the masses through the crisis without taking into account the historical experience and even that of the recent past. But it is not only a question of criticizing; we must prepare ourselves, theoretically and practically, to take our place in the revival of the militant spirit of the working class, foreseeing as clearly as possible the turns of the objective situation, and adapting our strategy and our tactics to it. The slogans for which the International Left Opposition has been struggling for years—workers' control of production, credits and economic collaboration with the Soviet Union, the Soviet United States of Europe—seen in these perspectives, acquire the greatest importance for the revolutionary movement of the world proletariat.

—B. J. FIELD.

Trotsky's masterly analysis "The Only Road" has been all set up and is ready to go to press. We have been unduly detained by lack of funds. Send funds and donations to help us publish this work immediately.

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE

MILITANT

Weekly Organ of the Communist League of America [Opposition]

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 23, 1923 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879
VOLUME VI, NO. 22 [WHOLE NO. 169] NEW YORK, SATURDAY APRIL 8, 1933 PRICE 5 CENTS

The Tragedy of the German Proletariat

By Leon Trotsky

The most powerful proletariat of Europe, by its place in production, its social weight, the strength of its organizations, has manifested no resistance since the arrival of Hitler to power and the violent attacks against the workers' organizations. This is the fact on which one must base all future strategic calculations.

It would be patently stupid to believe that the subsequent evolution of Germany will go the Italian road; that Hitler will strengthen his domination step by step without serious resistance; that German Fascism will enjoy long years of domination. No, the further fate of National Socialism will have to be drawn from the analysis of the German and international conditions, and not from purely historical analogies. But this much is already evident: if, from September 1930 onwards, we demanded of the Communist International a short range policy in Germany, it is now necessary to work out a long range policy. Before the decisive battle is possible, the proletarian vanguard will have to reorient itself, that is to say, it will have to understand what has happened, distribute the responsibilities for the great historical defeat, trace out the new road, and in this manner regain confidence in itself.

The criminal role of the social democracy requires no commentary: the Communist International was created fourteen years ago precisely in order to snatch the proletariat from the demoralizing influence of the social democracy. If it has not succeeded up to the present time, if the German proletariat found itself impotent, disarmed and paralyzed at the moment of the greatest historical test, the direct and immediate blame falls upon the leadership of the post-Leninist Comintern. There is the first conclusion that must immediately be drawn.

Under the perfidious blows of the Stalinist bureaucracy, the Left Opposition maintained to the very end its fidelity to the official party. The Bolshevik-Leninists now share the fate of all the other Communist organizations: the militants of our cadres are arrested, our publications forbidden, our literature confiscated. Hitler even hurried to suspend the Bulletin of the Opposition appearing in the Russian language. But if, together with the whole proletarian vanguard, the Bolshevik-Leninists bear the consequences of the first serious victory of Fascism, they cannot and will not bear even a shadow of the responsibility for the official policy of the Comintern.

Since 1923, that is, since the beginning of the struggle against the Left Opposition, the Stalinist leadership, even if indirectly, assisted the social democracy with all its strength to derail, to befuddle, to enfeeble the German proletariat: it halted, it curbed the workers when the conditions dictated a courageous revolutionary offensive; it proclaimed the approach of the revolutionary situation when it had already passed it by; it worked up agreements with petty bourgeois phrasemongers and windbags; it limped impotently at the tail of the social democracy under cover of the policy of the united front; it proclaimed the "third period" and the struggle for the conquest of the streets under conditions of a political ebb and weakness of the Communist party; it replaced the serious struggle by leaps, adventures or parades; it isolated the Communists from the mass trade unions; it identified the social democracy with Fascism and rejected the united front with the mass workers' organizations in face of the aggressive bands of the National Socialists; it sabotaged the slightest initiative for the united front for local defense, at the same time it systematically deceived the workers as to the real relationship of forces, distorted the facts, passed off friends as enemies and enemies as friends—and drew the noose tighter and tighter around the neck of the party not permitting it to breathe freely any longer, nor to speak, nor to think.

Today, Thaelmann is arrested. Faced by the triumphant reaction, the Bolshevik-Leninists are in the same ranks as Thaelmann. But the policy of Thaelmann is the policy of Stalin, that is, the official policy of the Comintern. It is precisely this policy which is the cause of the complete demoralization of the party at the moment of danger, when the leaders lose their heads, when the party members, disaccustomed from thinking, fall prostrate, when the principal historic positions are surrendered without a fight. A false political theory bears within itself its own punishment. The strength and the obstinacy of the apparatus only augment the dimensions of the catastrophe.

Having surrendered to the enemy everything that could be surrendered in such a short space of time, the Stalinists are trying to rectify the past by means of convulsive acts which only increasingly clarify the whole chain of crimes committed by them. Now that the press of the Communist party is stifled, that the apparatus is destroyed, that the bloody pennant of Fascism waves with impunity over the Karl Liebknecht House, the Executive Committee of the Comintern is starting out on the road of the united front not only from below but also from above. The new zigzag, sharper than all that preceded it, has not, however, been effected under the impulsion of the Executive itself; the Stalinist bureaucracy has abandoned the initiative to the Second International. The latter has succeeded in taking hold of the weapon of the united front, of which it has been in mortal dread up to now. To the extent that it is possible to speak of political advantages under the conditions of a panicky retreat, they are to be found exclusively on the side of reformism. Forced to reply to a direct question, the Stalinist bureaucracy chose the worst way: it does not reject an entente of two Internationals, but neither does it accept it; it plays hide and seek. It has come to such a lack of self-confidence, to such degradation, that it no longer dares to show itself to the world proletarian face to face with the leaders of the Second International, the branded agents of the bourgeoisie, the electors of Hindenburg who blazed the trail of Fascism.

In a special appeal of the Executive on March 5: "To the Workers of All Countries," the Stalinists do not say a word about social Fascism as the main enemy. They no longer speak about the great discovery of their leader: "The social democracy and Fascism are not antipodes but twins." They no longer insist on saying that the struggle against Fascism demands as a preliminary the defeat of the social democracy. They do not breathe a word about the inadmissibility of the united front from above. On the contrary, they carefully enumerate those cases in the past where the Stalinist bureaucracy, unexpectedly for the workers and for itself, found itself forced to improvise proposals for the united front to the reformist socialists. Thus do artificial, false and chimerical theories found-er in the fury of the historical tempest.

"Taking into account the peculiarities of each country" and of the impossibility, which allegedly flows from them, of organizing the united front on an international scale (the struggle against "exceptionalism", that is, the theory of the light wingers on national peculiarities, is suddenly forgotten), the Stalinist bureaucracy recommends to the national Communist parties to address proposals for a united front to the "Central Committees of the social democratic parties". Only yesterday this was proclaimed a capitulation to social-Fascism! Thus do all the great lessons of Stalinism for the last four years fly under the table into the wastebasket. This is a whole political system reduced to dust.

Matters do not rest there: having declared for the moment the impossibility of the conditions for a united front on the international arena, the Executive immediately forgets it and no more than twenty lines further on it formulates the conditions under which the united front is admissible and acceptable in all countries, in spite of the difference in national conditions. The retreat, before Fascism is followed by a panic-stricken re-

(Continued on Page 4)

What of Rakovsky?

Stalin is still silent. No news from Christian Rakovsky. The embassies keep still. In spite of the numerous news items that have appeared in the press, the wreckers of the German revolution refuse to let go of their secret. IF THEY HAVE ASSASSINATED RAKOVSKY, THEY DO NOT DARE TO SAY SO. IF HE IS STILL ALIVE, THEY ARE AFRAID TO ADMIT IT. This fact alone gives the measure of their panic, their fear of the action of the Bolshevik-Leninists.

Let us speak frankly—By what right do the Stalinists complain that the Hitler embassy refuses to give out news of the fate of Thaelmann, WHEN THEY REFUSE TO SAY WHAT HAS HAPPENED TO CHRISTIAN RAKOVSKY? YES, in the name of what revolutionary conception?

Let us develop our campaign. THE CENTRISTS WILL HAVE TO ANSWER FOR THEIR PAST. RAISE THE QUESTION OF RAKOVSKY AT EVERY MEETING!

VICTOR SERGE ARRESTED

Victor-Serge has just been arrested in Leningrad. Once again, the Stalinist police is acting in the dark. It has been impossible for us up to now to obtain definite information as to his fate, nor the reasons for his arrest. Back in 1928 Victor-Serge was arrested, shortly after his expulsion from the party as an Oppositionist. After two months he was released, under the pressure of the campaign which was carried on at the time. Again we must rise up, demand an accounting, help our comrades who struggle in the vanguard against those who are preparing the ruin of the October Revolution.

RIAZANOV AND SMIRNOV ARE DEAD

N. Riazanov has just died in deportation, at Saratov, to which the vengeance of Stalin has exiled him. This Bolshevik, this Marxian scientist, underwent the fate of all the intransigent Communists who struggle against the Stalinist bureaucracy. He died at his post, as a faithful disciple of Marx and of Engels, in the service of whose ideas he had spent his life. Stalin did everything to shorten his life, for his purpose remains the same: TO DESTROY THE BOLSHEVIKS PHYSICALLY. After trying to defile Riazanov by implicating him in the "Menshevik trial", Stalin banished him under police constraint, chased him out of the Marx-Engels Institute which he had entirely organized and created. And Riazanov died in deportation, while Messrs. Rumin and Co. have again become free engineers at Magnitogorsk.

V. Smirnov, former leader of the old group of "Decists" (democratic centrists), who was close to the Opposition in the years 1926-1927, has also just died in exile.

And how many other revolutionary workers, how many of ours, are falling today, when more than ever their firmness, their experience are indispensable to the revolution.

A tenacious and persevering activity in support of our imprisoned and deported comrades is needed. We are at present considering the formation of a Relief Committee, about which we shall say more later.

Defend the Class War Fighters

SNEEVLIET UNDER ARREST

Comrade Sneeveliet, president of the NAS of Holland (revolutionary trade union organization), remains in prison, accused of conspiracy for the manifesto signed by him, appealing to the Dutch sailors to show their solidarity with the mutineers of The Seven Provinces. The Centrists have not mentioned this arrest in any one of their publications! The workers of Amsterdam have held enthusiastic demonstrations for his release. We declare our complete solidarity with the revolutionary action of comrade Sneeveliet and all those Communists hit by the terror for their support of the rebellious Indonesians.

SPAIN

Not a word from the IRA on Nin and Laoire.

The International Red Aid continues to maintain a shameful silence on the fate of our Spanish comrades, among whom are Nin and Laoire, persecuted for inciting the military to disobedience. The readers of the Militant will remember the vicious way in which these comrades were arrested by the "socialist" police and how they were, for weeks, held incommunicado with no reason given for their incarceration. We must also ask our comrades to recall that the Stalinists did not hesitate to call these and other of our comrades—counter-revolutionists. Speak up in your ILD branch and demand their immediate release. The ILD must be a genuine class defense organization and not a sectarian body for the defense of supporters of the official regime of Stalinism.

INDO-CHINA

For the Sending of a Workers Delegation!

The International Red Aid has slowly awakened to the case of the thousands of Indo-Chinese victims of French imperialism. But of course, they slander the imprisoned Left Opposition militancy. That does not prevent the bureaucrats from being forced to accept in its entirety our slogan, send a workers delegation to Indo-China.

Hitler and the Red Army

America has reproduced European capitalism on a grandiose scale, but it has reproduced European socialism only on an insignificant scale. American social democracy has never been anything but a caricature of European social democracy. This "law of uneven development" has also retained all its force so far as Stalinism is concerned. The CPUSA is weaker than any of the European parties yet the Stalinist bureaucracy in America carries out all the zigzags and all the mistakes with a fabulous exaggeration.

A year and a half ago, the Stalinists thought that an attack on the USSR by Japan was a matter of days, and on this "prognosis", dictated by the bourgeois press, they tried to base their whole policy. We on the contrary declared that, as long as it had not assimilated Manchuria, the danger of an attack by Japan was absolutely unlikely. The American Stalinists accused us in this connection of being in the service of the Japanese general staff. In general, these gentlemen draw their arguments from sewers and drain-pipes.

We declared furthermore that the danger of a Fascist victory in Germany—a danger for the world revolution and above all for the Soviet Union—was more real and more imminent than the danger of Japanese intervention. The European Stalinists shouted that we were "panic-stricken". The American Stalinists, more impudently, declared that we were consciously aiming to distract the attention of the world proletariat from the imminent danger in the East to the Soviet Union. The events brought their verification.

For a year and a half, the "imminent" Japanese aggression has failed to take place (obviously this does not mean that the danger of Japanese intervention does not exist in general). During this time, Hitler has come to power and, with a few blows, has defeated the principal ally of the USSR, the German Communist Party, weakened in advance by the lies and the falsity of Stalinism.

A year and a half ago, we wrote that the Red Army, in its principal mass, ought to turn its face to the West to have the possibility of smashing Fascism before it can destroy the German proletariat and unite with European and world imperialism. In answer to this, the American Stalinists, the most stupid and impudent of all, declared that we wanted to drag the USSR into a war, interrupt its economic upbuilding and assure the victory of imperialism. The old fable says that nothing is so dangerous as an ignorant friend. To appeal for military actions against Japan while there was not and could not be an immediate danger in that direction, meant to distract attention from the real danger of Fascism. Obviously the Stalinists carried out this task,

(Continued on Page 4)

Stalinists Beat Up Oppositionists

On Sunday, April 2, a group of members of the Spartacus Youth Club went to distribute Young Spartacus and the Militant to the New York District membership meeting of the YCL held at Stuyvesant Casino. Our comrades waited until the intermission period, and as the YCLers came out, we started to give out copies of our papers. We had distributed some two dozen copies when a couple of the "leaders" came down and began to tell us that we were not to be allowed to distribute here. We tried to discuss in a comradely manner, asking them what valid reason there could be for attempting to prohibit this. The best way to understand the viewpoint of any organization is to read and study what they propose. This was and is the only way in which any young Communist can hope to combat the ideologies which are alien to the interests of the working class—by analyzing them.

Several of them, however, whom we have met before, of the fanatical type, refused to discuss with us at all. "We have instructions to prevent any distribution," one of them stated, "and if you continue you will suffer the consequences!" Meanwhile a "strong" squad had been organized up stairs by the bureaucrats in the membership meeting and they now came hurrying down the stairs. We had been pushed away from the entrance and now without any warning they began to rip the papers from our arms. Working themselves into a fury, the young specimens of Stalinist argumentation launched into an attack upon our comrades. Outnumbered many times and with papers under our

(Continued on Page 3)

New Organ of German Left

The first issue of the new paper of the German section of the International Left Opposition has just been received here. It is called Unser Wort, and is published in Prague. Hitler has apparently not been told that this is a counter-revolutionary organization, and has therefore banned the former publication of the German Left Opposition, Die Permanente Revolution until May 31, without any prospect that it will be permitted to resume.

It will be recalled that according to the Stalinist press, the German section of the Left Opposition capitulated to the official party and was liquidated shortly before Hitler took power. The new paper is the best proof of the vitality of the Opposition in Germany. It contains an analysis of the perspectives of Communism under the present regime in Germany, letters from German workers and comrades Trotsky's "Talk with a Social Democratic Worker".

In accordance with the decision of the International Conference of the Left Opposition, all members have been asked to contribute a day's pay for the specific purpose of helping the German section. This money should be raised as quickly as possible so that it can be transmitted at once, in view of the vital and urgent needs of the German Opposition and the enormous tasks which now face it. The American League has set itself the quota of two hundred dollars to be raised for our comrades in Germany and their work, and we appeal to all friends of the Opposition to help us reach the quota as soon as possible.

2nd Gillespie Meeting

Conference Again Rejects New Federation Plan

Gillespie, Ill.—The April 2 conference called by the Gillespie Trades and Labor Assembly adjourned, adopting a policy of coordinating the work of the Left within the A. F. L. with the work of building new industrial unions from the unorganized workers. The conference adopted the name of "Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee". It was attended by 164 delegates, representing 26 organizations, with the Progressive Miners of America having 61 delegates, and the Unemployed Councils 30 delegates. The rest of the delegates were from AFL, IOWA and some independent unions and several TUUL groups. The workers' political organizations represented with fraternal delegates were the Communist League of America (Opposition), the Young Spartacus League and the Young Peoples Socialist League.

The highlights of the conference were the struggle between the delegates who wanted a new federation of labor and those who wanted an educational committee; by the fact that the Progressive Miners of America were the solid backbone of the conference, the heavy work on the floor for a correct policy carried on by a group of delegates around delegates Fraser and Steed of the Progressive Miners and the policies of the Left Opposition were vindicated 100 percent; and the action of the TUUL delegates and the Stalinists who had the largest caucus present, but had to trail behind the policies of the Left Opposition and the militant miners. One thing can be said for the Stalinists. With their new turn, they are doing far better than before, they are learning to work with other forces, they are learning how to retreat as well as advance but are still very clumsy and antagonized a considerable number of delegates and left a bad taste in the mouths of many delegates when the conference adjourned.

The report of the policy committee brought out the different tendencies at the conference and the main struggle of the day's proceedings. After reaffirming the policy of the previous conference, Weber, for the policy committee, read three proposals introduced by delegate Fraser as follows:

Policy Committee Proposals

1. The response to the initiative of the Gillespie Trade and Labor Council, as indicated by this conference representation, shows that a sufficient basis for the creation of a new federation of labor is lacking and therefore this conference definitely rejects this project.

2. Due to the limited and sectional character of this conference we cannot at the present time form a permanent organization. Such an organization of the Left and progressive forces on a national scale is a perspective to be aimed at. The three conferences at Gillespie have taken the initiative and prepared the ground for one that will eventually develop upon a broader national scale through cooperation of all Left wing and progressive forces.

3. The conference goes on record as recommending the program of January 29 session to the consideration of the workers who are struggling for the regeneration of the labor movement and its liberation from reactionary policies and leadership. This conference decides upon the continuation as a committee to keep in touch with sympathetic trade union bodies and will be ready to act jointly with them in the preparation of a broader conference on a national scale.

Around point one of these proposals the conference almost split. The "new federationists" were insistent, but finally the motion passed with an amendment by delegate Lore. The amendment said we continue as an organization to carry on work in the trade unions and independent unions. These delegates aimed their amendment to the tail of that organization,

(Continued on Page 2)

OPEN FORUM

The Tragedy of the German Proletariat

SHOULD A NEW COMMUNIST PARTY BE ORGANIZED IN GERMANY?
Speaker:
MAX SHACHTMAN

International Workers School Hall
126 East 16th Street

Sunday, April 9, 1933, 8 P. M.

ADMISSION: 15 Cents
Sponsors: N. Y. Branch, Communist League of America (Opposition)

ation of the tendencies within the Progressive Miners of America, the second article on the German situation by Sam O'ordon, a reply to the second article of the Lovestone group in attacking the stand of the Left Opposition on the German question, etc., etc. We have been forced also to omit from this number the continuation of comrade Trotsky's article which began in the last issue (A Talk with a Socialist Worker). The next issue will publish it in all likelihood, together with a new article by Trotsky on the threatening situation in Austria, which is gaining in significance every day.

Friday April 21, 1933 at 8 p. m.

IRVING PLAZA HALL 15 St. & Irving Pl.

SPRING DANCE & FESTIVAL

for the Benefit of 'THE MILITANT'

Jazz Orchestra - Songs - Other Features

Sponsors: New York Branch Communist League of America (Opposition) and Protonagla Club.

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

The Stalinist Shift To the Right

The second session of the Congress Organization Committee of the New York United Front Free Tom Mooney Conference revealed that the turn of the party on the united front is showing a dangerous drift to the right. Palmer of the Federated Press, chairman of the committee, reported the following: Some time between the first and second sessions a little informal meeting took place in Palmer's office. There were present two members of the Communist Party, Muste of the CPUSA, and Palmer. They called Norman Thomas on the phone to discuss with him the question of drawing the S. P. into the Mooney movement.

Dicker with Thomas

Politically this meant that they were asking Thomas to lay down the conditions on which the S. P. would participate. Thomas, according to the report, pledged himself personally to work for the participation of the S. P. on the basis of a management committee for the National Congress to be held in Chicago, consisting of representatives of the C. P., S. P., I.L.D., U.I.W., five trade unionists, and three liberals. This unofficial arrangement was submitted to Mooney for his approval. He wired back adding two representatives of the Mooney Molders' Defense Committee.

The Left Opposition immediately demanded that the entire proceedings be made public and that all future negotiations be conducted openly before the entire working class. This demand provoked a discussion. The discussion revealed much confusion on the part of the Stalinists who are in control of the Committee. Politically the discussion revolved around the united front. The feeble attempts of the Molders' Defense representatives to settle the matter on a legal-technical basis were simply brushed aside. It was obvious that the question could not be discussed aside from its political essence. The Stalinists gave their political interpretation a Rightist content. They refused to put the conference on record against the slanderous attack on the Chicago Congress by the Labor Committee of the Socialist Party. This statement, issued on March 24, says that the Communists use the Congress as a tool to wreck other working class organizations. Left Action. Muste's organ quotes the statement without comment, though it is an active participant in the conference and probably will be in the Chicago Congress.

Winter, Nessin, Moore, Ballam united to hamstring the attempt to make the negotiations public. They so qualified the conference pronouncements that what will be issued will omit the essential facts given above and give a highly distorted picture of the proceedings.

It has come to this. Yesterday our Stalinist masters of revolutionary strategy and tactics shouted down the wind that we could make no united front with the "social fascist leaders". Today they are beginning to crawl on all fours before these treacherous fakery. They are trying to prove to the Thomases that they are good Communists! They are in full flight from the ultra-Leftism of yesterday. And they bow down before the old idol of Right opportunism!

Bureaucrats Fall Out

In the discussion Winter and Nessin once more took different stands. Nessin again advocated a Rightist position. Winter's role is becoming clearer. He is carried along in the Right drift. His job is to put a plausible face on the thing. His proposals are designed to make it possible to point to efforts made for a genuine united front. This may fool some for a time but as the party swings further to the right this false face artist will be assigned other chores.

Ballam poured oil on the troubled waters and evoked the anger of Moore. It is a pitiable sight to see these bureaucrats fall out among themselves. How sharp must be the fight in the party if it is carried out into the open at every meeting! Why is it confined to the top? Why isn't the party membership allowed to participate in the discussions? Why is there no discussion in the party press?

The Stalinist bureaucracy cannot allow the party membership to intervene in its disputes. That would be disastrous for its position and prestige. So it maneuvers desperately to retain its weakening grip on the party. But its base is narrowing and the day of reckoning is approaching. Then as now the Left Opposition will know how to act to build the party shoulder to shoulder with the party membership.

—T. STAMM.

Communism and Syndicalism

by LEON TROTSKY

Some fundamental considerations on the relation of the party to the trade union movement with particular reference to the experiences of the French labor movement. . . . 15 cents

Pioneer Publishers
84 East 10th Street, New York.

Chicago Meet Adopts Joint Protest

Chicago.—The mass meeting on the German situation held by the Chicago branch of the Communist League, proved to be a great success. Over two hundred workers gathered at Redifer Hall on March 26, to hear the position of the Left Opposition on the united front and the turn of the Communist International, presented by comrade Albert Grotzer.

The main feature of the meeting was the discussion that followed Grotzer's speech. An invitation was extended to any party representative in the hall to take the floor and present the position of the party. One active party member, Hans Pfeiffer was given twenty minutes in which to present the position of the party and to defend its line. His remarks only further strengthened the position of the I. L. O. But he made a plea for the unity of the Communist forces, and declared that he would investigate the charges of violence against members of the Left Opposition and protest such methods of solving disputes between Communists. As an active member of the Unemployed Councils he extended a public invitation to the Opposition to participate in the State Hunger March; an invitation that was at once accepted by the Chicago organization.

In the course of the discussion a resolution on the German situation was presented by a member of the Chicago Left Opposition, who proposed its adoption and suggested further that the resolution be sent to the German consulate and the Daily Worker and Militant for publication. This proposal was carried unanimously with an amendment that a committee elected by the mass meeting go over the resolution before sending it out. As a reflection of the sentiment of the meeting a committee was elected representing the Communist party, the Left Opposition and the Spartacus Youth Club. The party was represented by comrade Hans Pfeiffer (an aldermanic candidate who drew 1100 votes in his ward) and Norval Allen, a Negro comrade. They met together with Joe Giganti and Al Grotzer of the Left Opposition, and Nathan Gould of the Spartacus Youth Club.

The resolution signed by the committee elected by the mass meeting represents further evidence of breaking down the walls between the party members and the Left Opposition. It signifies that the campaign on German has not been in vain; that it has penetrated the ranks of the class-conscious workers. The bankruptcy of the line of Stalinism becomes more and more evident in the course of the active life of the movement.

Resolution Adopted

Approximately 200 workers, representing various revolutionary tendencies, gathered in mass meeting to discuss the German situation at Redifer Hall, 30 North Wells Street, in Chicago, on Sunday, March 26th, 1933, under the auspices of the Communist League of America (Opposition), record their strenuous protest against the Fascist terror reigning in Germany today against the proletariat of that country and its revolutionary leadership, the Communist party and the Young Communist League, also against the terror inaugurated against the class conscious working masses in the social democratic party and the trade unions that are struggling against Fascism.

The German bourgeoisie through its henchmen, Hitler and the National Socialists have been persistently attacking the German proletariat.

Today, aside from the hundreds and thousands whose "heads have rolled in the sand" following the attacks of the Fascist forces, thousands of leaders and members of the Communist party are rotting in the Fascist dungeons and undergoing tortures paralleled only by that of the medieval period.

Comrades Thaelmann, Torgler, Meck and Remmele, the leaders of the Communist Party of Germany are in prison. Direct information as to their condition is not available. But that they are victims of the "mustard-rub" and the "castor-oil" has already leaked out.

In this regard, we assembled in mass meeting today, protest and demand the immediate cessation of the murder and torture of the German working class and its leaders by the Fascists.

We demand the immediate release of comrade Thaelmann and other leaders of the German Communist movement.

We demand the release of all victims of Fascism notwithstanding their political tendencies.

Forward to the revolutionary united front of the working class organizations against Fascism!

For the defense of the German working class against Fascist attacks!

For the proletarian revolution in Germany.

Submitted by the Communist League of America (Opposition) Signed The Committee elected by the meeting.

HANS PFEIFFER, member of the Communist Party of America. NATHAN GOULD, member of the Spartacus Youth Club of Chicago.

JOE GIGANTI, member of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition).

NORVAL ALLEN, member of the Communist Party of America.

ALBERT GROTZER, member of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition).

A "United Front" At Any Price

Davenport, Iowa.—A united front conference was called for March 27, 1933 by the official party. The conference was called a united front action against hunger. Again the party has shown how it zig-zags from one extreme to another. I am going to give a review of this conference as it is of great importance to the workers, not only in the Tri-Cities but throughout the entire country. According to the number of delegates that voted there must have been 72 delegates. There were many local unions represented with the Tri-City Federation of Labor also officially represented.

While the Resolutions Committee was meeting Tony Minerich, representing the state anti-hunger march committee, was seated as a delegate and spoke for one hour. The pitiful part of Minerich's speech was that he actually said nothing of interest outside of stressing the united front at all costs and making a bid for unity with the leaders of the Federation of Labor in the Tri-Cities at all costs.

After that a general discussion took place with several workers participating. Much confusion existed. The representative of the Left Opposition spoke presenting the policy of the Left Opposition the name of the branch.

During the morning session the Credentials Committee tried to side-track the seating of the Left Opposition delegate by hemming as to the name of the organization and by announcing that it has only ten members so it is a question of whether it should have a right to a seat or not. But upon a slight insistence when it came to voting the delegate was recognized. This had the full right of the floor to the discomfort of the party leaders. The party itself was officially not represented, but its leaders were delegates from the Unemployed Council, and other party auxiliaries, some of them not even existing.

Rank Stalinist Opportunism

After the discussion, the Resolutions Committee reported. Wilson was the reporter, bringing in a resolution against intimidation of workers and against forced labor which was adopted unanimously. A resolution to endorse the state hunger march in Illinois on April 7 was also adopted by the conference. Then a resolution on investigation of the conditions of the unemployed and to bring in suggestions as to remedies and to deal with unemployment generally was brought in, with clauses in the resolution that one Catholic, one Jew, one Protestant, one Chamber of Commerce, one Retail Merchant Association, one Unemployed Council, one Federation of Labor be represented on this committee to investigate these conditions. A healthy reaction on the part of the delegates was immediately had, and on a motion of one of the trade unionists the resolution was voted on paragraph by paragraph. The paragraph which dealt with the Chamber of Commerce and the Retail Merchants Association came in for quite a discussion. On the motion of the delegate from the Left Opposition, seconded by several in the hall, it was moved to strike-out the Chamber of Commerce and the Retail Merchants Association. A discussion took place where Left wingers after Left wingers, party members and sympathizers and some trade unionists opposed the adoption of the paragraph, with the reactionary leaders of the A. F. of L. fighting for its adoption, with the delegate of the Left Opposition taking the lead against its adoption.

It looked as if the paragraph would be rejected by the conference when Jack Wilson, the party organizer, made the closing speech which lined up the party and its followers who spoke against its adoption but who voted for it after the speech of Jack Wilson, with only the vote of the Left Opposition against it.

Then the next resolution on Germany, against Hitlerism and Fascism was recommended not to be adopted as it didn't concern the workers of Rock Island County and was turned down by the conference with only the vote of the Left Opposition against turning it down. This was the statement of party representatives.

The Tom Mooney resolution was also brought up without recommendation by the resolutions committee and here again the Left Opposition, through its delegate, made a motion to adopt the resolution. The reactionaries made a fight against the adoption through making an amendment. The gathering fairly rocked as the struggle for the resolution was put up, and in a very sharp talk the representative of the Left Opposition made his position clear, not only on the German resolution which dealt with the German situation, but pointing out that it would be an actual betrayal if this resolution was voted down. This forced the party through Jack Wilson to come out in favor of the resolution.

Then a compromise was made not to elect a delegate from the conference but to endorse the resolution and recommend it for favorable action to the local unions and the organizations represented at the conference.

The Party has gone from one extreme of no united front to united front at all costs. It may be asked "What price united front?"

The Right wing of the party can be seen by the actions taken at the conference. The party tried to hide its face even to the point of not sending official delegates. Nobody spoke officially in the name of the party. Not one criticism

International Workers' School

AMERICAN HISTORY

A Series of Lectures, by JACK WEBER
Given Every Monday, at 8 P. M.

- April 8. European Background of American History
- April 10. The Period of Colonization
- April 17. The American Revolution
- April 24. The Bourgeoisie coup d'Etat—the Constitution
- May 1. Economic Development up to the Civil War
- May 8. The Frontier and Its Influence
- May 15. The Civil War—the Conflict between Opposed Economic Systems
- May 22. The Reconstruction Period
- May 29. Agrarian Movements
- June 5. The Early Labor Movement
- June 12. The Modern Labor Movement
- June 19. American Imperialism

Outlines of each lecture and references will be given to all students.
THE HISTORY AND PRINCIPLES OF THE INTERNATIONAL LEFT OPPOSITION

A Series of Lectures by Max Shachtman, Editor of the Militant
Four sessions have already been held on the following topics: The Fight for Party Democracy; "The New Course" by Leon Trotsky; The Defeat of the German Revolution, 1923—"The Lessons of October" by Leon Trotsky; The Opposition Program for Industrialization. The Left Opposition Program for Collectivization. The Anglo-Russian Committee. The Chinese Revolution of 1925-1927.

The sessions are held on WEDNESDAYS, at 8 P. M.

The Second Gillespie Conference

(Continued from Page 1)

but behind this motion the "new federalists" rallied against the combined forces of the other delegates.

After these motions passed the policy committee recommended that the conference endorse the TULU conference in Detroit in September and send fraternal delegates. They read off the entire agenda. The Stalinists saw no inconsistency in opposing a new federation along with the Left Opposition and other Left wing delegates, but at the same time asking the conference to endorse the TULU conference. This gave ammunition to the Right wing elements and those who had just advocated a new federation, and they used it effectively. The spirit of the conference went down a few notches. When delegate Fraser obtained the floor he moved that we cooperate and send fraternal delegates, and pointed out why we should not endorse. The Stalinists compromised and agreed to this and it carried by 107 for and 15 opposed, but only after much harm had already been done.

Next the policy committee asked for 15 fraternal delegates and again the opposition forces made hay. But again, when delegate Fraser could obtain the floor, he moved that we send three delegates. Again the TULU supporters compromised and this motion also carried by an overwhelming majority.

Later they elected the fraternal delegates to the TULU conference. Five were nominated and all unanimously elected. The delegates are: Hugo Oehler, Sol Leckie, Hank Mayer, J. Cronkin and Hines. The conference unanimously passed resolutions in favor of the Franklin County strikers; Taylorville frame-up victims; and for mass pressure; Mooney; and also elected delegates to attend the Chicago conference; for the Springfield Hunger March and for the release of Minerich and others who were arrested; for the Scottsboro boys and against the danger of Fascism in Germany.

Another motion was passed to set up a joint committee of action with the TULU to carry on work in different areas. This is putting the cart before the horse and making a mechanical caricature out of the motion quoted above. United front action of such bodies must spring out of concrete struggles and not mechanical paper organizations. The established here and there. All through the conference a struggle had to be put up against the new "federalists" on the one hand, and the Stalinists who desired to hurry the process of development; and with their wrong tactics shifted the conference toward a new federation under the arm of TULU. Between these two forces flirting dangerously with a new federation, the young committee received some hard knocks.

The Stalinist Proposal

Another struggle developed over the motion presented by the Right wing socialists who asked for the endorsement and sending of delegates to the "Continental Congress of Workers and Farmers for Economic Reconstruction" to be held in Washington, which is not a united front and has excluded all Left wing and Communist forces. The Congress is a political rallying center for reformism against the revolutionists and class conscious workers and is to be used as an anti-Communist rally. Our delegates opposed this and pointed out what is meant, recommending that first a working class organization be invited, and if not, we do not send delegates. The Left wing socialists and other class conscious workers supported this proposal. The TULU delegates, the Stalinists and Gerry Allard supported the motion to send two delegates against the above recommendations. The motion to send two delegates was carried and Weber and Allard were elected.

At the beginning of the conference a delegate from Georgia farmers had a proposal to tax the capitalists out of existence. The resolution was read and motion to endorse carried without the Stalinists saying a word.

A New Executive Committee was elected giving the miners the largest delegation. The Left Opposition gave Young Spartacus League were given the right to put representation on the Executive. The was made of the reactionaries. All compromises were made in favor of the leaders of the A. F. of L.

—GEO. J. PAPCUN.

(Continued from Page 1)

delegates from the Left Opposition declined, stating that we welcome the attitude of the conference and that there is no political discrimination here and hope this will continue to enable working class political organizations to send fraternal delegates, but if we go on the executive, our members will be elected through the different unions they represent.

The new committee received some hard blows from the "new federalists" and the blunders of Stalinism at the conference and although it crippled the work there are still sufficient signs of strong militant life, that it can grow to be a force if a correct policy is applied.

—HUGO OEHLER.

The Kincaid Trial

(Continued from Page 1)

of terror against the PMA miners, killing, raping, kidnapping, smashing the union's relief stations, bombing workers' homes, beating up progressive miners.

Evidence Proves Frame-Up
The three main witnesses of the state are Peabody men and the evidence consists of contradictory and frame-up material. But this does not mean we have "practically won" the case. Two doctors testifying for the state contradict each other on the shooting of the mine boss who was killed. One says the bullet came from the rear and the other said the shot was fired from the front. Another Peabody witness says he saw Mattozo with a sub-machine gun, while another says the defendant had a rifle. Further contradictions in the testimony of the Peabody witnesses were brought to the surface. One says that Smith who was in the car with the mine boss, fired at the relief station over his left shoulder while Smith says he fired ahead. The mine boss who was killed, was seated in the back seat of the same car.

It is a clear case of frame-up but this does not prove that Peabody is losing. They had a slimy case against Mooney and countless other class war prisoners and yet these men were sentenced. The workers must not leave the case in the hands of the courts controlled by the Peabody Coal Company.

We must use all legal means at our disposal but under and around these necessary defense measures a powerful mass movement of the American workers must be organized to fight for the release of the frame-up Kincaid miners on trial at Taylorville.

—HUGO OEHLER.

Stalinists and the Upholsterers

The attention of the entire New York movement should be called to the latest example of how not to make the united front and the consequences. The scene is the Furniture Workers Industrial Union of the TULU. On February 16, this union took the initiative and called a shop ("united front") conference consisting of workers from a number of shops, union and non union, for the purpose of devising ways and means of effecting the unity of the entire trade into a single militant union. At the conference a Unity Committee of 32 was elected to carry out the ideas of the conference, namely: (1) the organization of united shop committees to fight against wage cuts and layoffs and (2) the organization of one strong union in the upholstery trade.

A sub-committee of 12 was also elected to visit the membership meeting of Local 70 of the UIU of the A. F. of L. They were to ask for the endorsement of a printed leaflet calling for the unity of the trade. The leaflet called on all upholsterers in the shops to unite regardless of union affiliations, to organize shop committees and to fight wage cuts and layoffs.

It passes human understanding, or just plain common sense why a committee from the A. F. of L. union was not invited to participate in the preparations. How can a union man or sympathizer understand that we are really fighting for unity when we fly in the face of this simple organization procedure? So intimidated are the Stalinist union functionaries by "social-fascism" that it was with the greatest difficulty that they could be induced even to SEND the leaflet to the union itself, that is to say, to the secretary of the

(Continued on Page 3)

Huan Ping and Chen Du-Siu

Fresh in the memory of all readers is the despicable role played by the official Stalinist press in connection with the arrest and imprisonment of our comrade Chen Du-Siu, leader of the Chinese Left Opposition. This founder of the Chinese Communist movement, and the leader of the party during the whole of the revolutionary period, was the special object of Stalinist hatred because he honestly acknowledged the role he had played in the Chinese revolution and revealed at the same time that this was to be attributed to the fundamentally false and Menshevik policy of the Comintern. At the time of his arrest, the Stalinist journals all over the world could scarcely contain themselves with joy. Instead of helping arouse the spirit of solidarity of the workers to save comrade Chen from the imprisonment and execution at the hands of the Kuo Min Tang butchers with which he was threatened, the Stalinists hastened to assure all and sundry that Chen was an agent of the Kuo Min Tang!

Comrade Chen is still imprisoned, and no news about him can be obtained. But only a short while after his arrest, took place the arrest of one of the official party leaders, Huan Ping, "Commissar of Foreign Affairs" of the short-lived Canton Soviet of 1927. In this instance, the case was made the subject for an international agitation. In this protest movement, of course, the party was only doing its elementary duty, in which they were criminally remiss with regard to the arrest of comrade Chen Du-Siu, and are so to this day.

Now we receive the news from a Left Oppositionist in Shanghai that while comrade Chen's fate continues to remain unknown, Huan Ping, like so many Stalinists before him, has turned renegade and joined the Kuo Min Tang—thus escaping from the fate which the counter-revolution held in store for him!

The organ of the Left Kuo Min Tangist, Wang Chin Wei, the People's Tribune of February 16, 1933, prints a sensational article by Huan Ping—"Why I Left the Communist Party". In this article, the renegade repudiates his whole Communist past, "exposes" the Communist International and the Chinese party and announces that "as a result of my conversion to the Kuo Min Tang, I was thus released, together with comrades Yu Pei and Hsu Shih-Keng, who have also come to the same conclusions." Yu Pei was nothing less than Chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and Hsu a member of the presidium of the Communist International and head of the red trade unions of Shanghai. "It is essential," concludes the turncoat, "before anything constructive can be undertaken, that the Communist movement, which in many respects is hardly distinguishable from common banditry, be completely suppressed. It was in order to assist the National Government in this campaign, and also to rectify my past errors, that I, together with comrades Yu Pei and Hsu Shih-Keng, have left the Communist party, and will strive, under the banner of the Kuo Min Tang, for the attainment of the goal which I have always had in view—the betterment of the conditions of the Chinese workers and peasants."

Like Bessedovsky and other creatures of Stalinism, Huan Ping was a mighty Trotsky-Killer before he jumped over the fence into the camp of the reaction. The bureaucratic regime in the Comintern trains up such types, whose only qualifications for leadership are their servility to the apparatus, a willingness to be made the scapegoat for the blunders of their superiors in the machine, a cynical ever-readiness to sign statements "to rectify my past errors" unquestioning obedience to which all careerists, adventurers and spineless place-hunters are able to adjust themselves. The genuine revolutionists, who think for themselves and have the courage to express unpopular opinions and defend them—are expelled from the party and consigned to the category of counter-revolutionists. Therein lies the essence of explanation of how the Chen Du-Sius could be expelled from the party, baited by the bureaucracy and left in the lurch when attacked by the class enemy, while the Huan Pings could rise to leadership, be defended by the bureaucracy and, having been trained in the school of irresponsibility, betray the revolution at a crucial moment.

The communication from our Shanghai correspondent, which contains some very interesting information, will be found below.

Shanghai.—The Japanese drive into Jehol is now in full swing. The Chinese defenders have been collected before the first onslaughts, although there has been some fierce fighting. A combination of circumstances has acted to compel the Nanking Government and its cohorts in the North to make at least a show of resistance to this latest Japanese advance. There is no official sincerity. Nanking has no desire to fight and is putting up nothing more than a show, wantonly sacrificing the lives of countless Chinese soldiers in a struggle it does not take seriously. This lack of seriousness is sufficiently indicated by the fact that not a single airplane has been sent into Jehol to aid the Chinese defenders, while the Japanese are reported to be using over 100 bombers. The Nanking Government reserves its airplanes for bombing re-

Meanwhile Huan Ping was taken to Nanking and there are reasons for believing that he has ratted to the Kuo Min Tang. It is reliably reported that he is living in a private residence in Nanking under surveillance, since the government is not satisfied as to the genuineness of his conversion to Kuo Min Tang principles. But that he is alive and not in jail is definitely known.

Whether reports of Huan Ping having become converted to Kuo Min Tang principles as a result of his arrest are reliable or not, the fact is there have been so many such "conversions" of late that one sounds quite credible. However, a statement entitled "Why I Left the Communist Party", which seems to bear the stamp of authenticity, and purportedly written by Huan Ping, appears in the February 16 issue of the People's Tribune, organ of the Kuo Min Tang "Leftist". Wang Chin Wei, I enclose this article for your information and use. It speaks for itself.

February 28, 1933 —ROBERT.

All comrades and readers of the Militant are requested to help us build up as large as possible a section of the paper devoted to the life and work of the Left Opposition branches throughout the country and events in the class struggle. Report your activities! But bear in mind the limitations of space. Reports should be brief and to the point and as sparing as possible. Every comrade should feel himself a part of the paper and its contents, so that the Militant may accurately reflect the work and progress.

★ WITH THE SPARTACUS YOUTH MOVEMENT ★

Hathaway Before Y.C.L. Membership

The speech of C. A. Hathaway, party district organizer at the New York Y. G. L. membership meeting Sunday, April 2, was an outline much the same as the one he delivered at the recent party membership meeting.

Hathaway has had two weeks in which to dig up new quotations and arguments. Therefore it took four and a half instead of two hours to clarify the YCLers on the united front.

After an hour and a half on the banking crisis which he does not yet understand, Hathaway came to Germany. First, by a flood of quotations from the 11th and 12th Plenums of the ECCI he proved that the question of Hitler's coming to power was not a matter for the YCL. As the forces of revolution rise, the forces of counter-revolution come to a head. Hathaway, therefore, concluded that the coming of Fascism into power is a necessary prelude to the proletarian revolution, and not a vital danger to the working class.

He remarked that in Italy and in Poland, Communist parties still exist and carry on activities. He regarded the fact that the German party is putting out an illegal paper as a proof that the party could adapt itself successfully to Hitler's tactics.

But already the Nazis admit that there are 8,000 held in their concentration camps, and Dutch Communists put the number at 80,000. Daily the German party loses its best members drop out, discouraged or terrorized. If Fascism can consolidate its power, the German party will be only a tiny nucleus, all hopes of immediate revolution lost. And Hathaway maintained that the party can function under Hitler without serious losses!

Hathaway, as a good Stalinist, could not admit that there is a revolutionary crisis in Germany, and that if the party does not or can not act it will suffer practical annihilation. Instead Hathaway took refuge in false sentimentalities and still false hopes. His "The party is still fighting," sounds very much like a Communist equivalent for the New Leader's jubilation after the German elections, "The Iron Front stands like a rock."

Finally Hathaway got to the united front, and here the finest results of his two weeks' research were revealed. The first was his argument to prove that there has been no change in the basic position of the Comintern on the united front. There are three forms of the united front, the united front from below, the united front with the reformist leadership, and the intermediate form of united front with the leadership and rank and file. The united front with the reformist leadership was practiced until 1927 when the Anglo-Russian Trade Union Committee was dissolved—what this led to Hathaway omitted to say! Then at the 6th Congress of the Comintern it was discovered that the social democrats had become the ruling parties, and hence any united front with their leadership was impossible, a betrayal of the proletarian revolution. But now the social democratic parties are again in opposition, and so a united front with the leadership is again possible.

He forgot to mention that in 1917 the Bolsheviks entered into a united front with the Mensheviks and the Social Revolutionaries, who constituted the provisional government against Kornilov. He forgot to say that the Anglo-Russian Committee united fronted to the betrayal of the general strike. He forgot all the blunders the Stalinists made in the united front from above. No—in 1928 the C. I. discovered the social democratic party was in a bourgeois government. That's the whole explanation of the turn!

Hathaway's next argument was equally ingenious. The Trotskyists, he stated, believe that there are only minor differences between the social democrats and the Communists. Therefore they feel that criticism in a united front is useful, because they hope that thereby the social democracy will be reformed. But we real Communists (i. e. Stalinists) know that there can never be a real united front with the social Fascists. Therefore the better to expose them, and the better to show our sincerity in making the united front call, we offer to refrain from criticism of the social democrats during the united front action!

This miserable rationalization is either a denial of the possibility of the united front, or else it is a camouflage for such united fronts as that in China where the C. P. entered and merged in the Kuomintang. Without Communist criticism betrayals such as that by the Trade Union leaders are inevitable. By criticism we can loosen the hold of the reformists upon the masses, and by our acts we can make these masses accept Communism. The masses of Russia, just as the masses of Russia, came to accept the Bolsheviks.

This four and a half hour speech, filled with confusion, contradictions and outright mis-statements was supposed to clarify YCLers, many of whom are so new in the movement that they do not even know the previous united front from below policies, and have almost no idea of Communist history. Is it to be wondered that they were still confused when they left the hall? Is it to be wondered that even the Stalinist bureaucrats themselves bewail the low political level of the Y. C. L.?

A YCLer.

N. Y. YOUTH CLUB SOCIAL. The New York Spartacus Youth Club will hold an affair for the Young Spartacus Saturday evening, April 8th, at 126 East 16th Street. There will be dancing, entertainment and refreshments. All comrades are urged to attend.

YCL OFFERS UNITED FRONT

In line with the turn of the Communist party and Young Communist League, comrade Helen North, in the name of downtown section of the YCL, appeared before the Spartacus Youth Club meeting of March 30th and asked the Club to elect delegates to a preliminary conference for youth unemployment relief to be held April 9th. She stated that all youth groups, clubs and Yipsels circles in the neighborhood were being approached for this Conference.

Comrade Bill Dansker, chairman of the meeting, greeted the offer of the YCL and pledged the wholehearted cooperation of the Spartacus Youth Club.

This is the first time that the YCL has officially appealed to any section of the Left Opposition for a united front. It is not merely a result of the new policy of the official party but also a sign of the growing influence of the Left Opposition in the Young Communist League.

The Morale of the Russian Proletarian Youth

It is difficult to speak about the morale of the youth. Among the young people there is a process of differentiation going on all the time. One section is evolving to the side of the opposition but it remains dissatisfied with critical discussions only, and demands action and organizational formalities. However, many are frightened by the experiences of opposition in the past, and therefore, although fully aware of the seriousness of the entire situation, they seek for some other new way out. For the last period, there has begun an increasing influx to the Left Opposition of new people who were never before sympathetic to us. Thus, for instance, recently I had the occasion to meet some youngsters from the N—, a printing plant; in the past, they answered all objections with the reply, "You'll show me!" but now one of them took the floor at a party meeting and announced that "the opposition was correct on many points, and it was time to take stock of the past." Another comrade (from the same place) left the party and to all objections to the effect that his attitude was wrong and no method of political struggle, he replied, "I refuse to bear responsibility for the struggling of the party and of the working class." Both were expelled from the party and fired from their jobs. Another section of the youth seeks its way out of all that is occurring by switching over to another track, chiefly, to study in science is the only genuine salvation from all political intrigues.

Thus, for instance, one of the workers in the Control Commission of the Ukrainian Regional Commissariat of Agriculture, apropos of the expulsion of a number of youngsters said, "I agreed with them in a great deal, but if I don't do the expelling, I'll be expelled myself." And, continuing the conversation, he added, "If I thought I would be permitted to finish the university course, I'd leave party. I'm tired of all these interminable talks. What is white today was black yesterday and so on to infinity...but who'll guarantee that another leadership will be any better? No, as I see it, the only way out for me personally lies in the sphere of science." The comrade who told me this had spent ten years in the YCL, working throughout all this time in industry and conjointly with his work studying first in the Workers' Faculty and later in the university. There is left only to add that many others find their way out in drunkenness and debauchery. But, fundamentally the youth tends to become militant, assuming a critical attitude to what is transpiring, and seeking to formulate themselves theoretically as well as organizationally.

As among the youth so also among the party members the same processes are to be observed, only in a "milder" form. The dissatisfaction with conditions in the party and in the country surges over the barriers of party discipline. And on the other hand, there is also to be observed apathy; people have grown tired of waiting for the promised boons of the first five year plan, all the more so as the scissors in the meantime have spread unbelievably, which is to be gathered both from press reports and the conditions as they actually obtain.

The authority of the "chief" is now no longer equal to zero but to some infinitely great negative quantity. There was a period when he was spoken of without malice, and without much consideration—that is to say, as something inevitable, but now all that has changed. Now the "chief" is at times spoken of as the greatest wreck of the revolution. I have had the occasion to hear from many—even from workers in the apparatus—that his removal would be a relief to the best, lead to the rehabilitation of the party regime, etc., etc., December 1932 —R.O.V.

Throughout the last period there is to be observed, with an ever increasing tempo, the return from exile of many former Oppositionists, now "former" capitalists. Most recently there have arrived a great many from Khar'kov—many had been arrested there—and chiefly among the arrivals are the "former" "former" capitalists. The returning capitalists landed directly in solitary confinement. In exile, there are those who are not admitted into the colonies. I—either because the statements they have filed regarding their capitulation, and their admission of the correctness of the general line were deemed insufficient; and a "complete disarming" was demanded from them. (The authorities as a rule deal much more harshly with such people than with the exiles; their position is made more unendurable with every passing month—if they refuse to disarm (e. g. the case of V. Borschev, a worker from a printing plant in Sytnik). 2—because they disagreed with the political classification of the Oppositionists as such. For instance, V. Zarachov and Magaril in Tashkent. (They were exiled for the second time because suspected of renewing their Opposition activities.)

The colonies live in isolation under conditions of semi-starvation; for instance Katya X with her year-old infant was sent to Cherdin; she was given no work; her husband was placed in solitary confinement. Her only request in letters to friends has been that her baby be looked after and not allowed to die. At the end of her three-year term of exile, she was sent away under convoy to Central Asia, with a daily allowance of fifty kopeks (a pound of bread costs two to three rubles). The picture of other colonies is not brighter. The material conditions of the exiles are horrible.

Nevertheless, the morale among the comrades is militant. Many are ailing, in particular, Solntzev (scurvy); notwithstanding the fact that the latter has served his time, he remains in confinement. His wife wanted to apply for a transfer to exile but he refused to make any statements whatsoever.

As a result of a hunger strike—three men who were sick were let out. Of them, one died. Musya was freed after she had lain in bed for six months; she was sent off under convoy, to Minusinsk, where she is now together with Kossol. She is again sick in bed. Her spirits are still high but in her letters to relatives she writes, we shall see each other soon. Geyev has been brought back to Moscow from solitary confinement in Uppar Ural. Because of pernicious anemia, he has lost his eyesight. November, 1932. ONE OF US.

1,000 N.Y. Youth Protest Fascism

Over one thousand young workers and students massed before the German consulate last Saturday noon and marched to Rutgers Square, in a protest demonstration against Fascism. A delegation of thirteen which included a representative of the Left Opposition youth, was elected to present a resolution protesting the terror campaign of the Hitler regime, demanding an immediate step to the terrorism, and the release of all political prisoners. Mr. Swartz, the German consul, refused to listen to the demonstration.

The demonstration was organized by the Youth Committee Against German Fascism elected at the United Youth Conference Against Fascism held in New York, March 24th and 25th, as a united front of all youth organizations. For the first time in the history of the Left Opposition, it signed a joint call for the Conference with the official Young Communist League.

The demonstration was the first genuine united front action yet organized against German Fascism. The various organizations participating marched under their own organizational banners and the leading groups, including the Left Opposition, speakers at the various meetings places. Comrade George Clarke spoke for the Left Opposition.

As yet the Youth Committee Against German Fascism represents predominantly Left wing and Communist groups. The Rand School Students Ass'n., which to the shame of the Young Communist League had initiated the united front, withdrew at the eleventh hour, the Friday before the demonstration, under the pressure of the leaders of the Socialist party, by a vote of 32 to 23. This pressure is shown by the false report in the April 1st issue of the New Leader that the Rand School students had decided to withdraw from the united front on the previous Tuesday.

The students of Brookwood Labor College who had participated in the Conference, walked alongside the Saturday parade in order not to break Socialist party discipline. The New York Yipsels were definitely instructed to boycott the demonstration under threats of disciplinary action. One Yipsel who had voted at the Rand School Students meeting for a continuation of participation in the united front was officially criticized by the City Central Committee of the Y. C. L. At the same meeting of the delegation of the Youth Committee Against German Fascism appeared once again to offer the Yipsels a sub-committee of five was elected to take up the question with the Socialist party. Although the sentiment was strongly in favor of participation, four of the five elected were among those who were strongly against affiliation to the Youth Committee Against German Fascism.

The Yipsels, the Young Circle League—youth of the Workers' Circle—and the League for Industrial Democracy have arranged for a mass demonstration against German Fascism for Saturday, April 8 in Union Square. The Youth Committee Against German Fascism has offered to elect a joint arrangements committee to coordinate this demonstration, and in any case has pledged the cooperation of its affiliated organizations.

Members and sympathizers of the New York Spartacus Youth Club will meet at 126 East 16th Street at 11:30 A. M. to go in a body to the Union Square demonstration.

New Expulsions in Brownsville

The advice of comrade Hathaway to "arouse a lynch attitude in all Communists" against the Left Opposition has been taken up by the aspiring bureaucrats of mass organizations affiliated to the Communist party. So fearful have the "leaders" of the American Youth Club become of "Trotskyist" influence that they have actually whipped up a veritable lynch campaign against those members who question their policies, and refuse to kow-tow to a party controlled executive machine. The member's cry for more discussion on the differences between the official party and the Left Opposition is met with slander and expulsion. The member asking for debate has the finger of expulsion pointed at him. A few of the more energetic bureaucrats have discovered a remarkable method of serving the interests of the club—snying on their fellow members. This spy system is working havoc with club activities. Members fear to confide in each other. Suspicion rides high.

The club executive committee meets behind closed doors. Its snobbish members have divorced themselves from the rank and file, half of whom consist of raw workers with no political background. All this is furthering the discontent of the membership, which is realizing that the present policies of the American Youth Club are leading to its speedy corruption and demoralization.

The result of the attempts "to protect the members from 'Trotskyist' influence" has been an exceedingly low level of political education which is superficial because of its one-sidedness. Two expulsions have occurred in the past month, comrades Leyton and I. We were excluded, under the all-embracing danger of disruption. Both were known to have sympathies for the Left Opposition, and a campaign of discrimination and slander was conducted against both of us prior to our expulsion.

It was decided at an executive meeting during my absence, to recommend to the membership my removal from the post of assistant organizer and to place me on a three months probation in the Unemployed Section of the club. My case was postponed three or four times, until I was expelled from the YCL. I was expelled from the YCL for refusing to fight against the Left Opposition. When my sympathies for the Left Opposition were firmly established the Executive Committee changed its recommendation to that of removal from office; three months' probation in the Unemployed Section; and no voice in any of the other activities for the duration of these three months. One Executive Committee member, who was opposed to the proposal, was rebuked by the organizer for his willingness to allow such elements who are against the interests of the club "full freedom to break up our organization." It was a clear case not of punishment for a crime but of punishment "to prevent a time" of hanging first and determining the guilt afterward.

During the trial the organizer accused me of believing that there should be reports of minority opinion on the Executive. When questioned by a member as to when the membership had passed a resolution forbidding minority reports the organizer explained that the constitution contained nothing concerning that point but that he was acting according to his knowledge of working class organizations. This reveals the high handed, arbitrary, bureaucratic rulings of the Stalinist clique.

Members now assure me that I would have remained in the club had I not attempted to organize a Marxist class outside the club. Discovery of this fact caused the Executive to make an amendment asking for expulsion. Their "explanation" is that such a step is an attempt to create factions in the club. To these epigones the formation of a Marxist class removed from Stalinist influence constitutes a counter-revolutionary act.

The expulsion of comrade Leyton and I are but precedents and warnings to a membership that is being driven to a point where they will soon be too cowed to raise their voice in protest. But that there are still militants left in the club is evident by the discontent of the rank and file and their contempt for the "aristocracy of labor," as 'they term the snobbish leaders.

—J. ELLIOTT.

Joint Meet of League and Weisbord Lays Ground for Close Collaboration

A meeting held on Saturday, April 1, 1933 between representatives of the National Committees of the Communist League of America (Opposition) and the Communist League of Struggle (the Weisbord group), adopted a joint declaration on the relationships between the two groups which we print below, as the first step towards a further consolidation of the Left Opposition in this country.

As is known, our League has been engaged for some time in a dispute on fundamental questions with the Weisbord group, concerning which our readers have been informed in the columns of the Militant. In the course of this dispute, a considerable degree of clarity has been attained, which now makes possible another step forward in the collaboration of the organizations and their eventual fusion.

The joint meeting was made possible by a declaration from the C. L. S. to the National Committee of our League which marked a new advance on its part towards our fundamental position, especially on the question of Centrism. The former position of the C. L. S. and of Weisbord on this question, is rejected and the declaration says that "the group as a whole fully accepts Comrade Trotsky's views on this question as obtained through reports of his discussion with Comrade Weisbord last summer through his letters to us and his discussion of the question in print, particularly in his pamphlet 'What Next?'."

In reply our National Committee proposed a joint meeting with the C. L. S. asking its cooperation with the League in the next period on the following basis:

"(a) Acceptance by the Weisbord group of the theses adopted by the Preliminary International Conference of the I. L. O. (b) that it adopt an attitude toward the League as the American section of the International Left Opposition and cease differentiating between and contrasting the one to the other; (c) that the Weisbord group discontinue its claims to be a section of or to represent the I.L.O.; that after a transition period of cooperation between the two organizations on this basis, during which the possibility of joint work is tested, the question of a fusion between the two organizations be referred to the National Conference of the League for discussion." The joint meeting which followed the proposal of the C. L. S. by the Weisbord group. Following a discussion, the nature of which is indicated by the declaration printed below, a declaration was finally adopted unanimously, which indicates the nature of the discussion and the further steps that are to be taken. We print the full declaration below:

RESOLUTION OF THE JOINT CONFERENCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF AMERICA (OPPOSITION) AND THE COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF STRUGGLE

1. Previous discussions and correspondence between the Communist League of America (Opposition) and the Communist League of Struggle have established the principle ground for common work and a possible eventual fusion of the two organizations.

2. With this fact as the point of departure the joint conference of representatives of the two organizations agrees upon a program of collaboration.

3. In this collaboration the Communist League of Struggle adopts the following standpoint:

(a) It accepts the theses of the International Preliminary Conference of the International Left Opposition.

(b) It regards the Communist League of America (Opposition) as the American section of the International Left Opposition and supports it as such.

(c) It will enter into collaboration with the Communist League of America (Opposition) in various activities with the objective of a fusion with it and will conduct itself accordingly in this collaboration.

(d) Criticism of the Communist League of America (Opposition) on the secondary points of difference, which may appear in the "Class Struggle", will be regulated in content and tone by the above standpoint.

4. The Communist League of America (Opposition), on its part, will welcome the cooperation of the Communist League of Struggle in concrete activities and will facilitate the fusion of the two organizations after the actual possibilities of common work have been sufficiently tested in the period of collaboration between the organizations.

5. It is agreed that the Communist League of Struggle shall be given the opportunity to bring its special point of view on the remaining differences before the membership of the Communist League of America (Opposition) in the forthcoming pie-conference discussion and at the national conference.

6. The decision on the question of the integration of the Communist League of Struggle into the Communist League of America (Opposition) is to be made by the forthcoming national conference of the latter after opportunity has been given, by the intervening period of collaboration and discussion, to judge the maturity of the conditions for this action and the necessity for it. The undersigned representatives of the two organizations at the joint conference will work for this consummation.

FOR THE COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF AMERICA (OPPOSITION)

(Signed) Max Shachtman

J. P. Cannon

FOR THE COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF STRUGGLE

(Signed) Albert Weisbord

Sam Fisher

Vera Buch

THE MILITANT

Entered as a second class mail matter November 23, 1923, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th St., N. Y. C.

EDITORIAL BOARD

Max Shachtman James P. Cannon

Martin Abern Maurice Spector

Arne Sweeck

Saturday, April 8, 1933

Vol. VI, No. 22 (Whole No. 169)

Subscription rate: $2.00 per year.

Foreign $2.50. Five Cents per copy.

Oppositionists Slugged at YCL Meet

(Continued from Page 1)

arms. We defended ourselves as best we could. We were glad to note that even during the fracas, some of the YCLers tried to stop the fight and said we should be allowed to distribute the paper.

Someone had put in a call for the riot squad, and we heard the sirens of the approaching automobiles. We had time to distribute a number of papers to workers who came up to us and asked for them, adding their protest against the shameful conduct of the attackers. We left almost immediately for we had no desire to give the cops any excuse for interfering in our dispute with the YCLers and possibly cause the membership meeting to be disturbed.

An hour or so after, when the meeting adjourned, three of us went back and walked down Second Avenue and met the YCLers leaving the meeting. A number of the comrades stopped to speak to us and tell us that they in no way supported the physical attack upon us; and did not think that the YCL leadership would condone the action or had done so.

These comrades were mistaken in the latter opinion. We have it from several of the members of the YCL present, that the group went over to Hathaway and asked him if they should stop us from distributing. Hathaway shrugged his shoulders and by not attempting to explain to these hotheads that this was no way for workers, let alone Communists, to settle their disputes, thereby lent tacit support to the action. Hathaway may evade or deny this but his words at the Party membership meeting two weeks ago are on record: "We should have a lynching attitude toward the 'Trotskyist.'" That is clear and indisputable. With such direction and leadership one can hardly blame only the young comrades who took the words at their face value and proceeded to carry out the shameful and anti-Communist action at the Stuyvesant Casino. How much they harmed the YCL and the ideas of Communism in the eyes of the workers who witnessed the attack, they cannot understand. Such hoodlum and gangster methods can only repel any honest worker. He knows too well the club and the fist of the police to be convinced simply because it is a so-called Communist who uses the same method.

We warn these young people: If they have the interests of the YCL at heart, they will stop these hoodlum tactics and meet us on political grounds

Leon Trotsky: The Tragedy of the German Proletariat

(Continued from Page 1)

from the theoretical commandments of Stalinism. Chips and fragments of ideas and principles are thrown out along the road like so much ballast.

The conditions for the united front put by the Comintern for all the countries (committees of action against Fascism, demonstrations and strikes against wage reductions) present nothing new, on the contrary, they are the schematized and bureaucratized reproduction of the slogans that the Left Opposition formulated much more clearly and concretely two and a half years ago and for which it was registered in the camp of social-Fascism. The united front on such bases could yield decisive results in Germany; but for that end it should have been carried out in time. Time is an important factor in politics.

What is therefore the practical value now of the proposals of the Executive? For Germany, it is at a minimum. The policy of the united front assumes a "front," that is, stable positions and a centralized leadership. The Left Opposition put forth the conditions for an active defense with the perspective of passing over to the offensive. Now, the German proletariat has reached the state of a disordered retreat, without even rearward battles. In this situation, voluntary unions of Communist and social democratic workers may and will be realized for various episodic tasks, but the systematic realization of the united front is inexorably thrust back for an indefinite future. There must be no illusions on this score.

About fifteen months ago, we wrote that the key to the situation in the hands of the German Communist Party. The Stalinist bureaucracy has now lost this key out of its hands. Great events outside of the will of the party will be necessary to give the workers the possibility of drawing up short, of fortifying themselves, of rebuilding their ranks and of passing over to an active defensive. When this will occur, we have no way of knowing with precision. Perhaps much quicker than the triumphant counter-revolution hopes. But in any case, it is not those who issued the manifesto of the Executive who will direct the policy of the united front in Germany.

If the central position has surrendered, one must fortify oneself in the approaches, one must prepare points of support for the future offensive. This preparation signifies, inside of Germany, the critical clarification of the past, support to the vigorous spirit of the vanguard of the militants, their reassembly, the organization of rearward combats wherever it is possible waiting meanwhile for the moment when the various fighting groups will draw together into a great army. This preparation signifies at the same time the defense of the proletarian positions in the countries closely connected with Germany, or located right near it: in Austria, in Czechoslovakia, in Poland, in the Baltic countries, in Scandinavia, in Belgium, in Holland, in France and in Switzerland. Fascist Germany must be surrounded by a powerful circle of proletarian fortifications. Without for an instant ceasing the attempts to halt the disorderly retreat of the German workers, it is necessary forthwith to create fortified proletarian positions around the frontiers of Germany for the struggle against Fascism.

In the first rank comes Austria, which is immediately threatened by the Fascist cataclysm. One can say with certainty that if the Austrian proletariat were to seize power now and transform its country into a revolutionary battleground, Austria would become for the revolution of the German proletariat what Piedmont was for the revolution of the Italian bourgeoisie. It cannot be predicted how far the Austrian proletariat, pushed forward by the events but paralyzed by the reformist bureaucracy, will advance along this road. The task of Communism is to help the events against Austro-Marxism. The policy of the united front is one of the means. The conditions which the manifesto of the Executive takes over so tardily from the Left Opposition thus retain all their force.

However, the policy of the united front embraces within itself not only advantages but also dangers. It easily gives birth to combinations between leaders behind the back of the masses, to a passive adaptation to the ally, to opportunist vacillations. This danger cannot be warded off save under the condition of two express guarantees: the maintenance of full freedom of criticism of the ally and the re-establishment of the full freedom of criticism within the ranks of one's own party. To refuse to criticize one's allies leads directly and immediately to capitulation to reformism. The policy of the united front without party democracy, that is, without the control of the apparatus by the party, leaves the leaders a free hand for the opportunist experience which supplement the adventurist experiences.

How has the Executive acted in this case? Dozens of times the Left Opposition predicted that under the blows of events, the Stalinists will be compelled to recoil from their ultra-Leftism and that, placing themselves on the road of the united front, they will commence to commit all the opportunistic treason which they attributed to us only yesterday. This time too the prediction has been realized literally.

In making a dizzying swing towards the positions of the united front, the Executive tramples upon the fundamental guarantees which alone can assure a revolutionary content to the policy of the united front. The Stalinists take into consideration and accept the hypocritical and diplomatic claims of the reformists to a so-called "mutual non-aggression." Breaking with all the traditions of Marxism and of Bolshevism, they recommend to the Communist parties, in case the united front is realized, to "abandon all attacks against the social 'democratic' organizations during the joint action." That's just what it says: To abandon all attacks (!) upon the social democracy (what a shameful formula!) means to abandon the freedom of political criticism, that is, the principal function of the revolutionary party.

The capitulation is engendered not by practical necessity but by the panicky state of mind. The reformists come and will come to an agreement to the extent that the pressure of events and the pressure of the masses force them to. The demand for "non-aggression" is blackmail, that is, an attempt of the reformist leaders to extort an auxiliary advantage. To submit to blackmail means to build up the united front upon rotten foundations and to give the reformist business men the possibility of blowing it up under some arbitrary pretext or another.

Criticism in general, all the more so under the conditions of the united front, should obviously correspond to the real relationships and preserve the necessary proportions. The absurdities about "social-Fascism" must be refuted; it is a concession not to the social democracy but to Marxism. It is not for the treachery of 1918 but for its evil work in 1933 that the ally must be criticized. But criticism, like political life itself, of which criticism is the voice, cannot be halted for an hour. If what the Communists disclose corresponds to the reality, they serve the purposes of the united front, pushing forward the provisional ally and, what is more important, giving a revolutionary education to the whole proletariat. To abandon this fundamental duty is the first stage in that criminal and shameful policy which Stalin foisted upon the Chinese Communists with regard to the Kuo Min Tang.

Matters stand no better with regard to the second guarantee. Having denounced criticism of the social democracy, the Stalinist apparatus does not even think of giving the right of criticism to the members of its own party. The turn itself is effected, as is the custom, after the manner of a bureaucratic revelation. Not a single national congress, no international congress, nor even a plenum of the Executive, no preparation in the press of the party, no analysis of the policy of the past. And there is nothing astounding in this: at the very first steps in a discussion in the party, each thinking worker would ask the functionaries: why have the Bolsheviks been expelled from all the sections and why are they subjected to deportation and to firing squads? Is it only because they dig deeper and see further? The Stalinist bureaucracy cannot permit such a conclusion. It is capable of no matter what flop or turn, but to present itself honestly before the workers, to face the Bolshevik-Leninists—that's something it cannot and does not dare to do. Thus, in the struggle for its own preservation, the apparatus depreciates its new turn by undermining in advance the confidence in it not only of the social democratic workers but also of the Communists.

The publication of the manifesto of the Executive is accompanied by yet another circumstance, extraneous to the question we are examining, but which throws an exceedingly glaring light on the present position of the C. I. and on the attitude of the leading Stalinist group towards it. In Pravda of March 6, the manifesto is published not as a direct and open appeal of the Executive of the Comintern situated in Moscow—as was always the case—but as the translation of a document from Humaine, transmitted from Paris by the telegraphic agency Tass. What a stupid and humiliating ruse! After all the successes, after the realization of the First Five Year Plan, after "the entry into socialism," the Stalinist bureaucracy no longer dares to publish in its own name the manifesto of the Executive of the Communist International—that's how it feels itself on the international arena.

The manifesto is not the sole reply to the initiative of the Second International. Through the intermediary of paper organizations—the revolutionary trade union oppositions (R. G. O.) of Germany and Poland, the Anti-Fascist alliance and the so-called Italian General Confederation of Labor, the Communist International is convening for the month of April a "Pan-European Workers' Anti-Fascist Congress." The list of those invited, as is proper, is confused and vast: factories (they say "factories," although by the efforts of Stalin-Losovsky the Communists have been ousted from practically all the factories in the world), local labor organizations, revolutionary, reformist, Catholic, belonging to a party or not, sports, Anti-Fascist and peasant organizations. And more: "We wish also to invite all those individuals who are really fighting for the cause of the workers." Having compromised for a long time the cause of the masses, the strategists appeal to the "individuals," to those heretics who have found no place in the ranks of the masses but who, just the same, "are really fighting for the cause of the workers." Barbusse and General Schoenbach will once more be mobilized to save Europe from Hitler.

Here we have a ready-made libretto for one of those charlatan-like presentations with which the Stalinists are in the habit of masking their impotence. What has the Amsterdam bloc of the Centrists and the pacifists accomplished in the struggle against the aggression of the Japanese bandits? Nothing. Out of respect for Stalinist "neutrality," the pacifists have not even issued a manifesto of protest. Now a new edition of the Amsterdam Congress is being prepared, not against war but against Fascism. What will the anti-Fascist bloc of vacated "factories" and impotent "individuals" do? Nothing. It will issue a hollow manifesto, if, as a matter of fact, things go this time as far as the holding of a Congress. The tendency towards individualism has two faces: opportunistic and adventurist. The Russian Social Revolutionists in the old days extended the Right hand to the liberals and held a bomb in the left hand. The experience of the last ten years attests that after every great tragic defeat provoked or at least aggravated by the policy of the Comintern, the Stalinist bureaucracy sought implacably to refurbish its reputation with the aid of some grandiose adventure or another (Esthonia, Bulgaria, Canton). Doesn't this danger exist now too? In any case, we deem it necessary to raise a voice of warning. Adventures which aim to replace the action of the paralyzed masses, disorganize the masses still more and aggravate the catastrophe.

The conditions of the present world situation, as well as the conditions of each country in particular, are just as deadly for the social democracy as they are favorable to the revolutionary party. But the Stalinist bureaucracy has succeeded in converting the crisis of capitalism and of reformism into a crisis of Communism. Such is the balance sheet of the uncontrolled command of the epigones for the last ten years.

Hypocrites will be found to say: The Opposition is criticizing the party which has fallen into the hands of the executioner. Blackguards will add: The Opposition is helping the executioner. By combining a specious sentimentalism with venomous falsehood, the Stalinists will endeavor to hide the Central Committee behind the apparatus, the apparatus behind the party, to eliminate the question of responsibility for the catastrophe, for the false strategy, for the disastrous regime, for the criminal leadership: that means helping the executioners of yesterday and today.

The policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy in China was no less disastrous than it is at the present time in Germany. But there, the affair took place behind the back of the world proletariat, under conditions which were reprehensible to it. The voice of the Opposition hardly reached beyond the USSR to the workers of the other countries. The Chinese experience went practically unpunished for the Stalinist apparatus. In Germany, it is entirely different. All the stages of the drama developed before the eyes of the world proletariat. At each stage, the Opposition raised its voice. The whole course of development was announced in advance. The Stalinist bureaucracy calculated the Opposition, imputed to it ideas and plans alien to it, expelled all those who dared to speak of the united front, helped the social democratic bureaucracy demoralize the united local defense committees, cut the workers off from the slightest possibility of emerging upon the road of the mass struggle, disorganized the vanguard, paralyzed the proletariat. In this way, opposing the united front of defense with the social democracy, the Stalinists found themselves with the latter in a united front of panic and of capitulation.

And now, finding itself right in front of ruin, the leadership of the Comintern fears light and criticism more than anything else. Let the world revolution go lost, provided that vain prestige may live: the bankrupts sow confusion and smear up the traces. The fact that the Communist Party of Germany lost "only" 1,200,000 votes at the first ballot, with a general rise in the number of voters of from three to four millions, is proclaimed by Pravda as an "enormous political victory." In the same way, in 1924, Stalin proclaimed an "enormous victory" the fact that the workers in Germany, who were withdrawing without battle, had still given the Communist party 3,000,000 votes. If the proletariat, deceived and disarmed by both apparatuses, has this time given the Communist party almost five million votes, this signifies only that it would have given it twice or three times that number if it had been able to show that it is capable of taking and holding the power. But it gave the proletariat nothing save confusion, zigzags, defeats and distress.

Yes, five million Communists still succeeded in reaching the ballot box, one by one. But in the factories and on the streets, there aren't any. They are disconcerted, dispersed, demoralized. Under the yoke of the apparatus, they have lost the habit of independence. The bureaucratic terror of Stalinism has paralyzed their will-power before the turn came for the terror of the Fascist bands.

It must be said clearly, plainly, openly: Stalinism in Germany has had its August 4th. From today on, the advanced workers of this country will speak of the period of the domination of the Stalinist bureaucracy only with words of hatred and curses. The official German Communist Party is doomed. From now on it will only decompose, crumble and melt into the void. German Communism can be reborn only on a new basis and with a new leadership.

The law of unequal development acts also upon the fate of Stalinism. In the various countries, it finds itself in different stages of decomposition. To what degree the tragic experience of Germany will serve as an impulsion to the rebirth of the other sections of the Comintern—the future will show. In Germany in any case the swan song of the Stalinist bureaucracy has been sung. The German proletariat will rise again, Stalinism never. Under the terrible blows of the enemy, the advanced German workers will have to build up a new party. The Bolshevik-Leninists will give all their forces to this work.

—LEON TROTSKY.

The Crisis in German Communism

(Continued from last issue)

Within these general workers' organizations the Communists have played their role; but the "third period" policy shows its disastrous results. The Stalinist party leaders, with the inauguration of this "period," began to interpret its aim of winning the workers to Communist leadership not by maintaining its activities within these mass organizations and in this manner winning them over, but by splitting away the Left wing and the Communist opposition to form their own small organizations in every field. It resulted, even though not always in new organizations at least in every case in an exodus of all Communist elements. Rival trade unions were formed (R. G. O.), rival free-thinkers, football clubs, anglers' clubs, etc. But the overwhelming majority of the workers remained in the social democratic organizations and by and large also under their ideology and leadership. The new opposition organization vegetated in an isolated and sectarian existence.

Stalinist Leaders Prevented Trend Toward Communism

The Stalinist leaders, caught in the vise of their own policy, could not tolerate criticism; they made a bureaucratic caricature of the correct principles of centralization and discipline. The membership within these rival organizations were deprived of all rights of serious discussion and participation in decisions. They could not find themselves at home in these organizations which were stripped of their function and stagnated. The party bureaucracy became most strongly expressed in the struggle against criticism of and opposition to its false policies. For example, Schulz would become an Oppositionist. He would be expelled from the party. Next the demand would be made for his condemnation and expulsion from all other organizations under party direction, from the RGO, from its freethinker society, from its chess players' clubs, anglers' clubs, etc. Such a method could only help to alienate the workers from Communism and benefit the treacherous social democratic chiefs.

These are only some of the examples of the Stalinist methodology considered apart from the general strategy, by which the party leaders sought in their way to prepare the proletariat for its present fatal situation. In no wise could it correspond to the rhythm of working class developments. While the German workers went through a period of radicalization culminating in the great strike wave extending throughout Germany during the latter part of last year, in many instances forcing the trade union bureaucrats into the fight, the disastrous and criminal Stalinist party leadership policy and the independent trade union sects could only serve as a brake upon the general movement. The social democratic leaders, despite all their sell-outs were not dislodged from their positions but had their authority re-inforced. For the workers there was no other choice than to remain within their fold.

In this sense the Stalinist Centralism circumvented the constantly growing working class trend toward Communism. That sympathy for Communism increased, is proved by the various parliamentary elections where the party, with certain temporary retreats, continued to record gains, not at all commensurate with the Nazi gains, but gains nevertheless. One can say that election after election strengthened the party victories in the field. But not so in actual struggle or in trade union and working class contact within the industries. Despite the parliamentary election victories the party could not lead in struggle against the constantly growing Fascist reaction. It remained paralyzed and powerless. By its policy and methods the Stalinist leaders saved the social democratic buel Fascism and seriously weakened the Communist vanguard. Again and again the solid hold which the social democracy has upon the workers in the industries has been proved. Most recently in the Betriebsräte (factory council) elections in the Berlin municipal electric and gas works held March first. One may say that workers employed by a municipal tend to conservatism but nevertheless the results are illuminating.

The Alternatives in the Decisive Class Battles

In the gas works 3,838 votes were counted, of which the socialists received 2,352, Communists 1,298, and Nazis 161. The Communists lost the absolute majority which they had formerly held here. In the electrical works 3,829 votes were cast, of which the socialists obtained no less than 3,084, the Communists 160, and the Nazis 85.

Within the clerical staff of the municipal gas and the electric works the council elections gave the following results. In the gas section out of a total of 2,064 votes cast, the socialists obtained 1,151, the Nazis 413, and a neutral moderate ticket 499. There was no Communist ticket. Among the clerical staff of the electrical section out of a total of 2,547 votes the socialists polled 3,916, the Nazis 443, and the Communists 135. In all four elections there was a 90 percent participation.

Here is again telling proof of workers following the social democratic leaders and not at all considering themselves partners in the same camp with the hated Nazi. On the contrary, it proves that the workers are holding fast to the socialist party just at the period of its severe persecution by the Fascists and their campaign for the Hitler parliamentary ticket.

But it also gives telling proof of the weakness of the Communist party among the workers in the industries. All in all, however, it is one more excellent reason for a genuine united front between the C. P. and the S. P. That is yet the key question. No other way exists to defend the German working class, its rights and its organizations against the murderous onrush of the brown hordes than through a united working class.

Socialist Bureaucrats and Stalinists Partners in Betrayal

The social democratic leaders completely accept the Hitler Reichstag election victory. They seek solace in their own statement that, "Germany is not Italy," meaning thereby that Hitler cannot accomplish the destruction of working class wrought by Mussolini. While this is true in the sense that Hitler faces a far more powerful working class, a potentially far stronger antagonist than did Mussolini, yet the Weis, Braun and Severing group repeat the treason of their Italian fraternity. They have succeeded in maintaining their party intact but they continue to sabotage all struggle. They thereby keep the road open for Hitler.

But we have sought in vain also for any sign of struggle initiated by the Stalinist party leadership. By their own course they have arrived at a situation where the party is unable to fight, where it is being shattered and wiped out by the first heavy blows of Fascism in power. The party leaders paraphrased the social democrats. They said: "The difference between Mussolini and Hitler is basically that the latter has no economic conjuncture ahead of him." True as this is in its abstract sense, when substituted for measures of struggle it becomes entirely false. The economic conjuncture alone will not defeat Hitler. For that is required a united working class, oriented, organized and prepared for such a huge task. In that the party leadership failed completely to even take the initial steps for working class defense. They also laid the road open for Hitler to smash the workers' organizations beginning with the party itself. The extent of its destruction is illustrated by the one example among many others of an important functionaries' conference called in the Ruhr region by special courier from the Central Committee. It was called shortly before the elections and sixty functionaries were to participate. Of this number only five showed up.

The sad truth is that today, at the time of this writing, the party which should function as the proletarian vanguard exists no longer. Its press, its meetings and all its public activities are completely prohibited. But it issues no leaflets, it gives no leadership whatever, its own leaders are either under arrest or fugitives, its headquarters are taken over by the police, its nuclei are disorganized and a frightful demoralization has seized its membership. The party is betrayed by its Stalinist leadership, it is sacrificed by an impotent bureaucracy, the strength of its numbers failed to the vanishing point because it meant nothing when associated with an utterly false ideology, false perspectives and policies. Today is being recorded in Germany and with fatal consequence to the working class throughout the world the greatest crime of Stalinism.

What is becoming of the Comintern? Undermined and almost reduced to impotence by its controlling Stalinist clique it has likewise failed to function and to show the way. When feeble attempts in regard to the German situation were made by it they were made upon a false road. What will be its future if the Fascists finally conquer in Germany? This question embodies such serious consequences that it is difficult to fully contemplate today. One thing is certain. We see now the eclipse of Stalinism in Germany and perhaps in the whole Comintern. But a far more serious aspect of the present situation is the question of the eclipse of the Comintern itself, if not of the Soviet Union. The Stalinist regime has long ago reduced the Comintern to an appendix purely of the interests of its own bureaucratic clique in the Soviet Union. What will the destruction of strongest Comintern party outside of the Soviet Union, the only mass party outside of the Soviet Union mean? The mere practical aspect of this question rolls up enormous difficulties. Through the German party were maintained the solid contacts with the proletariat of the western world despite the white terror rule of Poland and the Baltic states in between. Germany being added to that iron ring of Fascist and semi-Fascist dictatorships practically destroys this contact. The Stalinist regime will concentrate yet more purely within the Soviet Union in an attempt to give life to its reactionary utopian theory of socialism in one country. It will pay even less attention to the Comintern than before. Hence its utterly criminal complacency in face of the mortal danger threatening the world proletariat. And what of the political consequence of the destruction of the strongest party existing within a capitalist country? Will that not mean almost a death blow to the Comintern additionally weakened by the effects of a defeat of such gigantic consequences as a defeat in Germany today?

Fall of Stalinism Signals Rise of Left Opposition

These, of course, are considerations arrived at on the basis of the furious onrush of German Fascism capturing one strong position after another and already having eliminated its main opponent—the Communist party. They must yet take into account the possibilities which despite all still exists of the German working class yet being able to rally in time the powerful resources lying dormant within its ranks. But it is necessary to be prepared for the worst variant. For such possibilities, however, the party of Stalinism will no longer give the initiative or leadership. Now there remains as the revolutionary hope only the international Left Opposition. It is true that compared to the giant task our ranks are still extremely feeble. But the Left Opposition possesses the first and most important requisites. We possess the weapon of a Marxist approach, of Marxist analysis and of a Marxist program. Of truly monumental importance is such a weapon today.

It was by virtue of this that the Left Opposition in the past, facing the failures of Stalinism, could show the correct road. When the Comintern, hamstrung by the Stalin regime, failed in this decisive situation to give leadership or even to speak to the world proletariat, the international Left Opposition began seriously to solidify its ranks in the international conference held recently. Delegates from eleven different countries participated and began in a small measure to prepare our organization for its great tasks. When viewed in combination with the silence and failure of the Stalinist Comintern one must say that in that fact alone lies an enormous importance. That was a signal for the new epoch which are now entering. A signal for the falling of Stalinism and the rise of the Left Opposition.

—AINE SWABECK.

Three Expulsions

Davenport, Iowa.—On March 18, 1933 the Left Opposition Branch of the Tri-Cities was forced to expel S. R. Claussen for cowardice, moral and physical degeneracy, for breaking the discipline of the branch and attacking the Left Opposition publicly. The expulsion also took place of H. and J. Behr for connection with the Police Department and agents of the Chamber of Commerce. This was done after a trial where these people practically admitted the charges. Claussen is 21 years of age, a fellow who thinks he is a little bit better than the ordinary worker. He is about 5 ft. 4 in. in height. Mr. and Mrs. Behr are husband and wife who have had and are having contact with the police and carried information to agents of the Chamber of Commerce.

These three individuals attacked Communism openly in the press when they were confronted with facts. The party, through the unemployed Council and through Tony Minich who is at the present time the organizer of the TUUL in the mining region, have made open attacks against the Left Opposition, and have used every method possible to take away all halls from the branch of the Left Opposition in the city of Davenport. They have further attacked through personal slander the comrades of the Left Opposition, with the assistance of the local newspapers and the local Chamber of Commerce plus the American Legion. This was done through the fact that the three above mentioned people were officers of the Union of Unemployed, and had a special meeting where we were harassed by the police of this city.

The Union of Unemployed Rank and File held a meeting where 100 workers were present and condemned their action. The branch of this city warns all workers against those degenerates and calls on all party members to demand of the party the reason for the united front between these individuals and the organizers of the Party. We call upon all workers to repudiate this leadership which is undermining Communism in its desperate attempt to stop the influence of the ideas of the Left Opposition in the Tri-Cities.

Communist League of America (Opposition) Tri-City Branch

Hitler and the Red Army

(Continued from Page 1)

not because they desired the victory of Hitler, but out of political blindness. At the same time, we must be just to them: if they had desired the victory of Hitler, they could not have acted otherwise than they did. Now that Hitler is in power, and his whole policy compels him to prepare a coup toward the East (the revelations of the Polish-Ukrainian program of Goering are sufficiently eloquent) the Stalinists say, "We now prepare to call on the Red Army in the socialist construction."

But even leaving aside the question of help to the German proletariat, there remains the question of the defense of socialist construction against German Fascism, the shock troops of world imperialism. Do the Stalinists deny this danger? The most that they can say is that Hitler is not yet today, capable of carrying on a war. This is true, and we said so some time ago. But if Hitler, today incapable of carrying on a war, will be capable of tomorrow—and he will not be able to avoid carrying on war—does not a correct strategy demand that Hitler be prevented from preparing his blow, that is, that the German workers get rid of Hitler before he gets rid of the German workers? Marxists have often made fun of "parliamentary cretinism," but kolkhoz cretinism is not worth a bit more. One cannot sow grain and plant cabbage with his back turned to the West, from which, for the first time since 1918, comes the greatest threat, which can become a mortal danger if it is not paralyzed in time.

Or have the Stalinists perhaps assimilated the pacifist wisdom of the "purely defensive" war being the only permissible one? "Let Hitler attack us first, then we will defend ourselves." This was always the reasoning of the German social democracy. Let the National Socialists first openly attack the constitution, then, well, etc. Still, when Hitler openly attacked the constitution, it was already too late to think of its defense.

He who does not outstrip the enemy while he is still weak; who passively lets him strengthen and reinforce himself, protect his rearward, create an army for himself, receive support from abroad, assure himself of allies; who leaves to the enemy the complete liberty of initiative; such a man is a traitor, even if the motives for his treason are not to render service to imperialism, but consist of petty bourgeois weakness and political blindness.

The "justification" of a policy of waiting and evasion under these conditions can only be weakness. This is a very serious argument, but we have to give a clear account to ourselves of it. We must say: the Stalinist policies in the USSR have so thoroughly disorganized economy and the relations between proletariat and peasantry, have so badly weakened the party, that the necessary premises for an active foreign policy do not exist today.

We take into consideration the force of this argument. We know that the consequences of a lying policy become transformed into objective obstacles along the road. But we draw the conclusion: a fundamental change in the policy, the methods, the leadership of the party is necessary, in order to assure the Soviet State, in addition to everything else, of a real capacity for defense and freedom of initiative internationally.

—L. TROTSKY.

Laying a stable basis under the MILITANT is the best way of assuring its regular and unhampered appearance. The most stable basis for the MILITANT is a large subscription list. Get subs from your friends and comrades!

WORKERS
OF THE WORLD.
UNITE

THE MILITANT

Weekly Organ of the Communist League of America [Opposition]

Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y. Entered as second class mail matter, November 23, 1928 at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. under the act of March 3, 1879.
VOLUME VI, NO. 23 [WHOLE NO. 170] NEW YORK, SATURDAY APRIL 15, 1933 PRICE 5 CENTS

AUSTRIA NEXT IN ORDER! Austrian Bonapartism

By Leon Trotsky

The situation in Austria is not qualitatively different from the situation in Germany, but only lags behind it in its development. After the political life in Austria had fallen under the press of the Fascist dictatorship in Germany, the culmination in Austria is drawing closer not by days, but by hours.

Austria is passing through a period that is analogous to the period of Brüning-Papen-Schleicher in Germany, or to the period of Field in Bavaria, that is, the period of semi-Bonapartist dictatorship, which maintains itself by the mutual neutralization of the proletarian and Fascist camps. For Austria too we prefer the term Bonapartism (in contradistinction to all other purely descriptive and absolutely meaningless formulations such as clerical-Fascism, legitimist-Fascism, etc., etc.), as a very clear characterization of the feature of a government that veers in between two irreconcilable camps; a government that is forced to an ever increasing degree to supplant its social support that is ebbing away from under its feet. There is expressed in the tendency toward Bonapartism the urge of the possessing classes to escape an open break with legality, a long period of civil war and the bloody Fascist dictatorship by means of military and police measures that are screened by the paragraphs kept in reserve in democratic constitutions.

There obtain historical epochs when the social foundation of the government "above all classes" grows at the expense of the extreme wings—during these periods Bonapartism can place its seal upon an entire historical epoch. But the Austrian "Bonapartism" of today like the German of yesterday, can have only an episodic character, lasting in the short interval between the democratic regime and the regime of Fascism.

It is true that the "Bonapartists" in Austria have a much wider parliamentary base and that the Fascists are much weaker than was the case in Germany. But, in the first place, the Christian Socialists are melting away while the Nazis are growing apace; secondly, behind the backs of the Nazis stands the Austrian Fascist movement. The question is settled by dynamics. Theoretical

*The "Arbeiter Zeitung" itself disturbed the ghost of Bonapartism when it wrote about the "10th Brunner of Dollfuss"; but the social-democratic sheet uses this only as a literary rattle. We would seek in vain from the Austro-Marxists, in general, for the analysis of politics from the class viewpoint. They require Marxism only to explain the past; but they motivate themselves in actual politics by psychological combinations that are second hand and by the hope that everything will turn out somehow in the end.

Illinois Hunger March Smashed

The April 7th State Hunger March organized by the Illinois Committee of the Unemployed Councils was smashingly smashed by the armed state forces—the combined forces of the state militia, the state highway police, the county sheriffs and their deputies, and, in some localities, the American Legion—under the direct leadership of Governor Homer. A conference of county sheriffs with Gov. Homer was held several days previous to the State Hunger March and immediately after that there began a reign of terror and arrests against the Hunger Marchers.

In the northern part of the state, after the large Chicago delegation met the delegation from Rockford at Ottawa, the Hunger Marchers were attacked by the state highway police and gassed and clubbed. Over fifty Hunger Marchers were arrested and Earl Lockner, the chairman of the Illinois Committee is still being held in jail. After the battle with the police in which the marchers defended themselves courageously, they were forced to turn back toward Chicago. In Peoria, Bloomington, Decatur and other places the police placed barriers on all the highways leading to Springfield, stopped every auto and questioned every person on the way toward Springfield. And if they could not give a good account of themselves they were turned back; even farmers coming into town to sell their eggs had to go thru a hard drilling by the state highway police.

In the southern part of the state the state authorities were even more vigilant, especially in and around Macoupin County where the miners have organized powerful Unemployed Councils. In Virden, a small mining town, the whole town was placed under mar-analysis, as well as the fresh experience in Germany equally bespeak the fact that the Viennese police and bureaucratic dictatorship cannot long maintain itself. Matters are rapidly coming to a head. The power must be taken either by the Fascists or by the workers.

The Possibility of Postponement
We do not know what is going on back-stage. But there cannot be any doubt that the governments of those countries which surround and oppress Austria have brought into action all the levers. Not a single one of these governments, not even Italy, has any interest in seeing the power in Austria pass into the hands of the Fascists. The leaders of the Austrian social democracy see, indubitably, in this situation the highest trump of the whole game; in their eyes the revolutionary activity of the Austrian proletariat must needs be supplanted by financial and other different sorts of pressure that can be brought by the nations of the former Entente. This reckoning is the most fallacious of all. The hostility on the part of the victor nations toward national socialism was one of the reasons for its explosive growth in Germany. The

American Committee Appeals for Exiled Russian Bolshevik-Leninists

Under the blows of Stalinist persecution and the increasing hardships of the crisis in the Soviet Union, thousands of our comrades of the Russian Opposition, in prison or exile, are enduring such privations that their very lives are in danger. Comrade Trotsky, as chairman of an International Committee for Help to the Imprisoned and Exiled Bolsheviks (Left Opposition) has written an appeal for help, which we publish below.

An American Committee of this committee has been organized, consisting of Sidney Hook, treasurer; Max Eastman, Diego Rivera, V. E. Cartwright, Herman Simpson, and B. J. Field, secretary. This committee is appealing for support to all friends of the October Revolution who want to help keep physically alive the tremendous revolutionary forces represented by the imprisoned and exiled Bolsheviks of the Left Opposition in Soviet Russia.

We ask the friends and sympathizers of the Left Opposition to support the work of the American Committee and contribute as liberally as possible to the fund which it is raising.

To All Friends of the October Revolution:
In the prisons and in the places of deportation of the Soviet Union there are thousands of Bolsheviks who built up the Party during its illegal period, who took an active part in the October Revolution, who fought during the civil wars, who laid the foundations of the Soviet State. Even now, all of them remain absolutely devoted and firm soldiers of the proletarian revolution. In the time of danger for the Soviet State they will constitute the surest detachment in its camp. They were subjected to persecution only for having criticized the policy of the leading faction—within limits where internal criticism constituted the vital element of Party democracy within Bolshevism. Among the deported Bolsheviks of the Left Opposition, the figure most widely known throughout the world is Christian Georgievich Rakovsky, former member of the Central Committee of the Party, Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Ukraine, Soviet Ambassador in Paris and in London.

A great part of the Left Opposition tried in 1928-1929 to be reinstated into the Party at the price of renouncing its right to criticism. There were several thousand internal capitulations of this kind, bound up to a certain extent with exaggerated hopes in the Five Year Plan. The experience of the past four years has resulted in the majority of the "repentant" becoming again the object of ferocious persecutions. Suffice it to say that among those arrested and deported during the last few months and above all during the last few weeks are: Zinoviev, one of the founders of the Party, permanent member of the Central Committee, Chairman of the Communist International and of the Petrograd Soviet; Kamenev, one of the closest collaborators of Lenin, permanent member of the Central Committee, adjutant to Lenin in the position of Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars, Chairman of the Moscow Soviet, I. N. Smirnov, one of the indefatigable founders of the Party during the years of Czarism, member of the Central Committee, leader of the struggle against Koltchak, member of the Council of People's Commissars; Preobrazhensky, the oldest member of the Party, one of its best-known theoreticians, member of the Central Committee, who carried out until very recently important diplomatic functions abroad. One could also cite scores of names of the best-known revolutionary Bolsheviks (V. Kasperova, L. S. Sosnovsky, B. M. Eitlin, V. Kossir, N. I. Muralov, F. Dingelstedt, V. M. Smirnov, Sapronov, Grunzel, Matchekovsky, Ostfensky, Pereversev, and others), who, during the most difficult years, constituted the framework of the Party, and along with them, hundreds and thousands of the younger generation (V. B. Klatin, the son; Solntsev, Magid, Yakov, Nevelson, Stopalov, Poznansky, Sernux and others) who went through the years of the civil war, through the years of enormous difficulties and of grandiose victories of the proletarian regime.

The situation of the imprisoned and deported Oppositionists, the majority of whom have been separated from their work and their family for the past five years, is absolutely extraordinary. They represent the Left wing of the Bol-

(Continued on Page 2)

Friday April 21, 1933 at 8 p. m.
IRVING PLAZA HALL 15 St. Irving Pl.
for the Benefit of 'THE MILITANT'

Start Fund for German Left

We have already called the attention of our readers to the Fund which is being collected on an international scale to assist the German section of the International Left Opposition in its work. Our comrades are carrying on under the greatest of difficulties. The first issue of its paper "Unser Wort" (Our Word), which came out less than two weeks after the proscription of the whole Communist press by the Hitler regime, has now been followed by the second number, this time six pages. Our comrades report that the copies of the paper which are smuggled from Czechoslovakia into Germany, are eagerly read and spread from hand to hand by the militant workers. But the obvious difficulties created by the terror regime make it imperative that the vanguard throughout the world should lend financial assistance to our German comrades. It is towards this end that the preliminary International Conference of the Left Opposition decided to establish a Fund for the German Opposition. Every member of the Opposition throughout the world is being assessed a day's wage for this purpose. In addition, we are making an urgent appeal to all our friends and sympathizers to contribute speedily and generously to this fund. The New York branch has already set itself the goal of $75.00; the other branches will act correspondingly.

The need is great and urgent! The response should be generous and speedy! Send all funds to 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y.

Unique Russian Film to Be Shown

Announcement has just been made of the first private movie showing of the first authentic and actual pictures of the important events and actions of the Russian Revolution.

The most important film you have ever seen, one you will want to see over and over.

The filming of these events was taken by over one hundred camera men working directly under the various governments and noted officials and leaders in Russia.

The life and time of the Czar and his family. The July 17th revolution. The Kornilov Counter-Revolutionary Attempt. The Rule of Milukov. The Acts of the Social Revolutionaries. The Rise of the Bolsheviks. The Role and Deeds of Lenin and Trotsky and other leaders of Bolsheviks. The growth of the Soviets. The Bolshevik Insurrection and Rise to Power. The Civil War on the various fronts. The Red Guards and Red Army in action from the uprising through the years. Grand Scenes of all the Russian Congresses of the Communist International. The Bolsheviks and the Death of Lenin. The Exile of Trotsky to Princeton.

This and more is to be seen in the greatest film on the history of Russia and the Russian Revolution.

This is a limited, private and subscription performance under the auspices of the Film Club of the New York Branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition). No tickets at the door. Members must obtain subscription tickets in advance. Subscriptions are strictly limited to the seating capacity of the hall. The film will be shown at the LABOR TEMPLE, 242 East 14th St., New York City, on Saturday, May 6th, 1933 at 8 P. M. sharp.

Members, obtain your subscription ticket at once at the headquarters of the Communist League of America (Opposition), 126 East 16th Street, New York, N. Y.

Convict Patterson United Mass Protest Must Save Scottsboro Boys

A viciously prejudiced jury composed of twelve representatives of the poisonous ideology of the reactionary, capitalist South brought in a verdict of guilty against Haywood Patterson, the first of the new trials ordered by the United States Supreme Court. According to Alabama law the jury is charged with the duty of fixing the penalty. This jury decided on death in the electric chair.

With this verdict the blood-lust ridden, southern capitalists have reaffirmed their intention to snuff out the lives of all who dare to resist and struggle against the intolerable conditions to which capitalism reduces the workers and share croppers in the South in its ruthless scramble for profit. That is the significance of the verdict for our class and our cause. As far as the Scottsboro boys themselves are concerned, it is not at all a verdict arrived at after due process of law. There is no such thing for workers in capitalist courts. It is murder done according to the dictates of the law and with due regard for the devious course of "justice" in the higher courts. It is class murder.

From the legal point of view the state had no case. Its witnesses were the usual social riff-raff shirked up by the prosecution in frame-up cases. A notorious prostitute was its chief witness. And her testimony was flatly contradicted by Ruby Bates' sensational repudiation of her former evidence. Other evidence introduced by the defense left no doubt that the state's chief witness was a perjurer. The weakness of the state's legal case was compensated for by extra-legal "arguments". Fiery crosses flamed against the night sky from the hills surrounding the town. Armed mobs threatened to storm the jail, lynch the boys, the witnesses and the defense lawyers. Armed militiamen were on duty in the courtroom. The prosecution appealed to local prejudice throughout. But in its summation it reached the depths of narrow-minded provincialism and medieval bigotry. To read it is to make the blood boil. All of this, inevitable and to be foreseen from the beginning, outweighed the legal evidence or lack of it.

That is how it was in the Mooney and the Sacco and Vanzetti trials; the same frame-up, prejudice, intimidation, corruption and infaming of ignorance and vicious prejudice in these monuments to capitalist bestiality are lessons which have been burned into the consciousness of the workers the world over. Large sections of the workers know what these trials are worth. Their experience teaches them daily what capitalist justice is. In their understanding it is an inseparable part of the capitalist system.

The capitalist press, the haud-maiden of these brutal orgies, has not been slow to discharge its duty to its masters. It pretends to be astonished by the verdict. The New York World Telegram feigns astonishment. It is sure that the verdict will be overturned in the higher courts. By this perfidious hypocrisy it strives to keep alive the illusion that justice is impartial, above the classes. The Times also bemoans the sad miscarriage of justice. But it cannot see what remains to be done. Perhaps the Governor of Alabama will pardon the victims or commute their sentence to a term of imprisonment! That is the Times' way of saying that the case is a legal one, a matter of "justice", not to be taken out of the channels of bourgeois democracy.

The N. A. A. C. P. says the same thing but says it more openly. The attack on the I. L. D. and the Communist Party for organizing a mass protest movement, which the Times only implies, the N. A. A. C. P. makes explicit. The record of this reformist organization in the Scottsboro Case is a foul blot on the pages of the struggle of the Negroes for economic, political and social equality. From the very beginning of the case it assisted the prosecution to the best of its ability. It strove with all its resources to hamstring the defense organized by the I. L. D. All through the fight it rabidly attacked the I. L. D. and the Communist Party. Clarence Darrow and Arthur Garfield Hays of its legal staff, and prominent in its executive councils, offered to enter the case on condition that all the lawyers in the defense would agree to disassociate themselves from all organizations. This was equivalent to a demand that the I. L. D. retire from the case.

The black thread of treachery runs through the policy of the N. A. A. C. P. and its white, liberal supporters and executives: John Haynes Holmes, Oswald Garrison Villard, Clarence Darrow, Arthur Garfield Hays, etc., etc. And it runs through it today. At the last meeting of its directors they adopted a resolution on the Scottsboro Case. It was reported in the Times of April 11. The Times says: "The board commended the 'firmness and fairness in which Judge Horton conducted the trial'—And,"—adopted a resolution at the meeting—expressing the belief

(Continued on Page 4)

Genuine United Front for Mooney Formed by the St. Louis Workers

St. Louis. A genuine unity movement to mobilize the workers of this city for the freedom of Tom Mooney, is now well under way. Besides the organizations which have already endorsed the movement, efforts are being made to draw in every other working class organization in the city. Below is to be found the call sent out by the "Free Tom Mooney United Front Committee", through its secretary, comrade Martin Payer, who is also secretary of the local branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition).

TO ALL DISTRICT COUNCILS, LOCAL UNIONS, LODGES, TO ALL LABOR ORGANIZATIONS, POLITICAL, FRATERNAL, CULTURAL, EDUCATIONAL, GREETINGS:

In accordance with the stirring call issued from San Quentin prison by TOM MOONEY, the St. Louis Molders' Defense Committee has taken the initiative in organizing a "FREE TOM MOONEY UNITED FRONT CONFERENCE" of all unions and working-class organizations to fight for the immediate FREEDOM OF TOM MOONEY and to work for the building of a large FREE TOM MOONEY NATIONAL CONGRESS to be held in Chicago, Illinois, April 30th to May 2nd, 1933. We are sending you herewith the call for the election of delegates to this Congress.

The freedom of TOM MOONEY is rightfully the deepest concern of the entire working-class. It was because MOONEY was a fearless fighter in behalf of organized labor and for better working conditions that he was framed and has already spent nearly 17 years of his life behind prison bars.

In order to give the widest possible support to TOM MOONEY, we feel it is necessary and timely that in St. Louis (in addition to the mass-meeting on the day of Mooney's new trial, April 26th, we also organize a joint demonstration and parade on May 1st in support of the fight for MOONEY'S FREEDOM. This will give added weight and pressure to the NATIONAL MOONEY CONGRESS in Chicago and serve to unite broad masses in the struggle.

We therefore call upon your organization to endorse the MOONEY MAY-DAY DEMONSTRATION AND PARADE IN ST. LOUIS and also to send three representatives to the United Front May-Day Conference which will be held at Turner Hall, 1508 Chouteau Avenue, on Sunday afternoon, April 16th, at 2 P. M. sharp.

SHOW SOLIDARITY OF ORGANIZED LABOR IN ST. LOUIS while our delegates are deliberating in the Chicago NATIONAL MOONEY CONGRESS on the next steps in the fight for the FREEDOM OF TOM MOONEY AND ALL CLASS-WAR PRISONERS!

Forward to the Freedom of Tom Mooney!
For a Mass Mooney May Day Demonstration!!
FREE TOM MOONEY UNITED FRONT CONFERENCE

Endorsed by:
Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee,
Unemployed Councils in St. Louis,

Moscow Trial Starts

The trial that is taking place in Moscow at present, involving the British organizers of sabotage connected with the Metro-Vickers concern, throws light upon the feverish efforts of the foreign imperialists to hasten the collapse of Soviet economy, brought to a critical state by Stalinist mismanagement. As we go to press, the stories cabled from across still bear a confused and contradictory character. We expect to have a critical account and an evaluation of the proceedings in a coming issue of The Militant.

Roosevelt Reforestation Swindle

Tens of thousands of American boys are being herded into regular army camps, presumably for forestry training. A quarter of a million will be regimented by May 15, according to Robert F. Wagner, national head of the "Civilian Conservation Corps". The government is pushing for the full quota of 250,000 by the middle of May, when the reforestation program is to begin in earnest.

The 1,800 supposedly homeless youths from New York who boarded the buses for Fort Slocum are the first victims of a novel brand of efficiency known as the "New Deal". According to the government plan, each of the nine military corps areas from New England to the Pacific Coast, will be recruiting or "conditioning" centers for the forestry workers of that area. They will be given army work clothes, army grub and live in army barracks. They will all get military training in the form of infantry drill under the strict discipline of superior officers. "Education" and "recreation" will be completed supervised by government authorities.

"We intend to make self-supporting men of them," says Adjutant Murray of Fort Slocum. Let's see what he means by that. Do the men actually receive the $30 per month that they are promised? Not at all. The "investigators" of the New York Home Relief Bureau of the Department of Public Welfare are instructed to supply 7,500 unemployed young men between the ages of 18 and 23 from off the relief list. They are neither homeless nor wandering. $25 of every $30 earned by the worker is to be deducted and turned over to the Home Relief Bureau which promptly deducts that amount from the family budget, plus $150 per week (or over $6 per month) from the food budget. Others are removed entirely from the Welfare list. Anyone who knows the narrow margin upon which "relief" families live, knows what hardships these deductions are.

Now the Home Relief Bureau of the Department of Public Welfare has on its lists 180,000 families, or almost a million individuals. It spends ten million dollars a month caring for them. Of these there are about 60,000 of what is called "work relief" under the City Commission Work Bureau. Each man works five days every other week, or a maximum of ten days a month. For this he gets $45 a month, but he is cut loose and must support his family on this sum. These on Home Relief, however, average $35 to $45 per month. The budgets are pared down to an almost unbelievable

(Continued on Page 4)

OPEN FORUM

The Farmers' Revolt and the American Workers

Speaker:
JACK WEBER

International Workers School Hall
126 East 16th Street
Sunday, April 6 1933, 8 P. M.

ADMISSION: 15 Cents
Auspices: N. Y. Branch, Communist League of America (Opposition)

Perth Amboy

THE TRAGEDY OF THE GERMAN PROLETARIAT
MUST A NEW COMMUNIST PARTY BE ORGANIZED IN GERMANY?

Speakers:
JAMES P. CANNON,
National Secretary, G. L. A. (O.)

ALBER WEISBORD,
National Secretary, C. L. S. on Sunday, April 23, 1933,
8:30 P. M.

at the OLD Y. M. H. A. HALL
Smith and McLennan Sts.
ADMISSION 15 CENTS
Joint Auspices: Communist League of America (Opposition) and Communist League of Struggle.

Friday April 21, 1933 at 8 p. m. SPRING DANCE & FESTIVAL Jazz Orchestra - Songs - Other Features
IRVING PLAZA HALL 15 St. Irving Pl. for the Benefit of 'THE MILITANT'
Auspices: New York Branch Communist League of America (Opposition) and Proletarian Club.

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Hundreds at Toronto Meeting

Toronto.—The voice of international proletarian solidarity with the German toilers, again rang out to Toronto as Jewish and German workers jammed to capacity two halls, in a stirring protest demonstration against Fascism and Jewish pogroms in Germany; hundreds of other workers again had to be turned away for lack of accommodation. Such was the response to the leaflet issued just one day previous, calling for international proletarian action against Fascism.

The "United Front Conference" which called this mass demonstration is doubly significant; first because it is the first real united front organized by the workers in Canada against Fascism, and secondly because it marks the first united front of Communist and reformist organizations held in Toronto for a number of years. While as yet the conference has been limited to Jewish proletarian bodies it was announced at the sitting by the sponsor, the "Left Poale Zion", that the labor party (reformist) has made plans to call a similar conference of all the English trade unions and labor organizations shortly to which they would become a part.

The call of the Comintern for united front action of the Communist and reformist organizations, even at this late date has already had its response. Significant is the fact that the Left Poale Zion and not the Stalinists sponsored this conference. The Stalinist press even at late as two weeks ago in an editorial reply to the Militant denied that a change of policy had taken place and that united front action of Communist and reformist organizations was permissible.

The Left Opposition was represented at the Conference by the Unzer Kampf Club and Spartacus Youth organizations. Let us now refer back to the mass demonstration itself.

The first speaker was our comrade M. Spector. The response from the gathering at his appearance must have nettled the Stalinist leaders, as it showed that their campaign of slander against him was a flop.

Comrade Spector in a true internationalist speech pointed out that Fascism was not just a Jewish question but one of the international working class. That the Jewish problem would only be solved with the victory of the proletariat over capitalism. The success of Fascism meant war against the USSR which we must defend with our last drop of blood. Organized united front action of whole international proletariat would defeat Fascism. The L. O. welcomes a real united front action of Communist and reformist organizations against their common enemy. For two years we have fought for its realization.

I will pass over the speeches of the Left Poale Zion the German worker and the light wing representative and come to that of com. Ehrlich, the Stalinist spokesman. Comrade Ehrlich also made a very able speech on behalf of his group. Comrade Ehrlich did not lack the gall to stand up and say, "we always stood for united front action of Communist and reformist organizations, and that it was the reformist leadership who alone were against this." The "united front from below only," "social-Fascism"—where, oh where, lie ye buried!

After writing the above, the latest issue of the Kampf, the Stalinist organ, in the Jewish language came off the press, with a report of the conference, in which they say, "...The struggle against Fascism cannot be widely developed if the Conference will base itself on representatives of organizations which don't exist and have no following amongst the masses", (i. e., the Spartacus Youth Club, Unzer Kampf. If this is true then we ask the editors of the "Kampf", why the continual venomous attacks against us in your press. Is it logical for a paper to write editorials against people "who don't exist" and "have no following"? The editors of the Kampf are not so illogical; they are only trying to cover up the truth, which is the growth of the Left Opposition and the crisis inside their own ranks. Workers Unity also devotes more than a whole page of the last issue to refuting the ideas of the "handful of Trotskyists" who don't exist. Even the C. L. D. L. (I. L. D.) must also condemn the "half dozen Trotskyists who have no following".

Further on in this "report" we learn that "Spector voted against all the proposals of the Left wing and supported the Left Poale Zion." Do the editors of the "Kampf" believe this also? No! We know their reply, "What are a few lies more or less when it is all in the interests of the revolution?" Unfortunately for the political position of the Stalinist leaders, the number of lies seem to be growing more and more, and the interests of the revolution have not obtained any gains by such methods.

GREEK L. O. IN ELECTIONS

In view of the opportunist election tactic of the official party which appeared on the ballot as the Workers' and Peasants' Bloc—the Greek Archio-Marxists (Left Opposition) participated independently in the recent election. It succeeded in bringing the full Communist program before the workers at rallies as well as in advancing the campaign for a united Communist party.

A Stalinist United Front in 'Frisco

San Francisco.—After an unbelievably long delay the Communist Party in San Francisco decided to have a united front mass meeting in protest against the Fascist terror in Germany. It seems that the protest mass meeting of the Jewish population against the persecutions of Jews reminded the Stalinist leadership that something is going on in far-away Germany. But at this point the great strategists of small maneuvers were immediately confronted with the problem of how to get up the meeting. It is all right for the Communist Party in New York to call a united front mass meeting in its own name. These hard boiled Easterners can stand the sudden change of temperature. But how will the sensitive Californians with their inflammable imaginations stand the sudden change of the hot temperature of the "Third Period" to the cool realization of the bankruptcy of the theory of "Social Fascism"? The bureaucratic imagination put so severely to the test of its life, flares up in the racket of its previous experience and lands... on the Workers Cultural Federation. That small, till now obscure organization will start the great tempest which will sweep Hitler off his feet! The united front mass meeting will be called by this organization... with "the wholehearted support" of the Communist party!

When I came to that "united front" conference I found there some thirty people, mostly representing themselves and almost all familiar faces. The small room was so big and the anticipations of the strategists so modest that the representative of the I. L. D. told us that the next meeting will take place in a smaller room: it will be less expensive.

When the names of the delegates were being called I handed in the following note: "Being a member of the Communist League of America (Opposition), an organization which is fighting in the front against the danger of Fascism in Germany, I ask to be seated at this united front conference as a fraternal delegate." And as soon as his chance came a party bureaucrat jumped up and made a motion not to seat me. Another supported him by saying that there is no organization of the Opposition in the city. I reminded him to no avail that at the Tom Mooney united front conference the delegate from the Food Workers Industrial Union was seated as a full-fledged delegate though there is not even a single coffee stand which it controls in this city. The German Cultural Association was adamant in not listening to reason.

Anyway the delegate of the A. F. of L. Union of the Bakery Wagon Drivers, an old timer in the left wing movement, asked for the floor and vigorously protested against bringing this kind of factional fight into the united front. He said that "if a corrupt A. F. of L. faker would come in he would get the floor right away, but when a militant worker who is willing to fight against Fascism is offering his cooperation, he is shouted down. These are the methods of the A. F. of L. and the Socialist party just as well as the opportunist leaders of I. W. W." After that some of the delegates asked me again to explain what kind of an organization the Left Opposition is, which I willingly did. That closed the discussion. A motion was carried to send a telegram to the German ambassador in Washington with the request to deliver it to Hitler. Except that little accident with the "Trotskyist", everything went so smoothly that even the Moscow Art Theatre could not do better: the rules were very well distributed.

L. GREEN

For the Opposition!

Form American Section of International Commission

(Continued from Page 1)

sheviki Party and of the world labor movement. That is just why they were struck down during the years of political ebb in the U. S. S. R. and of successful counter-revolution in the whole world. The repression which has struck them becomes more difficult as the events confirm the correctness of the criticism and the warnings of the Left Opposition. The shortage of supplies in the U. S. S. R. now renders exceedingly difficult the existence of all strata of the population, even in the industrial and cultural centers of the country. It is not difficult to imagine the unbearable physical privations to which are subjected the thousands of opponents of the ruling faction, scattered throughout prisons and in the most distant choked-off points of Siberia and Central Asia. Never before have the deported suffered such privations as today. In the years of the revolutionary high tide, the liberal and radical bourgeoisie rendered substantial assistance to the deported and the imprisoned. In the years of world revolutionary ebb, of world crisis and of famine in the U. S. S. R., the vanguard of the October Revolution can expect support only from its most devoted and its true friends.

How necessary and urgent this support is, is attested best of all by this extract from a letter from Moscow which I have just received: "I want to write to you especially with regard to the deportees, and their difficult situation. Difficult is the least one can call it. Their situation is horrible. The comrades are literally given up to their fate—hunger and the elements. They are not given work. They are deprived of rations, they have insufficient warm clothing, they are never through with sufferings, cold and hunger. Yesterday came—a rare event—a letter from V.: 'They want to get us by hunger. We will not do penance. We are right. We will die of hunger, but we will not do penance.' 'We make collections, but it is very risky here: to help the Oppositionists with a chevron means to fall into the lists of enemies, and to be deported. And money does no good, since, in the places of deportation, it is impossible to buy anything and from here we can send practically nothing. We need foreign coupons, we need foreign exchange.'"

"To whatever you can afford, undertake a campaign for the benefit of the deported Oppositionists. The question is one of the physical destruction of our comrades; sincere and devoted revolutionists. Many of them have proved for decades their fidelity to the revolution, to Bolshevism, to the Soviet State."

In appealing to you for help, I am fulfilling an elementary duty toward my friends, my compatriots in ideas and in arms. I hope that you will accomplish your duty toward the fighters of the October Revolution. Modest as the help of each one may be, we must make sure of it, for the need brooks no delay.

Subscriptions can be sent to the following address: SIDNEY HOOK, Treasurer of the American Communist Party, 234 Lincoln Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Accounting for the sums received and for their distribution will either be published in the press or sent periodically to all the subscribers.

L. TROTSKY.

Chairman of the Commission for Help to the Imprisoned and Deported Bolsheviks (Left Opposition).

Illinois Hunger March Smashed

(Continued from Page 1)

among the miners. To portray the horrors of the unemployment among the Illinois miners needs someone with a Dantesque imagination. And now that the summer months are almost upon us, the economic situation throughout the state is growing worse, with factories and coal mines closing down. More and more workers are forced to organize in order to get their relief from the state. That is why the state officials mobilized the armed forces of the whole state to combat and crush the Hunger March. But despite the reign of terror that was let loose against the unemployed workers, the workers responded in great masses to the call of the Unemployed Councils for the March on Springfield. In many localities many hundreds gathered and waited to go to Springfield, but were unable to start because of the lack of transportation.

After the Hunger March was smashed and the various columns of the Marchers were forced to turn back to their home towns, the Governor issued a statement that he would allow an audience to a committee of twenty, picked by the Hunger Marchers. After the Governor had put on a reign of terror the like of which has never before been attempted in the state of Illinois, this gesture was nothing more nor less than a Cornish hug and a political snare.

The Left Opposition warned the state committee in advance that this maneuver on the part of the Governor was nothing more than political chicanery and that to go before the Governor with a committee of twenty would not only be capitulating to him, but also, a betrayal in the eyes of the thousands of unemployed workers who took part in the Hunger March, and that the correct revolutionary policy under the circumstances would be to boycott the Governor. In line with this policy the Hunger March Fraction of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition) and the Spartacus Youth Club issued a statement. The statement was then shown to several of the Hunger Marchers and the result was that they immediately saw that our policy and statement was correct and refused to go to see the Governor. But, of course, the Stalinist bureaucrats, had only one political tactic—handed down to them from above. When it was smashed by the enemy they were left in a quagmire and could not see through the trap laid for them by the Governor. So when the committee appeared before the Governor, he cuttily chided the committee for organizing the whole demonstration. And so, again, if the Stalinists had accepted the correct policy of the Left Opposition the movement could have been ahead, at least, a few steps.

—JOSEPH ANGELO.

STATEMENT OF THE COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF AMERICA (Left Opposition) ON THE HUNGER MARCH TO SPRINGFIELD.

Governor Horney has invited a committee of twenty representatives of the Hunger March (State) to Springfield to consult with him at 4 P. M. on April 7, 1933. Bearing in mind the events which preceded this invitation, we have decided to emphatically boycott this "liberal" offer of the Governor and to issue this statement to the workers of the State of Illinois:

The Governor, after violating the rights of the workers by submitting them to terror and attack, has ironically requested a meeting with himself and the delegates of the Hunger March, which is, in essence, a request for the participation ants of the march to sheepishly bow to the tyranny, constitutional violations, and terror of the State officialdom.

Before inviting this delegation to the Capitol, Horney had ordered his armed forces to terrorize the Hunger Marchers break up all meetings and gatherings of the unemployed; stop all columns of marchers coming to Springfield by tear gas bombs, clubs, and martial law. Active leaders of the marchers have been arrested in all parts of the State. Armed guards patrol all roads leading into Springfield. The April 6, Springfield meeting was broken up and the April 7, demonstration prohibited by the armed forces of the Governor.

The striking miners of Illinois have been terrorized by the state police and company gunmen. The miners of the P. M. A. have fought the combined guards of Horney, Leahy, Lewis and Robinson thru mass pressure and have organized their union. Today the miners and workers of Illinois intend to use mass pressure to obtain immediate relief and other demands as listed in the program of the Hunger March.

The bosses and their Governor fear the mass pressure of the workers and are doing everything possible to stop it. The Governor fears the mass pressure of the unemployed workers and has resorted to brute force which succeeded in smashing the March. Governor Horney, office boy for the Leahy Coal Co. and other capitalists, will "allow" us to send a lobby-committee of 20 to present our demands. Such a gesture can serve only to separate the leaders from the masses. The bosses and their Governor "urge" the workers to stay home and to send a committee in place of masses of unemployed. Such a committee without the workers, he will consent to see.

Workers' Committee to visit the Governor, without the masses behind them, or after the masses have been driven out by boss terror, have no power. Such a committee will be used by the Governor to fool the workers, notwithstanding the intentions of the committee. Only the mass pressure of the workers can be of value in fighting the bosses. Just to the degree of mass pressure exerted by our class, precisely to that degree will the capitalists and their government apparatus grant us our immediate demands.

Workers! Do not let the terrorism of the bosses stop us in our struggle for our demands. We must return to our cities, to our unemployed councils, to our workers' organizations to increase the activity, to insure and to prepare for the exertion of mass pressure that will be powerful enough to smash the terror of the bosses and their government, as instituted in the state of Illinois.

Horney's terrorism against the workers, employed and unemployed, is the prelude to a period of increased terror against the strike of the Illinois miners under the leadership of the P. M. A. as well as new attacks against the unemployed.

We call upon all workers in the state of Illinois to continue and prove with increased activity to bring about the mass pressure necessary to break this new offensive. A united front of all trade union, unemployed and labor organizations is an absolute prerequisite to the accomplishment of this task. We call upon you to demand:

1. For immediate relief for all unemployed, ($5.00 for single workers, $7.50 for families of two, etc.)
2. Unemployment insurance at the expense of the employers and the state.
3. The six-hour day—five day week, with no reduction in pay.
4. Long term credits to aid recognition of the Soviet Union.
5. Rescinding of martial law and withdrawal of all troops from the coal areas. Repeal of the criminal syndicalist law.
6. No discrimination against negroes and strikers. For the right to picket, demonstrate and organize. For the right of workers to the highways.
7. For the immediate and unconditional release of all leaders of the Hunger March arrested in the struggle.

Hunger March Fraction, Communist League of America, Spartacus Youth Club

Neumann Is New Leader

Unser Wort, the illegal paper of the German Left Opposition, reports in its second issue:

The Stalinists have already found a scapegoat for their latest political crime. Ernst Thaelmann has been deprived of his function on the grounds of "improper conduct" and... his successor bears the name of none other than Heinz Neumann!

In a year ago Heinz Neumann, was discarded for "big theoretical mistakes". Neumann's confusionism was only different in its shading from that of Thaelmann. In the factional struggle that ensued, Thaelmann came out on top. Neumann went to Moscow to recognize his mistakes and conceded Thaelmann's correctness on all questions. "An important chapter of struggle had been concluded on the ideological front."

Now Thaelmann has suffered shipwreck and "holous politics" the "disrupter" of yesterday has become the "historical leader" of today. But the patron of the "theoretician" is not one whit better than Thaelmann.

Fortunately, the Stalinists have lost every shred of authority among the advanced workers in Germany. The workers are turning toward revolutionary Marxism, which the Left Opposition alone embodies and represents.

—SOL LANKIN.

Voices from Germany

The Condition of the Party After the Fascist Victory

(We publish below extracts from letters or correspondence from Germany. Everyone will understand that we have had to change the names. But all the notes we publish below are taken either from illegal leaflets or journals published by the Opposition, or from letters. Every fact reported is strictly exact. From this is outlined a tragic, but true picture. What the proletarian needs above all in these trying days is the truth, and not the bragadoccio of bankrupt bureaucrats. After having seen things as they are, every proletarian will be better able to know what is to be done: to fight tenaciously for the triumph of the ideas of the Left Opposition.—Ed.)

FROM THE BERLIN DISTRICT (March 10)

For several days we have been asking all the party comrades: "How do you estimate the situation and the perspectives of the struggle against Fascism?" I have seen dozens of workers. A categorical and unanimous opinion was the result. The conclusive victory of Hitler is generally estimated as assured and inevitable.

"As an organization, the party scarcely exists any longer. After the loss of the legal apparatus of propaganda and of the bureaucratic apparatus, it has scattered like ashes. Social democrats and trade unions are powerless. Mass resistance is impossible. Scattered and not very significant actions in the least case; in case of an attempt at battle: decapitation."

A number of every lamentable concrete examples are given of the state of the party organization. In the large centers of the Rhine, the party has not had any meetings of the nuclei since January 30. Meetings of 60 functionaries are called out of whom 5 came together at one time and 17 at another. No leaflet has been issued by the party, at Cologne for example.

Since the prohibition of the press, the apparatus has vanished in thin air, without leaving behind any instructions. In the Cologne district (3,000,000 inhabitants), the Communist party has had 14,000 members for years. Official figures show that in 1932 there were 15,368 new members and 43,174 dropping out, that is a fluctuation of about 100 percent. This is characteristic for a whole number of districts. One of the principal leaders was a member of the Nazi party for nine years and participated in the Fascist putsch in Bavaria in 1923!

The Youth (400 members) could not even get together a general meeting; nobody came. All this is symptomatic and true to different degrees in all the districts, especially in Berlin.

Since the occupation of the Liebknecht House, isolated groups are thinking of self-defense, but, abandoned by the leadership, without plan, and only by individual methods.

Here, a large number of party members consider that there is nothing more to look forward to from the party, and that only the trade unions can save the situation by taking the initiative in the struggle. Complete passivity. A comrade from I. L. D. reports that a nucleus (typical) has lost 41 out of 154 members in the last few months.

In S., before the elections, there were many party members who had the point of view: "First Fascism and then we come." The pressure of Fascism will lead to the formation of a broad united front from below. Meanwhile, no general strike, no fighting cartels, but the formation of partisan troops to disarm and "liquidate" the storm troops. It should be said that the Fascist storm troops were weak in this district. Two days before the burning of the Reichstag, the International Red Aid organized a meeting where the speaker spoke for two hours against the "main enemy"—social Fascism—without mentioning a word about Hitler.

In M., the initiative in the partisan struggles proceeds more from the members of the Reichsbanner than from the Communist party—which is waiting for instructions which do not come.

It is this state of the party which is making a deep impression upon the comrades and is making them draw the following conclusion: Stalinism has ideologically shattered the proletarian vanguard; it has thus delivered the proletariat to the Fascist executioners whose victory is assured in advance.

FROM THE BRANDENBURG DISTRICT (Berlin)

In the intellectual and leading centers of the social democracy is to be observed a spirit of fear-stricken capitulation. The prohibition of the Reichsbanner in Thuringia took place without the slightest protest. In Leipzig, the leaders claim that they are prepared to defend their own against the storm troops if they attack as Nazi bands and not as police!

In Berlin, the terror has shattered—is it only for the time being?—the party. In spite of the attempt to live on the basis of "groups of five", not a single leaflet, no instructions come to these groups. An instructor who came to speak exclusively an organizational questions, is interrogated: "What have you to say about the political situation?" He replies: "Do not talk to me about it, we ourselves don't know where we stand!" It is the intention to preserve only an organization of restricted cadres, excluding the majority of the members.

The discouragement is great: comrades no longer even dare to thing of physical self-defense. In Charlottenburg, the storm troops make expeditions; they beat up and kill active Communists, openly, in the streets, before the eyes of other comrades who are part of the defense organizations but who look on at these acts of terror without budging. They are beginning to apply the Italian method of castor oil; workers are martyred, are "killed in flight". The terror is beginning in the factories; for the time being—the workers remain motionless.

ON THE TRADE UNION POLICY OF THE PARTY

(From a circular of the Left Opposition in Saxony towards the end of February.)

Hitler is chancellor. We are before the great. Soon the Communist party itself will be dissolved and with it all the workers' organizations. More than ever, the immediate creation of an Opposition Left wing inside the trade unions, the re-entry of the Left Trade Union Organization into the free trade unions, presents itself as a question of prime importance. Before the 12th Plenum, the party demanded the presentation at all costs of Red lists for the elections to the factory councils. The most active comrades, forced to present Red lists in the factories and to carry out this policy of the R. T. U. O. in the reformist federations, were kicked out by the hundreds, and lost the leadership of the opposition in the trade union federations, and in part, lost even the slightest contact with the members of the reformist trade unions. This line has led to the isolation of our party from the organic masses and has delivered them, bound hand and foot, to the reformist bureaucracy. The party must dissolve the independent federations and lead the R. T. U. O. towards an opposition within the trade unions.

(The following letter was sent to us by a sympathizer. It paints, in living terms, the heroic struggle of the German proletariat against the Fascist bands and Hitler's police.)

Hamburg.—We had just finished our dinner when young J. who had gone to his room, came back running. "Listen to the machine guns, there is some shooting at Rotenburg." "That's it, it's the revolution!" We run to the window. There is a frightful massacre. We witness a horrifying battle. Some neighbors are all aroused against the Communists. "They are going to seize something", etc.

"The shots grow rarer. I go out. I run. Soon I detect searchlights in the sky. I march in that direction. There are workers hustening there too. After about a quarter of an hour's walk I reached the Communist district, Rotenburg. Cops everywhere in squads. In one corner is a crowd of workers and cops. I keep on walking. All of a sudden: 'Hands up!' I kept right on. At the next corner: 'Clear the streets! Stop or we shoot!'"

The people crowd into the doorway, I along with them. After about five minutes, we go out again. This is the place of the tragedy. The searchlights scrutinize every shadow, every door, the roofs, the sidewalks. The moment we stop, a ray of light blinds our eyes. The cops in helmets keep the crowds moving with nightsticks and revolvers in hand. Some among them are carrying a kind of sub-machine gun.

I circulate among the workers, discuss with them, observe everything that is going on. A troop of 150 Nazis is marching into the Red quarter (as they have been doing for more than a week), the workers shoot at them from the windows and from the roof-tops; the Nazis return the shots, the police with them. This morning, the same thing in Barnbeck.

To come back to the original subject. First of all, the social democratic leaders do not want any alliances. The Communists, beaten down and pursued, adopted the tactic of mixing with every socialist demonstration. Sunday, the socialist leaders, finding that Communists were participating in great number in their march, had them driven out by the police. Many socialist workers protested. That same night the social democratic papers published a circular of the Communist OEC recommending to the functionaries to mix with the causing disorder and to force the socialist leaders to call the police against the Communist workers. Wels is basing himself upon this document in his rejection of the united front.

Finally, the next day at 3:30 P. M., the dramatic moment: The Reichstag is burning. The press denounces the Communists and published so-called documents that were supposed to be found in the Karl Liebknecht House. There are arrests. March 1, 1933

Communism and Syndicalism

by LEON TROTSKY

Some fundamental considerations on the relation of the party to the trade union movement with particular reference to the experiences of the French labor movement. 15 cents

Pioneer Publishers
84 East 10th Street, New York.

For the United Front of Defense Against Hitlerism

(Continued from last issue)

The united front must have its organs. There is no need of imagining what these may be. The situation itself is dictating the nature of these organs. In many localities, the workers have already suggested the form of organization of the united front after the manner of defense cartels basing themselves on all the local proletarian organizations and establishments. This is an initiative which must be grasped, deepened, consolidated, extended to cover the industrial centers with cartels, by linking them up with each other and by preparing a German workers' congress of defense.

The fact that the unemployed and the employed workers are becoming increasingly estranged from each other bears within itself a deadly danger, not only to the collective agreements but also for the trade unions without there even being any need of a Fascist crusade. The united front between social democrats and Communists means before all the united front of the employed and unemployed workers. Without that, any serious struggle in Germany is quite unthinkable.

The Red Trade Union Opposition (R. T. O.) must enter into the free trade unions as a Communist fraction. That is one of the principal conditions of the success of the united front. The Communists within the trade unions must enjoy the rights of workers' democracy and in the first place, the right of full freedom of criticism. On their part, they must respect the statutes of the trade unions and their discipline.

The defense against Fascism is not an isolated thing. Fascism is only a cogwheel in the hands of human capital. The aim of the crushing of proletarian democracy is to raise the rule of exploitation and labor power. There lies an immense field for the united front of the proletarian; the struggle for the daily bread, extended and sharpened, lends directly under present conditions to the struggle for the workers' control of production.

The factories, the mines, the large estates fulfill their social functions thanks only to the labor of the workers. Can it be that the latter have not the right to know where the owner is directing the establishment, why he is reducing production and driving out the workers, how he is fixing prices, etc.? We will be answered: "Commercial secrets." What are commercial secrets? A plot of the capitalists against the workers and the people as a whole. Producers and consumers, the workers, in this two-fold capacity, must conquer the right to control all the operations of their establishments, unmask fraud and deceit in order to defend their interests and the interests of the people as a whole. The struggle for workers' control of production can and should become the slogan of the united front.

On the ground of organization, the forms necessary for the cooperation between social democratic workers and Communist workers will be found without difficulty; it is only necessary to pass over from words to deeds.

THE IRRECONCILABLE CHARACTER OF THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC AND THE COMMUNIST PARTIES

Now, if the common defense against the attack of capital is possible, can we not go still farther and form a genuine bloc of the two parties on all the questions? Then the polemic between the two would take on an internal, pacific and cordial character. Certain Left social democrats, of the type of Seydewitz, as is known, even go so far as to dream of a complete union of the social democracy and the Communist party. But all this is nevertheless a vain dream! What separates the Communists from the social democracy are antagonisms on fundamental questions. The simplest way of translating the essence of their disagreements is this: the social democracy considers itself the democratic doctor of capitalism; we are its revolutionary grave-diggers.

The irreconcilable character of the two parties appears with particular clearness in the light of the recent evolution of Germany. Leipzig laments that in calling Hitler to power the bourgeois classes have disrupted the "integration of the workers into the State" and he warns the bourgeoisie against the "dangers" flowing from it (Vorwaerts, February 15, 1933). Leipzig thus makes himself the watchdog of the bourgeois state by desiring to preserve it from the proletarian revolution. Can we even dream of union with Leipzig?

The Vorwaerts prides itself every day on the fact that hundreds of thousands of social democrats died during the war "for the ideal of a finer and freer Germany"... it only forgets to explain why this finer Germany turned out to be the Germany of Hitler-Hugenberg. In reality, the German workers, like the workers of the other belligerent countries, died as cannon fodder, as slaves of capital. To idealize this fact is to continue the treason of August 4, 1914.

The Vorwaerts continues to appeal to Marx, to Engels, to Wilhelm Liebknecht, to Bebel, who from 1848 to 1871, spoke of the struggle for the unity of the German nation. Lying appeals! At that time, it was a question of completing the bourgeois revolution. Every proletarian revolutionist had to fight against the particularism and provincialism inherited from feudalism. Every proletarian revolutionist had to fight against this particularism and provincialism in the name of the creation of a national State. At the present time, such an objective is invested with a progressive character only in China, in India, in China, in India, in Indonesia and other backward colonial and semi-colonial countries. For the advanced countries of Europe, the national frontiers are exactly the same reactionary chains as the feudal frontiers were at one time. Quite true! But these chains have become aged, infirm and have fallen into senility. The nation, like all economy, and democracy, as a form of the domination of the bourgeoisie, have been transformed into fetters upon the productive forces and civilization. Let us recall again Goethe: "All that is born is doomed to perish."

A few more million beings may be sacrificed for the "corridor" for Alsace-Lorraine, for Malmedy. These disputed bits of land may be covered with three, five, ten rows of corpses. All this may be called national defense. But humanity will not progress because of it; on the contrary, it will fall backward into barbarism on all fours. The way out is not in the "national liberation" of Germany, but in the liberation of Europe from national barriers. It is a problem which the bourgeoisie cannot resolve, any more than the feudal lords in their time were able to put an end to participation. Hence the coalition with the bourgeoisie is doubly reprehensible. A proletarian revolution is necessary. A federation of the proletarian republics of Europe and the whole world is necessary.

Social patriotism is the program of doctors of capitalism; internationalism is the program of the grave-diggers of bourgeois society. This antagonism is irreconcilable.

DEMOCRACY AND DICTATORSHIP

The social democrats consider the democratic constitution to be above the class struggle. For us, the class struggle is above the democratic constitution. Can it be that the experience undergone by post-war Germany has passed without leaving a trace, just as the experience undergone during the war? The November revolution brought the social democracy to power. The social democracy spurred the powerful movement of the masses along the road of "right" and the "Constitution". The whole political life which followed in Germany evolved on the basis and within the framework of the Weimar republic.

The results are at hand: bourgeois democracy is transformed legally, practically, into a Fascist dictatorship. The secret is simple enough: bourgeois democracy, just as the Fascist dictatorship, are the instruments of one and the same class: the exploiters. It is absolutely impossible to prevent the replacement of one instrument by the other by appealing to the Constitution, the Supreme Court at Leipzig, new elections, etc.; what is necessary is to mobilize the revolutionary forces of the proletariat. Constitutional fetishism brings the best aid to Fascism. Today this is no longer a prognostication, a theoretical affirmation, but the living reality. I ask you, social democratic worker: If the Weimar democracy blazed the trail for the Fascist dictatorship, how is one to expect it to blaze the trail for socialism?

—But can't we social democratic workers win the majority in the democratic Reichstag? —That you cannot. Capitalism has ceased to develop, it is putrefying. The number of industrial workers is no longer growing. An important section of the proletariat is being degraded under continual unemployment. By themselves, these social facts exclude the possibility of any stable and methodical development of a labor party in parliament as before the war. But even if, in the face of all probability, the labor representation in parliament should grow rapidly, would the bourgeoisie wait for a peaceful expropriation? The governmental machinery is entirely in its hands! Even admitting that the bourgeoisie allows the moment to pass and permits the proletariat to gain a parliamentary representation of fifty-one percent, would it not raise itself by its own strength? Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

Yes, the dictatorship in the Soviet Union at the present time has an extremely bureaucratic and distorted character. I have personally criticized more than once in the press the present Soviet regime which is a distortion of the workers' state. Thousands upon thousands of my friends in the prisons and the place of exile for having fought against the Stalinist bureaucracy. Now even if one judges the negative sides of the present Soviet regime it is necessary to preserve a correct historical perspective. If the German proletariat, much more numerous and more civilized than the Russian proletariat, were to take the power tomorrow, this would not only open up immense economic and cultural stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only those sacrifices which blaze the trail to a better future. That's the first objection I heard you make. The first, but not the only one.

The sufferings of the Russian workers are considerable because in Russia, as a consequence of specific historical factors, was born the first proletarian state which, from an extreme poverty, is obliged to raise itself by its own strength. Don't forget that Russia was the most backward country of Europe. The proletariat there constituted only a tiny part of the population. In this country, the dictatorship of the proletariat necessarily had to assume the harshest forms. Hence the consequences which flowed from it: the development of the bureaucracy which holds the power and the chain of errors committed by the political leadership which has fallen under the influence of this bureaucracy. If at the end of 1918, when the power was completely in its hands, the social democracy had entered boldly upon the road to socialism and had concluded an indissoluble alliance with Soviet Russia, the whole history of Europe would have received a different orientation and humanity would have arrived at socialism in a much shorter space of time and with infinitely less sacrifice. It is not our fault that this did not happen.

There is no other road. —What is to be done under such conditions? My social democratic interlocutor will ask. —The proletarian revolution. —And then? —The dictatorship of the proletariat. —As in Russia? The privations and the sacrifices? The complete

stifling of freedom of opinion? No, not for me.

—It's just because you are not disposed to tread the road of the revolution and the dictatorship that we are both unable to form one single party. But nevertheless allow me to tell you that your objection is not worthy of a conscious proletarian. Yes, the privations of the Russian workers are considerable. But in the first place, the Russian workers know in the name of what they are making these sacrifices. Even if they should undergo a defeat, humanity would have learned a great deal from their experience. Now in the name of what did the German working class sacrifice itself in the years of the imperialist war? Or again, in the years of the unemployment? (To what do these sacrifices lead, what do they yield, what do they teach? Worth of man are only

An Interview with Leon Trotsky

(We are glad to print the following interview given in principle by Leon Trotsky to comrade B. J. Field in connection with an article published several months ago by a bourgeois apologist for the Stalinist regime. As the interview deals with questions of more than passing interest, it retains all its value as an exposition of the Bolshevik-Leninist standpoint on questions in dispute in the Communist movement.—Ed.)

LENIN AND SOCIALISM IN ONE COUNTRY

In the question of the united front as well as in all the broad questions of revolutionary strategy and tactics, the Left Opposition regards itself as continuing the authentic Bolshevik line, as against the efforts of the Stalinist faction to revise it in an empirical and bureaucratic manner.

This sense of the continuity of the revolutionary tradition runs clearly through the answers which Trotsky gave to the writer's questions on the issues of principle which Mr. Fischer, following the Stalinists, takes for granted as having been decided against Trotsky's views.

Here are his answers:

Question: "Lenin and all his followers were convinced at that time (in 1917) that only a revolution abroad could save them from certain doom. . . . They did not hope to survive unless revolutions in Europe and Asia weakened external hostility and gave Russia a breathing space for domestic entrenchment," says Mr. Fischer. Was Lenin speaking only in an immediate military and political sense of saving Russia from defeat and subjugation, or did he have in mind the whole perspective of Russia's developing on its own soil through the dictatorship of the proletariat to the ultimate Communist goal?"

Trotsky: "That affirmation of Mr. Fischer's, like a series of others, proves his lack of familiarity with the theory and the history of Bolshevism. In 1917 there was not a single Bolshevik who considered possible the realization of a socialist society in a single country, and least of all in Russia. In the appendix to my History of the Russian Revolution I give a detailed and documented study of the ideas of the Bolshevik party on the October revolution. This study, I hope, will make it impossible in the future to ascribe to Lenin the theory of Socialism in a single country. Here I will limit myself to a single quotation, which in my opinion has a decisive character, Lenin died in January, 1924; three months later Stalin expounded in writing Lenin's conception of the proletarian revolution. I quote word for word: '...to overthrow the power of the bourgeoisie and to establish the power of the proletariat in one country, still does not signify the full victory of Socialism. The main task of Socialism—the organization of Socialist production—remains still in the future. Is it possible to fulfill this task, is it possible to achieve the definite victory of Socialism in one country without the combined efforts of the proletarians of several advanced countries? No, it is impossible. For the overthrow of the bourgeoisie, the efforts of one country are sufficient—for this we have the testimony of the history of our revolution. For the definitive victory of Socialism, for the organization of Socialist production, the efforts of one country, especially of a peasant country like Russia, are insufficient—for that are required the efforts of the proletarians of several advanced countries. . . . Stalin closes the exposition of these ideas with the words, 'Such are in general the characteristic features of Lenin's conception of the proletarian revolution' (Problems of Leninism, emphasis mine).

"Only in the Fall of 1924 did Stalin discover that it is especially Russia, as distinguished from other countries, which can by its own forces build up a socialist society. . . . After having established its power and assumed the leadership of the peasantry," he wrote in a new edition of the same work, 'the victorious proletariat can and must build up socialist society.' Can and must! The proclamation of this new conception is closed by the same words, 'Such are in general the characteristic features of Lenin's conception of the proletarian revolution.' In the course of a single year Stalin ascribed to Lenin two directly opposed conceptions of the fundamental question of socialism. The first version represents the real tradition of the party; the second took shape in Stalin's mind only after the death of Lenin, in the course of the struggle against 'Trotskyism.'

Question: "Is there reason to believe that the world revolution, or a series of social upheavals on the Eurasian continent, ceased to be an immediate possibility by 1921?"

Answer: "What shall we call an 'immediate possibility'? In 1923 the situation in Germany was profoundly revolutionary, but what was lacking for a victorious revolution was a correct strategy. At that time, I wrote a study about this question, 'The Lessons of October,' which served as a pre-text for my elimination from the government. In 1925-27 the revolution in China was destroyed by the false revolutionary strategy of the Stalinist faction. To this last question I consecrate my book, 'Problems of the Chinese Revolution' (issued by the Pioneer Publishers, New York, 1932). It is quite clear that the German and Chinese revolutions in case of victory would have changed the face of

Answer Given to Views Of Louis Fischer

Europe and Asia, and perhaps of the whole world. Once again, he who ignores the problems of revolutionary strategy would do better not to talk about revolutions at all."

Question: "Is it true that 'a revolution germinates only in national soil, that it does not result from imported money or pamphlets or agitators, and that the capitalists will do more than the Communists to undermine capitalism?' Is it true that 'by its very existence a truly Soviet, near-Socialist system . . . must further the cause of revolution in other countries,' and that 'a strong Socialist Soviet Union is the most effective stimulus to world revolution'?"

Answer: "The statements quoted in this question contradict each other. That the existence of the Soviet Union has an international revolutionary significance is a commonplace equally recognized by friends and foes. In spite of the existence of the Soviet Union, however, the proletarian revolution during the past years has not recorded a victory in any other country. In Russia itself the proletariat conquered in spite of the fact that there was no Soviet State in existence at the time elsewhere. For the victory are necessary, not only certain objective conditions, internal as well as external, but also certain subjective factors—the party, the leadership, the strategy. Our differences with Stalin are entirely of a strategic character. Suffice it to say that it was carried through, in 1917, the policy of Stalin, the Soviet State would not be in existence today. It is therefore not true that the mere existence of the Soviet Union is capable of assuring the victory of the revolution in other countries. But it is also false that the revolution ripens and comes to development only in the national soil. Otherwise what purpose is served by the Communist International?"

Question: "Granting that a capitalist economy, the more highly it is developed, becomes the more dependent on other countries, is it less true of the Soviet Union, because it is developing toward a Socialist economy?"

Answer: "National self-sufficiency or 'autarchy' is the ideal of Hitler, not of Marx and Lenin. Socialist economy cannot reject the huge advantages of the world division of labor: on the contrary, it will carry it to the highest development. But in practice, it is not a question of the future socialist society, with an established internal equilibrium, but of the given technically and culturally backward country which in the interests of industrialization and collectivization is forced to export as much as possible in order to import as much as possible."

Question: "Is it true that the theory of the permanent revolution, which is the platform on which you have fought Stalin since 1924, was 'born in a time of Bolshevik mental depression' caused by a series of failures both at home and abroad, or does this theory represent a consistent line found in all your political writings and actions after 1903—Mr. Fischer makes both statements?"

Answer: "The theory of the permanent revolution, in contradiction to the theory of socialism in one country, was recognized by the entire Bolshevik party during the period from 1917 to 1923. Only the defeat of the proletariat in Germany in 1923 gave the decisive push to the creation of Stalin's theory of national socialism: the downward curve of the revolution gave rise to Stalinism, not to the theory of the permanent revolution, which was first formulated by me in 1905. This theory is not bound to a definite calendar of revolutionary events; it only reveals the worldwide interdependence of the revolutionary process."

Question: "The statement is made that 'Trotsky would not have neglected Soviet home industry any more than Stalin would ignore the usefulness of the Third International.' Do you agree with the conclusion that 'there are no whites and blacks in this picture. It is a matter of proportion and shade'?"

Answer: "Such an affirmation is possible only because of lack of familiarity with the history of the struggle between the Stalinist faction and the Left Opposition. The initiative of the Five Year Plan and of the accelerated collectivization belongs entirely to the Left Opposition, in unbroken and sharp struggles with the Stalinists. Not having the possibility of employing myself here with long historical researches, I will limit myself to a single illustration. The Dnieprostroy is considered with right as the highest achievement of Soviet industrialization. Yet Stalin and his followers, (Voroshilov, Molotov, and others) a few months before the beginning of the work were decided opponents of the Dnieprostroy plan. I quote from the stenographic report the words spoken by Stalin in April, 1927, in the plenum of the Central Committee of the party against myself as chairman of the Dnieprostroy commission. There is talk . . . of our constructing Dnieprostroy through our own means. The means needed are great, several hundred millions. Let us not get into the position of the peasant who, after accumulating a nest-egg, instead of repairing his plough and renewing his equipment, buys a gramophone and goes bankrupt." (Laughter) 'Can we ignore the decisions of the Party Congress that our industrial plans must be adapted to our resources?' Yet comrade Trotsky openly ignores that decision of the Congress." (Stenographic notes of the Plenum, page 110.)

"Simultaneously the Left Opposition in the course of several years carried on a struggle against the Stalinists in favor of collectivization. Only when the kulak refused to deliver grain to the State did Stalin, under the pressure of the Left Opposition, accomplish a sharp turn. Being the empiricist that he is, he moved to the opposite extreme and set as a task for two or three years the collectivization of all the peasantry, the liquidation of the kulaks as a class, and the compression of the Five Year Plan into four years. The Left Opposition declared that the new tempo of industrialization were above our forces, and that the liquidation of the kulaks as a class in the course of three years was a fantastic task. If one wishes to say so, we find ourselves this time 'less radical' than the Stalinists. Revolutionary realism tries to draw the maximum advantage from every situation—that is what makes it revolutionary—but at the same time it does not permit us to set ourselves fantastic aims—that is what makes it realistic."

Question: "If we accept the views that the policy of Stalin has a purely empirical character, is determined by the circumstances of the moment and is incapable of seeing far ahead, how can we explain the victory of Stalin's faction over the Left Opposition?"

Answer: "Above, I emphasized the significance of revolutionary strategy. Here I must come back to the decisive importance of objective conditions. Without a correct strategy the victory is impossible. But even the most correct strategy cannot give the victory under unfavorable objective conditions. The revolution has its own laws: in the period of its culmination it pushes the most highly developed, determined and far-seeing stratum of the revolutionary class to the most advanced positions. Yet the proletariat has not only a vanguard, but also a rearward, and besides the proletariat there are the peasantry and the bureaucracy. No one revolution up to now has brought all that was expected of it by the masses. Hence the inevitability of a certain disillusionment, of a lowering of the activity of the vanguard, and consequently, of the growing importance of the rearward. Stalin's faction has raised itself on the wave of reaction against the October revolution. Look back at history—those who guided the revolution in the time of its culmination never kept their leading positions long after the turning point. In France, the leader of Jacobinism perished on the guillotine; with us, the change of leadership was achieved by means of arrest and banishment. The technique of the process is gentler, but its essence is the same."

Question: "How do you reconcile your criticism of the Soviet Union in the capitalist press with your revolutionary sympathies? Is it true that you are 'turning the thinking youth away from Russia,' offering enemies of the Soviet regime the best possible arguments and material, and giving 'extra-duals and near-Communists an excuse for maligning Moscow and abstaining from participation in revolutionary action'?"

Answer: "The Soviet State does not need either illusions or camouflage. It can claim only that world authority which is confirmed by the facts. The clearer and deeper the public opinion of the world, in the first instance the opinion of the working masses, will understand the contradictions and the difficulties of the socialist development of an isolated country, the higher will it appreciate the results achieved. The less it identifies the fundamental methods of Socialism with the zigzags and errors of the Soviet bureaucracy, the less will be the danger that, by the inevitable revelation of these errors and of their consequences, the authority, not only of the present ruling group, but of the workers' State itself, may decline. The Soviet Union needs thinking and critical friends, such as are capable not only of singing hymns in the hours of success, but of not shrinking in the hours of defeat and danger. Journalists of the type of Fischer can accomplish a progressive work in defending the Soviet Union from calumnies, malicious inventions and prejudices. But these gentlemen overstep the limits of their mission when they attempt to give us lessons of devotion to the Soviet State. If we fear to speak of dangers, we shall never conquer them. If we close our eyes to the dark sides of the workers' State which we have helped to create, we shall never reach socialism."

Delegates of the Communist League of America (Opposition) and Communist Party (Opposition) were nominated for the committee of Action. Gebert tried in the same old way to suggest that only mass organizations be represented.

—IRVING BERN.

Reforestation Swindle

(Continued from Page 1)

able minimum and paid in credit tickets. There are today hundreds of large families close to starvation on this budget. The reforestation camps are being recruited from among those now receiving relief.

Homeless Still Homeless

What becomes, then, of the homeless and the wandering? There was a great agitation before the elections about them. The Scripps-Howard syndicate, for example, estimated that 500,000 of them roam the country. The January census of the Committee on Care of the Transient and Homeless showed 1,225,000 homeless and transient people in the United States, of whom 200,000 are youths. Boys and girls, unable to go to school, unable to get a job, a burden to their poverty-stricken family, join the ranks of migrant youth in a futile search for work in other cities. A restless tide is moving across the United States, hitch-hiking, walking, riding the freights, begging, stealing, living as they can. They are treated as traditional hoboes—a night in jail, a meal of beans and coffee and twenty-four hours to get out of town. They are clubbed by railway detectives and hoboed with petty criminals in jail. The good citizens demand government action to relieve the municipalities. Something had to be done for the American "beg priors."

So, the democrats fervidly promised, if elected, to take care of them also. At the same time, liberal and progressive groups clamored for the reforestation of land denuded by the lumber and paper interests in the heyday or rugged individualism. An ideal scheme to kill two birds with one stone, and all it cost! Conservation and Unemployment Relief. However, they are in this dilemma: Either they use conservation funds for municipal relief, in which case they do not reach the wanderer; or, if they recruit the latter, then conservation funds cannot be allocated to city relief. America's homeless youth is lost in the shuffle of the "New Deal."

What about the dignity and honor of honest toil, ask the army men? The men get $5.00 a month for doing the work of regular foresters. It is exploitation in the crudest sense. It is humiliating to the person and degrading to the class. Out West they call this racket "kyp labor." And it is well named. Investigators of the Public Welfare use economic pressure on families to get their "quota" of hobo labor into camp. One realizes the bitter irony of this situation: Workers "volunteer" for their six months' enlistment.

With the hazy self-interest of the business men they have converted a twenty million dollar reforestation fund into a new scheme for pauperizing workers and creating the basis for national conscription labor. "Citizens Conservation Corps" means human cannon fodder trained with funds intended for unemployment relief. The Democratic party in power, like its Republican predecessor, to rise out-of the crisis by still further exploiting and degrading the working class. Against this the American worker can and will organize a struggle.

1. Full time wages for forestry workers!
2. No victimization of those who refuse conservation enlistment!
3. Abolish the relief "deductions" system!
4. Organize within the camps for better conditions!
5. Payment of City Relief in cash!
6. Unemployment Insurance.

—CARL COWLEY.

The Chicago May Day Conference

Chicago.—The Communist party in Chicago concludes another vest-pocket united front for May Day. The united front from below, then the middle and every once in a while from behind, has driven the party with its back to the wall.

John Williamson made the keynote address. He pointed out that the call was sent to the Socialist party and A. F. of L. organizations calling upon them to unite for one May Day demonstration. In his speech he at last realized that Germany is the most important country in the international situation. After speaking for some time on the party's call for a united front with all organizations, he started to call the S. P. and A. F. of L. social-fascists, etc. Such ignorance! According to your (Williamson's) own definition of social-fascism, it is the greatest danger. Now, if that is no, why do you call for a united front with them—with their organizations?

The Y. P. S. L. sent a letter stating that it was willing to cooperate, but that it could not send any delegates until the County Committee of the S. P. approved of their action. The Socialist party stalled for time by telephoning and delaying meeting after meeting, called to establish joint proposal for action.

Yes, we know that the S. P. leaders are afraid of a united front, for they have much to lose. We must force them into action! I out with it! Admit that the tactics of united front from below were wrong and that you have made a turn (the E. C. C. I. Manifesto). Otherwise the S. P. workers are confused as to whether you want to unite without their organizations or a genuine united front. Amid such confusion their leaders can continue to mislead them, as one delegate said, "On Monday you call the socialist workers social-fascists, and on Tuesday you expect them to unite with you."

Delegates of the Communist League of America (Opposition) and Communist Party (Opposition) were nominated for the committee of Action. Gebert tried in the same old way to suggest that only mass organizations be represented.

The Scottsboro Case

(Continued from Page 1)

that a different verdict would have been obtained had not the Communist Party entered the case. . . . It feels that the only remaining hope for the boys is to remove from the already overwhelming prejudices which militate against them the additional burden of Communism." "It called for the organization of a 'new defense committee.'"

The capitalist press and the N. A. A. C. P. and all the other agencies of capitalism are working overtime to counteract the spontaneous mass protest that is arising against this monstrous verdict. They are hammering on all keys the theme of justice. That is their function in capitalist society. But it is no part of the I. L. D.'s role or policy to conduct a course which leads support to such illusions. Yet this is what it has done. We want our criticism to be clearly understood. The light of the I. L. D. from the first day of its courageous entry into this case has been an inspiring struggle against some of the most reactionary practice of a predatory capitalist South. It has held aloft the banner of mass struggle on behalf of nine innocent Negro class-brothers in the face of a reign of terror. It lit the spark which kindled a blaze of protest on four continents. It took a long step forward on the road to the unity of the white and black workers by showing the black workers that white workers were leading the struggle in which they were vitally involved.

But some time last summer the I. L. D. allowed the mass movement here to lag. Following the decision of the United States Supreme Court it did nothing to organize the workers into a gigantic protest movement behind its legal defense. It did not call the united front conferences to set the workers in motion.

Instead it made the mistake of riding the wave of protest. And it retained as its chief defense lawyer, a notorious gangster lawyer, a Democrat, a patriot. Moreover, it allowed him to attack the Communist party in the capitalist press without reply. It allowed him to repeat his attacks on the mass movement which had saved the boys from the electric chair with out making any public reply.

Worse than this, it allowed Liebowitz to dictate the line of the defense. It permitted him to confine the defense to legal lines, to order a National Students' League delegation out of town. It permitted him to say in the capitalist press that he would not tolerate any demonstrations by radical and Communist organizations. The capitalists took pains to give the impression of a fair trial. It chose an "objective" jurist to try the case. Horton was careful to avoid any appearance of hostility to the defense. He unquestionably favored the prosecution in his denials of motions for mistrials moved on the outrageous speeches of the prosecution. But he made most ill-fated, degrading and ruinous for the proletariat is to bank upon the co-operation of the imperialist governments of the countries surrounding Austria.

Bonapartism and Fascism In the Austrian Crisis

(Continued from Page 1)

Even if we were to allow that because of the traditional flabbiness of all Austrian parties as well as because of the influence of external and temporary causes (the pressure of France and of the Italian Entente), the apprehension of the Hitlerites to push matters to the end, just might—allowing in the culmination even in this case would turn out to be postponed by means of some kind of a mob-organized Austrian Bonapartist compromise—and a postponement of this kind could have an extremely unreliable and a very temporary character. The process thus checked would burst out in the course of the next few months or even weeks with a redoubled force and at a tenfold tempo. To build its policies upon checks, misperceptions, the plustering up of cricks, and petty political moralisms would mean for the proletariat to extend more time for the still weak Austrian Fascism in which to achieve its murderous mission.

"THE STRUGGLE FOR DEMOCRACY"

On the other hand, confined himself to vapid generalizations on the subject of the "superiorities" of bourgeois democracy over Fascist dictatorship. As if the struggle is taking place between two schools of state law! Kingsley aptly remarked, "every state is reducible to armed detachments of men with the material appendages in the nature of jails, etc. At present this 'essence' of the state has been completely revealed in Austria. The political struggle which has developed in the course of a number of years upon the bones of democracy has been pushed back up against the clashes between armed detachments. It is necessary to call this fact by its name, clearly and precisely, and to draw from it all the necessary practical conclusions."

Instead of this, the Austrian social democracy demands an admission on our part that the struggle is being carried on "for democracy." As if the question lies in this at present! It goes without saying that we are not ready to make any concessions whatsoever to the Austro-Marxists as regards the theoretical and historical

The Austro-Marxists Are Chloroforming the Proletariat

Despite the experience of Italy and Germany, the leaders of Austrian social democracy do not understand the situation. In order to live and breathe, these people must fool themselves. They they cannot do otherwise than by fooling the proletariat.

Bauer places the blame for the defeat in Germany upon the Communists. We are not the ones to defend German Stalinists! But their chief crime consists in their having given the social democrats the possibility of preserving their influence upon the basic part of the German proletariat and of leading upon it the lactic of debasing and fatal capitulation, despite all the crimes and betrayals committed by the social democracy. In essence Bauer's policies are no different from the policies of Weis-Stampfer. But there is a distinction: Bauer will be unable to shift the responsibility upon the Austrian Stalinists who have managed to doom themselves to complete impotence. "The Austrian social democracy is not only the leading party of the proletariat, but it is the strongest, as regards the population, social democratic party in the world. The political responsibility lies upon the Austrian social democracy, solely and entirely. All the more fatal will prove to be the consequences of its present policies."

The Austro-Marxists say:—If we are deprived of "liberty," then we shall fight to "the end." By such subterfuge they want to "gain" time for their vacillations, when in reality they are losing the most precious time for the preparation of defense. After the enemy deprives them of liberty, it will be a hundred times more difficult to fight, for the liquidation of rights will be accompanied by military and police destruction of the proletarian press and the proletarian apparatus. The enemy prepares and acts while the social democracy bides its time and whines. The Vorwärts also repeated times immemorial: "Woe to Fascism, if it ventures against us!" The events have demonstrated the value of such rhetoric. The party which proved incapable of giving battle when it held in its hands almost impregnable positions and powerful resources will crumble into dust when it is completely expelled from the legal arena.

(To Be Continued)

READ AND SUBSCRIBE TO THE MILITANT

will disassociate us from that trash and put all these matters in their true light." Against whom is this directed? Surely not against us. We warned against it in time.

Whether the party and the I. L. D. will disassociate themselves from this trash remains to be seen. We hope they will. And the sooner the better. Much time has been lost and much damage done. The first step to repair it is to repudiate Liebowitz's statements and tell him to confine himself to the purely legal aspects of the case.

But that is not enough. The central and most immediate task is to organize the protest movement of the workers. If that is not done the protest movement will and other leaders and be directed into reformist channels. There are signs of this already. Upon receiving news of the verdict the Amsterdam News, a petty bourgeois Negro newspaper in Harlem, began a petition campaign against the death sentence. Plans are already under way to organize a march from all parts of the country on Washington to protest the verdict.

The party says that the struggle must rise to a higher stage. But it has not given the signal to organize it. This it must do without delay. The masses are burning with a sense of outrage. They are eager to fight. They seek leadership. Only the Communist party can give correct leadership and direction to the struggle and save the movement from being diverted into channels harmless to the capitalists. That is its duty in the situation.

Call the united front conferences! Organize the protest movement of the workers! Let their indignation mount to the skies! United, they can smash the Scottsboro frame-up! The Scottsboro boys shall not die!

—T. STAMM.

Unite on May 1st Against World Reaction!

Red Baiting in Illinois

The P. M. A. Under Fire

In recent days, the reactionary press in Illinois has even attempted to work up a "red scare" in the Progressive Miners Union. Having failed to break the magnificent movement of the progressive miners by frontal attack, the coal operators have decided to supplement the physical terror of the state forces and the Lewis gangsters with a campaign of ideological fear within the union. They have developed a great solicitude about the political opinions of some of the leading miners in the union—especially Jerry Allard. And with their well-known concern for the welfare of the miners they are warning them to get rid of him and all others whom they identify as Communists or class struggle militants. They are saying in effect to the miners: "We have nothing against you as coal miners. As a matter of fact, in that capacity you are necessary for the production of our profits. What we object to is the fact that you have broken with the Lewis unionism, which suited us to perfection, and have begun to fight for your rights. If you will give up this idea and stop listening to people who stir up the spirit of class militancy and resistance, we will be satisfied. In other words, if you will transform yourselves into sheep, we will eat you up and then we will have peace together."

The attack on Allard as a Communist, conducted in sensational articles in the "Taylorville Breeze" and other organs of the big interests, is obviously a part of the general campaign of reaction against the Progressive Miners. The object of the "red scare" is to discredit the union before public opinion and thus to prepare the ground for more terrorist aggression, to intimidate the membership and consolidate the conservative right wing in the union (the concealed agents of Lewisism, and to drive the official leadership of the union at a faster pace on the path of conservatizing the organization. If they can succeed with this campaign of demoralizing the union from within, then the "Progressive Miners" organization as a center of resistance to the capitalists and an inspiration to the miners throughout the country, as well as to the working class generally, will have become a thing of the past.

The Enemy's Aim

The game of the operators and their agents is an old one. And there is only one way to meet it, as all experience has shown. That is to assert the independence of the union. To reject all advice offered to it by the class enemy. The union will not thrive and grow by conciliating the bosses, by capitulating to their ideology, by "domesticating" the union and making it acceptable to the bosses. This is what the bosses want. This is what they are aiming at with the new Communist bait. To understand this and to fight against it is the elementary duty of the leading elements in the union, including Allard and the other individuals under attack.

But the response made to the attack in the "Progressive Miner" up till now does not in the least indicate an understanding of this strength of the enemy and underestimating the inner resources of the progressive miners' movement, as is always the case with "progressives" of all hues, they are trying to counter the brutal offensive of the class enemy with a "clever" strategy of camouflage and capitulation. They seek to ward off the attack by denying the "charges" of any Communist influence in the union. Thus, by implication, they disavow any tendency toward class struggle militancy, which is what the bosses really mean when they talk of Communism. Thus they lay the ground for the proscription not only of Communists but of all class struggle militants inside the union. And by that they concede the main demands of the bosses. Allard too, who should know better, allowed himself to fall in with this worthless strategy.

The class conscious members in the progressive miners' movement have to recognize the real purpose of this new attack of the class enemy on the ideological front. The operators and their tools have been unable to smash the movement in open struggle. Now they are trying to demoralize it from within, to rob it of the militancy which called it into life and sustained it in struggle—to purge it of those very qualities which have distinguished it from the corrupt unionism of Lewis and, eventually, to drive it back into the Lewis camp. Now is the time to call to mind the tragic fate of the previous insurgent movements which were disorganized and defeated by those very methods. Now is the time for the real militants, who have carried the new movement on their shoulders in struggle and sacrifice, to remember the bitter experiences with Walker, Howat, and Edmondson and to say to all the leading forces in the new movement: "Nobody can lead us again onto this slippery path which leads to demoralization and defeat."

The Present Course of the P. M. A. Leadership

The present trend, however, is in this direction. The course of the official leadership over a considerable period now has been to seek a "stabilization" of the union at the expense of its class struggle character. The negotiations and proposed agreement with Governor Doremus, the ban on the demonstrations for the Taylorville prisoners, the new wage contract—in all these, and in a number of other important questions, the course of

(Continued on Page 4)

Russian Movie; May 6th, 8 p.m. Labor Temple

As announced in the previous issue of the Militant, a unique film of the Russian Revolution will be exhibited at a limited and private showing on Saturday, May 6, 1933. This film to be shown complete for the first time, reveals the actual and authentic pictures of all the important events and actions before, during and after the Russian Revolution, and covers a period of 20 years of Russia's life.

A record of events from the first decade in the 20th century, from early Russia in Czarist days through the death of Lenin and the exile of Trotsky to Leningrad; the July uprising; the Kornilov movement; the Social Revolutionists; the rise of the Bolsheviks; the role of Lenin and Trotsky and other leaders of the Bolsheviks; the Soviets; the rise to power of Bolshevism; the Civil War on the various fronts; grand scenes of all the Russias; the Comintern—this and more is to be seen in this outstanding factual film of the historic Russian revolution.

The film is being shown under the auspices of the Film Club of the New York Branch of the Communist League of America, (Opposition). The Committee in charge of the details wishes to announce to the Film Club members that they must obtain their SUBSCRIPTION TICKETS IN ADVANCE, if they wish to view the film. This is a limited, private showing and no tickets can be obtained at the door.

Members, obtain your subscription ticket at once at the headquarters of the Communist League of America (Opposition), 126 East 16th St., N. Y. C.

S. P. Sabotages Mooney Struggle

The fourth session of the Congressional Committee of the New York United Front Tom Mooney Conference established that the course of the Stalinists in their back-door bargaining with the Socialist party failed to bring the latter into the movement. Palmer reported that on Thursday, April 23, Clarence Senior informed the negotiations committee that the N. E. C. of the S. P. had decided not to approve the Chicago Mooney Congress.

WHY WE MISSED AN ISSUE

During the past week the Militant received numerous, anxious inquiries from its readers and friends asking why it had to skip an issue. No one, and least of all the small staff which struggles with mountainous obstacles to get out the paper, has to be reminded of the fact that the loss of an issue in these times is, not merely a technical setback and a loss of time, but a political setback as well. That is why the whole movement watches the appearance of the Militant with such close attention.

But it could not be helped. Here is the reason. Our financial crisis, which has been deepening with the increasing depth of the general crisis of capitalism, came to a head last week with an accident, which made our linotype useless. A fire burned up the keyboard. To heap Pella on Ossa the press broke down.

Just as these burdens were thrust on our shoulders our creditors took it into their heads to press hardest for payment. The linotype company presented us with a foreclosure notice; the landlord served us with an eviction notice, the paper company cut off our credit; and a number of other people dunned us persistently.

Under these circumstances there was no alternative. We were forced to skip the issue. To make matters worse we were unable to take together enough money to get our letters to our friends appealing to them to help us in the emergency. A mountain of correspondence had accumulated awaiting postage. At this point let us say that even this form of assistance will be a great help in the circumstances.

By almost unbelievable efforts, by straining every nerve and resource to the breaking point we repaired the press and linotype. They are working once more. But the situation remains as desperate as before. A factory ninety per cent completed is useless for productive purposes. The structure necessary to insure the regular appearance of the Militant has not yet been rebuilt. We are still facing the loss of our machinery and the loss of our home.

It is simply unthinkable that these catastrophic "materialize." But it will unless everyone understands that this is the danger and acts accordingly and promptly. We must, we will overcome this crisis. We must have help immediately—$200.

There is only one way to avoid the catastrophe and raise the necessary sum—resolute sacrifice. The movement is straining itself to the limit. It calls now on all its friends to make a concrete demonstration of their sympathy for the ideas of the Left Opposition, for the ideas of revolutionary internationalism, for the clarification of Marxism, the Militant. Save the Militant!

Air Mail! Wire! Rush funds immediately to THE MILITANT, 126 East 16th Street, N. Y. C.

Inflation Bill Deceptive

Roosevelt Retreats before Petty Bourgeois Pressure and Threatens Workers' Standard with New Measures

The prospects of inflation have been brought considerably closer by two actions undertaken by Roosevelt in the last two weeks: One is the embargo on gold, which cut the paper dollar internationally, as well as nationally, from gold and left it free to find its own level. The immediate result was a decline in the international price of the paper dollar to a discount of 16 percent, that is, an American dollar became worth 84 cents in any gold-standard currency such as the French, Dutch or Swiss, and also in the English pound, which remained stable during this period in relation to the gold currencies. Since then, the dollar has been rising steadily, and as of April 28 was quoted at a discount of 8 percent, i. e., had risen from 84 to 92 cents in gold.

In its dealings with other countries, in the exchange of commodities, capital and services, the United States received in 1932, $131,000,000 than it paid out, against $100,000,000 in 1931. This balance is payable directly or indirectly in gold. As long as the balance of payments remains in favor of the United States, the dollar will tend to rise toward par, because it will tend to receive more claims on the world's gold than it pays out.

The gold embargo alone therefore does not constitute inflation, which is a depreciation of the paper currency in comparison with gold. The door to inflation was thrown wide open by Roosevelt's second step, the demand from Congress for legislation authorizing him to choose any, all or none of four different kinds of inflation—through bank credit; the issue of unsecured greenbacks, the use of silver purchased in large quantities up to a price above the present market, and the redemption of the gold dollar to mean a smaller amount of gold, down to a reduction of 50 percent from the present.

This step appears to represent a maneuver of Roosevelt's under pressure from the petty bourgeoisie, especially the agrarian petty bourgeoisie, terrified by the inflation and direct action of the farmers' movement. The first test of strength came in a bill for silver currency inflation, which was defeated 43 to 33. The size of the minority and the continued agitation among the farmers decided Roosevelt to change his tactics, where Hoover would undoubtedly have continued in bull-headed opposition, both representing primarily the interests of monopoly finance-capital as against all other classes. Roosevelt's maneuver consists in offering first the appearance of inflation, through the gold embargo and the speculative rise in stocks and commodities which followed it; to be followed, in accordance with the amount of pressure put on the government by the petty bourgeoisie, by as little concessions to their demand for inflation as practicable, the so-called "controlled inflation," should inflation on a substantial scale become necessary, finance-capital will arrange itself (through re-borrowing from the Federal Reserve banks, through depreciation of the value of claims against the banks in the form of deposits, through increased speculation in stocks and commodities to counterbalance losses in bank investments) so as to obtain as much benefit or as little loss as possible, in the domestic sphere. On the international scale, American inflation would mean a loss of strategically advantageous positions in the export of capital, and would relatively strengthen the position of French capital, and of English capital to the extent that it was able to work out a temporary agreement with French capital. This latter perspective, pointed out in the Militant of March 8, has been verified by the recently announced Anglo-French banking and currency arrangements.

Intention?—Rather Dedication! Actually what has happened since the "bank holiday" has been a process of steady deflation, not inflation at all. Since March 8, the lowest point of the banking crisis, the Federal Reserve banks have increased their holdings of gold by over $700,000,000, and reduced the total money in circulation by over $1,500,000,000, both decidedly deflationary measures tending to increase the value of paper money in terms of gold, therefore to increase the buying power of the dollar. The latest available figures, those for the week ending April 26, 1933, show that this deflation is still going on—gold holdings increased over $30,000,000, and money in circulation decreased $74,000,000.

During this period also, interest rates have been coming down, a further sign of deflation, indicating that the demand for money is less than the amount available for offer. Roosevelt's policies, up to the sharp turn taken by the gold embargo and the introduction of the four-way inflation bill, were

(Continued on Page 3)

Fascist Terror Rages Against German Masses

Fascist Germany presents today a frightful picture of devastation of a once powerful revolutionary and working class movement. The Communist party has been destroyed, vanishing under heavy, well-aimed blows. The Stalinist policy delivered the party, and with it the working class, gagged and bound to the Fascist hordes.

The Socialist party is crippled apparently beyond recovery. Only its parliamentary skeleton is still attempting to maintain an humble, subservient existence. The trade unions are beginning to feel the Fascist lash. Many of their headquarters are sacked and now the preparations are in full swing to turn them into Fascist state organs. All Communist and even social democratic delegates are unceremoniously removed from the factory councils and replaced by Fascists, that is, where the councils are not dissolved altogether and new elections prohibited.

The savage howls of the roaring Fascist bandits who murder, pillage and destroy are pierced by the heart-rending groans from the torture chambers. The bestialities which actually take place are indescribable.

This is the crowning height of the many bitter experiences suffered by the German proletariat since the first serious act of treason performed by the social democratic chieftains on August 4, 1914. This first step was only the beginning of the later unbridled wrecking, the drowning in blood of the workers' revolutionary struggles of 1918 to 1921, the murder of Liebknecht and Luxemburg, the perfidious collaboration in the restoration of capitalism.

(Continued on Page 3)

Workers Must Join Forces in Big Demonstration Despite Sabotage of Socialist Party Leaders

The working class faces May Day this year in the midst of a wave of international reaction, in a period of internal as well as external crisis. With bestial brutality bloody Fascism has smashed the proudest, the best organized, the traditionally strongest working class of capitalist Europe—the German proletariat, 50,000 thousand of its staunchest and most courageous fighters languish in the dungeons of sadistic Hitlerism. The Brown Shirt pest continues its penetration of every club, of every street, of every home, Austria, a small country but a tremendous citadel of working class power stands next in order.

The dark powers of Europe, inspired by the victory of Teuton Fascism, are pitting their heads together at Rome, plotting a new holy alliance, a crusade against Communism and its living fortress, the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. In Japan reaction stalks the land. In China the proletariat does not yet dare to lift its bleeding head. In India the spurred heel of British imperialism spurs into the prostrate backs of the people.

And in our country too, in America, after nearly four years of economic stress and unprecedented impoverishment and misery, capitalism is consolidating its forces for a "solution" that can only further enhance the enslavement of the masses of toilers in the cities and on the farms.

Never since the days of the catastrophe of 1914, has the working class faced such a difficult time, never before has it been so threatened with attacks from without and with disintegration from within. The German debacle hangs like an ominous shadow over the future of the proletariat. Attacked by an enemy armed to the teeth, favored by a wave of unrest and disillusionment and hope born of the economic convulsion of world capitalism, the organized forces of the working class of Germany have receded from the scene, beaten without a struggle.

The treacherous role of the social democracy in this miserable surrender was clear long before the fact. Social democracy has long ago, in the first great debacle of August 4, 1914, demonstrated its impotence and its capacity for working class betrayal. Nothing better could have been expected from it. Victory could come only upon the condition of the thorough unmaking of these traitors, upon the dissolution of the bonds between them and the masses who have followed them. Victory could come only if the Communist party carried out this task, if it itself proved its capacity for struggle.

It was precisely the failure to carry out this task, it was precisely the disregard for its importance; the shirking of this duty for the utopian bureaucratic dream of "socialism in one country" that has made the Stalinized Communist party of Germany and Communist International a partner of the social democracy in the monstrous crime against the German working class, in the effortless capitulation before Nazism. The betrayal of 1933 stands the death-knell for both the social democracy and Stalinism, for the two great distortions of revolutionary Marxism. The struggle of the working class against capitalism is from now on inextricably tied up with the merciless extermination of these two pestilent currents within its own breast.

Left Opposition Must Lead

The lead in this struggle of the working class belongs historically to those revolutionary fighters, who, in 1917 under the leadership of Lenin, swept over the head of a thoroughly discredited Menshevik social democracy to the October victory; to those heroic figures who in the years of the Civil war and intervention stood at the head of every front in defense of the proletarian fortress; to those indefatigable Marxist battlers who, when reaction followed reaction with the betrayal of the German social democracy for a second time in 1918, when petty bourgeois reformism filtered into the ranks of the Communist movement through the agency of bureaucratic Stalinism, stood alone but firm in the defense of the Leninist standard of world revolution against national socialism and pointed out time after time, the revolutionary road to be followed—in China, in Great Britain and last but not least, in Germany itself. The lead belongs to the Trotsky and Rakovsky, to the thousands of tried and tested Bolshevik-Leninists following them in the International Left Opposition.

The attack of the forces of reaction can be countered successfully only by a struggle against disintegration from within, by the application of the Marxist policies of the International Left Opposition, in the Soviet Union itself, as well as in the capitalist countries. Against the forces of reaction must be forged the forces of progress, of revolution. This difficult task, this duty imposed by the dark situation threatening the international working class, can be solved only by the reestablishment of Marxist clarity within the Communist movement and by enforcement of the Leninist united front tactic in the general working class movement.

The May Day mobilization stands under the sign of this task. Every Communist must be made aware that only a rejection of the disastrous policies of Stalinist centrism, only a reestablishment of the Marxist perspective of permanent revolution, can prevent the destruction of October and halt the hand of reaction. Every worker must be made to realize that only the establishment of a solid, united working class front can withstand the dastardly schemes of the capitalist class in its attempt to lead the proletariat into the new Dark Ages of wage-slave savagery.

Socialist treachery and Stalinist bungling have helped the Nazis to turn May Day in Germany into a black day of the proletariat. The international holiday of the proletariat is celebrated in Berlin this year as a day of nationalistic debauch under the flag of the hooked cross. The workers in the rest of the world and here in America must show their indignation. They must protest against the Brown Shirt May Day in Berlin by a powerful united Red demonstration of internationalism. They must show the Nazi murderers by this demonstration that the international working class is girding its loins for battle.

On May 1st the whole world must know that every section, tendency and shade of the revolutionary and labor movement can stand together in a fight for a common battle can weld its forces in a united front. We have great objectives to attain the world over. In the U. S. the great battle for the release of Tom Mooney and freedom for the Scottsboro boys will be given a tremendous impetus when the proletariat fills streets in serried ranks on May 1st.

Socialist Party Sabotage

In face of this, how criminal are the perfidious actions of the treacherous leaders of the Socialist party in splitting the ranks of the workers. These fakers have turned down the genuine offer of the united Front May Day Committee, composed of Communists, Mustekes, I. W. W.s, etc., for one demonstration in New York. Their obsequious, bootlicking services to the capitalist class need no other proof than this. Not content with this vile treason in breaking the workers ranks the S. P. fakers make

(Continued on Page 2)

Scottsboro March On Capital

Legally, the Scottsboro Case stands as follows: an appeal is being taken by the defense from the death verdict of the Decatur jury; the trial judge has continued the cases of the other defendants on the ground that a fair trial under the present circumstances is impossible; and, irony of ironies, he places the blame for the prejudiced atmosphere on Liebowitz. The L. D. has applied for a writ of habeas corpus for two of the boys on various legal grounds.

With the temporary lull on the legal front the mass protest movement alone occupies the center of the stage in this great class drama in which we are fighting for the democratic rights of the Negroes and the unity of the black and white workers. In the forefront of the protest and defense movement stands the march on Washington scheduled to arrive there on May 8.

The March to Washington

The march was first projected by the Ilard, petty bourgeois newspaper, The Amsterdam News. Riding the crest of the first wave of the spontaneous protest of the Negro masses this paper issued a call for fifty thousand to march on the capital. With the entry of the L. D. on the scene, the initiative in organizing such a demonstration passed into its hands. Since then the Amsterdam News has shown that its first burst of enthusiasm was not sustained by the determination necessary to carry out this mass action and the L. D. is undisputed leader of the march, as, indeed, it should be.

If the L. D. is the undisputed leader of the march then, leaving objective conditions aside for the moment, the responsibility for its success or failure as an organized mass demonstration rests squarely on the L. D. A successfully organized march can raise the protest movement to the masses to greater heights. It can inspire the terrorized masses of the south to struggle for their democratic rights and draw them further into united mass action with the white workers. And since the whole movement is being conducted under the banner of militant mass action, which the whole working class knows, in this instance, to be the banner of Communism, a successful march must increase the prestige of Communism in the eyes of the masses.

Conversely a poor organized march with no spirit, the morale of which is low will react on the movement unfavorably. The spark of enthusiasm and contagion will not be struck. The L. D. would lose prestige and the prestige of Communism would also suffer.

It is from this point of view that we criticize the preparations for the march. The call asks all participants to supply their own food and the organizations sending re-

(Continued on Page 2)

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

League in Action in Philadelphia

Philadelphia.—A sectional united front conference against elections was called on March 30. The Unemployed Councils of West Philadelphia called it. The conference made an effort to be broad—in composition only. It was almost treason to connect local with national or international problems. No trade unions were represented, one Y. P. S. L. local, one church. Nothing was said at the conference of social-fascists or of a "united front from below". As a matter of fact the party made a complete somersault and now appears ready to enter into united fronts with social reformists, without reserving the right to criticize. In such united fronts Bender, the conference leader, feels like a fish in water. He said: "This conference was called to compel our representatives in the legislature to keep their promises;" and "that only by mass action can the workers end their misery".

Comrade Roberts criticized the narrow parliamentary base as well as the creation of illusions that under capitalism the workers can end their misery. Only the dictatorship of the proletariat can do that, but in order to lay the foundation it is necessary to fight back the attacks of the bosses, "the real fruit of our victory lies not in the immediate result but in the ever-expanding union of workers". At the conclusion of the speech Roberts was given a good round of applause.

The Communist party as an organization was not represented until reminded in the resolutions committee by comrade Hirsch of the Left Opposition. As usual, our proposal of long-term credits to and recognition of the Soviet Union, was rejected as having nothing to do with the conference. A proposal that all workers' organizations from the Soviet Union down to the smallest workers' group boycott German goods, met with same rebuff.

We did, however, succeed in passing some resolutions, which the conference leaders had completely forgotten. They were: (1) against the commissary plan; (2) social insurance at the expense of the government and employers; (3) against Roosevelt's reforestation plan; (4) six-hour day, five-day week without reduction in pay. Of particular interest are the last two. The narrowing down of the conference proved a boomerang to the Stalinists. Resolution number 3 was met with the objection by a delegate from the Paolo Zionists but this was beyond the scope of the conference.

The conference adjourned with the election of a committee of action which is to carry on the work of the body. Roberts was elected to this committee. Nothing was said about our class war prisoners (Tom Mooney, etc.). When, after the conference, Roberts asked the reason for this, the cynical answer was given: "Do you want us to be here all night?"

On March 31 comrade Sam Gordon delivered a lecture on "Danger Signals in Soviet Economy". Despite the rain the meeting was well attended by workers desirous of hearing the views of the Left Opposition. Several Communist party members and sympathizers took the floor in the discussion and asked questions. Comrade Gordon made it clear that we refuse to conceal shortcomings by gloating over doubtful successes. Comrade Gordon pointed out the reasons for the weaknesses of Soviet economy and the solutions for the difficulties, to be found not in the Stalinist conception of socialism in one country but in the Leninist theory of the permanent revolution. A lively discussion ensued in which the point of view of the Left Opposition was brought home. A great deal of literature was sold.

The Anti-Nazi Demonstration in Philadelphia

The Stalinist policies and tactics permitted the rabble, the capitalist politicians to capitalize on the anti-Semitism of the Nazis and to divert it into safe channels. This Thursday, April 6 the C. P. of Phila. arranged a protest demonstration against Hitlerism under its own name at Rensselaer Plaza. Not even the rain can account for the fact that only 500 workers participated in the parade. Preparation were extremely meager. Only the closest party circles participated. Almost all were foreign born and Negro workers—who due to lessons of the past responded quickest against Fascist terror. Not all the cheers for the C. P. of Germany and the U. S. A. could remove the doubt, still unvoiced, from the minds of these workers as to the correctness of the Stalinist policies.

The paraders were glad to see us of the Left Opposition in the march with them. Perhaps we were right after all. The comrades were unable to understand the absence of an attack on the socialist position. No campaign of clarification and of honest explanation is undertaken. Only this week has the party begun a discussion. This demonstration should be an indication to the party members that only a sincere and honest thru can bring results and extend the influence of Communism among the masses.

—L. R.

Stalinist Opportunism in Mpls. Elections

Minneapolis.—On April 22 the United Front Conference for the Workers Ticket Election Campaign was held in Minneapolis. The major part of the conference work was expended on clearing up wreckage wrought by the party's opportunist policy at the "preliminary" conference held some weeks before. The opportunism of the district leadership consisted in this: they attempted to get around the deep-seated prejudices of the reformist-minded worker by approaching him with a "united front workers' ticket" behind which would hide the C. P. At the same time this form for the Communist ticket would allow the party to unite with individual candidates who have a following in the labor movement and that would bring to the polls votes for the C. P. candidates on the "Workers ticket". Just such an individual did they have in Walter Frank, a free-lancing radical who has made the circuit of all political tendencies in labor movement, and is at present flirting with the party in the P. S. U. and T. U. C. for Unemployment Insurance. He was endorsed by the party-controlled conference upon his endorsement of the "workers ticket" platform which consisted primarily of immediate demands and was void of the revolutionary aims and objectives of Communism. It did not even uphold the need of an independent working class political party, a Communist party.

Frank was out to be elected, he accepted the help of the party, and had promised nothing in return.

Walter Frank's first leaflet practically told the workers they needed no political party, but instead "Workers Unity". The result was that the party's backstage dealings with this opportunist office-seeker had to be exposed by the Left Opposition. We frankly told all party members we met that if the party persisted in its opportunism we would file a Communist candidate against Frank in that ward. As though the local Stalinists saw the light from somewhere, they issued a leaflet one week before the second "United Front Workers Ticket Conference" violently attacking Frank, repudiating his endorsement by the party, calling for support of the "Workers ticket" platform on the grounds of its "class struggle" character, in other words made a fair, general statement of the Communist program and principles.

At the conference proper they submitted a platform with paragraphs added, others deleted, and on the basis of it proceeded to "thrash" Frank for being what he always was in the united front, an opportunist radical politician, Frank's defense before the workers in the conference was that the party had broke its agreement with him and had changed the original platform. A disgusting melee.

Meanwhile the Opposition delegates were unscathed on the report of the credential committee. An honest party member made the report. When he came to the matter of why the Opposition should not be seated, he stopped, went into a huddle with the leaders, came back and stammered out the "reasons". The chairman drove the motion through the meeting without allowing discussion. While the conference rejected Frank, the only non-party candidate, and thus destroyed its united front character, the party continued to call it a united front, for well thought-out opportunist reasons. It is to be the name, the cover for the C. P. a demagogic frill, to pick up workers and store-keepers votes. The Germanic candidates, all Communists, have election cards bearing no mention of Communism, just "candidate on workers' ticket". Leninists are the same, carrying the name of the Conference with occasional mention of "endorsed by C. P.". At an aldermanic campaign meeting the Opposition criticized this aspect of the party campaign. Petty functionaries rose one after another, each giving a more confused, opportunist, explanation of the "united front workers ticket". A confused Farmer-Labor party faction leader in the Ward F. L. P. Club who was chairman of this meeting arranged for the Workers Circle branch, sided with the party arguments on an "election united front" cited the "wise" policy of the party in the farmer-labor united front of 1924-28, greeted this "new" policy, and then unconsciously clinched the truth of our contention for the party not to play with election united fronts. He said, "Did not we have in this ball (Workers Union Ass'n.), a Left wing of four hundred followers, did not the party lead us into the Farmer-Labor party? Why did it leave us there? Was it not because you told us it was a working class party?" The last election united front policy of the party founded, nurtured, and built the formidable reformist Farmer-Labor party, a bulwark against Communism in the masses. This last united front election policy launched the opportunist Walter Frank into his race for political office with the label, "workers candidate", fighting for "workers unity". Despite the masquerade of names and the comedy of endorsements, the Left Opposition will support the Communist candidates in the city elections, and campaign for them on a clear-cut anti-spoken Communist banner and program.

—C. FORSEN.

The S. P.'s Continental Congress

The role of social reformism, how it arises and grows, has been sufficiently established by the Marxists since the post-war period. It grows simultaneously with the advance of the revolutionary movement. Its aim is to act as a brake upon rising tide of struggle. The more acute the class struggle the more active do the reformists become. They pretend at a struggle, only to retreat, cripple and destroy such conflicts at their decisive moments. In the "democratic era" of capitalism they flourish like the proverbial mushrooms after a rain. When capitalism resorts to an open and naked dictatorship (Fascism) as in Germany they are thrust aside as a hindrance to the process of completely decapitating the proletariat.

Quite contrary to the "third period" theorists of Stalinism, social reformism in the United States is not dead, nor is it in the process of extinction. The "span of life" of reformism in this country is not the point under discussion at present. The decisive question is whether or not reformism has the possibilities of activity and growth under the given conditions and state of class struggle in the United States. And to this we must answer in the affirmative. To deny the "Fascist Hoover Government" and "Fascist Commissions" as the Daily Worker does in its most delirious moments, results only in confusion and error. In doing that it signifies that the path of reformism has already been beaten and is covered with the foot-prints of American Fascism.

Four years of crisis have torn deep roles in American capitalism. They have posed weaknesses that appeared absent during the "prosperity" years. The impact of the crisis is demonstrating to American imperialism more clearly than ever, that it must direct and base its economy on a world scale. We will witness a greater participation of the United States in world affairs on the political field, and an intensified activity in the sphere of international economy. In preparing for this stage, American capitalism must first of all settle accounts at home. It proceeds to lower the standard of living of the American working class nationally. Since the crisis a series of interrupted wage-cuts has taken place. This process is being completed. And it is being completed, thus far, without apparent resistance by the working masses.

Whatever the level of recovery may be it will be carried through by smashing the living standards of the masses. That is inherent in the situation. American capitalism has not yet been seriously burdened with the problems of relief and social insurance. With brutal callousness it has resisted every demand for these. To expect that these demands would have been

I. L. D. Refuses Aid to Greek Worker

On April 22nd last year, Nick Gramataikis, unemployed worker, was arrested while participating in the unemployed demonstration at City Hall which was turned into a blood bath by the savage attacks of the police. The city's "honest" on horseback, and foot charged into the crowds trampling them under hooks and beating them with clubs, men and women alike, indiscriminately. When a woman comrade was being brutally clubbed, Nick Gramataikis fearlessly intervened. This resulted in his arrest.

The Daily Worker of April 23, 1932 gave considerable prominence to the story of the arrests and police brutalities, but failed to mention the name of any of the workers arrested except that of George Powers, the leader of the demonstration. Two days later it announced a mass protest demonstration against the party terror to be held April 29th. It failed to report this demonstration and never once did it mention the names of these class struggle victims.

In the hands of the police, the unemployed worker Gramataikis was frightfully beaten, causing him to be confined in the hospital at Welfare Island for about a month. On the expiration of this sentence, he was sent to Ellis Island for deportation.

At the time of his arrest and during all these events, Gramataikis was a member of the Spartakos Club, the Party's Greek workers' organization and he was defended by the I. L. D. After being held for a month or more at Ellis Island, he was released on bail, a $1,000 bond being put up for him. This bond was given by a surety company and the security for it was provided by a member of the Spartakos Club.

Since that time, some petty quarrels arose between Gramataikis and the ruling clique at the Club, the Stalin clique causing his expulsion. Soon after this took place, he received a notification from the Ellis Island authorities to present himself there, informing him that the surety company which had posted his bond was in the process of liquidation, and that he was required to put up a new bond. The letter of notification was addressed to him at the Spartakos Club and was not delivered to him by them until the very evening before he granted without an intensive struggle on the part of the workers is a serious error. It is precisely because of a national scale such struggles were absent and serious resistance was not recorded, that the ruling class in this country was able to carry through its drive against the masses to lower their living standards and at the same time refuse aid to the unemployed without serious difficulties.

Communists Must Break Thru 'Closed Door' Policy

The weakness of the subjective factor: the state of consciousness of the American workers, are flowing from this the absence of a mass Communist party with correct policies, and a militant labor movement, is in the main the reason for the lack of great class battles. Whatever struggles have taken place were at best sporadic, intensive though some of them may have been. The gains however were small and localized and thus their scope is entirely too narrow. The bulk of the struggle was carried on almost primarily through the direct initiative and activity of the Communists.

Growing Mood of Struggle

The crisis will prove to be a great impulsion to the class-conscious development of the American workers. This is evidenced by a growing mood of struggle seen in great demonstrations of unemployment, the auto strikes, the movement of the Illinois miners, and the recent organization of the "Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee" at Gillespie. In all of these events the Communists have played an active and leading role. This role will increase with the development of the struggle. It is important to remember this.

With these remarks let us examine the call for a "Continental Congress of workers and farmers for Economic Reconstruction" to be held in Washington on May 6 and 7. The leading elements in framing the call and the conference are the socialist and their allies in the American Federation of Labor. The one of the call is adorned with a cartoon showing how labor is driving the moneybags out of the Capitol. This cartoon is supposed to describe the statement of William Green, arch-reactionary head of the A. F. of L., also appearing on page one, as an introduction to the call itself.

Green declares: "For we shall soon be on the march... We shall FIGHT with every legitimate weapon at our command... We have come to what we are determined shall be the END OF SUPPLYING... We prefer the council table, but we do not shun the BATTLEFIELD... I am ready to LEAD the hosts of labor into a BATTLE... The die is cast for

THE BATTLE out of which labor expects a new America?" (Emphasis mine—G.)

What strange words, coming from the reactionary leader of the organized labor movement who has done everything in his power to throttle the slightest note of militancy in its ranks. The apostle of class collaboration will lead the hosts of labor into a battle, a battle for a new America!

This is the introduction to the call addressed to the workers and farmers of the United States, to convene and "draw up a program to right the grievous wrongs we have suffered and set up a national council of the working people in the city, state and nation to ensure its realization". And to this congress are invited: "(a) Progressive organization of farmers; (b) Organization of Labor; (c) Cooperative Societies; (d) The Socialist and Farmer-Labor Parties; single taxers; and other liberal political groups; (e) Labor fraternal bodies and unemployed leagues; WHOSE PURPOSES ARE IN HARMONY WITH THE OBJECTS OF THIS CONFERENCE." The call further declares: "Through the vigilance, the strength of a just cause, and the pressure of our democratic mass strength we shall ENJOY to win for all men, women and children of this Nation a TRUE FREEDOM—FREEDOM FROM POVERTY, HUNGER AND ECONOMIC INSECURITY." (Emphasis mine—G.)

The mere statement of Green, veneered with a dash of militancy, is an indication, above all, of a fear of a developing movement of the American proletariat for militant struggle. This fear is accentuated by the thought that this developing movement may form under the leadership of the Communists who have until now been the main factor in those class struggles already taking place. It is axiomatic that when a Green wishes to do battle in the interests of the proletariat the real purpose in such militancy is to check the movement of the workers, to choke it before it begins, or if unsuccessful in that, to canalize it into the stream of reformism.

Aim of Conference

In that respect at least there are no differences between Green and his socialist comrades who signed the call and have taken the initiative in bringing about the conference. They are going to bring about a true freedom, a freedom from poverty, hunger and economic security. Under what kind of program will this political, economic and social change take place? Under the program adopted at this congress that will be attended by the widest variety of elements. Is this a merely another utopian plan? No, its main aim is to lead off and destroy at once the growth of the revolutionary movement. To do this it is not enough to organize a united front movement in the struggle for the demands of the suffering unemployed. These people must rely upon something else, a substitute offering for social reorganization that will sound "reasonable and capable of achievement" and yet be a far cry from the revolutionary program of the Communists.

Isn't this clear in the nature of the call? To secure this aim all organizations are invited except the Communists and revolutionary workers. Even the single taxers (!) are invited. But the Communist party, the T. U. U. L. and the Unemployed Councils, the revolutionary wing of the proletariat are not invited. The intention is to build a movement that will go into "battle" for a "true freedom". What kind of a battle and what kind of true freedom will this be when the heart of the proletariat is to be excluded from participation? The answer is: there will be no battle nor a true freedom if the leaders of this movement carry through their purpose of excluding the revolutionists from the conference. The real aim is the building of a reformist movement that will attempt to check the rising class-conscious American proletariat.

That the socialists, who consistently profess their "adherence" to Marxism and socialism, take the lead in this movement only testifies to their theoretical and political degeneration. It is in the name of Marxism that they are creating this movement. It is in the name of socialism that they are attempting to bring about a true freedom in joint "struggle" with the reactionary labor leaders, liberal political groups, single taxers, etc.

The Communist, revolutionary and militant workers must break through the closed-door policy of the congress. The congress without doubt, will be attended by many workers' organizations of all shades of opinions and aims. While exposing the program of disunity and reformism, the Left wing must count with the demand for a genuine united front. It must fight against the exclusion of any section of the working class. It will have to present a counter-program of action, free from the confusing reformist class consciousness of the American workers. Such a tactic, intelligently and correctly carried out, will win the support of the workers assembled in the congress. It may prevent the emergence of an organization whose main purpose will be that of fighting the Communist, and turn it into an organization of militant class struggle whose purpose will be to fight for the interests of the working masses.

—ESTHER FIELD.

—ALBERT GLOTZER.

NEW SUB DRIVE

Well we're back at you. We're off on a new sub drive. This one is scheduled to run from now to the end of June, roughly about six weeks. And it's got to hum from start to finish.

THE GERMAN CAMPAIGN

As a result of our German campaign, we're a bigger organization now. We cover a greater amount of territory. There are more of us. The Militant reaches and is read by a greater number of workers. Interest in it is keener. All the objective requirements exist for a successful drive.

It's just a question of putting your back into it. There is urgent reason to put this drive over with a great big bang. The financial situation of the Militant is not what it should be. It's shy and tuck to get the issue out. All kinds of troubles descend on us. One week it's the press, the next it's the linotype. We laugh them off. They're growing pains. Our battling average is pretty high.

But how about it in the field? Are you in this thing? Are you lying awake at nights contriving schemes to get subs to put a sounder and firmer and wider base under our paper? If you are you will welcome this drive. If you have been sleeping too soundly now is the time to get up and hop to it.

Have you got all three volumes of the History of the Russian Revolution by comrade Trotsky? Here is your chance to get a set for nothing. All you have to do is to come out on top in this sub drive. That is the goal every comrade can shoot at. Let's repeat it so there'll be no misunderstanding about it. To the comrade who gets the greatest number of subs by the 30 of June we will give without any strings tied to it a set of the three volumes of the History of the Russian Revolution by comrade Trotsky.

And to console the runner up, to save that smart that you get from rambling along that almost and if tangent we'll give a bound volume of the Militant, either format, new or old, according to your fancy. Now isn't that something? So whale away comrades.

CLUB PLAN SUBS

Yes. Everything goes. All subs count. New ones, renewals, club plan subs. We want to pile up a total that'll put all the former records in the shade.

But if you're smart you'll concentrate on the club plan prepaid cards. That's where the heavy scoring will be done. You haven't forgotten about them? You remember they come in minimum units of four, prepaid (don't forget that; that's important). And each one at 50c is good for a regular $1 half-year sub. And they count for four subs. A tip to the wise—

Now if you're very wise, you'll pay close attention and follow out our advice to the letter. Take two dollars, shoot them in here for four of these prepaid cards and ring up a starter of four subs. Then you can go out and resell these cards. When you resell them you have your two dollars back. Now shoot them in again for four more prepaid cards. As far as you're concerned they're the same two dollars. But they're working overtime piling up a score toward the three volumes of the History of the Russian Revolution. What could be simpler. Somebody once called it a revolving fund. That's one name for it. But call it what you will it's a swell way to build the Militant.

If you don't like revolving funds that shouldn't stop you from getting four of these cards. You can give them away to unemployed workers. One way or another you can use these prepaid cards to build the Militant. So pitch in. Give it a boost. Help put the drive over. Get started right away.

Of course New York will have an advantage being closer to home and being able to start sooner. But New York has had to occupy second place before. It isn't always a New York comrade who comes out on top. If memory serves us right it's usually a comrade from some other city who shows the race a clean pair of heels. If you're west of the Hudson mail it a handiecap race and set out to give New York a drubbing. But you'll have to stop some. So let's go!

And watch next week's issue for the first reports.

Unity on May Day

(Continued from page 1)

a united front with the Police Department! First they attempted, with rotten congratulations to the new police commissioner to whom they stated: "We have always cooperated with the police and have not attacked them", to get the police to deny the united front demonstration the right to "Unite Square on May 1st."

"The pressure and the anger of the workers without and within their ranks forced these vile 'socialist' lackeys to retreat from this dastardly maneuver. But they were not to be deterred in their 'cooperation' with Commissioner Bohm, the smasher of the March 6th, 1930 demonstration, to keep the workers divided. Gorber, Lee, Claessens and their strike are now dickering with the police chief not only to prevent a united demonstration but to prevent the socialist workers, who will demonstrate on Union Square before the United Front demonstration, to remain and join the latter demonstration. They demand of their collaborator, Bohm, that the 'Square be cleared' before the United Front parade enters it! ! !

The workers must close their ranks in a united manifestation of international solidarity. The socialist brethren of Weis and Breit-scheid and all those who have directly sold out the German workers to Fascism, have rejected every effort toward a joint Communist and socialist demonstration. They have preferred, following the masses' policy in an effort to sabotage united struggle. The American workers must show the socialist saboteurs that they have learned their lesson from Germany. They must show that they will not permit their ranks to be split, that they will march together on the First of May, in spite of everything.

Workers, make the First of May, a day of united proletarian action! Show that the tragedy of the German proletariat will be avenged by learning the lessons of reformist betrayal and Stalinist national socialism which made it possible demonstrate under the banner of Leninist internationalism, under the banner of the Bolshevik Left Opposition!

Alteration Painters United Front

The "new United Front policy" of the Comintern is now making its appearance in the trade union field. The mechanical application of this policy by the Alteration Painters Union is a half-hearted attempt to correct some of the worst errors of the old "Third Period" sectarianism. But Centralism here also shows its halfness and inadequacy to advance a policy and a perspective that meets the demands of the present situation. Without a real change there can be no improvement.

Recently the Alteration Painters Union sent an open letter to the central bodies of the A. F. of L. Painters Union, outlining the conditions in the trade, and calling for the organization of a large conference representing the membership of both unions for united action for the improvement of the conditions of the painters in this city.

It is quite obvious that this is not sufficient, as an examination of the problems and the relation of forces in the industry will show. The painters in the city are divided into three groups, the first being the unorganized, who constitute the majority, the second are the workers in the A. F. of L. which controls the bulk of the organized painters and the third is the militant minority which is isolated in the Independent organizations the Alteration Painters' Union.

In such a situation the key to left wing strategy is the struggle for unity, because the workers, experiencing drastic reductions of their wages and working conditions, widespread unemployment, on the one hand, and the disunity of the painters, on the other, feel the need of a unified struggle and will support the militants if they are convinced that the militants are really fighting for this policy. This would also facilitate the task of organizing the unorganized.

This struggle for unity in the present situation should be formulated as follows:
J. Propose to the District Council of the A. F. of L. that the Alteration Painters Union be admitted as a body with full membership rights.

2. On this basis to revive the Left wing in the A. F. of L. to fight for the unity of the two organizations.

3. All the independent work of the A. P. U. will be strengthened in the meantime because the union will be in a position to justify its independent existence and to prove to both the organized and unorganized workers that the bureaucrats in the A. F. of L. are against the unity of the painters and that the A. P. U. is leading the struggle for unity.

Even for such a proposal as made in the open letter, this broad tactic is necessary (call for united action pending unification). The present proposal hangs in mid-air as it gives no perspectives, let alone that of unity in one organization.

The militants now isolated in the Alteration Painters Union must follow a policy which aids the revival of the Left wing in the A. F. of L. and coordinates the struggle for unity. The Stalinists have shown time and again that they do not know how to do this. It is necessary to follow the tactic outlined above which proceeds from the trade union policy of the Left Opposition. This policy shows the way to build a real influence for the Left wing among the painters of this city.

—WILLIAM KITTY.

THE MILITANT
Entered as a second class mail matter November 28, 1928, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Under the act of March 3, 1879.
Published weekly by the Communist League of America (Opposition) at 126 East 16th St., N. Y. C.
EDITORIAL BOARD
Martin Abern James P. Cannon
Max Shachtman Maurice Spector
Arne Swabeck
Vol. VI, No. 24 (Whole No. 171)
SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1933
Subscription price: $2.00 per year.
Foreign $2.50. Five Cents per copy

Some Fundamental Aspects of the Present Crisis in Germany

(This is the second of two articles on this subject. The first appeared in the Militant of April 11.)

All the elements of the objective situation favored the revolutionary solution of the German crisis under the leadership of the Communist party. The crisis was brought to a head by the ravages of the world economic depression. The social democracy was becoming increasingly discredited by the collapse of all social legislation—"practical" reformism—in the country (the Stalinist leadership of the party even went to the fantastic extreme of declaring the social democracy exposed as "social fascists"—twin brothers of fascism). The progress achieved by the Five Year Plan was a powerfully vivid demonstration of the superiority of planned socialist economy (the Stalinists themselves even went further with monstrous exaggerations of the successes and the proclamation of the establishment of a classless society within the next few years). What more could be desired? Yet the Communist Party of Germany failed miserably in the face of the tasks and the possibilities.

It is impossible to grasp the extent of this failure and the responsibility of the Stalinist faction for it without considering the particular policy, pursued in the light of fundamental perspective. The highly unrealistic policy of the ultimatum united front from below was not accidental. It flowed directly from the whole zigzag course initiated by the rise of the petty bourgeois current of Stalinism within the Communist International. It is this basic perspective—or rather, lack of perspective—which prepared the German catastrophe and it is for that reason that the disastrous policy in Germany can and must be stigmatized as a policy of betrayal.

Bolshevism grew and developed in the struggle against the treacherous petty bourgeois ideology of social democracy. In this struggle it led the proletariat of Russia to victory and showed the working class of the world the way, creating for it the Communist International in the fire of combat. Stalinism arose within the Bolshevik party and the Communist International as a reaction to Bolshevism, feeding upon the fatigue of the Soviet masses after the years of the strenuous civil war and upon the temporary defeats of the West European proletariat in the years 1918 to 1923. It was in all respects a hangover from the petty bourgeois ideology of the pre-Bolshevik period. Stalin had as late as March 1917 held on to the idea that it is the task of the provisional (democratic) government to "consolidate the achievements" of the revolution in which the masses were the chief actor. On the higher plane of the situation created by the October Revolution, Stalinism reproduced all the basic defects of the social democracy—its national reformism, its short sightedness.

The German social democratic bureaucracy, raised to power in the trade unions and mass organizations by the struggle of the working masses within the framework of the bourgeois state, rejected the Marxist perspective of the permanent revolution even within the narrow bounds of their own country. They rejected the proletarian dictatorship for the Weimar Republic. Their basic motivation was the fear for the preservation of their bureaucratic powers, the little posts and positions which the petty bourgeois layer of the movement had attained to. In the end, their shaky policy inevitably caught them within the trap of its own logic—and landed them in the lap of Fascist reaction.

The Stalinist bureaucracy, raised to power within the Soviet state by the October revolution is no more and no less than this same petty bourgeois bureaucracy reproduced on a higher historical stage. The anxiety for its own self-preservation and perpetuation has also been its guiding line. It is along this line that Stalinism started on its career with an attack upon the Marxian conception of the permanent revolution defended by L. D. Trotsky and the Russian Bolshevik-Leninists. The Stalin faction declared a struggle to the end against the permanent revolution in 1923. Two years later it broadened this breach with Marxism by setting up the theory of the possibility of establishing a socialist society in a single country—for all "practical" purposes, in Russia.

Within the framework of national boundaries the perspective of the permanent revolution signified steering a course toward the proletarian dictatorship. Only the dictatorship of the working class could serve as a conclusive guarantee for the completion of the democratic revolution. On the international scene, created by the establishment of the first workers' republics, this perspective pointed out a course leading to the extension of the October revolution to the rest of the world. Only the victory of the proletarian dictatorship in several of the advanced capitalist countries could assure the establishment of a socialist society in Soviet Russia with all its economic backwardness. This basic perspective called for a policy of intense attention and active aid to the development of the proletarian revolutionary movement in the capitalist world, in the first place. Secondly, it called for an internal policy of strengthening the Soviet regime by increasing the share of the socialist sector in economy so as to maintain the alliance of the working class and the peasantry as the practical base of the proletarian dictatorship. The rejection of the fundamental perspective meant, in reality, also a rejection of the policies flowing from it.

By repudiating the perspective of revolutionary realism the Stalinists deprived the Soviet government and the Communist International, of which they had gained control, of the possibility of conducting a consistent policy corresponding with the practical tasks. The utopianism of their theory of socialism in one country predicted their utterly barren strategy and tactics in the problems which arose.

The perspective of the permanent revolution coupled with the Leninist evaluation of the imperialist wars and revolutions, signified struggle. That is above all what the petty bourgeois wants to avoid. The petty bourgeois Stalinist bureaucracy preferred to console itself with the possibility of shutting itself off from the rest of the world. On the basis of the theory of building a socialist society within the isolated Soviet state, Stalinism proceeded to heap disaster upon the international proletariat.

The problem of the Chinese revolution arose. The task there was posed as one of not throwing Chiang Kai-Shek (the national bourgeoisie) into the arms of imperialism, of not giving the imperialists an occasion for intervention against Soviet Russia where socialism could be established if foreign intervention was forestalled. The defenders of the permanent revolution, the Bolshevik-Leninists pointed out that the problem was one of strengthening the bonds between the Chinese masses and the Soviet Union, that the Chinese masses could be won as fighting allies only through the development of the proletarian revolution and the setting up of the proletarian dictatorship. That required the independence of the Chinese Communist Party and a course toward Soviet Russia.

The Stalin faction had its way. For the sake of not losing Chiang Kai-Shek, it handed over the Communist party to the bourgeois puppet Min T'ang—bag and baggage. The result is well known. Chiang Kai-Shek and the Chinese bourgeoisie received all the Stalinist aid gleefully and in due time slaughtered the vanguard of the working masses; made their peace with the imperialists and in 1929 came to the brink of a war against the Soviet Union itself.

The problem of the British General Strike and the movement that preceded it, is an equally illuminating example of the period of outright opportunism that followed immediately upon the heels of the orientation toward "socialism in one country". The disasters of the Chinese revolution and the British General Strike on a large scale and all the lesser disasters on a smaller scale as well as the bankruptcy of the opportunist policy within the Soviet Union itself—the bloodless insurrection of the kulaks in the spring of 1928 finally opened the eyes of the Stalinist empiricists—pushed the bureaucracy toward a sharp turn to the

The Scottsboro Bill

One purpose of the march is to present a bill to Congress. This bill, the Civil Rights Bill, provides for the enforcement of the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the U. S. Constitution. This raises the fight for the democratic rights of the Negroes to a higher political plane. It dramatically focuses attention on one of the burning problems of the American revolution. Before the eyes of the entire nation the Communists will lead a march on the citadel of American imperialism to demand that capitalism declare itself openly on the question of those provisions in its constitution which "guarantee" to the Negro masses political equality with the white population.

Such a march can acquire a tremendous force and significance if it is a culminating point in a mass movement. That is not the weakness of this march. It is not the highest wave in an organized protest movement. Preceding it there have been no united front conferences of working class organizations from coast to coast. There has been a burst of protest against the Decatur verdict. This is the basis for the organization of a protest movement, but it cannot replace the protest movement itself. And it is a fatal error to try, even with the best and sincerest of motives, to make it a substitute for an organized protest movement.

But the march is projected. The party and the I. L. D. must bend every effort to organize it and rally the masses of workers behind it. In the first instance this extreme Left.

Again it was a matter of self-preservation. Soviet economy was at an impasse. The tactics of the "bloc of four classes" in China and of the Anglo-Russian Committee had only increased the isolation of the U. S. S. R. and undermined the basis of the bureaucracy itself. The zigzag of the ultra-Left which initiated the famous "third period" clearly revealed the political character of Stalinism as that of a vacillating bureaucratic Centrism.

Its method appeared clearly as the method of empiricism, of trial and error—lacking in all foresight and irresponsible in its consequences. The policy of ultimatum, of commands from above, was substituted for the policy of opportunistic blocs. In place of the united front with any one and every one and under all conditions came the united front "from below only". The highest fruit of this blind policy, which was accompanied by a growing disinterestedness in the progress of the international Communist movement, was the debacle of January 1933 in Germany. The failure of the German Communist Party to lead the working class against the Fascist onslaught, its miserable disappearance from the scene, is the culmination point of the whole headless course of Stalinism in the Communist International.

The collapse of the Communist Party of Germany deprives the Communist International of its one great mass party and the Soviet

Social Democracy Passive Before Menace of Austrian Fascism

The Bonapartist regime in Austria has registered some important advances in the past few weeks. All of these are directed, of course, against the social democracy as the organized representative of the workers. The latter is showing ever less inclination toward serious resistance, restriction of itself to bare protests and meaningless gestures.

On March 31, the Dollfuss government dissolved the Republican "Schutzbund", the socialist defense organization, after more than ten years of its existence. The "Schutzbund" has grouped around it the most militant section of the Austrian proletariat and has always been the only real bulwark against the ambitious putschists from the monarchist and Fascist camps. On the night when the dissolution decree became known, the working class masses of Vienna killed the thoroughfares in all parts of the city with spontaneous protest demonstrations and rallies.

The official reply of the social democracy was not a mobilization of its forces, embracing the vast majority of the working class and consequently, of the entire Viennese population; it was a plea with the Bonapartists to be cautious, to consider the "consequences" of withdrawing the right of legal existence from the "hands of those who have been responsible for the maintenance of law and order. In the country up to the present." All that the Otto Bauers could do was to warn their masters against the "blind wrath of the masses" and representatives to provide transportation for them. It is not a little matter to ask workers to suspend their activities, pull up their stakes, so to speak, and march to Washington at the risk of serious fighting with the police and armed forces of the state. Workers will ask: how are we to be fed, transported there and back, and defended if attacked? The preparations do not answer these questions in a way to encourage workers to participate in the march.

Scottsboro March on Wash.

(Continued from Page 1)

The S. P., the A. F. of L. and the Negroes

The terrific pressure which the party is bringing to bear on the S. P. leadership over the Mooney and May Day issues is the direct result of its turn from the ultra Leftist policy of the united front, from below to one which comes from above to one which comes from below. If the party means it seriously it will apply that pressure now on the A. F. of L. and S. P. bureaucracies to enter a united front movement to get the Scottsboro boys out of jail.

Here is the weapon with which to strike at the reactionary restrictions against Negroes in the A. F. of L. unions. Here is the weapon with which to strike smashing blows at the whole system of Jim Crowism. Here is a means of forging the unity of the white and Negro masses in struggle.

Great opportunities lie before us. To realize them we must bend every effort to organize the movement and set the masses in motion. The key to the problem is the united front. Concretely now, that means the open approach to the S. P. and A. F. of L. for united front conferences. This the party must do without delay, openly before the eyes of the working class. No back door negotiations with the Clarence Seniors! No hiding behind Frank Palmers and Musters! In this work the Left Opposition will do its loyal best as it has done for years in the Mooney movement. The delegation sent by the New York Branch of the League to place itself at the disposal of the Scottsboro Action Committee for work in the movement was assigned the task of distributing leaflets in Harlem calling on the workers to attend a monster Mooney-Scottsboro mass meeting. Our comrades are going on the march to Washington. And every where the Left Opposition is calling on the party to issue the call for united front conferences and approach the S. P. and A. F. of L. to build the defense and protest movement.

—T. STANN.

Union of its strongest ally in the capitalist world. It is the last item in the balance sheet of ten years of the rule of bureaucratic Centrism in the Communist movement. The course of Stalinism, which began with the repudiation of the concept of permanent revolution, has wound up in the most frightful isolation of the workers' fatherland. The Stalinist bureaucracy too, has been caught within the trap of its own logic. It has endangered the existence of the Soviet Union from without and from within.

Hitler's Brown Shirts are on the march. The alliance between the workers and peasants—the practical basis of Soviet economy and the proletarian dictatorship—is being threatened by that same headless, un-Marxian course which has led to disaster in Germany, by the course of vacillating bureaucratic Centrism. No time is to be lost. If Communism, if the Soviet Union is to live, Stalinism must be destroyed. Only the reestablishment of the Marxian perspective of the permanent revolution, only the return of its defenders—of L. D. Trotsky, Rakovsky and the Bolshevik-Leninists—to their rightful posts can aid in cleansing the working class vanguard of the petty bourgeois poison which had been paralyzing it and clear the road for the effective defense of the fortress of the proletarian revolution and for a new upsurge of the revolutionary movement in the International.

—SAM GORDON.

Fascist Terror Rages Over Germany Stifling All Workers' Organizations

(Continued from Page 1)

ism after the working class defeat of 1923, until the completed preparation of the road for Fascism. But to this must be added the bitter experience of the Communist party, numerically the strongest outside of the Soviet Union, but Stalinized in every fibre of its bureaucratic apparatus, which has now experienced its August 1934. Though its leaders are now undergoing the most horrible tortures nevertheless this must be laid out loud.

Workers Under Bestial Tortures

The Nazis are advancing through streams of blood and tears. The horrible tales which come from the specially arranged Fascist torture chambers almost defy description. In their naked reality the actual events are much more hair-raising than the dribbling accounts would indicate which are smuggled out and find their way to expression outside of the German borders. I will attempt to relate a few examples culled from reports of eye-witnesses, for obvious reasons not giving names of the reporters, whose veracity, however, need not in the least be doubted. Our comrade relates: "In the Nazi barracks they whip the Communists and break their fingers in order to get from them confessions and addresses. 'In the Nazi barracks in Hiedemannstrasse there lay in one room about 150 Communists who had been tortured until they were half dead. They were all undressed and when they were naked had to run the gauntlet until they broke down.'"

In Spandau, near Berlin, almost all Communists were arrested and taken into the barracks to be tortured. A woman comrade was taken from her bed at night, taken into the barracks to be horsewhipped and thrown into a cellar. When consciousness returned she noticed that she was not alone but was surrounded by others groaning or dying. Some are allowed to go out after they have been tortured; others never see daylight again.

The "Kasematens" in Spandau is an old antiquated prison to which most of the "bigger game" is being brought. There are incarcerated Thaelmann, Torgler, Pieck and Koenen, among many other Communists. But there are also such victims as Lehman Russbildt, the chairman of the "League for Peoples Rights". Whom the Fascist, symbolically it seems, put in chains, leaving him unable to move for days at the time. An eye-witness relates the beastly beatings that were administered to Thaelmann every night so that the once robust figure is now but a living corpse. A special confession was demanded from him in the form of a declaration all made ready for him to attach his signature. It was to prove among other things that the Communist party had organized terror groups to murder and to pillage, giving names of alleged commanders of these groups. It was to prove that the C. P. was supported by the Soviet government, alleging the manner in which funds were turned over.

The significance of the attempted direct connection of the Soviet government cannot be underestimated. It is but one out of many similar attempts, such as in the burning of the Reichstag building and others to stir up a popular hatred of the Soviet Union and pave the road for intervention. There are among the flamboyant declarations of Goering the one proposing to carve out a bigger piece of the Ukraine for Poland so that she may object less to the return of the Corridor to Fascist Germany. In general the Fascist press concerns itself very studiously at the present time with reports and estimates of the fighting capacity of the Red Army.

But the gruesome torture tales continue. Right along, corpses are found throughout the Reich and reported "killed by persons unknown." Eye-witnesses also relate having seen victims in the Berlin prison of the police presidium brought there from the Fascist barracks with their eyes cut out or with their teeth smashed by ride bolts. They tell of the unfortunate prisoners being thrown on the floor, trampled upon and kicked in the abdomen. It is the Fascist storm troops who administer the tortures. This became too much even for some of the old hardened Schupos in the Berlin Moabit police station. About a dozen of them protested and were immediately dismissed.

A certain C. P. functionary, B. Hamer, who had once been a Fascist officer but remained loyal to the party had his legs so badly crushed in the prison tortures that it became necessary later to perform an amputation. Storm troops went to the home of Ruth Fischer, once a party leader, and not finding her home, smashed all they could lay their hands on and took her thirteen year old boy as a hostage.

It is not only the Communist victims who suffer barbaric mutilations but social democrats as well. Karl Borkel, the editor of the Chemnitz Volksstimme was beaten to a pulp and died in the street. However, the torture methods applied to the socialist member of the Reichstag Sollman, from Saarbruecken, are of the kind which put the notorious Spanish inquisition entirely in the shadow. A Fascist storm troop broke into his home, destroyed all furniture and beat him into insensibility. To bring him back to consciousness his socks were torn off and a lighted torch applied to his feet. As he writhed in pain one of the gang threw mustard into his eyes saying: "There is your black-red-and-gold dirty pig, your national mustard colors." After that they forced his mouth open and urinated into it.

Finally his body was literally dragged along the streets in a parade headed by music and when the orgy was over, it was thrown into a coal cellar.

Some of the capitalist papers, fearing that the terror may bring too serious repercussions, at times endeavor to soothe the pains a bit by explaining this regular part of the Fascist system as merely some isolated excesses. That, however, is not at all the viewpoint in high Fascist circles. Goering made that perfectly clear in his speech at Essen, on March 10, where he said: "I refuse to have the police appear in the role of protectors of Jewish department stores. It is about time to put a stop to every scoundrel calling for police protection. When you claim that here or there people have been captured and maltreated, one can only answer that: Where anyone planes, there the shavings fly."

Yet there is some evidence of "efforts" to halt the "isolated excesses". Recently a certain celebrated Berlin lady, a demimonde, threw her fashionable home open to a big blow out. The whole diplomatic corps was much in evidence. These gentlemen were brought there by their private chauffeurs and somehow a Nazi storm troop considered this a big occasion and in order to keep in trim, went to work battering some of the poor chauffeurs to pulp. That was obviously an "excess" and the papers promptly carried a warning from Fascist headquarters. After that the American ambassador, Sackett, could cable to his papers at home that law and order prevails in Germany.

The Fascists themselves were surprised at the ease and speed with which their brutal onslaughts succeeded in consolidating their position in power. That fact we need not doubt in the least. It is confirmed by events. The absence of resistance from the workers increased the tempo of the attacks to a speed which in itself became an ever greater provocation. This lack of resistance only caused the Fascists to be so much more merciless, not needing to fear anything in their way. An army in open retreat becomes an easier prey for the enemy whose ferocity increases with each step in pursuit. And in this case the tortures inflicted upon the working class are an integral part of the Fascist consolidation of power.

In this there is a serious lesson to be learned by the working class elsewhere who still cling to reformist illusions or depend upon capitalist democratic constitutions and remain unprepared while the reaction strengthens its forces. Every lesson of the German events should be hammered home, never to be forgotten. They must play an important role in guiding the preparations for the future. For it is a certainty that this consolidation of Fascist power in Germany inaugurates a new reactionary period, no one can say for how long, but we can clearly perceive its fateful implications. It will not at all be what the Stalinists conceived of their "third period" estimates. But it will nevertheless again become pregnant with new revolutionary possibilities.

The German proletariat was disarmed by the illusions which inevitably resulted from the perfidious policy of its social democratic leadership. They, who became the inheritors of the monarchy, allowed and themselves helped to prepare for the counter-revolution to conquer by stages. That is the lesson embodied in their rule from Noske through the bourgeois coalitions, the emergency decrees of Brüning, Papen and Schleicher to Hitler. The German proletariat was disarmed by the Stalinists sabotage of every correct measure of defense. In this lies the sad testimony to the serious weakness of a revolutionary party which rests upon the foundation of a false ideology and is paralyzed by bureaucratic incompetence. The German proletariat failed to receive the support from its international basis—the Soviet Union and the Comintern. And it must be said plainly that the guilt of the catastrophic defeat suffered is not only to be laid at the doors of those who were directly charged with the leadership of the German working class but must be traced to the highest seat of Stalinism in the Comintern and the Communist party of the Soviet Union. Its departure from the road of international revolutionary policy marks the most serious retreat for the world movement which is fraught with sinister implications for the future. One may rest assured that the Fascist enemy will endeavor to pursue its gains relentlessly. Its mission of destroying the German working class organizations is not finally completed so long the Soviet Union remains a bulwark.

With frightful accuracy the Left Opposition warnings of the course of events have come true. They were given correctly and in time because they rested upon the basis of a Marxian analysis. But they were not heeded. It is on this basis also that we have long ago sounded the alarm in regard to the course which will be pursued in the next stage. That is the one in which the Fascist spearhead, already pointing Eastward, will be concentrated upon the efforts to destroy the workers' republic. But the Stalinist policy—the retreat from revolutionary internationalism—is also disarming the proletarian fatherland. Its defense can be secured only through the most implacable struggle against Stalinism.

—ARNE SWABECK.

S.P. Splits Mooney Fight

(Continued from Page 1)

a matter between the united front committee and the S. P. but a matter between Mooney and the S. P. The Left Opposition protested against this pessimistic and capitulationist attitude. We moved that the Congress Organization Committee issue a leaflet to the S. P. and A. F. of L. workers calling on them to raise the question in their organizations and to demand that their organizations participate in the Chicago Congress. The motion carried unanimously, the Stalinists voting for it.

This was the same motion made by us at the first session of the Committee in March. At that time the Stalinists exerted themselves to defeat our proposal. The responsibility for the loss of time is on their shoulders. The loss of time acquires great significance in view of the latest developments in the movement to free Mooney. According to the New Leader, the N. B. C. of the S. P. voted six to five against participation in the Chicago Conference. Thomas is quoted as saying that the S. P. must participate because it cannot afford to give the appearance of blocking unity. This reflects the pressure on the S. P. leadership both from without (Mooney and the C. P.) and the penetration of this influence into the socialist movement itself. The entire Chicago Ypsel movement has had its charter revoked because of its participation in united fronts with the Communists.

Had the party adopted a correct approach to this aspect of the united front problem, had it approached the S. P. openly before the eyes of the members of both parties and the entire working class, it could have increased the pressure on the S. P. leadership, forced it to vote favorably on the question of the participation of the S. P. in the Chicago Congress and succeeded in broadening the movement. The advantages to the movement and Communism in the united front are clearly indicated and need not be discussed at this point.

But Hathaway, Stachel, Palmer and Muste, having drawn losing cards against the S. P. bureaucracy, have rigged up a "Management Committee for the Chicago

Congress which is calculated to mitigate the disappointment of the party members who still have faith in the infallible line. On the Management Committee are included "such well known socialists as Professor Robert Morris Lovett, Professor Reinhold Niebuhr and Frans Daniels."

The reports of the sessions of the Congress Organization Committee and the developments reported in the labor and radical press have served to illuminate the roles of the S. P., the Stalinists and the "progressives" in the Mooney movement.

The Lovestonites have played a far smaller role. All of it has been disruption and sabotage. The April 15 issue of the Workers Age reports that Zimmerman of the Lovestone group was elected manager of Local 22 of the I. L. G. W. U. of Lovestonites in Local 22.

How this influence is exerted to build the movement for Mooney's release can be seen from the same issue of the paper. Under the revealing head, "Union Hits N. Y. Mooney Meet", the Workers Age prints a letter from the Local to Mooney. The letter informs Mooney that the Executive Committee of the Local approved the action of the Lovestone group in withdrawing from the March 12 New York United Front Free Tom Mooney Conference.

The reason speaks for itself. "From the report of our delegates it is evident that the official Communist party, which has apparently captured control of the Tom Mooney Molders Defense Committee, is bent upon running the 'show' for its own aggrandizement, and is determined—under all circumstances—not to permit a genuine united front of all workers' organizations, regardless of their political or social views."

As we go to press delegates are on their way to the Chicago Congress from all parts of the country. Present reports indicate that it will be a very large gathering with possibilities which extend far beyond the defense movement. And Mooney is standing trial on the last indictment against him. Both events will be reported in the forthcoming issues of the Militant. —T. STANN.

Austria Is Next in Order

(Continued from last issue)

By their seemingly dreadful but in reality pathetic chorus of "if we are attacked," the Austro-Marxists reveal their genuine suffering, they still hope that they will be left in peace, that things, God help us, will not go beyond mutual threats and waving of fists. What this means is that they are chloroforming the proletariat to facilitate Fascist surgery. A genuine proletarian politician on the contrary would be duty bound to explain to the Austrian workers that their class enemy, himself, has been caught between the paws of history; that no other way out remains for him except to destroy proletarian organizations; that in this instance there is no escaping the mortal struggle; and that this struggle must be prepared for in accordance with all the rules of revolutionary strategy and tactics.

THE GENERAL STRIKE

Otto Bauer has been hinting that in the event of a direct attack on the part of the enemy, the workers will resort to a general strike. But this too is an empty threat. We have heard it more than once in Germany. The general strike cannot be produced out of one's vest pocket. The workers may be led to a general strike, but to do so one must fight and not play hide and seek with reality; a call to battle must be issued, one must organize for the struggle, arm for the struggle, widen and deepen the channel of struggle, not confining oneself to the legal forms of struggle, i. e., the framework dictated by the armed enemy. And first of all, the party itself must be permeated through and through with the idea that unless it engages in a decisive battle, it is lost.

It is quite possible that the Central Committee will actually issue a call for a general strike, after the "open," (that is to say, the decisive) blow had been dealt. But this would mean that after leaving the stage, one calls upon the masses to a naked protest, or manifestation of impotence. Just as the liberal opposition call upon the people not to pay their taxes after the monarch had told it to go to hell. As a rule, nothing ever came of it. In all probability, the workers will not respond at all to the belated and hopeless appeal of a party already smashed.

But let us allow that the Fascists will give the social democracy time enough to call for a general strike at the last minute, and that the workers will respond solidly to the call. What then? What is the goal of the general strike? What must it achieve? In what forms must it develop? How should it defend itself against military and police repression, and against the Fascist pogrom? Wiseacres will reply that it is impossible to answer such questions beforehand. That is the usual subterfuge of people who have nothing to say, who hope in their hearts to get along without fighting, and who consequently shy away in cowardice and superstition from questions of military resources and methods.

The general strike is only the mobilization of revolutionary forces but still not war. To utilize the general strike successfully as a demonstration or a threat, i. e., to confine oneself only to the mobilization of forces, without engaging in battle—that is possible only within strictly defined historical conditions; whenever matters touch an important but still a partial, task; when the enemy wavers and waits only for a push in order to retreat; when the possessing classes are still left with a wide field for retreat and maneuver. None of this obtains at present, at the time when all the contradictions have reached their highest intensity and when every serious conflict puts on the agenda the question of power and the perspective of civil war.

The general strike could prove to be a sufficient means for repelling the counter-revolutionary overturn only in the event that the enemy is unprepared and lacks sufficient forces and experience (the Kapp Putsch). But even in the latter case, after having repelled the adventurist onset the general strike only restored fundamentally that situation which obtained on the eve of the conflict, and consequently gave the enemy opportunity to utilize the experience of his own defeat and to prepare better for a new attack. But the general strike turns out to be completely insufficient even for defensive purposes in the event that the enemy is powerful and experienced, all the more so if he leans upon the state apparatus, or even has at his disposal its benevolent "neutrality".

No matter what the basic reason for the conflict may be, under the present conditions the general strike will close the ranks of bourgeois parties, the state apparatus and the Fascist hands, and in this united front of the bourgeoisie the preponderance will fall inevitably into the hands of the most extreme and determined elements, i. e., the Fascists. When face to face with the general strike, the counter-revolution will be compelled to stake all its forces on one card in order to break the ominous danger with a single blow. In so far as the general strike remains only a strike it inevitably under these conditions dooms itself to defeat. In order to snatch victory the strategy of the strike must grow into the strategy of the revolution, it must elevate itself to the level of resolute actions, replying with a double blow to every blow. In other words, under the present conditions the general strike cannot serve as a self-sufficient means for the defense of an impotent democracy but only as one of the weapons in the combined struggle of two camps. The strike must be accompanied with and supplemented by the arming of the workers, the disarming of Fascist bands, the removal of Bonapartists from power, and the seizure of the material apparatus of the state.

Bonapartism and Fascism in the Austrian Crisis

Once again we repeat if the establishment of a Soviet regime cannot be realized without the seizure of power by the Communist party—and we admit that this is altogether excluded by the unfavorable correlation of forces in the immediate future—then the restoration of democracy, even temporarily, is already unthinkable in Austria without the previous seizure of power by the social democracy. If the leading worker's party is not prepared to bring the struggle to its conclusion then the general strike by sharpening the situation can only hasten the crushing of the proletariat.

The Austro-philistine will catch up these words in order to immediately deduce reasons in favor of "moderation" and "caution." For, is it permissible for a party to take upon itself the grandiose "risk" involved in the revolution? Any methods of struggle? As if the Austrian proletariat has the freedom of choice! As if millions of workers can depart for their villas in Switzerland like Otto Brann! As if a class can duck mortal danger without incurring any danger! As if the victims of Fascist Europe, with its perspectives of new imperialist wars, will not surpass one hundredfold the sacrifices of all revolutions, past and future!

TODAY, THE KEY TO THE SITUATION IN THE HANDS OF THE AUSTRIAN PROLETARIAT.

Otto Bauer welcomed with ecstatic amazement the fact that the German workers gave seven million votes to the social democracy in the election, despite the closing down of the newspapers, etc., etc. These people opine that the emotions and the thoughts of the proletariat are created by their pliant articles. They have conned Marx and the history of Europe but they have not the slightest inkling of what inexhaustible reservoirs of power, enthusiasm, perseverance and creativeness the proletariat is capable of unfolding whenever it is assured of a leadership which to any degree corresponds to the historical background.

Isn't it obvious right now that had there obtained a far-seeing revolutionary policy from above, the German workers would have long since overthrown all the barriers blocking their road to hegemony, and moreover that they could have done so with immeasurable and incomparably less sacrifices than the inevitable sacrifices of the Fascist regime? The same must also be said about the Austrian proletariat.

Of course, the policy of the united front is obligatory at present also for Austria. But the united front is no panacea; the crux of the matter lies in the context of the policies, in the slogans and in the methods of mass actions. With the reservation of preserving complete freedom of mutual criticism—and this reservation is unalterable—the Communists must be prepared to make an alliance with social democracy for the sake of the most modest mass activities. But in so doing the Communists must give themselves a clear accounting of the tasks that are posed by the march of developments in order to disclose at every stage the incongruity between the political goal and the reformist methods.

The united front cannot merely signify a summation of social democratic and Communist workers for beyond the confines of the two parties and outside of the trade unions there still remain Catholic workers and unorganized masses. Not a single one of the old forms of organization which are laden down with conservatism, inertia, and the heritage of old antagonisms can suffice for the present tasks of the united front. A real mobilization of the masses is unthinkable without the creation of elected organs which directly represent the trade, industrial and transport enterprises, corporations and factories, the unemployed and the contingents layers of the population which gravitate toward the proletariat. In other words, the situation in Austria calls for workers' Soviets, not so much in name as in their nature. The duty of the Communists is to persistently bring forward this slogan in the process of struggle.

The circumstance that Austria is separated geographically from Germany and lags behind the latter in its internal evolution could play a decisive role in the salvation of Germany and of all Europe—under a hold and virile policy of the proletarian vanguard. Proletarian Austria would immediately become the Piedmont for the entire German proletariat. The victory of the Austrian workers would provide the German workers with what they lack at present, with a material drill ground, a comprehensible plan of action and hope for victory.

Once set in motion the German proletariat would immediately prove itself to be immeasurably more powerful than all its enemies taken together. Upon the parliamentary democratic plane, Hitler with his 44 percent of human dust appears much more imposing than he would on the plane of the actual correlation of forces. The Austrian social democracy has behind it approximately the same percentage of votes. But whereas the Nazis lean upon the social by-product which play in the life of the country a secondary and to a major degree a parasitic role, there is behind the Austrian social democracy the flower of the nation. The actual relative weight of the Austrian social democracy exceeds over ten times the relative weight of all the German Fascists. This can be completely revealed only in action.

The initiative for revolutionary action can come at present only from the Austrian proletariat. What is there necessary for it? Courage, courage, and once again, courage! The Austrian workers have nothing to lose but their chains. And by their initiative they can conquer Europe and the whole world! Prinkipo, March 23, 1933.

—L. TROTSKY.

VOLKSEITUNG SALESMEN

We wish to record a little incident here which was insignificant in its results but highly illuminative while it lasted. Last Saturday the N. Y. minutemen of the German Brown Shirts came to Teutonia Hall to gorge themselves with food and drink in celebration of Hitler's 44th birthday. Several scores of them attended this monstrous anniversary. And to protect them from the wrath of the workers they came surrounded by a veritable cordon of cops.

About a hundred and fifty party members held a protest demonstration opposite Teutonia Hall. Several party speakers spoke from the platform regarding the audience on Roosevelt Fascism, etc. It began to look to little like a united front so the party chairman summoned the editor of the Volkseitung, a reformist sheet from the crowd. He took the platform making an outrageously reformist and pacifist speech. All the party members applauded vociferously. The Left Opposition was denied a speaker.

Then came the piece de resistance of the evening. The chairman of this party controlled and attended meeting distributed the Volkseitung from the platform! How far will the party swing to the right go?

In the Militant of March 10 we said, "The workers must be told plainly, without exaggeration or hysteria, that there is a possibility that the present banking crisis may develop into a period of inflation, which will amount to a wage cut. Such a situation must be met with a demand for higher dollar wages, to compensate for the lower buying power of the dollar if it develops. Representatives of the workers should determine the amount of increase needed. The struggle for such higher wages must be waged in as broad a front as possible, as it will gain in strength, if fought on a national basis and be proportionately weaker if it has to be fought out from shop to shop." We also proposed that such workers' committees could well carry along with them the petty bourgeois masses, organized into consumers' leagues, into committees for the suppression of abuses such as hoarding, substitutions, unjustified price advances, etc. On such a basis, the struggle for immediate demands could, under Communist leadership, develop to the "boldest revolutionary demands, to workers' about it. Create a Communist party ready to struggle, that is our answer.

XII.

The leader of the party in Wednesday, one of the strongest workers' districts, has called upon us to work in common so as to build from the ruins. The Left Opposition must fulfill the task which history poses before it.

A party comrade read, by accident, comrade Trotsky's pamphlet, "How to Defeat Fascism". After reading it, he said to us, "I have been blind for years. I had confidence in our C. C. Now I see that I have deceived myself. Continue to give me literature. I want to continue to fight but with clear view and open eyes".

XIII.

Here is how the party sowed confusion among its members; when the appeal of the E. C. C. I. appeared, which the party distributed, many comrades of the C. C. P. said it was a fake, a maneuver of the socialist party and that it could not originate from the E. C. C. I.

Leon Trotsky on Hitler's Victory

Reprint of Article in 'Manchester Guardian'

The old view about the backwardness of countries seized by dictatorship can no longer be maintained. Though it was possible to apply it to Italy, with some exaggeration, it cannot possibly be applied to Germany, which is a highly developed capitalist country in the very heart of Europe.

There is one common reason for the collapse of democracy: capitalist society has outlived its strength. The national and international antagonisms which break out in it destroy the democratic structure just as world antagonisms are destroying the democratic structure of the League of Nations. Where the progressive class shows itself unable to seize power so as to reconstruct society on the basis of socialism, capitalism in its agony can only preserve its existence by using the most brutal, anti-cultural methods, the extreme expression of which is Fascism. That historic fact appears in Hitler's victory. In February 1933, I wrote as follows in an American review:—

"On the analogy of the electrical industry democracy may be defined as a system of switches and fuses directed against the violent shocks of national or social struggle. No epoch in the history of man has been so filled with antagonisms as our own. The switches of democracy are fusing or breaking under the violent pressure of class and international antagonisms. That is the kernel which explains the rapid rise of dictatorship."

My opponents relied on the fact that the process had only laid hold of the fringe of the civilized world. But I replied: "The strength of internal and world antagonisms is not declining but growing....Gout!

Inflation Bill Deceptive

(Continued from page 1)

decidedly deflationary also—the balancing of the budget by reducing expenditures was forced through against the workers in government service, the veterans and pensioners (the inflationary way of balancing the budget would have been through increasing borrowings involving eventually printing more money, or gambling on an increase in prices or rate of taxes to bring in more money while not reducing expenses). The restoration program, the addition to being a step toward the militarization of the homeless youth and the unemployed, was also a deflationary step, making it easier for private capital to cut wages down to the standard set by the government, of $1 a day and keep.

The development of the cyclical crisis during the period following the bank holiday showed the presence of forces making for the kind of limited and unstable improvement which is possible within the framework of the general crisis of capitalism. Steel production, electric power consumption, carloadings, and similar indices showed a steady increase during this period, apart from the usual seasonal changes. Its noteworthy fact that this was in spite of the actual deflation which was going on during this period, which would normally tend to reduce business activity.

We repeat—the question of inflation has not been settled, but it has been brought considerably nearer. The possibility of inflation, or the "open door to inflation," was recognized in previous articles in the Militant (March 8, 10) where its contradiction with the actual deflationary policies of Roosevelt and the banks was shown, as well as the diversity of class interests within the bourgeoisie on this question. The divergence of interest and the contradictions are reflected in Roosevelt's latest maneuvers, which have the character of a sharp turn without at the same time decisively answering the question.

The Daily Worker and Inflation

In the Militant of March 8 we criticized the Stalinist "two-class" policy of demanding repayment of deposits to "small depositors" as involving a contradiction with the fight against inflation, as well as its political falsity. Since then, although some 5,000 banks out of 18,000 failed to reopen after the bank holiday, we note that the Daily Worker has dropped this slogan.

In the Militant of March 10 we said, "The workers must be told plainly, without exaggeration or hysteria, that there is a possibility that the present banking crisis may develop into a period of inflation, which will amount to a wage cut. Such a situation must be met with a demand for higher dollar wages, to compensate for the lower buying power of the dollar if it develops. Representatives of the workers should determine the amount of increase needed. The struggle for such higher wages must be waged in as broad a front as possible, as it will gain in strength, if fought on a national basis and be proportionately weaker if it has to be fought out from shop to shop." We also proposed that such workers' committees could well carry along with them the petty bourgeois masses, organized into consumers' leagues, into committees for the suppression of abuses such as hoarding, substitutions, unjustified price advances, etc. On such a basis, the struggle for immediate demands could, under Communist leadership, develop to the "boldest revolutionary demands, to workers' control of production as a road to the dictatorship of the proletariat."

The Daily Worker has finally waked up to the fact that the fight for higher wages and unemployment relief is the proletarian answer to inflation, and has made this the first slogan in a group of seven demands. The last of these, however, is ridiculously impractical and anti-Marxist—"Housewives, organize to fight higher prices." It means attempting to carry on the economic class struggle at the point of consumption, in the grocery store, instead of at the point of production, in the factory, a trade unionist and not a Marxist approach.

Nowhere is the struggle for immediate demands in the fight against inflation linked up with the ultimate aims of the revolution; they remain purely isolated slogans and thereby opportunistic ones. Nor is any concrete proposal made for carrying these demands into action, such as the organization of workers' representatives on a broad united front basis and on a national scale to determine the extent of the wage cut which is concealed behind inflation. The function of a Communist party is leadership, not the mouthing of mere pious wishes.

The party should immediately proceed to the elaboration of a concrete program for the organization of the fight for higher wages beginning as a defense against inflation, and should agitate among all strata of the workers for the calling of a nation-wide united front conference to fight inflation.

—B. J. FRIED.

P. M. A. Under Fire

(Continued from page 1)

the official policy has tended to narrow down the differences between the Progressive Miners and the type of unionism against which the rank and file rose in revolt.

Since the inception of the new movement the Left Opposition has warned against a repetition of the cruel experiences of the past and urged the militant elements to consolidate their forces in a firm left wing on a policy of class struggle. This warning must be repeated again now when the demoralizing agitation of the bosses is reaching into the union and finding direct and indirect supporters there. The Left wing must rally its forces for a resolute counter-attack. In the circumstances the strategy of the militant forces cannot reconcile itself with that of the leading circles in the union. The Progressive Miners of America is the product of a miners' revolt. Its preservation and further development depends on a sustained militant policy which is impossible without a free participation of Communists in the union. The progressive character of the union, which has distinguished it from the Lewis organization, cannot be maintained if it permits the bounding of Communists. At the present stage this is precisely the crux of the problem of the P. M. A. What is a progressive union for if it allows the operators to dictate the opinions of its membership? An open fight for the right of workers of all political opinions—including Communists—to participate freely in the life of the union is the only way to reply to the attack of the reactionary press.

The resolutions of the local nations and of the Ladies' Auxiliary, printed in the "Progressive Miner" show that the rank and file can be mobilized to fight on these lines. What is needed is an organization of the fight and leaders who are equal to it.

—J. P. CANNON.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

when Hitler should have finally abandoned legal methods. Thus the social democracy not only summoned the Fascists to power through Hindenburg but allowed them to carry out the governmental revolution by stages.

"The policy of the Communist party has been thoroughly wrong. Its leaders started from the absurd axiom that social democrats and National Socialists represented 'two varieties of Fascism', that they were, in Stalin's formula, not opposite poles but twins." It is undoubtedly true, that social democracy, like Fascism, stands to defend the bourgeois regime against the proletarian revolution. But the methods of the two parties are entirely different. Social democracy is unthinkable without parliamentary government and mass organizations of the workers in trade unions. The mission of Fascism, however, is to destroy both. A defensive union of Communists and social democrats should have been based on this antagonism. But blind leaders refused to take this line. The workers were left divided, defenseless, without plan or prospects, before the attacking enemy. This position demoralized the proletariat and strengthened the self-confidence of Fascism.

Predictions

Two and a half years ago, in September 1931, I wrote as follows: "Fascism has become a real danger in Germany; it expresses the extreme hopelessness of the bourgeois regime, the conservative part played by the social democrats in relation to that regime, and the incompetence of the Communist party to shake that regime. Whoever denies that is either blind or boastful."

I expressed this idea in a series of pamphlets which have appeared during the last two years in Germany. Thus in October 1931, I wrote:

"The advance of the National Socialists to power means, above all, the extermination of the flower of the German proletariat, the breaking up of its organizations, the destruction of faith in itself and in its future. In view of the much greater ferocity and bitterness of social antagonisms in Germany, the hellish work of Italian Fascism will probably appear mild and almost humane when compared with that of German National Socialism."

The Stalinist faction said that this was panic-mongering. Out of the vast political literature devoted to this question I shall only refer to a speech made by the official leader of the German Communist Party, Thaelmann, before the Executive Committee of the Communist International in April 1931, when he exposed social pessimism—i. e., people who were capable of foresight—in the following words:

"We have not allowed panic-mongering to divert us from our path.... We are convinced that the 14th of September, 1930 (when the Nazis won 107 seats in the Reichstag) was Hitler's best day, and that now he cannot expect to do better, only worse. Our estimate of the development of that party has been confirmed by events.... Today the Fascists have no reason to be pleased."

That quotation is enough! Thus, while bourgeois democracy was collapsing Fascism was assisted to power by the united efforts of the leaders of both the workers' parties.

Hitler's Difficulties

Hitler's government has lost no time in setting a fast pace. It announces that it will educate the Communists in concentration camps. Hitler promises to exterminate the social democrats, that is, to achieve, in much harder conditions, the task which was beyond the strength of Bismarck and Wilhelm II. Hitler's political army is made up of officials, clerks, shopkeepers, tradesmen, peasants, all the intermediate and doubtful classes. In point of social consciousness they are human dust.

It is a paradox that Hitler, for all his anti-parliamentarism, is much stronger in the parliamentary than in the social plane. The Fascist dust remains dust after each new counting of heads. On the other hand, the workers are united by the process of production. The productive forces of the nation are strongly concentrated in their hands. Hitler's struggle for control is only beginning. His main difficulties are before him. The change of trade and industry is changing the relation of forces not in Hitler's favor but in favor of the proletariat. The mere fact of the reduction of unemployment will increase the self-consciousness of the workers. The spring which has been too tightly compressed must ease itself. After the extraordinary decline of the workers' economic struggles can be expected with confidence.

Hitler's principal difficulties are before him, like his principal struggles. In the international arena further gestures and phrases cannot be expected from Hitler in the immediate future. He has too long and sanguinary a war to fight out inside Germany for him to think seriously of war against France. On the other hand, he will try with all his strength to prove to France and the other capitalist states the necessity of supporting him in his providential mission of fighting Bolshevism. Allowing for all diversion, the foreign policy of Fascist Germany is essentially directed against the Soviet Union.

Prinkipo, March 1933.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

—L. TROTSKY.

L. O. Scores at Chicago Mooney Congress

LEON TROTSKY

The Collapse of the C.P.G. and the Opposition's Tasks

The question of the fate of German Communism stands now at the center of attention of all our sections. So far as can be judged, the majority of comrades are inclined to the belief that in Germany the question of Communism is a question of a new party. There are others, however, who consider such a formulation of the question as incorrect and maintain that the old slogan of a "reform" of the party along Leninist lines should be retained. This is the position, for instance, of two Spanish comrades, of two German comrades, who speak in the name of whole groups and of one Russian comrade. I do not doubt that their objections reflect the mood of quite a considerable part of the Opposition. It would be ungrateful if the need for such a serious turn did not produce in our midst different shadings and disagreements. It would be unworthy of the Opposition if we were incapable of discussing in a comradely, yet matter of fact, fashion the disagreements which have arisen. Such a discussion can result only in the further growth of the Opposition and in the strengthening of inner democracy. In what concerns the essence of the objections themselves, I cannot agree with them, although psychologically I can understand them. The mistake of the above-mentioned comrades consists in that they proceed from the formulas of yesterday and not from the facts of today. We must learn how to correct and replace the formulas in the light of new events.

